man very well. And he travelled about from one desert [fol. 109*a* 2] to another, and from one monastery to another; whether he is dead I know not, or whether he is alive I know not. And there was another poor man, the son of a king, and he kept vigil by day and by night, and dressed in sackcloth, and he ate and drank only on Sabbath days; and he continued to practise these things, and died in honour. And the angels of light took his soul, and placed it in the kingdom of the heavens. And now hearken, O my brother, unto what I shall say unto thee: pretend not that thou hast been harshly entreated before God, Thy Creator, for he whom He loveth, He chasteneth." And the monk said unto Abbâ KÎRÔS (CYRUS), "Rightly hath it happened to me that I have been punished according to my deserts"; and having said this he held his peace and passed that night [in silence]. And Abbâ KÎRÔS (CYRUS) prayed to God that He would visit that sick man, and straightway our Lord Jesus Christ came, and with Him were thousands of thousands, and tens of thousands of tens of thousands of angels, and they sang praises to Him, and glorified Him, saying, "Hallelujah to our God. Hallelujah to the King, the Bestower of favours on the righteous. Hallelujah to the Hope of the saints who have toiled on this earth. Let them rejoice." When Abbâ KÎRÔS (CYRUS) saw this he bowed low upon the ground, and he said unto Him, "O my Lord and God, what is it that hath brought Thee hither?" And our Lord said unto him, "I came unto thee because thou didst call Me." And Abbâ KÎRÔS (CYRUS) said unto Him, "Let this poor man die, for he is grievously afflicted." And He said unto him, "Take thee and place in his hand a flower of 'apîlyânôs." And he said unto Him, "Lay Thy hand on the face of this poor man, so that Thy hosts [fol. 109*a* 3] of angels may see how greatly Thou hast loved him." And Abbâ KÎRÔS (CYRUS) did as He commanded him, and his soul departed quickly without pain or suffering. And our Lord took it into His hand, and kissed it, and laid it on the chariot with Him; and He took it up towards 'awkîyânôs (the Ocean), and placed it in the kingdom of heaven. And Abbâ KÎRÔS (CYRUS) wept, and the matter was difficult for him, and he went to the abbot and told him that the monk was dead.

And the abbot said unto him, "What is that to me?" And Abbâ KÎRÔS (CYRUS) looked at him, and the abbot said, "This was not a man, but Satan." And Abbâ KÎRÔS (CYRUS) asked him that he might [be allowed] to bury his body, and grudgingly the abbot commanded seven saints [to help him]. And they brought censers, but Abbâ KÎRÔS (CYRUS) adjured them in the Name of the Lord Jesus Christ, saying, "Bring not your unclean censers. Leave him in his place, for there are others who will cense him; bury ye him." And these saints said among themselves, "Where doth this monk come from?" And they went into the church murmuring against him. And the four archangels rose up, and censed his body with myrrh, and stacte, and almonds, and juniper gum, and cummin, and ṭefâḥ, and honey, and the whole place was filled with the smoke thereof. And the monks said, "Is he then acquainted with magic? Whence hath he this incense?" Now they did not see the angels. Then they took his body, and buried it in the tomb for pilgrims in the monastery, and a spring of clear water burst forth, and it became a means of healing for those who were sick and suffering. [fol. 109*b* 1] Salutation to MÎSÂÊL.

And on this day also became martyrs the company of ÊSDRÔS (ISIDORE), and PETER, and his wife and son, and nine and forty of his servants.

And on this day also Abbâ BÎMÂ, from the city of BĔHĔNSÂ in Upper Egypt, became a martyr. This saint was a rich man, and a very good one, and a lover of the poor; and he was set over the city. And he saw our Lord Jesus Christ in a vision, and He was shining with a light which was far brighter than that of the sun, and He embraced him and said unto him, "Rise up, and go to the governor, and confess My Name [before him], for behold a crown of joy is prepared for thee." And when he awoke from his dream he rose up and gave all his goods to the poor and needy, and then he went forth from the city of BĔHĔNSÂ, and confessed the Lord Jesus Christ before the governor. And when the governor knew that he was the prefect of the city, and the ḳenkĕlâwôs (i.e. Chancellor), he demanded from him the sacred moneys of the churches of his city, and said unto him, "Sacrifice to the gods." And the saint answered and said unto him, "Of sacred moneys there is nothing whatsoever left, [fol. 109*b* 2] and as for the worship of unclean idols I will neither submit to thee, nor obey them, for I worship the Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of the Living God, the Creator of heaven and of earth and of everything which is in them." And the governor was wroth with him, and commanded the soldiers to cut out his tongue with the sword, and they did so; but God restored to him his tongue whole and uninjured as it was at first. And then they crushed him with iron implements, and nailed him upon a bed of iron, and lighted a fire under him, but God delivered him from his torture, and raised him up whole and uninjured. Then the governor sent him to the city of Alexandria, and our Lord Jesus Christ appeared unto him and strengthened him. And the governor cast him into prison where the saint worked great signs and wonders. Now the sister of JULIUS, who was from the city of 'AḲFÂḤAS, was ridden by a devil, and the saint cast out the devil from her; and the report of the saint was heard in all the city, and many believed on our Lord Jesus Christ through him and became martyrs. And the governor was wroth, and tortured him with divers kinds of tortures, and [broke him] on the wheel, and they plucked out the nails of his hands and feet, and they dragged him about in iron chains which had been made red-hot, and they cast him into the furnace of the public baths; and after this they hung a large stone about his neck and cast him into the river. And God caused him to be delivered from all these tortures and raised him up sound and uninjured. And then [fol. 109*b* 3] they cast him into the fire, but he was saved from it, and stood up and prayed. And when the governor was tired of torturing him he sent him to Upper Egypt, where they tortured him and hung him up head downwards. And then they cast him into a cauldron, and lighted a fire under him, and God appeared unto him and delivered him, and promised him that He would write in the Book of Life the name of every man who celebrated his commemoration, or who wrote the history of his fight, or who had it read. And when the governor was tired of torturing him he commanded the soldiers to cut off his head, and they cut it off with the sword, and the saint received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens. And the servants of JULIUS, who were from the city of 'AḲFÂḤAS, took the body of Abbâ BÎMÂ, and carried it to his city, and laid it in a good place until the end of the days of persecution. And they built a fine church and a monastery and laid his body therein, and many signs and miracles took place through it. And his body healeth to this day all the sick who come to it, and salute it in faith. Salutation to BÂYMÂ (sic).

And on this day also died the holy father Abbâ KÎRÔS, who dwelt in the desert of the West, near the SA'ÎD (Upper Egypt); [fol. 110*a* 1] he was the brother of THEODOSIUS the Great. And when this saint saw the oppression which was in the world, he abandoned all his possessions, and went forth from his city, and our Lord Jesus Christ guided him and brought him to the Western Desert, wherein he lived by himself for many years; and during the whole of that period he never saw a man but only the wild beasts of the desert. And there was in the desert of SCETE a certain priest whose name was Abbâ BÂWMÂ, and it was he who prepared for burial the body of Saint HILARIA, the daughter of the Emperor ZENO. And that priest said: "Whilst I was in my church by myself I heard a voice from heaven which said unto me, 'O Abbâ BÂWMÂ, rise up, and depart, and go into the Inner Desert so that thou mayest prepare for burial the body of a certain desert priest who hath performed My good pleasure more than many saints.' And straightway I rose up rejoicing, and I journeyed into the desert for three days. I arrived at a habitation, and I knocked at the door, and an aged desert monk opened the door to me, and we saluted each other, and I asked him, saying, 'O my father, is there any other desert monk in this desert?' And he said unto me, 'Yea.' And I said unto him, 'How long hast thou lived in this desert, and what is thy name?' And he said unto me, 'My name is SIMON, and behold up to the present I have lived in this desert for seven (?) years.' And I went forth from him, and I journeyed for another three days into the desert, and

I found another desert monk whose name was Abbâ 'AMMÔN. And [fol. 110*a* 2] I saluted him, and said unto him, 'Is there another desert monk in this desert?' And he said unto me, 'Yea.' And I saluted him and I journeyed yet four days more into the desert, and I arrived at the habitation of this Saint KÎRÔS. And I knocked at the door of his abode, and said, 'Bless me, O holy father.' And at that moment he spake unto me saying, 'Good is thy coming unto me this day, O Abbâ BÂWMÂ, thou saint of God! Enter in peace'; and I entered, and saluted him and was blessed by him. And I saw the grace of God in his face, and in the hair of his head, and his beard was white as snow. And when I had sat down he drew me to his breast, and embraced me, and he said unto me, 'Behold, I have dwelt in this abode for six and fifty years waiting for this hour'; and straightway he fell sick, and lay down and was in a state of suffering during the whole night. And at the time of dawn a great light shone in his abode, and a shining man came in with a cross of light in his hands. And Abbâ KÎRÔS sat down, and the shining man embraced him, and blessed him, and consoled him, and gave him the salutation of peace, and disappeared from him. And I was afraid of him, and I asked the saint, saying, 'Who is this that is arrayed in such great glory, and who shineth so brightly?' And he said unto me, 'O my son, this is our Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of the Living God, and He is wont to come unto me daily and comfort me.' And at the ninth hour of the day preceding the Sabbath, I heard a great cry which reached to heaven, and the mountains and the hills quaked at the cry of them. [fol. 110*a* 3] And I said unto him, 'O my father, what is this cry and whose are the voices which I hear?' And he said unto me, 'O my son, this is the cry of the sinners who are in Sheol, to whom God giveth rest from their punishment on the day of His holy Resurrection, from the ninth hour of the day preceding the Sabbath until the sun setteth on the First Day of the Week; and they praise God because it is He Who giveth them rest on the First Day of the Week.' And I marvelled exceedingly, and I praised God because He had given them rest. Now that day was the eighth day of the month of Ḥamlê. And Saint Abbâ KÎRÔS cried out, saying,

'A great pillar hath fallen this day in Upper Egypt, that is to say SÎNÔDÂ, the chief of the desert monks.' And on that night, which was the First Day of the Week, Abbâ KÎRÔS was greatly disturbed through the severity of his sickness, and behold, a great light shone in the dwelling, and our Lord Jesus Christ came and sat by the head of Abbâ KÎRÔS. And he said unto the Redeemer, 'My Lord and God, bless this man, for he hath come from a far country.' And our Redeemer said unto me (?), 'O Abbâ BÂWMÂ, My chosen one, be strong, and fear not; My peace and My blessing shall be with thee. And now, write the history of the strife of this Abbâ KÎRÔS, whom thou hast heard and seen, and who is renowned.' And again our Redeemer spake unto Abbâ KÎRÔS, saying, 'O My chosen one, be not sorrowful, thou art going to die, but thy death is not death, but life everlasting. Every man who shall write the history of thy strife, [fol. 110*b* 1] or shall cause it to be read, or shall listen to it being read, or shall celebrate thy commemoration upon earth lovingly, I will make to sit at meat with Me at the Feast of a Hundred Years on Mount Zion, and I will number him with My saints. And whosoever giveth an offering, or alms, or lighteth a lamp for thy name's sake, him will I reward with manifold gifts in My kingdom. Whosoever writeth the book of thy strife, I will destroy the register of his sins and write his name in the Book of Life. Whosoever shall shew mercy to the poor and needy on the day of thy commemoration, which is the eighth day of the month of Ḥamlê, I will make him to see that which hath never appeared to the eye, and which hath never been heard of by the ear, and which the heart of man hath never imagined. And I will bring unto them the Holy Mysteries in the church, and I will bless them, and I will bless their house, and I will make their children to grow up, and they shall lack nothing whatsoever of the good things of this world. And now, O My beloved KÎRÔS, I will make thee to rest from the labour of this world, and I will translate thee into the place of heavenly light, in everlasting joy.' And as our Redeemer was saying this, behold DAVID the prophet came, and he had his harp with him, and he played upon it, saying, 'This is the day which the Lord hath made; let us rejoice and be glad therein' (Psalm cxviii, 24). And our Redeemer said unto Abbâ KÎRÔS, 'Behold DAVID hath come, tell him what thou wishest him to sing unto thee.' And DAVID [fol. 110*b* 2] said unto him, 'On what string doth thou wish me to play, and what style of singing (i.e. what tune) shall I employ, and what voice (i.e. tone)? Shall it be the first, or the second, and so on up to the tenth.' And Abbâ KÎRÔS said unto him, 'I wish to hear [all] ten strings, and the tone of each and the sound of each.' And DAVID made ready his harp, and he played it and said, 'Honourable is the death of the righteous man before God.' 'O Lord I am Thy servant and the son of Thine handmaiden' (Psalm cxvi, 15, 16). And again he said, 'I have been young, and I am old, but the righteous man that is cast away I have never seen' (Psalm xxxvii, 25). And DAVID sang out loudly and he made his voice beautiful, and he played vigorously. And behold the soul of Abbâ KÎRÔS remained in the breast of our Redeemer, and He took it, and kissed it, and gave it to MICHAEL. And I, BÂWMÂ, buried the body of Abbâ KÎRÔS, and when I came out from his cell I saw that the whole mountain was filled with hosts of light, and captains of the armies of the angels; and our Redeemer laid His Cross on the cell wherein was the saint's body, and sealed it. And our Redeemer gave me the salutation of 'Peace,' and ascended into heaven in great glory, and the angels and archangels went before Him singing praises. And DAVID, playing on his harp, went before the soul of Abbâ KÎRÔS, and our Redeemer was in the midst of them rejoicing in the soul of Abbâ KÎRÔS, and He took it up into the kingdom which is for ever. And I, BÂWMÂ, was left by myself in that place, and I put myself into the cell of Abbâ AMMÔN. And after this I travelled for three days, [fol. 110*b* 3] and I came to the cell of Abbâ SIMON; and I travelled for another three days and at length I arrived at my monastery in the desert of SCETE, and I saluted all the monks, and I described to them the strife of Saint Abbâ KÎRÔS, according to what I had seen and according to what I had heard, and according to what Abbâ SÎNÔDÂ had prophesied concerning him. And when the monks heard this story they marvelled exceedingly, and praised God Who giveth such grace to those who fear Him. And they wrote down the history of this Abbâ KÎRÔS, and I sent it to all the churches and monasteries; and there is hope and comfort in the history of Abbâ KÎRÔS for all who read it." Salutation to KÎRÔS.

And on this day also are commemorated the fifteen martyrs who suffered with Abbâ NÔB. [In the Bodleian MS. this paragraph is given under the ninth day.]

Salutation to PÂWLÎ, of the city of TÂMWÂ.

IX. Ḥamlê

[fol. 111*a* 1] IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day Saint SIMON CLEOPAS became a martyr. This saint was made Bishop of Jerusalem after JAMES, the brother of our Lord. And he converted many of the Jews to the belief of our Lord Jesus Christ, and he performed many signs and miracles; and he healed the sick. And EUDRIAS the king heard that he was separating women from their husbands, and commanding them to be chaste, and he had him brought before him, and tortured him severely. Now at that time his days were one hundred and twenty years. And when EUDRIAS was tired of torturing him he cut off his head with the sword, and at the same time the head of a certain virgin whose name was THEONÂ. [In the Bodleian MS. this section is given under the tenth day.]

Salutation to NATHANIEL.

And on this day also died the holy father Abbâ CLAUDIANUS, the ninth Archbishop of the city of Alexandria. This saint sat upon the throne of MARK, [fol. 111*a* 2] the evangelist, fourteen years, and protected his flock; and he died in peace. Salutation to CLAUDIANUS.

And on this day also died Abbâ BESNĔDÂ. This righteous man fought the fight standing by a deep well of water, and the angels used to visit him and lift him up in a chariot a space of nine cubits; and he died in peace.

X. Ḥamlê

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day Saint THEODORE, Bishop of FIVE CITIES (PENTAPOLIS), became a martyr. This saint lived when DIOCLETIAN the infidel worshipped idols, and when he sent out an Edict into all countries and commanded his officers to torture the Christians, and to destroy them by every kind of torture. And he sent another governor, FALÂWĔS, to the city of Phrygia and the country round about. And THEODORE having come there, and seen the whole city, [fol. 111*a* 3] the people laid information against this saint before DIOCLETIAN, and accused him of being a teacher of the Christians. Now this took place one year after Abbâ THEONAS made him bishop. And the governor had the saint brought before him, and commanded him to worship idols. And the saint answered and said unto him, "It is not seemly for us to abandon God, the Creator of the heavens and the earth, and worship idols." And the governor answered and said unto him, "Is there any other god besides ARTEMIS, and APOLLO, and 'ARDÂMÎDÂ (sic), and the other gods? And are not these gods?" And the saint answered and said unto him, "These are not gods, and our Lord Jesus Christ is the Creator." And the governor was wroth at the firmness of his answer, and he commanded the soldiers to torture him. And they continued to torture him for a space of forty (?) days, with beatings, and with crucifixions, and with the wheel, and with prison; but the saint feared not the torture nor was he obedient to the governor's command. And straightway the governor commanded the soldiers to cut off his head, and they cut it off with the sword, and he received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens. Salutation to THEODORE whom they tortured for forty days.

[fol. 111*b* 1] And on this day Saint THEODORE, Bishop of the city of Corinth, and three women and the two governors, that is to say LUCIANUS (or LUCIUS) and DAGNÂNIUS, who were torturing them, became martyrs. And certain men having laid information before these two governors that this saint, the Bishop of Corinth, was a Christian, the governors had him brought before them, and they questioned him concerning his Faith, and he confessed that he was a Christian. And they tortured him, and beat him with rods, and he stamped on the ground and kicked the throne of the idols and overturned them. And the two governors were wroth, and they tortured him severely, and they rubbed his wounds with hairy rags which had been dipped in vinegar and salt, and meanwhile he cursed the idols and the governors. And the governors commanded the soldiers and they cut out his tongue. When they had cut it out, one of the believing women who were there took it away, and when the soldiers put the saint in prison, he took his tongue from that woman and laid it upon his belly, and his tongue extended itself, and entered his mouth. And a white dove came and flew round the saint, and then a peacock flew up and alighted on the window. And the two governors saw them and marvelled, and LUCIUS believed on our Lord Jesus Christ. And straightway DAGNÂNIUS was wroth, and he slew the three women who were walking behind the saint. And when the saint delivered up his [fol. 111*b* 2] soul the dove and the peacock flew away, and departed straightway, and DAGNÂNIUS marvelled exceedingly at this. And Saint LUCIUS informed him, saying, "The Faith of our Lord Jesus Christ is the true Faith" (?); and DAGNÂNIUS himself also believed on our Lord Jesus Christ. And then they went by sea from the city of Corinth to the land of Cyprus, and there they found another governor who was torturing the Christians. And Saint LUCIUS stood up before the governor without the knowledge of DAGNÂNIUS, and he overturned the throne of the idols, and confessed our Lord Jesus Christ; and the soldiers cut off his head with the sword, and he received the crown of martyrdom. And DAGNÂNIUS took him and made him ready for burial and buried him. And after this DAGNÂNIUS stood up before the governor, and confessed our Lord Jesus Christ, and his head was cut off with the sword, and he received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens. Salutation to THEODORE, Bishop of Corinth, and to LUCIANUS and DAGNÂNIUS.

And on this day also died the holy father and fighter Abbâ KHĔLYÂN (or, GÔLYÂN). The name of the father of this saint was JUSTUS, and the name of his mother was KÂLMÔNÂ, and his district (or, home) was 'AÎN DAḤAY; in his youth he was a [fol. 111*b* 3] worker in gold and silver, and was praised for his handiwork. One day a woman from among the Arab handmaidens came to him, and asked him to make for her ornaments for her ears. When he had finished them for her, he asked for payment from her, and she bowed her head before him, and said unto him, "If thou wantest from me what men want from women, behold me here before thee; other money I have none." When he heard this he said unto her, "Thou art the daughter of the governor of the Satans; get thee gone from me and never shew me thy face again." And then he tarried a little while in his house reminding himself about death, and punishment, and the resurrection, and then he distributed his goods among the poor and needy. And he made an agreement with his mother, and left her half of his money, and having taken food sufficient for three days he departed into the desert. And when God saw the purity of his mind, He made to be near to him what was afar off, and he came to the Red Sea in one day. And whilst he was sleeping, there appeared unto him three men in white apparel, who held a cross which shone like the sun, and they woke him up and took him with them; and when they came to a garden they gave him a staff formed of a cross studded with gems. Whilst they were in the garden they prayed together, and when he rose up after prostrating himself, he could not find any one of them; and he wept because of their separation from him. And when his sojourn there had become long, he found that he was accustomed to the solitary life, and he fed himself upon green herbs, and drank water. When he wanted to go by night into caves and [fol. 112*a* 1] other dark places, the staff of the cross gave him light, and brought near to him what was afar off; and his clothing was the bark of the trees. And when Satan, the accursed, saw his spiritual fight, he went to certain evil men and spake unto them, saying, "There is a treasure hidden in the desert, and if ye seize the man who guardeth it ye will find it"; and he took them and brought them to the passage across the river. And when they had come to the river, they lost their way to the place where they should cross over, and although they saw the river they were unable to come there to drink, and they were exceedingly thirsty. And again Satan transformed himself into a wild beast of terrifying aspect, and he went to Saint KHĔLYÂN, and he said unto him, "Why dost thou not shew compassion on thy companions who are thirsty, and why dost thou not give them water to drink?" And he thought that by this means they would be able to seize him. And the saint thought God was chiding him by the mouth of a wild beast, and he drew water for them and crossed the river, and gave them to drink. And when they saw his wretched condition, they had pity upon him, and wanted to give him their apparel, but he would not take it from them, and he returned to his abode. And Satan, having laid aside his cunning form of a wild beast, again transformed himself and took the form of a monk, and he came to the saint to lead him astray, but the saint made the sign of the Cross over him and Satan fled away ashamed. When the time for the departure of the saint drew nigh, the three men who had appeared unto him before came to him, and wrote his history for him; and when he died they buried him. Salutation to [fol. 112*a* 2] KHĔLYÂN.

And on this day also are commemorated Mâr MAṬRÂ (MÂR-MÂṬRÂ), and ANDREW, Bishop of KEFALÂ, and the consecration of a church to SERGIUS in Egypt.

And on this day also became martyrs Abbâ ÊSÎ and five and fifty men and four soldiers. [Wanting in the Bodleian MS.]

XI. Ḥamlê

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day Saint JOHN, and Saint SIMON, the son of his father's brother, from the city of SARMALÂS (SERMALAK ?), became martyrs. The mother of Saint JOHN was barren, and his father asked our Lord Jesus Christ to give him a son, and he vowed that if He did so, he would make himself a servant of God all the days of his life. And JOHN the Baptist appeared unto him in a vision, and told him that God would give him a son; and when this saint was born he called him JOHN. And he built first of all a church in the name of Saint JOHN the Baptist. And when the boy was grown up and his days were twelve years, his father gave him his flock to tend. And JOHN used to give his food to the shepherds every day, and also to those who passed by [fol. 112*a* 3] on the road, and he fasted until the evening daily. And when his father heard this he went to him in the fields so that he might know if what people had told him about him [was true], and the young man Saint JOHN was afraid lest his father should beat him, and he wanted to flee. And his father said unto him, "Shew me thy food [for] this day": and JOHN answered and said unto him, "Go inside that thou mayest see it." And when his father went inside, and [looked at] the place where things were put, he saw that it was full of hot bread, and he marvelled exceedingly and told his mother what had happened to their son. And from that hour they knew that grace was on their son, and they no longer allowed him to tend the sheep. And the saint studied and learned by heart many of the Books of the Church. And his parents asked him to let them arrange a marriage for him, but he did not wish this. And when his days were eighteen years, he was made a priest, and SIMON, the son of his father's brother, left the sheep and became his disciple, and he it was who described his miracles. Now God made manifest through him great miracles, and the people used to bring unto him those who were sick with every sickness whatsoever, and he prayed over some olive oil, and anointed them therewith, and they were healed of their sicknesses. And he rebuked the sick, and said unto them, "Many ills come upon you because of your sins"; and this saint wrought so many miracles that they cannot be counted, and among them are the following: A soldier took and carried off some barley from a widow woman. And the widow came to the saint, and complained to him about the soldier, and the saint cursed him, and his horse died when he had eaten the [fol. 112*b* 1] barley. On one occasion the king's general came to collect tribute, and he had with him a man, one of whose eyes was blind. And that man came to Saint JOHN, and was blessed by him, and straightway his eye that was blind was opened, and he saw well with it. And this holy man could see by the Holy Spirit the deeds of all men, and their sins were revealed to him, and he rebuked them for their sins. And the report of this saint was heard of by a king whose name was MARIANUS, who had an only daughter, and a serpent entered her belly, and grew up therein, and she was nigh to die; and although her father had given much money to the physicians they were unable to cure her. And the general made known to him the history of Saint JOHN, and how he had opened the eye of his blind servant, and the king commanded his soldiers to send and bring the saint. And Saint JOHN knew by the Spirit that the king wanted to bring him to him, and he feared the fatigue of the journey and the sea. And straightway a cloud caught him up from the city of SARMALÂS (SERMALAK?), and carried him along until it brought him to the city of Antioch, and set him upon the king's bed; and when the king saw him he was troubled and was afraid. And the saint told the king, saying, "I am that poor man for whom thou didst wish to send and bring hither." [And the king brought] his daughter to Saint JOHN, and he prayed over her, and the serpent went forth from her belly without injuring her, or causing her pain. And the king, and all the men of the house of the king, were blessed by him, and they marvelled exceedingly, [fol. 112*b* 2] and they glorified God Who gave such grace to those who love Him and who do His commands. And the king offered him much money and gifts, but he would take nothing whatsoever from him. And the king wished to make him dwell with him, but could not make him do so, and he laid hold upon his girdle so that he might [not] depart, and a cloud caught him up whilst the king was holding his girdle in his hand, and the girdle broke in the king's hand, and Saint JOHN arrived in his city that night. And the king built a church over that girdle, and it is called "the church of the girdle" to this day. When Saint JOHN consecrated the Offering he could distinguish between the sinners and the good, and those who were fit to partake and those who were not. When DIOCLETIAN denied Christ, and worshipped idols, this saint took SIMON, the son of his father's brother, and went to the city of Alexandria, and confessed our Lord Jesus Christ before the governor. And the soldiers tortured them severely, and after this they cut off their heads with their swords. And their souls entered into everlasting rest, and their bodies are to this day in the city of GAMNÛDÎ, where great miracles and healings take place through them. Salutation to JOHN and to SIMON.

[fol. 112*b* 3] And on this day also is commemorated the great saint Abbâ ISAIAH the anchorite, of the desert of SCETE. Salutation to ISAIAH.

And on this day also died Saint Abbâ GABRIEL, the seventy-eighth (sic) Archbishop of the city of Alexandria. This saint had believing and blessed parents, and they walked in the way of God, and in His commandments, and according to His good pleasure. And having begotten him, they reared him in the fear of God. One day there came to him certain holy monks, and among them was a righteous old man whose spiritual fight was good. And he saw a beautiful vision, as it were many bishops surrounding the boy, and they laid their hands upon him, and blessed him, and they all said, "So be it, so be it." When the old man woke up from his vision he meditated and said, "The boy shall become great." And he said unto his father, "Teach him well, for assuredly he shall become the head and chief of many peoples; thou wilt not see him at all times." [fol. 113*a* 1] And he told him what he had seen; and the father of the boy praised God, saying, "Shall anything happen to this boy?" And when his days were two (?) years his father died in the mercy of our Lord and God and Redeemer Jesus Christ. Now the boy had an uncle whose name was PETER, and he was Bishop of the city of BEḤNÂ, and his spiritual fight was admirable, and he was learned in all the holy Books of God of the New and of the Old Testaments, and he took the boy and taught him. And all those who saw the boy marvelled at the grace of God which was upon him, and at his understanding and knowledge, and he was made a deacon. And when his days were twelve years he wanted to put on the garb of the ascetic life, and he renounced this fleeting world. And the Bishop Abbâ PETER gave him into the hands of the blessed monk Abbâ PETER the priest, and he became devoted to God, and a fighter, and a man of good piety. And he took the boy and taught him the spiritual fight, and the Rule of the monastic life in a few days, and signs and wonders and spiritual excellence appeared through him; and many men loved him because of his spiritual fight, and his devotion to God, and his humility. And after the death of his teacher, PETER the priest, he departed to the monastery of Saint ANTHONY, where he lived for many years, fighting the fight with fasting, and prayer, and vigils and unceasing prostrations; and after this he departed to the desert of SCETE, to the monastery of Abbâ MACARIUS. And he became abbot of the church of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin [fol. 113*a* 2] MARY, the God-bearer, in the monastery of MÂRMÔS, and he toiled and restored the building thereof. And then he went to Jerusalem, and was blessed in the holy places, and there he was made priest of the church of the Holy Resurrection by the hand of the holy father Bishop Abbâ MICHAEL. Thence he returned to the city of MĔSR (CAIRO), and dwelt in the church of MU'ALLAḲÂH of our holy Lady the Virgin MARY, copying the holy Books of the Holy Church. In those days the holy father the Archbishop Abbâ CYRIL died, and the throne of MARK the evangelist remained without an archbishop for a few days, and all the bishops and priests agreed with one consent to make this saint archbishop. And Satan, the hater of what is good, brought certain men who were envious of him, and they did not wish him to be appointed, and they appointed archbishop the holy and spiritual father Abbâ ATHANASIUS, who is known as "Son of the Crown." And good works appeared from him, and he walked uprightly without blemish, like Abbâ ATHANASIUS the apostle, and then he died. And again the bishops, and the elders, and the people gathered together, and they set their hands to a document and wished that Abbâ GABRIEL should be appointed archbishop. And again the Enemy of what is good stirred up dissension among the people, and they agreed that the name of GABRIEL and the names of others should be written on papers, and that they should be laid on the altar, and that they should pray over them for three days, and should celebrate the Offering, [fol. 113*a* 3] so that God should make known who was to hold this honourable position and reveal his name. And they did thus, and they brought a little child, who brought forth the paper whereon was the name of this father; and all the bishops assembled and made him prefect of the church of MU'ALLAḲÂH. And again his appointment was not completed, and Abbâ JOHN, who is known as the "son of 'ABSÂDÎ," was appointed. And at that time the church of Egypt suffered great tribulation. When Abbâ JOHN was appointed, this father Abbâ GABRIEL went to the monastery of Saint Abbâ ANTHONY, and he fought a great fight, and devoted himself to fasting, and prayer, and vigils, and to prostrations by day and by night; and in the strenuousness of his fight he was superior to many. And he lived thus one year (?). And many of the holy monks saw beautiful visions concerning him, and some of them said that they saw him in the city of Alexandria, dressed in archiepiscopal apparel, with many Christians and Gentiles surrounding him. And some of them saw him in the desert of SCETE, where he was appointed head of the monastery of Saint Abbâ MACARIUS; and some of them saw a countless number of keys handed to him. Many times when he wished to come down from the monastery of Abbâ MACARIUS, he became sick, and was unable to come down. And then Saint ANTHONY appeared unto him, in a vision, and said unto him, "I do not wish thee to go down from the monastery except by the Will of God, and henceforward thou shalt not go down except at His time." And when three years [fol. 113*b* 1] were ended, a certain holy old man of the monks of the monastery of ANTHONY saw the vision of a glorious angel, who said unto him, "Three years from this time they shall take Abbâ GABRIEL and make him Archbishop of the city of Alexandria"; and that old man went out straightway and told Abbâ GABRIEL what he had seen. One day the governor of the city of ṬAFÎḤ came to the monastery of Abbâ ANTHONY, and with him were the abbot, and many judges (or, officers), and a letter from the emperor ordering them to bring Abbâ GABRIEL quickly, and to make him Archbishop of the city of Alexandria. And they took him against his will, and carried him with great honour to the city of Alexandria, and with him were the father bishops; and all the people rejoiced in him. And that day he and the bishops, and the priests and the deacons, appointed a bishop to Jerusalem, and after this he consecrated MÊRÔNA (i.e. the holy oil) three times; and he remained thus for one year and one month. At that time Abbâ ANTHONY appeared, and said unto him, "Behold, thy departure draweth nigh, and after one year and a half thou shalt depart to God and shalt inherit everlasting life." And at that time great tribulation came upon the Christians, and this father asked God to deliver them from it; and God accepted his petition and delivered them. Then the archbishop returned to his throne, and Abbâ GABRIEL hid himself in a secret place, [fol. 113*b* 2] and no man knew where he was, except a certain believer. And through the excessive intensity of his spiritual fight, by night and by day, his appearance became changed, and his body dried up. And after this God revealed the matter of this father to a certain believer, who pleased God by his works, and he became zealous for him with a divine zeal, and he brought him out of that place, and stablished him in the church of the Apostles, and he lived there for many days devoting himself to prayer and to sacred duties. And he visited the sick, and provided them with what they needed, and he comforted the believers who came to him. One night Abbâ ATHANASIUS, the archbishop, appeared unto him plainly, and said unto him, "Be not sad because of the labour and sorrow which hath come to thee, for God hath delivered thee from much toil and tribulation. And behold, there must come upon thee a sickness, so that God may perfect thy patient endurance; rejoice, however, for thou hast received the grace of God, which is great, and thou shalt receive everlasting life, and joy which is unending." And straightway a severe sickness seized him, and he continued to be sick, and he was frightened and disturbed about the departure of his soul from his body, and about his standing before God. And there was before his face a picture of our holy Lady, the Virgin MARY, and to this he prayed continually; and at that time God Most High appeared unto him with a shining face, and comforted him, and strengthened him, and said unto him, "Fear not, but rejoice, for thou hast received the grace of the kingdom of the heavens. At the end of three days thou shalt depart from this [fol. 113*b* 3] fleeting world"; and after three days he died in peace, and was buried in the church of Saint MERCURIUS with great honour. Salutation to GABRIEL the archbishop.

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day is celebrated the commemorative festival of the glorious angel, the Archangel MICHAEL, because on it God sent him to the army of SANÂKARÊM (SENNACHERIB?), the King of Persia, and he slew eighteen ten-thousand thousands and fifty hundred men. And having besieged Jerusalem, SANÂKARÊM (SENNACHERIB?) sent messengers to HEZEKIAH the king, who reviled him and blasphemed the Lord God, and he said unto them (i.e. the Jews), "Who can deliver you out of my hand?" And HEZEKIAH, the King of Judah, was sad, and he put on hair sackcloth, and he entered the House of God, and prayed and bowed down before Him in the sanctuary, and entreated Him to save His people, and the city of Jerusalem. And God accepted his petition, and He sent Saint MICHAEL the archangel to the army of SANÂKARÊM (SENNACHERIB?), King of Persia, and he performed a great miracle upon him, and delivered Jerusalem and all the people of Judah. For this reason [fol. 114*a* 1] the Teachers of the Church have commanded the people to celebrate the festival of Saint MICHAEL the archangel this day. Salutation to MICHAEL the archangel.

And on this day also Saint Abbâ ḤÔR became a martyr. This holy man was from the city of SERYÂS, and he had a sister whose father was a worker in metals; and he determined in his heart to become a martyr. And he went to the city of SARMÂ, and confessed our Lord Jesus Christ before the governor, who tortured him severely. And after this that governor and his wife and sons believed because they saw and heard of the miracles which God performed by the hands of this saint, and they became martyrs by the hands of another governor. And the governor sent Abbâ ḤÔR to the city of ANTINOË, and the governor of that city tortured him with every kind of torture, and broke him on the wheel, and hung him up head downwards, and tortured him with red-hot irons. And when he was tired of torturing him he commanded the soldiers to cut off his head, [and they did so,] and he received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens. Salutation to Abbâ ḤÔR. [fol. 114*a* 2] Salutation to the company of ḤÔR, one hundred and twenty-seven men and twenty women.

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died Saint Abbâ BASENDIUS, Bishop of the city of ḲEFṬ (COPTOS). This saint became a monk in his early years, and he devoted himself to the ascetic life, and fought a great fight, and learned many of the holy Books by heart, of their number being the Book of the Psalms of DAVID, and the Twelve Minor Prophets. And when he used to read a prophecy of one of the prophets, the prophet who wrote it used to come and stay with him until he had finished reading the prophecy. And it is related of him that when he lifted up his hands whilst he was praying, his ten fingers used to shine like ten lighted lamps; and God wrought great signs and miracles by his hands. Now he never looked upon the face of a woman, and he bowed his head towards the ground [when he saw one]. And there was a certain woman who had a serious sickness in her belly, and one day she lay in wait for him by his cell, and came upon him suddenly; and he ran away and the woman ran after him. And when she was unable to catch him, she took a handful of the dust upon which his feet had trodden, and swallowed it, and straightway she was healed of her sickness. [fol. 114*a* 3] One day he saw three shining men, and they gave him some keys saying, "Thou must administer the Church of God," and then God chose him and he was made Bishop of the city of ḲEFṬ (COPTOS). And when he was consecrating the Offering, he used to see our Lord and His angels on the altar. One day a certain priest was reciting the Liturgy before him, and when he was in the middle of it, he spat out spittle whilst he was standing before the altar. And when the priest had finished this father rebuked him, saying, "Art thou not afraid of God when thou standest at the altar? Dost thou not know that the spittle which thou didst spit out fell upon the wing of one of the Cherubims, who were standing before the altar?" And great trembling and dismay came upon that priest, and they carried him to his house, and he fell sick and died. And this saint had a sweet voice, and a good delivery of speech, and no man became wearied of his admonition or teaching. And when the time of his death drew nigh, the saint knew about it a few days before, and he summoned his people, and he taught them and admonished them, and strengthened them in the True Faith, and gave them many commands; then he delivered up his soul into the hand of God. And God made manifest many miracles from his body. And his disciple took a small piece of his grave clothes, and it became a means of healing for every sick person who came to him in faith. Salutation to BASENDIUS.

[fol. 114*b* 1] And on this day became a martyr Saint AMMON, who was from the city of ṬÛḤ, on the borders of BÛNÂ in the north of Egypt. The angel of God Saint MICHAEL appeared to this saint and made known to him everything that would happen to him, that is to say, that he must go to the city of ANTINOË, where they would torture him for the Name of our Lord Jesus Christ. And he departed to the city of ANTINOË and confessed our Lord Jesus Christ before EUGAIUS the governor, who at once tortured him severely with the wheel, and with the fire, and with the red-hot iron bed, and with whippings with whips made of ox-hide, and with the tribulation of the [furnace] of the bath; and they flayed off his scalp and laid coals of fire on his head. And God gave him strength under all these tortures, and raised him up sound and uninjured, and without pain. And after this our Lord Jesus Christ appeared unto him in the form of a young man on a chariot of the spirit, and He comforted him, and strengthened him, and promised to be with him, and He said unto him, "O My beloved Abbâ AMMON, whosoever shall call upon thy name in the time of his tribulation, I will come down and deliver him. Whosoever shall celebrate thy commemoration, or shall write the history of thy fight, I will remember in My kingdom, and I will blot out his sins; and I will protect thy city and thy church [fol. 114*b* 2] and thy body." And this saint performed great miracles whilst he was in the body. And when the soldiers cut off his head with the sword, he received the crown of life. And Saint JULIUS who was there took his body, and wrapped it in costly cloths, and sent it with two of his servants into his city; and his body is to this day in Upper Egypt, and many miracles appear through it. Salutation to AMMON.

Salutation to the consecration of thy church, O BĔSÔY.

XIV. ḤAMLÊ

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day Saint ʾABRÔḲÔNYÔS (PROCOPIUS?), the soldier of our Lord Jesus Christ, became a martyr. This saint was born in the city of Jerusalem, and the name of his father was CHRISTOPHER, which is, being interpreted, "Bearer of Christ," and he was a Christian; and the name of his mother was THEODOSIA, and she was a worshipper of idols. When his father died his mother took him, and [fol. 114*b* 3] carrying with her much money and gifts, she departed to the city of Antioch; and she gave the money to DIOCLETIAN, and presented her son, this saint, to him, and asked him to make him a governor; and DIOCLETIAN took the money, and made her son governor of the city of Alexandria. And then he commanded him to torture the Christians, and he wrote an order to do so, and placed it in his hand. And when the saint had gone a little way from the city of Antioch, there came to him a terrifying voice from heaven, calling him by his name, and saying unto him, "If thou doest as DIOCLETIAN commanded thee, thou thyself shalt die an evil death, if thou darest to transgress the command which I have given thee." And 'ABRÔKÔNYÔS (PROCOPIUS) said unto Him, "Who art thou, O my Lord? I beseech Thee to shew me Thyself." And straightway there appeared unto him a cross of light, and he heard a voice which said unto him, "I am Jesus Christ, the Son of the Living God, Who was crucified in Jerusalem." And when he heard this voice he was afraid, and trembled exceedingly, and he turned aside to the city of BÎSÂN; and having made a cross of gold, they went to the city of Alexandria. And as they were going along, the pagan BALAW (?) and his men rose up against him, and wanted to kill him, but he resisted them strongly by the might of the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, and conquered them. And his mother said unto him, "O my son, offer up sacrifice to the gods who helped thee in the fight, and delivered thee." And the saint answered and said unto her, "I will sacrifice only to my Lord Jesus Christ, Who helped me by the life-giving Cross." And when his mother [fol. 115*a* 1] heard these words she sent and informed the Emperor DIOCLETIAN that her son 'ABRÔKÔNYÔS (PROCOPIUS) had become a Christian. And DIOCLETIAN sent to the governor of Caesarea, and ordered him to enquire concerning 'ABRÔKÔNYÔS (PROCOPIUS) and to torture him. And when the governor had this saint brought before him, and 'ABRÔKÔNYÔS (PROCOPIUS) confessed our Lord Jesus Christ before him, he beat him so severely that he well-nigh died, and then he cast him into prison. And after this our Lord Jesus Christ appeared unto him that night with great light, and with Him were shining angels, and He embraced the saint and released him from his bonds, and He touched his body with His divine hand, and the saint was healed of all his wounds straightway. And on the following day the governor asked for news about the saint, whether he was dead or alive; now he thought that the saint was dead. And when he found that he was whole, and uninjured, he had him brought to the house of idols, where he used to go and pray; and when the saint came, and the governor saw that he was whole and uninjured, he marvelled exceedingly. And when the people who were there saw him, they marvelled exceedingly, and they all cried out, saying, "We are Christians openly, and we believe on the God of 'ABRÔKÔNYÔS (PROCOPIUS)"; and among them were two noblemen and twelve women, and THEODOSIA, [the mother] of Saint 'ABRÔKÔNYÔS (PROCOPIUS). And the governor commanded the soldiers to cut off their heads with the sword, and they did so, and the saints received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens on the sixth day of the month of Ḥamlê. Then the governor shut the saint [fol. 115*a* 2] up in prison until he could determine what to do with him, and the saint remained in prison for three days. Then they brought him out, and the governor said unto him, "Behold, I have waited three days for thy heart to turn, and thy soul to learn; offer up sacrifices to the gods." And the saint answered and said unto him, "Nay, O governor, my heart will not turn. Behold, I know, and am well assured, that our Lord Jesus Christ is the Great God alone. And these idols which are made out of stone and wood by the hand of man, are graven images which can neither injure [men] nor benefit them." Thereupon the governor was wroth, and he commanded the soldiers to cut his sides with swords. And the swordsman, whose name was ARCHELAUS, stretched out his hand to cut the sides of the saint with his sword, whereupon his hand dried up, and he fell down and died. And the governor was wroth, and he commanded them to throw him down on the ground, and they threw the saint on the ground, and then they beat him severely, and gashed his body with knives, and poured vinegar on his wounds, and dragged him by his feet to the prison house, and cast him into it. And he remained in the prison house three days [whilst] the governor pondered what he should do with him. And after this they took him out of prison, and threw him into a pit which was filled with fire; but our Lord Jesus Christ delivered him therefrom, and the fire did not touch him at all. And when the governor was tired of torturing him, he commanded the soldiers to cut off his head with the sword, [and they did so,] and he received the crown of martyrdom [fol. 115*a* 3] and departed to joy everlasting. Salutation to 'ABRÔKÔNYÔS (PROCOPIUS).

And on this day also are commemorated Abbâ MACARIUS the Great, and AMMONIUS (MENYÔS) the martyr.

XV. ḤAMLÊ

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD.

On this day died Saint Abbâ EPHRAIM, the Syrian. This saint was a man from the city of KAWÂKEBET, and his father was a priest of idols, and hated the worship of our Lord Jesus Christ. And at that time Abbâ EPHRAIM departed to Saint Abbâ JACOB, Bishop of NISIBIS, who admonished him, and taught him, and baptized him with Christian baptism; and he lived with him and fought a fight greater than that [usually] fought by men in his days; and he fasted frequently and prayed without ceasing. And the grace of the Holy Spirit descended upon him, and he disputed with the people, and overcame them in argument. And when the Council of the father Bishops, [fol. 115*b* 1] Three Hundred and Eighteen in number, assembled in the city of Nicea, this saint went with his teacher Abbâ JACOB to the Council of the Saints, and overcame ARIUS the infidel. That night Abbâ EPHRAIM saw a pillar of light standing upon the earth, and it reached up to heaven, and when he saw it he marvelled. And a voice came to him from heaven, saying,

"This pillar of light which thou seest is the blessed BASIL, Bishop of the city of Caesarea"; and he longed to see him. And Abbâ EPHRAIM departed to the city of Caesarea, and went into the church, and stood in a corner of it. And he saw Saint BASIL, as he went up to the throne to read the Holy Gospel, and he wore priestly vestments of gold, which were of great price, and he was in doubt about him; and God shewed him a white dove on the head of this Saint BASIL. And Saint BASIL knew that Abbâ EPHRAIM was standing in the corner of the church, and he sent and called him by his name, and EPHRAIM went to him, and they saluted each other through an interpreter. And Abbâ EPHRAIM asked Abbâ BASIL that they might talk together without an interpreter, and the grace of the Holy Spirit descended upon them, and each knew the language of the other. And then BASIL made Abbâ EPHRAIM a deacon, and after a few days he was made a priest, and many virtues appeared in him; and he fought a great fight. And at that time [fol. 115*b* 2] there was a certain honourable woman of high rank who was ashamed to confess her sin openly to Saint BASIL; and she wrote on paper a confession of all the sins which she had committed from her youth up to that day; and there remained one sin only which she did not set down in what she had written. And then she brought the paper to Saint BASIL, and she asked him before the people, saying, "I am a sinful woman. And behold, I have written all my sins on this paper, and I ask thee to remit them so that they may be blotted out from this paper, it remaining sealed." And he took the paper, and prayed for her, and the paper became blank in every place, and all her sins were blotted out with the exception of the one sin which was a very grievous one; and when she saw it she wept, and entreated him to remit to her the one sin which remained. And he said unto her, "Go thou to the desert, to Abbâ EPHRAIM, and he shall remit to thee this one remaining sin." And straightway she went to Abbâ EPHRAIM, and told him what had befallen her, and he said unto her, "Get thee quickly to Abbâ BASIL before his departure from this world, for he is the chief-priest, and he must remit to thee thy sin." And the woman returned to Abbâ BASIL, and she found that he had died whilst they were carrying him in his bed on the heads of the priests. And she wept and laid the paper on the body of Abbâ BASIL, so that he might blot out for her the sin which remained on the paper; [fol. 115*b* 3] and the saint blotted it out by his prayer. And Abbâ EPHRAIM performed many miracles. And in his days there appeared a certain wicked denier [of Christ] whose name was WALDA DÎḌÂN, and this father disputed with him, and overcame him; and this father composed very many Homilies, and it is found written in the books that the number of the works which he composed by the Holy Spirit was one thousand four hundred Homilies and Admonitions. And Abbâ EPHRAIM asked God, the Most High, saying, "O my Lord, take from me the waves of Thy grace." And having finished his good fight, he departed to God, Whom he loved. Salutation to EPHRAIM.

And on this day also are commemorated Abbâ KHARAYÔN of 'AMSAL, and FERÊ-MENAṬÔS, and five and forty martyrs, and the martyrdom of CYRIACUS, (as it is written in the Synaxarium of MĔSR), and FRUMENTIUS the monk and fighter, the pure man and worker of many miracles.

And on this day also PETER and PAUL performed a miracle in the city of Rômê. And it came to pass, after the departure of [fol. 116*a* 1] our holy Lady the two-fold Virgin MARY, the God-bearer, that [the cloud] took them up and set them down in the royal palace; and when the king saw them he was frightened and said unto them, "What are ye and what is your business?" And they said unto him, "We are the servants of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, Who destroyeth all kingdoms, and is able to deliver those who hear Him, and to punish those who hear Him not." And the king said unto them, "How is it possible for me to know whether your words are true [or not]?" And then they told him about all the signs and wonders which our Lord Jesus Christ had wrought. And the king said unto them, "I have a daughter whose right eye a bird plucked out, and if ye heal her by your prayers I will believe in your God." And PETER and PAUL said unto the king, "Bring thy daughter to us?" And straightway he brought her in haste. And the holy apostles lifted up their hands, and prayed much to God, and then they laid their hands upon her eyes, and healed her in the Name of the Lord Jesus Christ. And when the people saw this they bowed down at the feet of the holy apostles and believed. And thence the holy apostles departed to the country of Philippi (?), even as our Lord Jesus Christ commanded them. And Satan took the form of the king of 'ENDÔN (?), and he came to PRÂGMÔS, followed by a few soldiers, and he said unto him, "Why dost thou keep silence concerning the two magicians who, if we do not destroy them without [mercy], will speedily corrupt the country [fol. 116*a* 2] with their magic?" And the heart of PRÂGMÔS was persuaded, and he sent to him one thousand two hundred horsemen to bring the holy apostles to him, and they surrounded the city, and the men of the city were frightened, and they told the holy apostles. And the holy apostles went out of the city and stood up before the people, and prayed to God to send them help. And straightway the horses of the soldiers turned and faced the holy apostles, and they cried out in a thin voice like that of one who weepeth, "Make straight your feet, and kneel down on your knees." And one of the horses lifted up his voice, which was like that of a man, and said unto the soldiers, "O ye foolish soldiers of PRÂGMÔS, why do ye seek PETER and PAUL, the soldiers of Christ, and make them out to be magicians? They have only come to destroy the soldiers, and all the work of Diabolus. Do ye not see them with their King Jesus Christ, riding upon white horses, and making supplication on your behalf, that ye may become soldiers of Christ, and that they may write your names in the Book of Life? As for us beasts we will worship your God"; and having thus spoken the horse held his peace. And a voice was heard which said, "O apostles, neglect ye not my new plants"; and when all the people lifted up their eyes they saw our Lord going up into heaven in great glory. And when the twelve hundred soldiers saw this, they believed on our Lord Jesus Christ, and they submitted themselves to the holy apostles. [fol. 116*a* 3] And the holy apostles commanded them to abandon their military service, and to give back their horses to their king, and their weapons of war, and to believe boldly on our Lord Jesus Christ. And the soldiers went to PRÂGMÔS their king, and stood up before him, and he said unto them, "Where are the two magicians whom I sent you to bring?" And they said unto him, "Why dost thou seek to do evil in return for the good which they did thee in bestowing light upon thy daughter?" And then they unloosed their breast plates and girdles, and threw them in his face, saying, "Take thy property. We will find a better king than thyself. We believe on the God of PETER and PAUL." When the king heard [these words] he was dismayed, and he became furiously angry, and he commanded his soldiers to cast them into prison until he could kill them. And then he prepared to set out himself, and he made ready his weapons of war, and he commanded another fourteen hundred soldiers who were with him to set out for PÎLPÔS (sic), and to destroy the city down to its very foundations. And Saint PETER knew of this in his spirit, and he said unto Saint PAUL, "O my brother, rise up and let us go to King PRÂGMÔS before he cometh to destroy the city." Then they prayed a prayer, and mounted upon a cloud, and it [carried them away] and set them down in the royal palace. And they stood up before PRÂGMÔS, and said unto him, "Do not destroy the city, and make us the pretext for doing so; behold, we are before thee"; and the king commanded his soldiers to return. And he said unto the holy [fol. 116*b* 1] apostles, "Are ye the magicians who have bewitched the city?" And they said unto him, "Far be it from us [to do] this." And the king said unto them, "Your sins have brought this upon you." And he commanded his servants to make two iron helmets with iron pegs in them, and to fill them with poisons (or, drugs), and to heat them in the fire, and to put them on the heads of the holy apostles, and then to hang them up head downwards; and the soldiers did this to them. Then Saint PETER prayed, and said, "O Lord my God, make Thy glory to appear on PRÂGMÔS." And straightway PRÂGMÔS and all his people were hung up head downwards in the air, and at that moment PRÂGMÔS cried out, saying, "O my Lord, deliver me from this torture. Cursed be the King of 'ENDÔN, for it is he who hath led me into error, and cursed be every man who speaketh against them." And Saint PETER said unto him, "Thou shalt not come down from thy hanging until thou dost give the command to thy soldiers to release the soldiers who are in prison." And PRÂGMÔS cried out to LÔY, his daughter, and commanded her to release them, and she released them, for she was the only person who was left unhung. And Saint PETER said unto him, "And now, thou shalt not come down from thy hanging unless thou wilt write a statement with thine own hand, saying, 'There is no other god except my Lord Jesus Christ, the King of all the world, and on all the earth there is no being so unclean as myself'; and thou shalt command it to be proclaimed in the city." And the king cried out, and they brought to him paper and a pen, and he wrote these words whilst he was hanging head downwards; and he sent the writing [fol. 116*b* 2] to the city, and the people read it there. And straightway the holy apostles took down PRÂGMÔS and his followers. And the king came and bowed down at the feet of the holy apostles, and said unto them, "Forgive me, O my lords, I believe on your God." And all the people fell down at their feet saying the same thing, and the apostles baptized them all in the Name of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Spirit; and they also baptized the soldiers, and thus they were all united in the Faith of our Lord Jesus Christ. And the apostles built for them a church, and appointed priests and deacons from among their learned men, and they taught them the True Faith. And they remained with them, teaching them to understand every difficult matter, and they gave them all the Holy Scriptures whereby they might strengthen their hearts. And they said unto them, "Be ye strong in your faith which we have taught you until we return to you." And after this they gave them the salutation of "Peace," and departed to the city of PÎLPĔSYÛS (PHILIPPI ?). Salutation to PETER and to PAUL.

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day [fol. 116*b* 3] died JOHN of the "Gospel of Gold." This saint was from the city of Rômê. His father was a rich man and his name was ṬRÂBIUS, and the name of his mother was BĔDÊRÂ. And Saint JOHN was with a teacher learning the Holy Scriptures, and he asked his father to make him a Gospel of gold, and he made one as his son wished; and Saint JOHN read in it always, and his father rejoiced when he read in it. And in those days there came a certain monk unto them, and he dwelt with them; now he was on his way to Jerusalem. And that monk held converse with Saint JOHN, and he praised in his presence the garb of the monastic life, and at length JOHN rejected this world which became in his sight as nothing, and he longed for the life of the monk. And that monk went on to Jerusalem, and then came back, and he took up his abode in the house of ṬRÂBIUS, according to custom. And Saint JOHN asked him to take him with him to his monastery, and the monk said, "I am afraid of thy father, and I cannot possibly take thee on my own responsibility." Then Saint JOHN asked him, and made him swear that he would take him, and he helped him to escape and took him with him; and they travelled on the sea (or, river), and embarked in a ship, and they went on until they arrived at the monastery wherein the monk lived. And when the abbot of the monastery saw him, he marvelled at his appearance and at his manner of speech, and JOHN asked the abbot to array him in the garb of the monastic life. And the abbot said unto him, "O my son, know thou that the path of the ascetic life is very difficult." And JOHN bowed before him again, and asked the abbot [fol. 117*a* 1] to make him a monk. And JOHN having urged him, the abbot shaved his head, and arrayed him in the holy garb of the monastic life. And JOHN devoted himself to the ascetic life, and he fought many fights, and he fasted very long fasts, until his body dried up, and by reason of his excessive fasting, and prayer, and prostrations, and ceaseless vigils, his bones appeared from under his skin. And the abbot comforted him, and said unto him, "O my son, have pity on thyself, reduce thy toil and be kind to thyself, even as all the brethren [are to themselves]." And when he had been fighting a great fight for seven years, he saw in a vision as if one said unto him, "Depart to thy parents, so that thou mayest be blessed by them before thy death." And when this had been said unto him, he saw the vision thrice, and he informed the abbot of what he had seen. And the abbot said unto him, "This vision is from God and it is meet for thee to depart." And when he went out from the monastery he found a monk who was wearing ragged garments, and he took them from him, and gave him his own monk's garb. When he arrived at his father's house, he took up his abode in his father's courtyard, and he lived there for seven years, in a small hut, and ate the fragments from his father's table which the servants threw to him. And when his mother passed by his foetid smell, which was exceedingly nauseous, [reached her]. And when the time of his death drew nigh, the angel of God made it known unto him, saying, "After three days thou shalt depart from this world." And Saint JOHN sent and called his mother, and told her quickly that he was her son. And when she came to him to hear his request, he made her swear that she would bury him in that [fol. 117*a* 2] hut, and that she would not change the rags which he was wearing. And after this he gave her the Gospel of gold, and said unto her, "Read this book continually and remember me." And when his father came, she shewed him the Gospel of gold, and he recognized it as the Gospel which he had made for his son JOHN. And the two of them, his father and his mother, rose up and came to Saint JOHN, and asked him questions about that Gospel, and about their son. And he said unto them, "Swear ye to me that ye will not bury me in anything except the rags which I have worn as clothes in this hut"; and then, forthwith, he said unto them, "I am your son JOHN," and they wept with a great weeping. And the princes of the city of Rômê gathered together to them, and at the end of three days Saint JOHN died. And his mother brought out the splendid apparel which she had prepared in years gone by for her own marriage, and she wrapped him up in them, and forgot her oath. Thereupon she fell sick. And his father remembered her oath, and he stripped off his son that rich apparel, and dressed him in his rags, and buried him in that little hut, and from his body great healing was obtained by everyone who was sick; and after this they built in his name a beautiful church, and laid his body in it, and many miracles took place there. Salutation to JOHN of the Gospel of gold.

Salutation to SHARḌA ḤAWÂRYÂT, who had the harmlessness of the dove, and the cunning of the serpent.

XVII. Ḥamlê

[fol. 117*a* 3] IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day, the seventeenth day of the month of Ḥamlê, JONAH went forth from the belly of the whale.

On this day the holy and righteous woman EUPHEMIA became a martyr. One of the governors of DIOCLETIAN, whose name was BARSÎRÔS, tortured this saint. He was passing down the road, and there were with him certain holy men with iron chains round their necks, and his soldiers were dragging them along like dogs. And when this saint saw him, her heart waxed hot, because of her love of God, and she was sorry for the men. And she cursed the Emperor DIOCLETIAN and his unclean idols, and she also cursed that governor, saying, "O thou whose heart is like a stone, and who art merciless, wilt thou not have compassion on these holy men? Art thou not afraid that their God will destroy thee?" When DIOCLETIAN heard of this he commanded his soldiers to fetch her, and he questioned her about her Faith, and she denied not, but confessed before him that she was a Christian. [fol. 117*b* 1] And he tortured her severely with every kind of torture, with beatings, and with fire, and with hanging, and after this he threw her into a red-hot furnace, but no injury whatsoever came to her through these tortures. Thereupon she stood up before all the people, and she prayed, and made the sign of the Cross over all the people, and she delivered up her soul into the hand of God. Salutation to EUPHEMIA.

And on this day also are commemorated Abbâ BÊDÊL the martyr, and ZACHARIAS the priest, and AULENIUS, and MÂRÂT the bishop, and ISIDORE, and ÂYNA ṢAḤAY, and NÊRÔN (NÎRÔS?) the martyr, and GÎDÂ, and 'AWÂ, and AA (SA?), and also the finding of the bones of JUSTUS, the martyr.

And on this day took place the death of the glorious and exalted father, the man of fair remembrance, whose deeds were excellent, Abbâ ANDREAS, Archimandrite of the great city DABRA LÎBÂNÔS. [fol. 117*b* 2] This blessed man was reared from his childhood on the milk of wisdom, and he grew up in knowledge, and he assumed the garb of the monastic life under the direction of 'Abûna Abbâ JOHN KAMÂ. And having walked well, and fought a very great spiritual fight, he was set upon the throne of 'Abûna Abbâ TAKLA HAYMÂNÔT; and in the number of the learned fathers he was the eighth. And when the day drew nigh wherein he must depart from this world, at the end his death took place with violence, so that his soul might be great before God. And many of [his] sayings are written in the book of his strife which is read on the seventeenth day of the month of Ḥamlê. Salutation to ANDREAS. [This section is omitted in the Bodleian MS.]

XVIII. Ḥamlê

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day JAMES the apostle and martyr became Bishop of the city of Jerusalem. This saint was the son of JOSEPH the carpenter, and he was the youngest of his sons; and he was a virgin, and chaste, and was called the "brother of our Lord" because he was brought up with our Lord when He was in the house of JOSEPH, even as JOSEPH was called his father. And the holy apostles made him Bishop of the city of Jerusalem, and he preached and taught in the Name of our Lord Jesus Christ. [fol. 117*b* 3] And he converted many to the True Faith, and baptized them with Christian baptism, and God performed great signs and wonders by his hands, among them being the following: There was a certain man from the countries, and the apostle found him on the road and wished to go into his house, and on the road he discovered that this man was possessed of a devil. And when the Satan saw Saint JAMES, the apostle, he cried out and said, "What have I to do with thee, O Apostle of Christ? Hast thou come hither to destroy me?" And the holy apostle said unto him, "Stop thy mouth, O thou unclean spirit, and go forth from this man"; and because of this the Satan went forth from that man in the form of fire. When the old man saw this wonderful thing he fell down at the feet of Saint JAMES the apostle and said, "I am unworthy that thou shouldst enter my house, but tell me what I must do, so that I, and all the men of my house, may be saved?" And the holy apostle praised [God] because of that man, and he said, "In the Name of my Lord Jesus Christ I thank Thee, O Chief, that Thou hast made prosperous my way." And he turned to the man and spake to him the words of his salvation, and he taught him the Name of our Lord Jesus Christ. And the old man brought him into his house, and all the men of his house gathered together, and the apostle taught them the Faith, and he baptized them in the Name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Ghost; and he made them heirs in the Holy Mysteries, the Body of our Lord, and His honourable Blood. And when the people heard this they brought unto him every person who was sick, and he healed them all. And he appointed over them priests and [fol. 118*a* 1] deacons, and he made the old man their bishop, and he gave them the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; and then he went forth to travel through the countries. And there was a certain woman who was barren, and she asked him to entreat God on her behalf, so that He might give her a son. And he prayed over her, and she conceived and brought forth a son, and she called his name JAMES. And one day a great many Jews were gathered together about him, and they asked him to tell them about Jesus, and who He was, and they imagined that he would tell them that Jesus was his brother. And Saint JAMES went up upon a throne, and began to explain to them the Godhead of our Lord Jesus Christ, and he told them that He was equal with God the Father. When they heard this they were wroth with him, and they dragged him down off the throne and beat him very severely. And a certain man of their number came with a wooden bar wherewith clothes were washed, and he beat the apostle on his head, and he delivered up his soul. And it is written concerning this saint that he never drank wine, that he never ate any flesh whatsoever wherein was its blood, that a razor never went up on his head, that he never washed in the [public] bath, that he never wore clothes, but always wore a linen loin-cloth, and that he stood up so long, and made so many prostrations, that his feet and knees, and hands became swelled. When he died they buried him by the side of the Sanctuary. [fol. 118*a* 2] Salutation to JAMES.

And on this day also the blessed ATHANASIUS, of the country of CLYSMA, became a martyr in the days of DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIANUS. This blessed man was a kinsman of kings, and he was strong in the Faith of Christ. And when these wicked emperors commanded the people to worship idols, they appointed this ATHANASIUS to be governor of the land of Egypt, and ordered him to destroy the churches. And when he arrived he went to the Archbishop, Abbâ PETER the martyr, and received his blessing, and told him that he was a Christian, and he rejoiced in him. When the emperor heard of this he sent an officer to seize ATHANASIUS, and to enquire into his doings. And when the officer came he said unto him, "Why didst thou forsake the love of the gods?" And ATHANASIUS said unto him, "From my youth up I have been a lover of Christ, and I have not forsaken my Faith." And the officer said unto him, "If thou dost not turn from thy Faith thou wilt be tortured. Dost thou not know that all those who transgress the command of the emperor receive severe beatings and are tortured with cruel severity?" And Saint ATHANASIUS said unto him, "O foolish man, wait a little until thou seest the punishment that is for ever which shall come upon thee, and upon thy emperor, and upon thy father Satan, the Enemy of God." When the officer heard this he was exceedingly wroth, and he commanded his soldiers to cut off his head with the sword. And when [fol. 118*a* 3] Saint ATHANASIUS heard this, he prayed to God that He would give his soul rest with His saints, and that He would remove tribulation and persecution from the Church, and that He would make strong the Empire of Rômê, and the kingdom of 'AKSÛM. And when he had finished his prayer, he knelt down on his knees, and a soldier cut off his head with the sword, and miracles without number took place through his body. Salutation to ATHANASIUS.

And on this day also are commemorated 'EDRÔNÂ ('ENDÔRÂN), and TOBIA, and nine thousand soldiers of Antioch of the company of ISIDORE, and ANDRONICUS, the governor, and his army.

XIX. ḤAMLÊ

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day the saints of the city of 'ESNÂ became martyrs, and the cause of their martyrdom was this: ARIANUS, the governor, came to the city of 'ESNÂ thrice. The first time he killed the holy woman DÎLÂJ (?) and her four sons, whose names were SÂRES, and KHARMÂN, and YÂNÛFÂ, and SENṬÔNITA, and they finished their testimony on the seventh day of Genbôt. The second time [fol. 118*b* 1] he killed four nobles whose names were EUSAPHIUS, and TÂMÂN, and ḤARWÂG, and BACCHUS; and their martyrdoms took place on the seventh day of the month of Sanê. The third time he killed an old woman, who was lying on her bed inside her house. And the soldiers of ARIANUS asked that old woman about the holy martyrs of the city of 'ESNÂ, and she said unto them,

"Behold they are in the monastery which is called by the name of AGATHON; for they heard of the arrival of ARIANUS the governor, and they knew that he would kill the Christians, and persecute them." And after this the governor commanded his soldiers to kill everyone they found, and they ceased not to kill everyone they found, from the western [quarter] of the city which is called "SEḲYÔT KARÎM...." And they found many people on the road, and they slew them until they came to the monastery of the glorious father who is called "ISAAC the solitary." And at that time this good shepherd, who was called AMMONIUS, gave them strength, and he comforted them and said unto them, "Be strong and endure so that ye may enter into the kingdom of heaven." And whilst he was exhorting them thus, the governor came to them, and when they saw him they all cried out with one voice, saying, "We are Christians." And the governor commanded the soldiers to kill them with the sword like sheep, and his soldiers rose up and rushed upon them with swords and killed them. And the men of the cities of Alexandria and 'ESNÂ, from the least of them to the greatest, both men and women, finished their good fight, on the nineteenth day of the month of Ḥamlê; and the armies of the angels [fol. 118*b* 2] received their souls, and crowned them with crowns of light. And the governor went to the city of ASWÂN, and then returned to the city of 'ESNÂ, where he found three labourers coming from the fields and carrying the implements of their toil with them. As soon as they saw him they cried out boldly, saying, "We are Christians"; and when the governor heard this he commanded his soldiers to cut off their heads with the implements of their toil. Now their names were SÛRÛFÂS, and ANTICHIUS, and MASḤADRÊ, and they finished their martyrdom on the eleventh day of the month of Maskaram. And the governor bound in fetters this glorious father Abbâ AMMONIUS, the bishop, and he urged him to sacrifice to idols, and when he refused to do so he commanded the soldiers to cast him into the fire, and they did so, and he finished his martyrdom on the fourteenth day of the month of Ṭâkhshâsh. And certain believing men took him and wrapped him in cloths, and buried him in the place which is called BÊT-ḤAPES; and when the days of persecution were ended they built a church over him, and they consecrated it in his name. Salutation to the martyrs of 'ESNÂ.

And on this day also Saint CYRIACUS (QUIRICUS?) and JULITTA his mother became martyrs. When this saint was a child, and his days [fol. 118*b* 3] were three years, his mother took him and fled from the country of Rômê to another country. And she found there the brother of the governor from whom she had fled, and certain men laid information against her before him, and he had her brought and questioned her about the worship of idols. And Saint JULITTA answered and said unto him, "Ask the child whose days are three years to tell us what is right, and whether it is good for us to worship the gods or not." And when the soldiers of the governor went to her house they found Saint CYRIACUS (QUIRICUS ?) her son, and they brought him to the governor; and the governor questioned him about the worship of idols. And God gave the child strength, and he spake and cursed the emperor and his gods, and at length he frightened all those who were there, and they marvelled greatly at him. And the governor was ashamed; and he tortured the child severely with every kind of torture, the which even a grown up man could not endure, and he tortured JULITTA, the mother of the child, even as he tortured her son, but God raised them up whole and uninjured. And because of this many people marvelled, and believed on our Lord Jesus Christ, and became martyrs, and the grace of the Holy Spirit descended upon them. And the child CYRIACUS (QUIRICUS ?) healed many sick folk, and performed great miracles. And when fear came over his mother, and her faith dwindled, he prayed to God on her behalf, and God lifted up her heart unto heaven, and she saw the habitation of the spirit, and she became strong under the torture, and gave thanks to God. And she said unto [fol. 119*a* 1] her son, "O my son, henceforward thou art my father, and I am thy blessed daughter; blessed be the hour wherein I bore thee." And when the governor was tired of torturing them he commanded the soldiers to cut off their heads with the sword, and they did so, and the saints received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens. Salutation to CYRIACUS (QUIRICUS ?).

On this day the holy and honourable MAṬLÂN (or, BAṬLÂN), the physician, became a martyr. This saint was from a city, the name of which is TÂ' MÂDÂN, and his father, whose name was ASTURIUS, was an infidel, and his mother, whose name was 'ÛLÂNÂ, was a believer. When the child grew up, his father taught him writing and every kind of learning (or, philosophy), and he became a very great and famous physician. And a certain man who was a priest lived near their house, and when BAṬLÂN passed by, and he saw his comeliness and his knowledge, and his wisdom and skill, and his understanding, he was sorry for him, because he was a denier [of Christ]. And the priest entreated our Lord Jesus Christ on behalf of BAṬLÂN, that He might guide him into the way of life, and bring him into the True Faith. And having multiplied his petitions to God on behalf of BAṬLÂN, a time came when God told the priest in a vision of the night that BAṬLÂN [fol. 119*a* 2] should believe through him, and the priest rejoiced. And the priest always spoke to BAṬLÂN whenever he passed before him, and saluted him, and through this custom friendship grew up between them; and BAṬLÂN used to go into the priest's house to talk with him about the Faith. And the priest explained to him the uncleanness of idols, and the corruptness of heart of those who worshipped them, and he shewed him the glory of the Faith of Christ, and the knowledge and understanding of those who serve Him; and then he made him to know that by the hands of all those who believe in Christ our Lord miracles are wrought, and great healings effected. And when Saint BAṬLÂN heard that all those who believe in Christ could perform miracles, he rejoiced exceedingly, and he longed to perform miracles for himself, and he fulfilled his desire with wisdom and worked miracles; for he believed in our Lord through that priest, who taught him at all times. And one day Saint BAṬLÂN was passing through the market-place of the city, and he saw a man whom a serpent had bitten lying on the ground and the serpent was standing up before him. And he said within himself, "I will stand up that I may put to the test the words of the priest, my teacher, who saith unto me, 'If thou dost belong to our Lord Jesus Christ, thou shalt work miracles in His Name.'" And he drew nigh unto the man whom the snake had bitten, and he prayed a long prayer, and asked Christ to make manifest His power and heal the man, and kill the serpent, so that it might not do harm to any one else. And when he had finished his prayer the man rose up alive and whole, and without pain, [fol. 119*a* 3] and the serpent fell down and died straightway. And BAṬLÂN'S faith increased, and he went to the priest who baptized him with Christian baptism, and he used to visit him continually. One day a blind man came unto him that he might heal him, and when the father of the saint saw him he sent him away. And BAṬLÂN questioned his father about this, and he said unto him, "Who was the man that was enquiring for me?" And his father answered, and said unto him, "It was a blind man, and thou canst not heal him." And the saint answered and said unto his father, "Thou shalt see [the power of] God." And he called the blind man back, and said unto him, "If thou canst see wilt thou believe in the God Who shall heal thine eyes for thee?" And the blind man said unto him, "Yea, I will believe." And the saint prayed over him for a long time, and then he laid his hand upon the eyes of the blind man, and said unto him, "In the Name of our Lord Jesus Christ receive thy sight"; and straightway the blind man's eyes were opened. And when the father of the saint saw this he believed, together with the man who was blind, on our Lord Jesus Christ, and BAṬLÂN took them to the priest, his teacher, who baptized them both with Christian baptism. And when the father of the saint died, BAṬLÂN set his slaves free, and gave the greater part (?) of his money to the poor. And he practised medicine, and healed men without payment, but he required those whom he healed to believe on Christ. And the [other] physicians were jealous of him, and they laid information against him, and the priest, and the man who was blind, and many other believers, before the king. And the king was wroth with them, and he said unto them, "Sacrifice ye to the gods," [fol. 119*b* 1] but they refused to obey him, and the soldiers cut off their heads with the sword and they received crowns of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens. And after this the king tortured Saint BAṬLÂN very severely, and many signs and wonders appeared through him, and many men believed through him, whilst he was under torture, and became martyrs. And the king was wroth with Saint BAṬLÂN, and cast him to the lions, but they would not injure him, and only licked his feet; and the king commanded the soldiers to cut off his head with the sword, and they did so, and thus he finished his fight, and received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens. Salutation to BAṬLÂN.

Salutation to ISAAC, the righteous man.

And on this day also are commemorated Abbâ BATRÂBÔ, and MACARIUS of FALGA ḤALÎB, and MOSES of SHÔKÎ.

Salutation to ABEL, the son of TAKLA ḤÂYMÂNÔT.

On this day the holy and honourable THEODORE the Great, the General, became a martyr. The name of the father of this saint was "JOHN" and he was a man from the city of SEBṬ in Upper Egypt, and the governor took the father of this saint with his regiment and carried him to the city of Antioch. And JOHN dwelt there, and married a certain noble lady of that city who was a worshipper of idols, (now she did not know whom her husband JOHN worshipped) and he begot by her this Saint THEODORE. And when his mother wanted to present him in the house of idols, and to teach him their worship, his father would not let her do so; and because of this she was angry with him, and drove him away from her, and the child THEODORE was left with his mother. And his father JOHN prayed, and entreated God to guide his son THEODORE into the path of righteousness. And Saint THEODORE grew up, and studied philosophy, and [other] learning, and Christ illumined the eyes of his heart; and he went to a righteous bishop, whose name was 'ALÂKÊS, who baptized him with Christian baptism. And when his mother heard of this she sorrowed with a great sorrow. And after this he made enquiries concerning his father, as to whether he was alive or dead, and one of his servants told him the matter concerning his father privily, and how his mother had driven away his father, because he was a Christian. And Saint THEODORE [fol. 119*b* 3] grew up, and was exceedingly strong in battle, and the king made him a general. And when the king went forth to fight against the men of Persia, this saint did valiantly, and he captured the son of the King of Persia, who was on his horse, and all his company with him. And after a few days the Barbarians rose up against the country of Rômê, and destroyed many cities. And when the Emperor DIOCLETIAN heard of this he was exceedingly afraid, and he summoned THEODORE and said unto him, "What shall we do? Take with thee all thy soldiers, and all thy weapons of war, and set out for the war." And Saint THEODORE answered and said unto him, "Take thy weapons of war and give them to thy slaves, for I have no need of weapons of war, because my trust is in the help of my Lord Jesus Christ. This spear which is in my hand and the horse which I ride are profitable to me through the might of my Lord Jesus Christ. I will set out alone for the war, and will not take a soldier with me, for my God will go forth with me to the war, and He, the Creator of the universe, will help me." And the emperor said unto him, "Do what thou pleasest, but behold, our enemies have drawn nigh." And on the following day the saint went forth to war, and the emperor said unto him, "What strength hast thou to fight against the Barbarians, who are a people many in number?" And the saint answered and said unto him, "Stand here with thy army, and I will go out against them alone, and thou shalt see what shall come upon them, and I believe, [fol. 120*a* 1] by God, that not one of them shall ever return to his house"; and the emperor and all those who were with him marvelled. And then Saint

THEODORE went to the war by himself, and he left the emperor and went a long way off from him, namely a distance of three stadia. And when Saint THEODORE arrived at the city (camp?) of the Barbarians, he said unto them, "Will ye fight, or will ye depart in peace?" And they said unto him, "Who are we to fight? We do not see any men to fight except thyself." And THEODORE said unto them, "I want no one, for I by myself in the might of my God will destroy you all." And the Barbarians said unto him, "Peradventure thou hast come out to fight a dog? If thou wilt select the least among us, he shall come to thee, and fight thee." And straightway Saint THEODORE came down from his horse, and turned his face towards the East, and he prayed, saying, "O my Lord and God, Who didst strengthen DANIEL the prophet, and enable him to destroy the idols, and to kill the serpent in the city of Babylon, do Thou be with me in the same manner this day, and strengthen me by Thy help so that I may praise Thy Name for ever and ever, Amen." And when he had finished his prayer he took his spear in his hand, and made over it the sign of the Cross, and he leaped upon his horse, and cried out to the Barbarians, saying, "Come to me so that we may fight with you; I am the servant of my Lord Jesus Christ." And straightway he charged in among them with his spear in his hand, and he destroyed all the Barbarians and not one of them escaped, [fol. 120*a* 2] either on his horse, or by running away on foot. And Saint THEODORE cut off the heads of their officers and brought them to the emperor with him, and the emperor and all his army welcomed him; and all the men of the city of Antioch bowed down before him. And they laid waste all the country of the Barbarians. And there was in the city of 'EUKÎṬÔS a great serpent which the people used to worship, and they gave it each day two men to devour. And there was in that city a certain woman who was a widow and a Christian, and she had two sons, and the people took them and set them before the serpent for it to devour them. And at that time Saint THEODORE came to the city of 'EUKÎṬÔS, and the widow stood up before him weeping, and she told him all that had befallen her, and how they had taken her sons for the serpent. And when he learned that the woman was a Christian he said within himself, "They have wronged this woman, but God shall avenge her." And he came down from his horse, and turned his face towards the East and prayed, and after he had finished his prayer he drew nigh the serpent; and all the people were watching him from the tops of the walls of the city. Now the length of the serpent was fourteen cubits, but God gave him power over it, and he speared it with his spear and killed it, and delivered the sons of the widow. After this he departed into Upper Egypt to search for his father, and he asked about him, and they brought his father to him, and he knew by a certain mark that THEODORE was his son. And he lived with his father until he died, and [fol. 120*a* 3] then he returned to the city of Antioch. And he found that the Emperor DIOCLETIAN was denying Christ, and worshipping idols, and was bringing tribulation upon the Christian folk, who believed on the Name of Christ; and he stood up before him and confessed our Lord Christ. Now the priests of the idols of the men of the city of 'EUKÎṬÔS had already laid information against him before the emperor, saying, "The man who killed the serpent worships [Christ]." And on the morrow the emperor sent, and had THEODORE brought before him, and he said unto him, "Why dost thou do this evil thing?" And Saint THEODORE answered and said unto him, "Every evil work is from thee, O son of sin, who hast forsaken the God of heaven, and dost worship unclean idols; God shall destroy thy kingdom quickly." And straightway the emperor was wroth, and he commanded a hundred soldiers and they threw THEODORE upon the ground, and beat him with rods in relays. And they beat him and then rested, and at length his flesh was cut into strips and his blood flowed on the ground like water. And whilst he was under this torture MICHAEL, the angel of God, came down and stood before him, and said unto him, "Be strong, O THEODORE, behold the time of the hours of thy fight hath drawn nigh, and many signs and wonders shall appear in the place where thy body is laid. And behold, our Lord Jesus Christ promiseth thee a righteous promise, and saith unto thee. 'All those who shall celebrate thy commemoration, or fill the hungry with food, or give alms on the day of thy commemoration, or give drink [fol. 120*b* 1] to the thirsty, or shall give an offering or incense, or a book to the church in thy name, I will erase their sins from the roll, and they shall never see punishment. Whosoever shall write a book of thy fight, or cause it to be read, or shall listen to it, or shall acquire it, I will write their names in the Book of Life.'" And when the angel had said this he went up to heaven in great glory. And straightway all the soldiers of the emperor and all the people gathered together, and they cried out and said unto him, "God shall destroy thee, O infidel, by the spirit of His mouth, and He shall do it in wrath because thou dost torture Saint THEODORE, the mighty and strong man, who hath delivered us out of the hand of our enemies." And they believed on our Lord Jesus Christ, and on that day many of the people and of the soldiers of the emperor became martyrs. And after this DIOCLETIAN, the infidel, commanded the soldiers and they brought an iron bed and laid the saint upon it, and lighted a fire beneath it, and the flames of the fire soared upwards. And Saint THEODORE said, "O my Lord, deliver Thou me as Thou didst deliver the Three Children from the fiery furnace"; and straightway the fire was extinguished, and it became cold as dew at the time of dawn. And there came a voice from heaven, saying, "O thou to whom power hath been given by our Lord Christ, be strong!" And straightway the saint stood up before the emperor and said unto him, "O infidel, be ashamed, for our Lord Jesus Christ hath delivered me from all torture." And when [fol. 120*b* 2] the general of the emperor saw this he believed in our Lord Christ, and he cried out with a loud voice, saying, "There is no god but the God of Saint THEODORE"; and he became a martyr. And when the emperor was tired of torturing him, he commanded the soldiers to cut off his head with the sword, and to burn his body in the fire, and by the Will of God they carried him to the door of his mother's house, and there they cut off his head, and blood and milk flowed out. And they lighted a large fire, and cast his body into it, but the fire neither touched it nor burnt a hair of his head. And his mother gave much money to the soldiers, and took his body and wrapped it up in rich cloths, and hid it in her house until the end of the days of persecution. And they built for him a church and many monasteries, and they laid his body in the monastery of his father's city SEBṬ in Upper Egypt, and many signs and wonders and great healings took place through it. The end of his martyrdom took place on the twentieth day of the month of Ḥamlê, and he received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens. Salutation to THEODORE.

Salutation to the purification of ḤANNÂ, the mother of MARY.

[fol. 120*b* 3] And on this day also are commemorated Saint THEOCYTUS, and Saint TIMOTHY, Archbishop of Alexandria, and MOSES, and JULITTA, and the four hundred and forty martyrs who were with CYRIACUS.

Salutation to GABRA ÎYÂSÛS and to THEKLA.

XXI. Ḥamlê

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day is celebrated a festival in honour of our Lady, Saint MARY the Virgin, the God-bearer. Salutation to thee, O MARY.

[fol. 121*a* 1] And on this day also died Saint SUSENIUS, the eunuch. This saint was one of the officers of the Emperor THEODOSIUS, and grace and wisdom were upon him, and his compassion was great, and his acquaintance could be made by all men. He visited all those who were sick, and comforted them, and he enquired into their tribulations and helped them. And when one hundred bishops assembled for the Second Council of Ephesus because of NESTORIUS, Abbâ CYRIL, Archbishop of the city of Alexandria, came, and this saint ministered unto him and all his bishops, and provided for them. At that time he fell sick of a grievous sickness, and he saw a vision as it were of some one calling him to the Great Marriage Feast, and he told Saint Abbâ CYRIL what he had seen. And Abbâ CYRIL said unto him, "Dost thou wish me to ask my Lord Jesus Christ to heal thee of thy sickness?" And he answered and said unto him, "Yea, until I can give my possessions to the poor." And Abbâ CYRIL prayed for him, and he recovered from his sickness, and he rose up and gave all his possessions to the poor and needy, and then he lay down and died in peace. And Saint Abbâ CYRIL prayed over him, and he prepared him for burial, and buried him, and commanded the people to celebrate a festival of commemoration on the day of his death, which is the twenty-first day of the month of Ḥamlê. Salutation to SUSENIUS.

And on this day also died the blessed LAWA-KRĔSTÔS. This saint was a man in the world, and when he married a wife he lived with her in virginity, and served God with fasting, and with prayer; and at night time they put on sackcloth, and each slept alone. In the day time he used to go about in the desert watching sheep, and she used to prepare a table for strangers and pilgrims; and in the evening he washed their feet, and she ministered to them at table and brought their food. And then they asked God to reveal to certain perfect monks what manner of work theirs was, and a voice came unto them from heaven, saying, [to the monks] "Your fight hath not been as great as that of LAWA-KRĔSTÔS and his wife." And when those monks had gone to them, they enquired into their works, and with great difficulty the saints told them; and the monks departed wondering. And leading this life of fighting LAWA-KRĔSTÔS and his wife died. Salutation to LAWA-KRĔSTÔS and his wife.

[fol. 121*a* 3] And on this day is celebrated also the festival of the angel URIEL, and on this day also are commemorated the Abûna BAṢALÔTA MÎKÂÊL, and 'ÔYÔRÂNÔS (or, YÔRÂNÔS), the officer who was present when our Lord was pierced with a spear on the Cross. Salutation to URIEL. Salutation to BAṢALÔTA MÎKÂÊL.

XXII. Ḥamlê

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day Saint MACARIUS, the son of Saint BASILIDES, the general and martyr, became a martyr. When information had been laid before DIOCLETIAN that this saint would not worship idols, the emperor wrote and ordered the governor to send him to the city of Alexandria. And MACARIUS embraced his parents, and commanded them to take care of the poor and the needy, and went forth with the letter of the emperor. And our Lord Jesus Christ appeared unto him in a vision and gave him strength to endure, and He informed him what should happen unto him. And when he arrived [fol. 121*b* 1] in the city of Alexandria, and stood up before HERMANUS (ROMANUS?) the governor, HERMANUS (ROMANUS?) knew that he was the son of BASILIDES the general, and he persuaded him earnestly, and besought him to turn from his counsel; but he would neither submit, nor turn from his good counsel, and the governor tortured him severely, with divers kinds of tortures. And whilst MACARIUS was undergoing torture his soul (or, mind) was caught up, and God shewed him the habitation of the saints, and the habitation of his father and brother. And after this the governor sent him to the city of NÎḲYÔS, and there the governor tortured him severely. And they cut out his tongue, and hacked off his arms, and they thrust red-hot iron goads into his sides; but God gave him the strength to endure this, and He raised him up whole and uninjured. And God performed many signs and wonders by his hands, and among them are the following: Certain men passed before him carrying a dead man whom they were going to bury, and whilst all the people were watching him Saint MACARIUS made entreaty to our Lord Jesus Christ on behalf of the dead man, and prayed Him to make manifest His praise on him; and then he prayed and the dead man rose up and told the people what he had seen. And he said unto them, "Christ is the Lord of the Universe," and when they heard this many of the people believed on our Lord Jesus Christ; and the soldiers cut off their heads with the sword, and they received the crown of martyrdom. Now ARIANUS, the governor of ANTINOË, dwelt there, and when he returned he took Saint MACARIUS with him. And [fol. 121*b* 2] when they arrived at the city of SEṬNÛF the ship stood still (i.e. ran aground), and could not be moved; and when they arrived at the city of ANTINOË our Lord appeared unto Saint MACARIUS in a vision and said unto him, "In this place thy fight shall finish, and in it shall thy body lie." And the governor commanded the soldiers to put Saint MACARIUS upon the rack, and they did so, and then they cut off his head, and he finished his fight, and received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens. And when CONSTANTINE reigned there was appointed by him a governor, whose name was EULOGIUS, a believer, and he commanded them to open the churches, and to build up those that were ruined, and to destroy the houses of idols. And Saint MACARIUS appeared unto him in the night and informed him concerning the place wherein was his body. Then EULOGIUS rose up, and came to that place, and found the body of the saint; and he took it away from there, and they built a church for it and laid it therein, and great signs and miracles took place through it. Salutation to MACARIUS.

And on this day also the holy and honourable LEONTIUS became a martyr. This saint became a Christian through his father, who was a soldier in the army of the infidel emperor, and was a man of the city [fol. 121*b* 3] of ṬRÂBLÔS (TRIPOLI ?). He was exceedingly goodly in appearance, and was perfect in his fight, and he read the Divine Books continually, and learned many of them by heart, especially the Psalms of DAVID which he used to recite frequently, and for this reason he knew them by heart. He admonished his fellow-soldiers constantly, and he taught them the fear of God, and he encouraged them and said unto them, "Waste not your years in the service of idols."

And there were some who submitted to his words, and turned away from their infidelity, and forsook their error, and the unclean iniquity wherein they had been living hitherto; and there were others into whom Satan entered, and they went to their general, and said unto him, "LEONTIUS holdeth idols in contempt, and he teacheth and saith that Christ is God, the Creator of the heavens and the earth, and of all that is therein." And the governor had LEONTIUS brought, and he questioned him concerning this matter, and LEONTIUS confessed our Lord Jesus Christ before the governor, even as PAUL the apostle saith, "Who shall separate me from the love of Christ my God, Whom I have served, and worshipped, from my youth up?" (Romans viii, 35). And the governor was wroth, and commanded the soldiers to bind him hand and foot, and cast him into the prison house; and they did even as the governor commanded. And on the following day the governor had him brought before him, and he said unto him, "By what power dost thou presume to transgress the edict of the emperor and dost turn men from the worship of the gods?" And the saint answered and said unto him, "In truth I would that all men would enter into the Faith of our Lord [fol. 122*a* 1] Jesus Christ. If thou wilt forsake thine error, and the service of idols, and wilt worship our Lord and God and Redeemer Jesus Christ, thou shalt inherit an everlasting kingdom"; and then he cursed the gods of the governor and his unclean idols. And the soldiers beat him severely, until his blood ran down upon the ground, and all the while they were torturing him he glorified God and sang his praises. And one of the soldiers was sorry for him, and he whispered in his ear, and said unto him, "I am sorry for thee. Have pity on thy youth and speak only one word, and tell the governor that thou wilt sacrifice to the gods, and I will undertake to set thee free." And the saint cursed him, and thrust him away from him, saying, "Get thee from me, Satan!" And when the governor saw his endurance, and his fortitude, he doubled his torture; and at length his body was cut into strips and his blood poured on the ground. Then the governor commanded them to drown him in the river, or to drag him by the feet and cast him into prison until he could decide what to do with him; and when they had done these things to him he died in prison. And a certain woman who was a believer came and gave the keepers of the prison house and the soldiers much money, and she took the saint and wrapped him up in new and costly cloths, and she made a covering worked with gold to spread over his bier, and she laid him in a coffin in the house, and had a picture of him painted upon it; and she hung before it a lamp which burned continually. [fol. 122*a* 2] Salutation to LEONTIUS, the lamp of ṬRÂBLÔS (TRIPOLI ?).

And on this day also is commemorated Saint MARKÔLÔS (MARCELLUS).

Salutation to LONGINUS.

XXIII. ḤAMLÊ

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day the holy woman MARÎNÂ became a martyr. The name of the father of this saint was DECIUS, high priest of the gods of the city of Antioch; now at that time DECIUS was emperor. And when Saint MARÎNÂ was five years old her mother died, and her father committed her to a nurse so that she might live outside the city; now this nurse was a Christian, and she taught MARÎNÂ all the Faith of Christ. And when MARÎNÂ reached the age of fifteen years, [fol. 122*a* 3] her father died. One day she heard her nurse talking about the labours and fights of the martyrs, and the love of Christ entered her heart, and she went about seeking to become a martyr. And a wicked governor came to this city, and as soon as he saw her he commanded the soldiers to bring her before him, and he said unto her, "Whence art thou? What is thy name?" And she said, "I am one of the people of Jesus Christ, and my name is MARÎNÂ." When the governor saw her grace and her beauty, he could not restrain himself, and he persuaded her with many words to consent to his wish. When she cursed him, and reviled his gods, he commanded the soldiers to beat her with iron rods, and to cut off her limbs, and to scrape her body until her blood flowed like water, and he also commanded them to scrape her members with an iron scraper, [and they did so]; but when Saint MARÎNÂ prayed to God, MICHAEL the Archangel came and healed her. And the governor commanded them to take her into a prison house, which was filled with darkness, and whilst she was praying the Archangel MICHAEL came, and lighted up the prison house, and took her up into heaven, where he shewed her the dwelling of the saints and the righteous, and then he brought her back to her place. And on the following day the governor commanded the soldiers to scrape her with an iron scraper, and to slit her body with butchers' knives, and to cast her into prison; and Saint MICHAEL came and healed her. And whilst she was standing up praying, a huge and most terrifying serpent came forth from this prison, and when she saw it she was frightened and her whole body trembled, and she could not speak. And the serpent swallowed her up, her hands being extended in the form of a cross, and she was praying in her heart. Thereupon the belly of the serpent was split open, and MARÎNÂ went forth [fol. 122*b* 1] from him uninjured, and she gave thanks to God. And when she turned towards the prison house, she saw Satan seated, and he was in the form of a black man, with his hands clutching his knees. And having made the sign of the Cross over her face, she seized him by the hair of his head, and beat him with a rod severely. And then there was revealed unto her the wood of the Cross of Jesus Christ, and a white dove was sitting upon it, and it spake, saying, "Rejoice, O MARÎNÂ, for there is committed to thee the pledge of the grace of the Holy Spirit." And on the following day the governor commanded the soldiers to strip her naked, and to hang her up, head downwards, and to burn her body with fire, and to cast her into a cauldron of boiling water; [and they did so]. And as she was standing up in the cauldron and praying, a dove came down from heaven, and he had in his beak a crown of gold, and he loosed her fetters, and dipped her in the water thrice, in the Name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit; and she went forth from the water praising God. And when the governor saw that she was still alive he commanded them to cut off her head with the sword. And when she had come into the place of martyrdom she prayed to God that He would receive her soul in peace. And our Lord Jesus Christ came unto her, and gave her a promise that He would forgive the sins of everyone who should call upon her name, or write the history of her strife, or have it read, or should hear it read; and then the soldiers cut off her head with the sword. And many miracles became manifest [through her], the blind saw, the lame walked, the deaf heard, and the dumb [fol. 122*b* 2] spake; and countless folk believed on our Lord Jesus Christ. Salutation to MARÎNÂ.

And on this day also Saint LONGINUS became a martyr. This saint came from the country of Cappadocia, but by race he was a Greek. And when TIBERIUS CAESAR reigned, he appointed PILATE governor of the land of JUDAH, and he gave this Saint LONGINUS to him among his other soldiers. And when the time arrived, and the Lord wished to suffer for the salvation of His people, He permitted the wicked Jews to perform this thing. When they had made themselves ready for this deed, this LONGINUS was one of the soldiers whom PILATE commanded to crucify our Lord. And because of this the Jews gave him much money, and he worked and did the will of the Jews, and he pierced our Lord with a spear after He had delivered up His soul, and blood and water flowed from His side. And when this saint saw this he marvelled exceedingly. And when, at the time of the Crucifixion, he saw that the sun became dark, and that the moon became like blood, and that the curtain of the Temple was rent, and that the rocks were split open, and that the dead rose up, his wonder was greatly increased; now he had heard and [fol. 122*b* 3] seen the miracles which our Lord performed from His Birth to His Crucifixion. And when the righteous JOSEPH took the body of our Lord and Redeemer, and laid it in the cave, this saint was standing there with the guards when they sealed the tomb. And when our Lord rose, the tomb being sealed, this LONGINUS was dismayed, and he asked God to explain to him this mystery. And our Lord sent unto him the Apostle PETER, and he found him on the day of the Resurrection of our Lord. And LONGINUS asked the Apostle PETER, and adjured him to tell him the whole history of the Redeemer; and the Apostle PETER told him everything which had been prophesied concerning our Redeemer, and how He was the Son of the Living God. And this saint believed through the Apostle PETER, and he abandoned the service of an earthly king, and departed to the country of Cappadocia, and he preached therein in the Name of our Lord Jesus Christ, like the Apostles. When PILATE heard about this he was exceedingly wroth, and sent and reported him to TIBERIUS, and the emperor had him brought and tortured him and cut off his head with the sword; and the saint received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens. Salutation to LONGINUS.

[fol. 123*a* 1] And on this day also Saint 'ABṬLĔMÂNÔS (PTOLEMY), of Shoka, became a martyr.

XXIV. Ḥamlê

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day Saint Abbâ NÔB, of the city of NEKHÎSÂ, on the borders of the lower land in the north of Egypt, became a martyr. The parents of this saint were holy and pure, and instructed folk; and having gotten this Saint Abbâ NÔB, they reared him in the fear of God. And when his days were twelve years he loved the Church, and he loved to listen to the Scriptures and to doctrine. And when DIOCLETIAN brought tribulation upon the Christian folk, this NÔB determined in his heart to shed his blood for the Name of our Lord Christ. And at that time he went into a church and heard the priest teaching the believers and strengthening them in the True Faith, and he said unto them, "Keep yourselves from the worship of idols, and it shall be good for you to deliver yourselves over to death for the Name of Christ." And this saint returned to his house, sad and sorrowful, and he set before him everything which his father had left him, gold, and silver, and apparel, and he said, "Behold it is written, 'The world shall pass away and the desire thereof' (cf. Matthew v, 18)." And straightway he rose up, and gave all his money to the poor and needy, and he departed to the city of GAMNÛDÎ, walking thither [fol. 123*a* 2] on his feet along the river bank, and he found the governor LUCIUS, and he confessed before him the Name of our Lord Jesus Christ. And the angel of God appeared unto him there, and encouraged him and told him everything which should happen to him; and the governor tortured him very severely. And when the governor went to the south he took the saint with him, and he hung him up upon the mast of the ship. And the governor sat down to eat and to drink, and immediately he did so the vessel which was in his hand stood still like a stone, and the eyes of the soldiers were blinded. And the angel of God came down from heaven, and released the saint from his hanging position, and he wiped up the blood which had run down from his nose and mouth, and then the wind blew and they came to the city of Athribis. And the governor of Athribis knew what had happened to the governor of GAMNÛDÎ, and when the soldiers saw it they unfastened their belts, and cast them before the governor, and they confessed our Lord Christ and became martyrs. And they tortured Saint Abbâ NÔB very severely in Athribis. They laid him on an iron bed, and lighted a fire beneath it, and Abbâ NÔB prayed whilst he was on the iron bed, and God delivered him. And after this the soldiers sawed him asunder with a saw, and they cut off his limbs, and the angel of God came down from heaven and delivered him, and raised him up whole and unharmed. And then they took the saint to the city of Alexandria, and they tortured him there severely, and they heaped on him deadly serpents, but they neither approached him nor harmed him. And one of the serpents [fol. 123*a* 3] went and coiled itself round the neck of the governor, who asked Abbâ NÔB to have mercy upon him. And the saint commanded the serpent to leave the governor, and it came down off his neck, and the governor commanded the pagan priests and the magicians to burn it with fire. And JULIUS, who was from the city of 'AḲFÂḤAS, came to Abbâ NÔB, and asked him about his fight, and the name of his city, and he wrote down all [the story of] his fight. And when the governor was tired of torturing him, he commanded the soldiers to cut off his head with the sword; and our Lord Christ appeared unto him, and comforted him and told him great healing should be derived from his body wheresoever it might be laid. And He said that God would deliver from his tribulation everyone who should ask this from Him in the name of Abbâ NÔB, and that God would forgive the sins of every one who celebrated his commemoration, or who satisfied the hungry with food, or who gave drink to him that was parched, or who gave incense or an offering [to the church], or who wrote a copy of the book of his fight. And then the soldiers cut off his head, and he received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens. And JULIUS took the body of Abbâ NÔB, and sent it with his servants to the city of NEKHÎSÂ, and when the days of persecution were ended, they built a church in his name, and many signs and miracles took place in it. And the body of the saint is in the town of GAMNÛDÎ to this day. [fol. 123*b* 1] Salutation to NÔB.

And on this day also Abbâ TAKLA 'ADÔNÂYÂ, of DABRA LÎBÂNÔS, and TAWALDA MADKHAN, and their companions, became martyrs.

And on this day also fourteen thousand and eighty-four companions of Abbâ NÔB (var. nineteen thousand and eighty-four) became martyrs.

[fol. 123*b* 2] And on this day also died the holy father Abbâ SIMON, the forty-second Archbishop of the city of Alexandria. This saint came from the East, and his parents brought him to the monastery to the west of the city of Alexandria, wherein is the body of Saint SEVERUS; and he became a monk there, and he learned to read and to write, and he learned by heart the Books of the Church. And Abbâ AGATHON made him a priest, and after this God chose him to become archbishop; and when he was appointed priest he served his spiritual father in the administration of the archiepiscopate. And he lived by himself, fasting, and praying, and reading the Scriptures, and he ate only bread, and salt, and cummin, and uncooked herbs. And he fought a perfect fight, and his devotion was sincere, and he made the soul of lust which was in him to be subject to his rational and understanding soul. And God wrought great signs and miracles by his hands, among which were the following: Certain men of the priests of the city of Alexandria were envious of him, and they went to some magicians and gave them much money, and they prepared a deadly poison for them, and gave it to them. And those evil priests took that poison, and mixed it with some drink, and poured it into a glass, and gave it to the archbishop and then they asked him to drink, and to give them his blessing. And the archbishop drank that drink after he had received the Holy Mysteries, and no harm whatsoever came to him. [fol. 123*b* 3] And after this they mixed that poison [with other things], and gave it to him a second and a third time, and it did him no harm, and the priests marvelled at his escape. Then they went to the market and found new figs there, and they bought some and worked up some of that poison in some of the figs; and the wicked priests arranged together to give him the poisoned [figs] before he received the Holy Mysteries and was fasting. And the magicians said unto them, "If ye can make him swallow it, his belly will split open straightway." And those deniers [of Christ] went to him with deceit, and they asked the archbishop to eat of the figs, and they pressed him, and against his will they thrust the figs into his mouth; now he did not wish to swallow them before he received the Holy Mysteries. And having swallowed them, his belly was moved that night, and he remained sick for four days. And the angel of God appeared unto him in a vision by night, and made known to him the cause of his sickness, and he revealed unto him the names of those who had prepared the poison for him. And in those days 'ABD AL-AZÎZ, Khalîfah of Egypt, came to the city of Alexandria, and Abbâ SIMON, the archbishop, went out to welcome him. And the Khalîfah saw the traces of his illness on the face of this father, and he asked the scribes, saying, "What hath happened to the archbishop that his appearance is thus?" And they told him what had happened, and how they had prepared poison for him; and the Khalîfah was wroth, and commanded [his soldiers] to burn the priests and the magicians in the fire. [fol. 124*a* 1] And the archbishop bowed down to the ground and wept, and besought the Khalîfah to have mercy on them, and the Khalîfah said unto him, "Assuredly not, nay they shall burn them in the fire as they deserve." And the father said unto him, "If thou dost burn them, I shall have neither priests nor archiepiscopate"; and the Khalîfah marvelled at his gentleness and compassion. And the Khalîfah commanded, and the soldiers drove into exile the priests, and burned the magicians in the fire by ḲÂRÔS. And the Khalîfah loved this holy father greatly, and paid him much honour, and he commanded him to build churches and monasteries; and the archbishop built churches, and he built [one] by the city of AL-WÂḤ to the south of Egypt, and very many other churches. And God made manifest great miracles by his hands, among them being the following: By his prayer he raised up to life a certain priest called MÎNÂS, after he was dead and had been made ready for burial; and the description of his raising up is thus. This father SIMON had appointed MÎNÂS to be the administrator of all the property of the Church, and he had to take care of the sacred moneys and endowments, and the sacred vestments were laid up in his charge. And this father used to charge him always, saying, "Do not let any of the money and property of the Church be laid up in thy house." And it fell out that a sickness came upon him suddenly, and his tongue stuck fast in his throat, and his heart failed him. When the archbishop heard of it he was exceedingly sorry, and he kept vigil all that night, and prayed to God on behalf of that priest, and asked Him to raise up that priest from the dead, because of the property of the Church. And at midnight [fol. 124*a* 2] this father heard that the priest was nigh to die, and he sent his disciple to the wife of the priest, and commanded him to ask her about the property of the Church; and when his disciple drew near to the house of the priest he heard the outcries of the people thereof, who were weeping for the priest. And he went in and found that he was dead, and that they were dressing him in the vestments of the priesthood and laying him on the bier; and there were many men round about him weeping for him. And the disciple bowed his head in salutation to the priest, and straightway the dead man rose and sat up, and he embraced the disciple with his arms and hands, and he said unto him, "God is the God of the honourable father, Abbâ SIMON." And the disciple said unto him, "Be strong, O priest, and fear not." And the priest said unto him, "Verily, I am strong through the prayer of my lord father, the archbishop, and God hath given me life again, and hath raised me up from the dead." And the disciple called the priests who were struck with dismay at the death of that priest, and he said unto them, "Be not dismayed, behold the priest MÎNÂS hath risen from the dead." And when the priests and the people came to him, the priest said unto them, "Know ye that I was dead, and that they set me before the throne of my Lord Christ. And I saw all the archbishops of the city of Alexandria from MARK the apostle to Abbâ ISAAC, and they were standing before our Lord Christ. And they rebuked me, saying, 'Why hast thou hidden the property of the Church from our brother SIMON the archbishop?' And our Lord Christ commanded them, [fol. 124*a* 3] saying, 'Cast him into the Outer Darkness.' And when they dragged me along to cast me out, the archbishops bowed down before our Lord Christ, and asked Him, saying, 'Have mercy upon us this time. Our brother SIMON, the archbishop, is at this moment standing up and praying for him, and for the property of the Church which was laid up with him.' And God accepted their petition, and He commanded and [the angels] put back my soul into my body. And God said unto me, 'Behold, I have had compassion on thee for the sake of My chosen ones, and for the sake of their brother SIMON, the archbishop. And if thou dost not speak of thine own free will, and reveal unto him where the property of the Church is, thou shalt not return hither, and I will not accept their petition on thy behalf, according to what the Lord telleth Me, and I will not make thee to live after thy death.'" And when all the people who were there heard these words, and saw this miracle, they marvelled exceedingly, and they praised God the Most High; and straightway their sorrow and weeping were turned into joy. And after that priest was restored to life he remained many days, and he used to relate this miracle to every man. And this father Abbâ SIMON continued to fight the fight and to devote himself to God, and to teach his flock, and to admonish them and to encourage them in the True Faith, and after this he died in peace. [fol. 124*b* 1] Salutation to SIMON the archbishop.

XXV. ḤAMLÊ

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day took place the dedication of the Church of Saint MERCURIUS, the martyr, in the city of MĔSR (CAIRO), wherein his miracles appeared. Salutation to the consecration of thy church, O MERCURIUS.

And on this day also the ascension into heaven of ENOCH, the righteous scribe, took place.

And on this day also Abbâ ZA-ÎYÂSÛS, of DABRA LÎBÂNÔS, became a martyr by the hand of the pagans. Salutation to ZA-ÎYÂSÛS.

[fol. 124*b* 2] And on this day also the apostolic woman Saint THECLA died. This saint lived in the days of Saint PAUL, the apostle. And when Saint PAUL, the apostle, went forth from the city of Antioch he departed to the city of Nicomedia; and there was in that place a certain believer, whose name was SEFÂRÔS, who took Saint PAUL, and set him in his house. And a great many people gathered together to him, and they heard his teaching. And when this virgin THECLA heard Saint PAUL, the apostle, teaching, she looked out from the window of her house that she might hear his doctrine, and she did this for three days and three nights. And she was so eager to hear his doctrine, that she neither ate nor drank; and the word of his teaching entered into her heart. And her parents and her servants were very sorry, and they used to beseech her to turn from her counsel, and not to follow Saint PAUL. And her father went to DÊMÂS and REMÔGÂNÔS, the magistrates, and complained to them about what had happened to his daughter, and they urged him, and at length he went to the emperor. And he cried out and laid information against Saint PAUL, and the emperor had him brought into the hall of the emperor, and he questioned him about his work and his Faith, but found no cause of complaint [against him]; and the emperor commanded and the soldiers shut Saint PAUL up in prison. And Saint THECLA put off her ornamental attire, and came to Saint PAUL in the prison house, and she bowed down at his feet. And her parents [fol. 124*b* 3] sought for her, and could not find her, and [her handmaiden] told them that she was with Saint PAUL the apostle; and the governor commanded the soldiers to burn her in the fire. And her mother cried out, saying, "Burn her in the fire, so that all the numerous women of noble families who believe in the teaching of PAUL the apostle may be admonished." And they brought THECLA out from Saint PAUL to burn her, and they brought Saint PAUL out also. And her heart was bold, and she saw Saint PAUL praying, and he went up into heaven whilst in his body; and when he had made the sign of the Cross over her face and her body, she threw herself into the fire; and the women wept for her. And at that moment God sent very much rain, and lightning and hail, and the red-hot furnace became like unto cool dew. And she escaped from the fire, and ran and came to Saint PAUL in the place wherein he dwelt secretly; and she asked him to shave off the hair of her head, so that she might follow him; and he did this for her. And when she went to the city of Antioch, a certain nobleman saw her, and wanted to marry her, for she was very beautiful in her appearance, but she made bold and cursed him, and he informed the governor of the city about her. And the governor commanded the soldiers to cast her to the lions, and she was with the lions for two days and two nights, but the lions only licked her feet. And after this they tied her between two oxen and dragged her through all the city, but [fol. 125*a* 1] she suffered no pain whatsoever. Then the governor sent her away, and she went to Saint PAUL, and he comforted her, and strengthened her, and commanded her to depart, and preach the Faith of our Lord Jesus Christ. And she went to the city of KONIA, and preached in the Name of our Lord Jesus Christ, and then she went to her own city and converted her father and her mother, and brought them into the Faith of our Lord Jesus Christ. And having finished her fight she died in peace and received the crown of the preachers and confessors in the kingdom of the heavens. Now her body resteth at the present time in the city of SENGÂR [near Damietta] in Lower Egypt, and many signs and wonders have appeared through it. Salutation to the apostolic woman THECLA.

And on this day also Saint 'A[N]DÔNÎN (or, 'ANDÔNÎNÂ) became a martyr. This young man was a native of the city of BÂNÂ, and his parents were among the elders of the city; and they were believers, and were excellent and merciful. And this saint went to the city of ANTINOË and confessed our Lord Jesus Christ before the governor, who commanded the soldiers to shoot him [fol. 125*a* 2] to death with arrows; and they did as he commanded, but the arrows did the saint no harm. Then the governor had him bound, and sent him to the city of Alexandria, and with him was Saint Abbâ BÎMÂKÔS, and two other martyrs; and the governor of the city of Alexandria shut them up in prison. And they hung up Saint 'ANDÔNÎN, head downwards, until much blood flowed from his mouth down upon the ground, and then he tortured him severely; and when the governor was tired of torturing him, he sent him to the city of FARMÂ, where the saint found Saint MÎNÂS in prison; and he rejoiced in him, and they comforted each other. And the governor of the city of FARMÂ tortured him with every kind of torture, and they cut his flesh into strips with red-hot saws, and after that he boiled him in a cauldron over a fire, but God raised him up whole and uninjured. And when he was tired of torturing him he commanded the soldiers to cut off his head, and they cut off his head with a sword, and he received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens. And great miracles took place through his body, which healed all those who were sick. Salutation to 'A[N]DÔNÎNÂ the martyr.

And on this day also Saint Abbâ ISAAC became a martyr. This saint was a man of the city of SAMAMÂ (or, SÂMMÂ), and he was a gardener, and he was an excellent man, gentle, and [fol. 125*a* 3] devoted to God. He ate no flesh, he drank no wine, he fasted two days at a time, he ate herbs, and he visited the poor and needy, and gave them what was left of his wages. And our Lord appeared unto him in a vision, and commanded him to go to the governor, and confess His Name before him. And our Lord promised him many things, and told him of the crowns which were prepared for him, and the saint rejoiced exceedingly. And he rose up and gave what was left in his house to the poor and needy, and then he prayed and asked God to help him. And he came to the governor, and confessed God the Most High before him, and the governor tortured him severely, and burned him with fire, and hacked off his limbs, and hanged him, and broke him on the wheel; but God gave him strength to endure under all this torture, and He raised him up sound and uninjured. When he was tired of torturing him the governor commanded the soldiers to cut off his head with the sword, and thus he received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens. And men of the city of SAMAMÂ came and took his body, and wrapped it in splendid cloths, and laid him in a fair place until the end of the days of persecution. [Then] they built a beautiful church for him, and laid his body therein, and great signs and miracles appeared through it, and healings for many sick folk. Salutation to ISAAC, the gardener.

[fol. 125*b* 1] And on this day also LÎYÂRYÂ (HILARIA) became a martyr. This saint was a native of the city of LĔMDĔYÂ (var. DEMYÂL), which is nigh unto the city of DĔMÊRÂ, and her parents were believers and were excellent folk; and she herself was chaste both in mind and in body, and she fasted and prayed continually. When her days were eleven years, and she was living and doing her work, our Lord Jesus Christ revealed to her a great light, and the Archangel FÂNÛÊL appeared, and said unto her, "Why sittest thou here doing nothing but fighting the spiritual fight whilst the crowns which are prepared for those who fight for the Name of Christ, our Lord, [are waiting for thee]?" And when she heard this she rose up, and gave all her goods to the poor and needy, and departed to ṬÛW, and thence to the city of SARSANÂ, and confessed our Lord Jesus Christ before the governor. And there was a certain holy man whose name was Abbâ SÎNÔDÂ, and our Lord Jesus Christ had appeared unto him, and informed him concerning this holy woman, and what would become of her; and when he saw her he rejoiced in her, and comforted her and strengthened her heart. And the governor tortured her severely, and he made gashes in all her body, and drove red-hot iron pegs into her; and after this he bound her with seven thousand, six hundred martyrs. Then he took her with him [fol. 125*b* 2] in a ship and departed. And whilst they were on the ship, a fish rose up and snatched away a child from his mother, and she had no other child, and she wept and lamented for her son exceedingly. And the saint had compassion upon her, and prayed to God on her behalf, and then our Lord commanded the fish to give back the child, and the fish gave him back to his mother, alive, and no harm had befallen him. And when the governor arrived in the city of ṬÛW, he commanded the soldiers to put the saint in the furnace of the public baths, and they did as he commanded, but no harm came to her. And then they hacked off her limbs, and cast her into the fire, and they plucked out the nails of her hands and feet, and cut out her tongue, and drove iron pegs through her feet; after this, they made her to lie on an iron bed, and lighted a fire under her. And when he was tired of torturing her, he commanded the soldiers to cut off her head, and thus she received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens. Salutation to TĔLYÂRYÂ (sic) (HILARIA), and salutation to those who were martyred with her.

[fol. 125*b* 3] And on this day also THECLA and MÛGÎ, from the city of ḲAYRÂḲÛS, on the border of BAḤYARÂ (Baḥrâya?) by the city of Alexandria, became martyrs. These saints were brought up by a God-fearing teaching woman in the city of ḲARÂḲÛS (sic), and as they were sailing on the river one shewed them the governor torturing Christian folk, and they marvelled at his hard-heartedness; these saints were those who endured his torture. And the angel of God appeared unto the saints, and shewed them the glory of the saints, and strengthened them, and the angel sailed with them on the ship to the city of Alexandria. And our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin, MARY, the God-bearer, and ELISABETH, appeared unto her in the forms of two women, and they wept with them. And when they came unto the city of Alexandria, they confessed our Lord Jesus Christ before the governor, who tortured them severely. And they cut off the head of Saint MÛGÎ with the sword, and she received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens; and the governor sent Saint THECLA to the city of DĔMÔW, where she became a martyr. Salutation to THECLA and MÛGÎ.

And on this day also Saint Abbâ KARAZÛN (?) became a martyr. This saint was a man from the city of BÂNWÂN, and he was formerly a thief, [fol. 126*a* 1] and there were with him two other young men who were thieves. And they went to the cell of a certain monk in the desert of SCETE to steal his goods, and they found him keeping vigil and standing up in prayer; so they waited until he had finished his prayer and had lain down. Now that monk never slept, and their hearts were afraid and dismayed. And when the time of dawn came, the old monk went out to the thieves, and when they saw him they bowed down at his feet, and cast down their swords before him, and became monks under his direction. And this saint fought a very great fight, and devoted himself to the ascetic life, both soul and body, and a certain aged monk prophesied and informed him that he would, assuredly, become a martyr for the Name of our Lord Jesus Christ. And when seven years had passed by, Satan brought tribulation on the churches and on the Christian people. And this saint embraced his spiritual father, and received his blessing, and departed to the city of NAḲYÔS, where he found the Emperor MAXIMIANUS; and he confessed our Lord Jesus Christ before the governor. And the governor tortured him severely, and sawed his body with iron saws, and rubbed into his wounds vinegar mixed with salt; and then he took him to the city of Alexandria, and hung him up on the mast of the ship five times; and the ropes broke. And then he cast him into a vessel made of hide, and threw him into the sea (or, river), but the angel of God brought him out of the sea, and commanded him to go to the city of GAMNÛDÎ. And he departed and came to the city of BENWÂNÎ, and [fol. 126*a* 2] the people asked him about Abbâ KARAZÛN (sic), for they did not recognize him. And they said unto him, "Abûna Abbâ KARAZÛN departed many days ago, and we do not know where he is, and we have had no news of him." And a certain maiden recognized him and knew him, and by reason of her great fear she fell down and broke her water jar. And she said unto the people, "This man is Abbâ KARAZÛN himself," and all the men of the city made haste to go to him, and they were blessed by him. And every man who was sick came to him, and the saint besought God and prayed over some oil, and anointed them therewith, and they were healed. And then he went to the city of GAMNÛDÎ, and he said unto a soldier, "I am a Christian, bind me and drag me into this city"; and the soldier did as the saint commanded him. And when he had brought him thither, the governor hanged him on a tree, head downwards, for ten days; and the blood flowed down from his mouth and nose upon the ground. And Abbâ KARAZÛN cursed the daughter of the general, and she died and remained in her grave for eighteen days, and the people came and besought the saint on her behalf. And he prayed and entreated our Lord Jesus Christ, and He raised up the maiden from the dead, and she told them what she had seen of the Judgement in hell. And JUSTUS the general, and his wife, believed on our Lord Jesus Christ, and all his soldiers, and they became martyrs; and they were in number nine hundred, and thirty, and five souls. And after this the governor sent Abbâ KARAZÛN to the city of Alexandria, and when he arrived there they tortured him [fol.

126*a* 3] very severely. And he also sent him to the city of GAMNÛDÎ, where they beat him with bars of wood and broke his back; and when he was tired of torturing him he sent him to the city of Alexandria. And when the saint came to the Hill of BARMÛDÂ, our Lord Jesus Christ, our Redeemer, appeared unto him, and comforted him, and told him that he should finish his fight there, and He promised him that He would grant to every man any request which he should make in his name. And when the governor was tired of torturing him he commanded the soldiers to cut off his head with the sword, and thus the saint finished his martyrdom, and received the crown thereof in the kingdom of the heavens. And the angel of God appeared unto a certain priest of the men of the city of MANÛF, and told him where the place was wherein the body of Saint Abbâ KARAZÛN lay, and commanded him to take it away. And that priest went and took the body of the saint, and wrapped it up in beautiful cloths, [and kept it] until the end of the days of persecution. And they built a beautiful church for him in the city of BENWÂN (sic) and laid his body therein, and many miracles and wonders took place through it. Salutation to Abbâ KARAZÛN. Salutation to the nine hundred and thirty-five people who [fol. 126*b* 1] were martyred with Abbâ KARAZÛN.

And on this day also is celebrated the commemoration of seven thousand, three hundred martyrs. [In the Bodleian MS. seventy-six thousand.]

And on this day also Saint LADÎMÂDYÔS (or, DEMADIUS ?), the Syrian, became a martyr. This saint was brought up with the Persians, and learned from them the knowledge of the stars; and he wished to become a Christian. And he found a certain Persian priest in the bazâr, whose name was 'ENGALIUS, and he taught him the Law of God and rejoiced in him exceedingly; and he began to teach the men of his house to turn to God and to believe in Him. And then he went to a certain city between Syria and Rômê, and was there baptized with Christian baptism. He became a monk, and fought a great, and superhuman fight; and the brethren were jealous of him when they saw his fight; and they wished to drive him away from the mountains. When he knew this he went forth from that place and departed to a city on the borders of [the city of] THEODOSIUS, and he came to the monastery of Saint SERGIUS; where he lived with an aged anchorite for a year, and fought the fight. And he ate neither beans, nor any food with fat therein. And the aged anchorite urged the abbot [fol. 126*b* 2] to make LADÎMÂDYÔS a deacon, so that he might minister with him in the sanctuary; and being unable to resist him, he was made a deacon, and ministered with him in the sanctuary. And when the old man went into the altar at the consecration of the Offering, during the consecration, he saw a white dove of most beautiful appearance, and it came near and descended upon the altar. And LADÎMÂDYÔS, thinking that it was a dove of flesh, was afraid lest the chalice should be overturned, and he made a motion with his hand, and drove the dove off; now the aged anchorite did not see the dove. And after the Service was ended, the anchorite asked him, saying, "What happened to disturb thee at the time of the Offering, when thou didst stretch out thine hand over the altar?" And LADÎMÂDYÔS told him how he had seen the dove. And the anchorite said unto him, "In future when thou seest the dove tell me." And when the old man went up to the altar to receive the Offering, and the time for seeing the dove came, LADÎMÂDYÔS said unto him, "That dove hath come"; and the old man did not see it, and again he was exceedingly sorry. And he bowed low before God, and he prayed continually, and entreated Him with tears by night and by day, until he saw that dove; and he knew that it was the grace of the Holy Spirit; but he told Saint LADÎMÂDYÔS nothing, so that he might not be puffed up in his heart. And after this the anchorite went to the bishop, and asked him to make LADÎMÂDYÔS a priest, now LADÎMÂDYÔS himself knew nothing about this, until he took him and made him a priest against his will. And when the Archbishop of that country heard the story [fol. 126*b* 3] of his fight, he took some people with him, and wanted to go with them to him, and to receive a blessing from him. And Saint LADÎMÂDYÔS knew of this by the Holy Ghost, and he fled secretly, and came to the church of Saint MARK, the martyr, and then he departed and dwelt in the desert, where he lived on grass, and God, the Most High, performed great miracles [by his hands]. And then he fled from the vain praise of man to the sea-shore. And one day he took the water-pot, and went down to the river to draw water, and he saw women there drawing water, and they laughed at him, and made a mock of him; and he went back without having drawn water, and with sorrow in his heart. And he asked God to dry up that river, and God, the Most High, heard his petition, and He made the river a road whereon men could travel. And when the people knew that it was Saint LADÎMÂDYÔS who had dried up the river, they all went up to him with their wives, and their children, and they entreated him with many tears, until he prayed to our Lord Jesus Christ Who gave them back the river, and it became as it was formerly. And when he saw the people wishing to honour him, he fled from that place and went to another desert, and he lived therein a year, fighting the fight, and enduring the cold of winter, and the heat of summer, under the sky without a roof. And with great difficulty the people forced him to let them build him an abode, and he dwelt therein, and God, the Most High, performed many signs and miracles by his hands, [fol. 127*a* 1] and among them was the following: There was a certain man who was blind in one eye, and when he was being blessed by him the hand of the saint rested upon the blind eye of that man, and his eye was opened straightway, and he saw. And another man, a paralytic, they brought to him, and he prayed over some oil and water, and anointed him therewith, and the man recovered. Another man, one who was dumb, when they brought him to him, the saint knew that this sickness had come upon the man because of the sin which he had committed; and then he prayed to God, the Most High, and He healed him by his hands. And again, a certain rich man came to him with his wife, who was barren, and the saint prayed to our Lord Jesus Christ, and He gave them children, whom they brought to him, and he blessed them. And this Saint Abbâ LADÎMÂDYÔS performed countless miracles. And it came to pass in his days that the Emperor WALÎṬÔS (VALENS?), the infidel and idolater, came to the city of Antioch, and he pulled down the churches which CONSTANTINE had builded. And then he heard that the Persians had come to fight against him, and when they (the Romans) had departed thither, they passed by the habitation of Saint LADÎMÂDYÔS, and one told the emperor about him. And the soldiers stoned him, and his disciple, with stones, until a great heap of stones stood over their cave. And thus died LADÎMÂDYÔS and his disciple. And after one year God revealed his body to a certain man, who was a merchant, and was travelling that way, now he had a laden camel with him, and the camel fell down, and sank into a pit in the ground. And when [fol. 127*a* 2] the men came to take up the camel, God shewed him the cave, and he and his men knew that it was the cave of Saint LADÎMÂDYÔS; and they dug and took up the body of the saint, and that of his disciple, with great honour. On the fifteenth day of the month of Ḥamlê, on the day whereon he died, they built a church for Saint LADÎMÂDYÔS, and they laid therein his body, and that of his disciple; and God made manifest many signs and miracles therefrom. Salutation to LADÎMÂDYÔS.

Salutation to 'AṬRÂBIUS, who took the place of PACHOMIUS.

And on this day also are commemorated the Seven Thousand Martyrs of Athribis, and AMÔN and MARY. [fol. 127*a* 3] Salutation to the Seven Thousand Martyrs of Athribis. [Twenty-five Thousand in the Bodleian MS.]

XXVI. Ḥamlê

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died at a good old age the righteous man JOSEPH, the carpenter, who was worthy to be called the father of Christ in the flesh, and concerning whom the Holy Gospel beareth witness that he was a righteous man, and that, because of this, our Lady Saint MARY was in safe keeping with him. And he finished his fight, and his course, and his toil, and his journey, together with our Lady MARY and our Lord Jesus Christ, in his coming to Bethlehem, and [his] flight to the country of Egypt. On his return from the country of Egypt there came [upon him] tribulation from the Jews. And when the time came for him to depart from this transient world to the world of the Living, [he called to him] his other sons, that is to say, JUSTUS, and JUDAH, and JÔSÂ, and JACOB, and his three daughters, and he gave them commandments and embraced them, and stretched out his hands and delivered up his soul into the hand of God, and inherited everlasting life. And all the days of his life were one hundred and fourteen years; he lived before his marriage forty years, and after his marriage, fifty-two years, and after his wife died, nineteen years, and three years [fol. 127*b* 1] before the Incarnation of our Redeemer. And our Lord Jesus Christ came to him at the time of his death, and laid His hand upon his eyes and wept over him, and He bestowed upon his body the gracious gift of never growing old, and upon his bones the gift of incorruptibility. And they laid him in the grave of JACOB, his father, in the tenth year of the Incarnation of our Lord Jesus Christ. Salutation to JOSEPH and MARY.

And on this day also died the holy father, Abbâ TIMOTHY, the twenty-second Archbishop of the city of Alexandria. This saint was the brother of the Archbishop Saint PETER his predecessor, and having been appointed he shepherded the rational flock of Christ and guarded them from the wolves ARIUS, and MACEDONIUS, and SABELIUS. In the sixth year of the archiepiscopate of this saint the Emperor THEODOSIUS the Great [began to] reign over the Christian people. In that year also took place the General Council whereat One hundred and Fifty bishops gathered together in the city of Constantinia on account of MACEDONIUS, who had denied the Holy Spirit; and this father was president of the Council. [fol. 127*b* 2] Now Saint DAMALIUS, Archbishop of the city of Rômê, did not come to the Council because of his illness, but he sent priests in his place. And this holy father TIMOTHY disputed with MACEDONIUS, who denied the Holy Ghost, and with SABELIUS and with APOLLINARIUS, and he overcame them, and put them to shame. And behold, we have described their denial, and how this saint disputed with them, [in the section of this work] relating to the days of the assembling of this Council, which is the first day of the month of Yakâtît. And during the archiepiscopate of this saint, he took great care concerning the buildings of the churches, and he built many churches in the city of Alexandria and outside it, and he repaired and restored many of them; and he built many cells for the churches (?), and for the pilgrims. And he was teaching his flock much doctrine continually, and by means of his great knowledge he strengthened them in the True Faith, and by the sweetness of his voice and his reading. And he converted many of the followers of ARIUS and MACEDONIUS, and brought them into the True Faith of our Lord Jesus Christ. And he sat upon the throne of MARK the evangelist for nine years and a half, and he died in peace. Salutation to TIMOTHY the archbishop, brother of PETER the archbishop.

And on this day also died Abbâ SALÂMÂ, the Revealer of the Light, the Bishop of Ethiopia; [fol. 127*b* 3] now his history is as follows: A certain man from the country of the Greeks, a master of learning, whose name was MÊRPES (MEROPIUS?), came wishing to see the country of Ethiopia, and he had with him two youths of his family, and the name of one was "FERÊ MĔNÂṬÔS (FRUMENTIUS)," and that of the other was "ÂDĔSYÔS (AEDESIUS)"; now there are some who call him "SÎDRÂKÔS." And he arrived in a ship at the shore of the Sea of Ethiopia, and he saw all the beautiful things which his heart desired, and as he was wishing to return to his country, enemies rose up against him and killed him, and all those who were with him. And these two youths were left [alive], and the men of the city made them captives, and taught them the work of war, and took them as a present to the King of 'AKSÛM whose name was "ALAMÊDÂ." And the king made ADYÔS (sic) director of his household, and FERÊ MĔNÂṬÔS keeper of the Laws and Archives of 'AKSÛM; and after a few days the king died, and left a little son with his mother, and the 'AZGÂGÂ reigned with him. And 'ÂDĔSYÔS and FERÊ MĔNÂṬÔS brought up the children, and taught them little by little the Faith of Christ, and they built for them a place of prayer, and they gathered together to it the children and they taught them psalms and hymns. And when they had brought the boy to the stage of early manhood, they asked him to dismiss them to their native country; and 'ADYÔSĔS (sic) departed to the country of Tyre to see his kinsfolk, and FERÊ MĔNÂṬÔS departed to Alexandria, to the Archbishop ATHANASIUS, and he found that he had been restored to his office. And he related everything which had happened unto him because of their Faith in the country of Ethiopia, and how the people believed on Christ, but had neither [fol. 128*a* 1] bishops nor priests. And then Abbâ ATHANASIUS appointed FERÊ MĔNÂṬÔS Bishop of the country of Ethiopia, and sent him away with great honour. And he arrived in the country of Ethiopia during the reign of 'ABRĔḤÂ and 'AṢBĔḤA, and he preached the peace of Christ in all the regions thereof, and because of this he was called "Abbâ SALÂMÂ." And after he had saluted the men of Ethiopia he died in peace. Salutation, salutation, I say, with joyful voice to Abbâ SALÂMÂ.

And on this day also is commemorated the blessed Saint Abbâ RÔYS.

Salutation to SAMUEL and ZACHARIAS.

XXVII. ḤAMLÊ

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day Saint Abbâ AMMÔN, of the city of TARNÛṬ, became a martyr. This saint came to Upper Egypt, and he saw the tortures which were being inflicted upon the holy [fol. 128*a* 2] martyrs, and he went to ARIANUS, the governor of ANTINOË, and confessed our Lord Jesus Christ before him. And ARIANUS tortured him severely, and beat him, and hanged him, and cut gashes in all his body, and drove long, sharp nails through his body; and our Lord Jesus Christ gave him strength, and healed his wounds, and raised him up from the punishment, whole and uninjured. And after this ARIANUS sent him to the city of Alexandria. And our Lord Jesus Christ appeared unto him, and strengthened him, and promised him, saying, "Whosoever shall celebrate thy commemoration, or shall write [a copy of] the book of thy fight, or shall cause it to be read, or shall give bread and water to the poor on the day of thy commemoration, I will blot out their sins and write their names in the Book of Life in the kingdom of the heavens"; and having said this unto him our Lord Jesus Christ went up into heaven with glory. And Saint Abbâ AMMÔN rejoiced with great joy. And then the governor tortured him very severely, and very many men believed through him and became martyrs. And among them was a certain young woman, a virgin, whose name was THEOPHILA, and she came and stood up before the governor, and cursed him and his idols, and she confessed our Lord Jesus Christ. And the governor commanded the soldiers to cast her into the fire, but God delivered her from the fire; and they cut off her head with the sword, and she received [fol. 128*a* 3] the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens. Then the governor tortured Abbâ AMMÔN with great severity, and he mutilated him, and after this he commanded the soldiers to cut off his head with the sword; [and they did so,] and he received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens. And many signs and miracles, and great healings of the sick, took place through his body. Salutation to AMMÔN.

And on this day also are commemorated the vision which EZEKIEL the prophet saw; and the dedication of the church of Saint JOHN the evangelist in the city of Alexandria, and the honourable father Abbâ SIMON, Archbishop of the city of Alexandria, that is to say, the translation of his body to the monastery of Abbâ MACARIUS of the desert of SCETE; and the death of SETH, the son of ADAM. Salutation to the translation of thy body, O SIMON. [fol. 128*b* 1] Salutation to the vision of EZEKIEL.

Salutation to BÎFÂMOMÔN (BÎFÂMÔN).
Salutation to the holy woman MASḲAL KABRÂ.

XXVIII. Ḥamlê

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

And on this day also are commemorated ANDRONICUS and his wife ATHANASIA, the lovers of God. They came from the city of Antioch. They were rich in gold and in silver, and they gave one half of the profit which they made on their money to the poor; and after a few days they produced two children, a boy and a girl, and they called their names JOHN and MARY. And then ANDRONICUS and ATHANASIA took counsel together, and agreed to cease to live together as man and wife, and they began to devote their money and themselves to ministering to the sick and needy, that is to say, he ministered to the men, and she ministered to the women; and they continued to do this for twelve years. And then their children fell ill of the plague, and they both died on one day. And when ANDRONICUS saw [this] he fell upon the ground, and [fol. 128*b* 2] he cast himself before the picture of our Lord Jesus Christ, and wept, saying, "Naked was I when I came forth from my mother's womb, and naked shall I be when I go to God; God gave, God took away, blessed be the Name of God for ever." And their mother, in the intensity of her grief, wanted to kill herself, and weeping she came into the sanctuary to the place where her children were buried. And during the night she saw, as it were, a monk who said unto her, "Weep not for the death of thy children, but weep for thyself, for thy children are rejoicing in the kingdom of the heavens." And when she heard this she went and told her husband, and they decided to renounce the world. And they distributed their money among the poor and needy, and went forth by night, and came to Alexandria, and ANDRONICUS left his wife there and departed to the desert of SCETE, and became a monk with Abbâ DANIEL; then he went back and took his wife to Upper Egypt, and placed her in a house of virgins and left her there. And when ANDRONICUS had lived with Abbâ DANIEL for twelve years, he asked that he might go to Jerusalem so that he might be blessed in the holy places. And whilst he was on the road thither, behold, by the Will of God, his wife met him, for she also wished to receive a blessing in the holy places. Now, by reason of her labour and vigil her face had become so changed that he did not know her, but she knew him because his face had not changed. And having visited the holy places they returned to the city of [fol. 128*b* 3] Alexandria. And Abbâ DANIEL had knowledge by the Holy Spirit, and he said unto ANDRONICUS, "Dwell in a place with that monk who hath been thy companion, for he is holy"; and they dwelt [there] twelve years, and there was none who knew that the companion of ANDRONICUS was a woman, but they called her "ATHANASIA." And Abbâ DANIEL visited them on one occasion, and spake to them concerning the profit of their souls. And ATHANASIA having fallen sick, ANDRONICUS went to Abbâ DANIEL and said unto him, "My companion is going to die, come and visit him." When Abbâ DANIEL arrived he found that she was very ill, and she said unto him, "Abbâ, I want thee to administer unto me the Offering," and Abbâ DANIEL devoted himself to the matter, and administered unto her the Holy Mysteries, and she died straightway; and there rose up a sweet odour and filled the place. And when ANDRONICUS wanted to wrap her up for burial, he discovered by her hair that she was a woman; and they found on the body a paper whereon her history was written, and a token which she left to her husband. And when ANDRONICUS had read the paper, and knew that she was his wife, his mind became obscured, and he began to beat his face and to lament. And after a few days, now, he had become sick, the aged men came and received his blessing, and having received the Offering, he died and entered into the kingdom of heaven. Salutation to ANDRONICUS. [fol. 129*a* 1] Salutation to ATHANASIA.

Salutation to ABRAHAM, ISAAC, and JACOB, the aged men of Israel.

Salutation to MASḲAL KEBRÂ.

And on this day also died the blessed man, the fighter, the worker of wonders, Abbâ PHILIP, father of the Council of the holy city of DABRA LÎBÂNÔS. Of this holy man it was reported that he used to work signs and wonders. And by the Will of God he came to his native place in the interior of the desert, in the days when Abûna TAKLA HÂYMÂNÔT lived there, to be his son, and that saint received him joyfully and he knew, by the spirit, that he was to be a chosen vessel. And after he had tried him with spiritual exercises of all kinds, he arrayed him in the garb of the monk. And Abbâ PHILIP fought the fight, and made himself to be like unto TAKLA HÂYMÂNÔT. And when Abbâ TAKLA HÂYMÂNÔT died, PHILIP was set upon the throne of Abbâ ELISHA. After a little [time] one of the sons of the Abûna died, and when they wanted to wrap him up in cloths for burial, he moved himself and spake, saying, "Abûna TAKLA HÂYMÂNÔT, [fol. 129*a* 2] ELISHA shall come to me, and PHILIP shall sit upon thy throne"; and having said this he died. And then they appointed PHILIP to be the Abûna. And he followed a right course, like his father, and he received beatings and tribulations, as he ministered for righteousness' sake; and he died under persecution (or, in exile), and he departed to God, bearing the crown of praise. Salutation to PHILIP.

XXIX. ḤAMLÊ

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day is celebrated the festival of the BIRTH OF OUR LORD, and God, and Redeemer, Jesus Christ. Salutation to Thy Birth, O our Redeemer.

And on this day also is celebrated the festival of the translation of the body of Saint THADDEUS, the apostle, from the country of Syria to the city of Constantinia. [fol. 129*a* 3] The righteous and Christ-loving Emperor CONSTANTINE had it translated, and he built a beautiful church, and consecrated it, as it were this day, and laid THADDEUS within it; and many signs and miracles appeared through his body. Salutation to the translation of thy body, O THADDEUS.

And on this day also Saint WARĔSṬĔFÂ (or, WARSANÔFÂ BARSANÔFÂ?) became a martyr. This saint was a learned, and orthodox, and kindly ascetic. The people wanted to make him a bishop but he fled from them, and having come to a certain city he dwelt with two Christ-loving brethren. And the angel of God appeared unto him, and commanded him to confess our Lord Jesus Christ, and to receive the crown of martyrdom. When he awoke from his sleep he told the brethren what he had seen, and they all agreed together and went to the governor and confessed our Lord Jesus Christ before him. And the governor tortured them severely, and then cast them into prison until he went to the city of SENḤÛR, when he took them with him, and again tortured them there severely. And at the time when he was torturing them the angel of God appeared unto them, and strengthened them, and enabled them to endure, [fol. 129*b* 1] and healed their wounds; and after this the governor took them to the city of ḌHÂ and tortured them there. And then the governor gathered together many confessors, and had read to them the roll containing the Edict of the emperor in respect of the worship of idols; and this Saint WARĔSṬĔFÂ seized the roll, and tore it in pieces. And the governor was exceedingly wroth, and he commanded the soldiers to heat a furnace red-hot and to cast the saint therein, and they did as the governor commanded, and thus he finished his martyrdom in the furnace. And as for the other two brethren the soldiers cut off their heads with the sword and the saints received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens. Salutation to WARĔSNÔS (sic).

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day MERCURIUS and EPHRAIM, the holy Galileans, became martyrs. These saints were loving brethren in the spirit, and kinsmen in the flesh, and they were of the men of the city of 'AKMÎM. They made an agreement together in the spirit, and they became monks in the same monastery in Upper Egypt, and they lived therein fighting the fight with fasting, and prayer, [fol. 129*b* 2] and prostrations and vigils, for a period of twenty years. And Satan, the Enemy, brought tribulation upon the churches, through the followers of ARIUS, who denied [Christ]; and they came, by the commandment of the Emperor CONSTANTINE, to administer the temples of the orthodox. And these saints rose up and came into the church and cast aside the bread which the wicked Arians, the deniers of Christ, had laid there, and they said unto the people, "He who hath not been baptized in the Name of the Holy Trinity is only fit to offer up an offering on the altar of idols." And the Arians seized the saints and beat them very severely, and the soldiers threw them down upon the ground and trampled upon them with their feet until their members and their bones were broken. And they delivered their souls into the hand of our Lord Jesus Christ and received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens. And certain believing men came, and they took the bodies of the saints, and wrapped them up in cloths, and laid them in a fair place. Salutation to MERCURIUS and EPHRAIM.

[fol. 129*b* 3] And on this day also took place the translation of the body of Abbâ TIMOTHY, Archbishop of the city of Alexandria, from MĔSR (CAIRO) to the monastery of Abbâ MACARIUS in the desert of SCETE.

And on this day also died the blessed PAUL, the monk. It is related of this renouncer of the world that he enjoyed in this world honour and high rank, and that he had a wife, who was a saint, and blessed children, and that he was exceedingly rich. And he wanted to become a monk. And he called his wife and his children, and said unto them, "Behold, I want to sell you for Christ's sake"; and they said unto him, "Thou art our god, do what thou wishest." And he took his wife, and his sons, and his possessions, and distributed all his money among the poor, and he came to a house for women, and he sought out the abbess and said unto her, "I want to sell thee this woman"; and she agreed to what he wanted. And he wrote the bill of the sale, and handed her over to the abbess, together with what was with her; and she became a nun. And he took his sons to another religious house, and he did with them even as he had done with their mother, and he sold them to the archimandrite, and handed them over to him; and then he went to another religious house and sold himself to the abbot. And he said unto him, "I want to go into the church by myself," and the abbot gave him permission to do so. And he went into the church, and shut the door, and he stood up and stretched out his hands towards heaven, and cried out with a loud voice, saying, "O my Lord, Thou knowest that I [fol. 130*a* 1] have come unto Thee with all my heart." And a voice came unto him which said, "Behold, I know this, and I have accepted thee with all My mind." And then he continued to perform all the hard work which had to be done in the monastery, and he made himself the most menial of all the monks; but God exalted him because of his humility, and many miracles appeared through him, and he died in peace. Salutation to PAUL who sold his wife, and his children, and himself for the sake of Christ.

And on this day also is commemorated the dedication of the church of 'ASRÊLYÛR, that is to say, the church of SÛRYÂL (SURIEL) the angel. Salutation to the dedication of thine house which the believers built in Constantinople.

And on this day ANDREW the apostle performed many miracles, and some of them took place when he was in the city of the Greeks. And our Lord Jesus Christ appeared unto him, saying, "Rise up and [fol. 130*a* 2] depart to MÂTYÂS (MATTHEW) in the Cannibal City, so that thou mayest bring him out of prison, for the men of that city will in three days bring him out to eat him." And ANDREW said unto our Lord, "If this will happen in three days I cannot get there [in time to save him], therefore send an angel to bring him out of prison." And our Lord answered and said unto ANDREW, "Hearken. If I say unto the city 'Come to Me,' it, and all those who dwell therein, shall come [to Me]. And as for thee and thy disciple, when the morrow cometh, rise up, and thou shalt find a ship which is ready to sail; embark in it, and it shall bring thee [thither]." And He gave him the salutation "Peace" and went up into heaven in glory. And ANDREW rose up, as He had commanded him, and he came to the sea-shore. And God prepared for him a beautiful ship, and He stayed with him in the form of the captain, and there were two angels there in the forms of sailors. And ANDREW went to the ship and found our Lord, Who was disguised as the captain thereof, and he said unto Him, "Peace be unto thee, O Captain"; and our Lord said unto him, "The peace of God be with thee." And ANDREW said unto Him, "Whither goest thou in this ship?" And our Lord said unto him, "To the Cannibal City." And ANDREW said unto Him, "Every man fleeth therefrom and do Ye travel thither?" And the Captain said unto him, "It is necessary for us to go thither"; and ANDREW said unto Him, "I ask Thee to take me"; and the Captain said unto him, "I agree," and He made them to embark. And as they were travelling on the ship with our Lord as Captain, [fol. 130*a* 3] He asked ANDREW many things, and ANDREW told Him of many of the miracles of our Lord, not knowing that He was our Lord. And after this the Captain slept, and ANDREW and his disciples slept, and at that moment our Lord commanded His angels to take up ANDREW, and his two disciples, and to set them down by the sea-shore. And when ANDREW woke up from his dream, and looked at the sea-shore, and did not find the ship, he marvelled greatly; and he said unto his disciples, "O my sons, we were in the ship with our Lord, and did not know it!" And ANDREW rose up and prayed, and our Lord appeared unto him coming out of the city in the form of a young man with a noble countenance (or, goodly person), and He said unto him, "ANDREW, My beloved, fear not! I did this because thou didst say, 'We cannot arrive at the city in three days,' and because I wished thee to know that I have power over everything, and that there is nothing too hard for Me [to do]. Rise up, come into the city, and bring out MATTHEW from prison, and all those who are with him." And having said these words He went up into heaven with [great] glory. And ANDREW and his two disciples rose up, and came into the city, and no one saw them. When they came to the door of the prison house wherein was MATTHEW, as soon as they touched the door it opened, and they went in and found MATTHEW sitting down singing; and ANDREW embraced him. And ANDREW said unto MATTHEW, "Thou sayest that after two days they will take thee out, and slay thee [fol. 130*b* 1] like a beast, and eat thy body; but thou hast forgotten those mysteries which we saw with our Lord, and that when we spake there, the heavens quaked." And MATTHEW said unto him, "Behold, I know this, O my brother, but I say that if it be the Will of our Lord, I shall come to an end in this city. Hast thou not heard in the Holy Gospel the words which say, 'I send you forth like sheep among wolves?' But as for me, when they cast me into the prison house I cried unto God, and He revealed Himself unto me, and He said unto me, 'Fear not: at the end of three days I will send unto you ANDREW, and he shall bring thee out from the prison house, thee and all those who are with thee.' And behold thou hast come; consider what thou wilt do." And ANDREW looked at the men who were in the prison house and were fettered like beasts, and he began to speak and cursed Satan and all his hosts. And ANDREW and MATTHEW made entreaty to God, and He heard their prayer, and they laid their hands on the men who were in the prison house, and they opened their eyes, and their senses returned to them, and they commanded the apostles to go out from the city. And ANDREW and MATTHEW went out on the city road, and they sat down until they knew what would happen. And the men of the city came to the prison house to roast those who were bound therein, and to devour them according to their custom, and they found the gates of the prison open, and the prisoners not there. And they said, "Woe be unto us! What hath come upon us?" And Satan took the form of a man and spake unto the men of the city, [fol. 130*b* 2] and the people ran with eagerness and seized ANDREW and MATTHEW, and dragged them along the road of the city, until their blood ran out of them like water, and then they cast them into prison. And the apostles prayed to God, and when they had finished their prayer they drew nigh unto a pillar on which was an image, and they said unto it, "Be afraid of the sign of the Cross which we make over thee, and pour out from beneath thee water in a vast quantity, like unto a flood, upon this city and upon all those who dwell therein." And there sprang up from beneath it a vast quantity of water, which was exceedingly bitter and like salt, and it threatened to sweep away the city, and all those who were in it. And the men of the city took up their children, and their parents, and wanted to flee therefrom, but the pillar poured forth more and more water until it reached the necks of the people, and was about to drown them. And they wept, saying, "Woe be unto us! This wrath hath come upon us because of the two excellent men who are servants of God; we will believe in their God." And ANDREW said unto the pillar, "Hold, enough! Behold, the time of the flood hath passed, and the time for sowing seed in the hearts of the men of this city hath come. It is the truth which I speak unto thee. When I have built a church in this city, I will set thee in it, and they shall decorate thee"; and the water which was flowing from under the image stood (i.e. ceased). And when the men of the city saw that the water had stopped, they went to the apostles and walked with them, and the water receded before them. And the apostles stretched out their hands, and prayed to God, and the earth opened and swallowed up [fol. 130*b* 3] the men who were in the habit of slaying people; and when the multitude saw this they were afraid. And the apostles said unto them, "Fear not, but believe in God, we will not forsake you until we have given you life." And the apostles prayed again, and they raised from the dead those who had died in the water, and those whom the earth had swallowed up, and they baptized in that water all the men of the city, in the Name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. And they administered unto them the Holy Mysteries, and built them a church, and said unto them, "Observe the commandments which we give you until the end of your days, and teach them unto your children who shall come after you, and entreat God to remove from you the laxity which is caused by eating the flesh of men, and to give you understanding so that ye may eat the food of men." And the apostles performed many miracles and wonders, and they healed many sick folk, and then departed from that city. And ANDREW departed to the country of the Greeks with his two disciples. Salutation to ANDREW and MATTHEW.

Here endeth the section which is to be read during the month of Ḥamlê, and Glory be to God!

THE TWELFTH MONTH—NAḤASSÊ

(AUGUST 4–SEPTEMBER 2)

[fol. 132*a* 1] In the blessed month of Naḥassê the day containeth thirteen hours, and then the number lesseneth.

I. NAḤASSÊ

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day the blessed Saint Abbâ 'ABÔLÎ, the son of JUSTUS, became a martyr. To this holy man belonged the kingdom of Rômê. When he had fought in the war, and returned to the city of Antioch, he found that DIOCLETIAN had denied Christ, and had set up the worship of idols. He was able to destroy DIOCLETIAN and to take his kingdom from him, but he meditated upon a heavenly kingdom which never passeth away; and DIOCLETIAN urged him, with many persuasive words, [to worship idols,] but he would not hearken unto him. And after this JUSTUS urged the saint, until DIOCLETIAN wrote the order, and sent it to JUSTUS, and his wife THEOKLERA, and his son 'ABÔLÎ, who is commemorated this day, and he sent them to the country of Egypt, to HERMINIUS (?), governor of the city of Alexandria, and he said in his letter, "When JUSTUS, and his wife, and his son 'ABÔLÎ arrive, persuade them to offer sacrifice to the gods, and if they will not do so, separate them from each other, and send them each alone into the city." And that night our Lord Jesus Christ appeared unto JUSTUS and his wife, and his son, and comforted them and encouraged them, and He told them what was going to happen to them, and He promised [to receive] them in His heavenly abode. And when they arrived in the city of Alexandria, and HERMINIUS (?) the governor saw them, he marvelled greatly at them, and wondered why [fol. 132*a* 2] they had forsaken their royal position. And the governor did not dare to speak abusive words to them, but he addressed them with words of courtesy, and persuaded them earnestly to return to their honourable estate; but they would not hearken unto him. And straightway he became filled with wrath at JUSTUS, and he separated them from each other; JUSTUS he sent to the city of ANTINOË, and his wife to the city of ṢÂ, and his son 'ABÔLÎ to the city of BASṬÂ; and he gave to each of them one of their servants to minister unto them. And when Abbâ 'ABÔLÎ had arrived in the city of BASṬÂ, he confessed our Lord Jesus Christ before the governor, who tortured him severely, and burnt him with fire, and put him on the wheel, and cut off his limbs, and cast him to the lions. And God gave him strength, and delivered him, and raised him up whole and uninjured from the tortures. And when many of the men who were there saw what happened to Saint 'ABÔLÎ, after the torturing, they marvelled exceedingly, and they believed on our Lord Jesus Christ and became martyrs. And the governor was wroth with the saint, and he commanded his soldiers to flay off his skin, and to dip rags of sackcloth in vinegar and salt, and to rub all his wounds therewith; [and they did so,] and then they laid his skin upon his shoulders, and took him round through all the city. And the saint prayed and said, "O my Lord Jesus Christ, Thou Son of the Living God, help me and deliver me from this tribulation"; and forthwith the angel MICHAEL came to him, and touched his body, and healed his wounds; and the [fol. 132*a* 3] governor commanded the soldiers to take him into the prison house until he could decide what he should do with him. And the saint stood up and prayed in prison, and whilst he was praying our Lord Jesus Christ appeared unto him, and He said unto him, "Peace be unto thee, O My chosen one 'ABÔLÎ, be strong and fear not, for I will be with thee until the end of thy fight"; and when He had said this unto him He went up into heaven in great glory. And Saint 'ABÔLÎ rejoiced with a great joy when he saw our Lord Jesus Christ. And there was a certain rich man whose name was 'ABSKÎRÔN, and who had two sons, and he brought some workmen to pull down the wall of his house and to rebuild it; and he commanded his two sons to stand by them until they finished their work. And when the workmen went up on the wall it fell down and killed twelve of the workmen, and the two sons of the rich man; and when the rich man heard what had happened he rent his garments, and cried out and wept. And he went to Saint Abbâ 'ABÔLÎ, and bowed low at his feet and said unto him, "Have compassion upon me, for my two sons are dead with the seventeen (sic) workmen, if thou wilt raise them up from the dead I will believe on thy God." And when he had said this unto him, the holy man rose up and prayed, saying, "O my Lord Jesus Christ, Who hast chosen me to suffer for Thy holy Name's sake, do Thou make manifest Thy power over the men who are dead, and raise them up from the dead, so that all men may believe, [fol. 132*b* 1] and that all men may know that there is no other God beside Thee; for Thine is the glory for ever and ever. Amen." And he took his skin and spread it out over those men, saying, "In the Name of my Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of the Living God, do ye all rise up alive"; and he took them by their hands, and raised them up, and all the people were looking on. And straightway they all cried out, saying, "One is the God of the Christians, Jesus Christ, the God of Saint 'ABÔLÎ." And straightway 'ABSKÎRÔN bowed down before the saint, saying, "Now do I know that Jesus Christ is the Great God: I believe on Him"; and all the men of his house believed with him, and the governor was put to shame. And our Lord Jesus Christ appeared unto the saint and made him a promise, saying, "O My chosen one 'ABÔLÎ, Whosoever shall ask Me for help in thy name when tribulation cometh upon him, I will hear his prayer and will fulfil all his petition and desire. And I will make to dwell in My kingdom whosoever shall build a church in thy name. And I will write upon the lips of the four beasts, and I will make to rest in the bosom of ABRAHAM, ISAAC, and JACOB, and will make to eat of the dainty things of the Garden of Delight, every one who shall write down the story of thy fight, or shall read it, or shall make someone else to hear it. And even if he hath committed many sins, but doth repent, I will forgive him his sins. And I will forgive [fol. 132*b* 2] the sins of every one who shall feed the hungry in thy name, and I will make him to eat of the fruits of the Garden; and My peace shall be with thee. Amen." And when our Redeemer had said these things unto him, He gave him the salutation "Peace," and went up into heaven with great glory. And when the governor became tired of torturing him he commanded the soldiers to cut off his head with the sword, and they cut off his holy head with the sword, and he received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens. And his body resteth in the monastery of ḤANDAḴ, outside the city of MĚSR (CAIRO), and many signs and wonders take place through it, and great healings. Salutation to 'ABÔLÎ. Salutation to you, O ye company of two hundred and forty men and women who were tortured and beheaded with Saint 'ABÔLÎ.

And on this day also are commemorated Saint HANNAH, the mother of our Lady MARY, and HANNAH the prophetess, the daughter of PÂNÛÊL.

Salutation to the three virgins PISTIS (FAITH), 'ALÂPÎS (HOPE), and 'AGAPIS (CHARITY), who suffered martyrdom, but whose beauty was unspoiled by the smoke, and whose bodies were unconsumed by the fire.

[fol. 132*b* 3] And the fathers have commanded that on this day the people shall celebrate the commemoration of the honourable men JOSEPH and NICODEMUS, who were held to be worthy to become ministers of the Divine Mystery. And they brought down from the Cross the Body of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of the Living God, when He had fulfilled the Law of the Incarnation in every respect, with the exception of sin, and He had accepted suffering and death for the sake of the salvation of the [world]. So little did the terror of the Jews frighten them that they asked PILATE to give them His Body, and when PILATE gave them permission to carry Him away, they took Him down from the Cross, having withdrawn the nails from out of His hands and His feet, and they bore Him away on their shoulders. And they heard a voice which came forth from His dead Body, saying, "Holy is the Lord, Holy is the Power, Holy is the Life Which dieth not, and Which the holy Virgin MARY bore! Have compassion upon us, O Lord. Holy is the Lord, Holy is the Power, Holy is the Life Which dieth not, Which was baptized in the Jordan, and was hung upon the wood of the Cross. Have compassion upon us, O Lord. Holy is the Lord, Holy is the Power, Holy is the Life Which dieth not, Which was raised up from the dead on the third day, Who went up into heaven with praise and sat down on the right hand of His Father, Who shall come again to judge the living and the dead. Have compassion upon us, O Lord. Glory be to the Father. Glory be to the Son. Glory be to the Holy Spirit, now and henceforth and for ever. Amen. So be it! So be it!" And when they heard this their Faith in Christ was strengthened. And JOSEPH brought [fol. 133*a* 1] linen cloths, and NICODEMUS brought perfumed unguents, and they wrapped our Lord in them, and buried Him in a new grave. And this JOSEPH was a kinsman to NICODEMUS, the brother of CLEOPHAS, the kinsman of STEPHEN the martyr. And NICODEMUS was the Pharisee, and the legate of the Jews, who went by night to our Lord Jesus Christ, and...His coming from heaven. And our Lord told him that it was impossible for a man to enter into the kingdom of the heavens, who was not born of water and of the Holy Spirit; and NICODEMUS used frequently to rebuke the Jews when they derided the words of our Lord. And after His Resurrection, as they were travelling along the road to EMMAUS, it was these two, CLEOPHAS and NICODEMUS, whom our Lord met; and they told Him everything which had happened in Jerusalem, without recognizing Him. And He told them that the prophets had prophesied concerning His Death and Resurrection; and then when they recognized Him, He disappeared from them. And they brought His words to His disciples. And JOSEPH the Jews bound fast in prison, and they wanted to kill him, because he had buried our Lord. And although the door of the prison was sealed with the seal of PILATE, and with the seals of the high priests, our Lord Jesus came to the place where JOSEPH was, and He was mounted on the chariot of the Cherubim, and with Him there were thousands of thousands, and tens of thousands of tens of thousands of angels, and SÛRÂFÊL standing round about Him, and burning incense before Him. And the thief who was on His right hand stood on the right of Him wearing shining raiment, and he was making intercession for sinners, because he had found favour before Him; and the keepers of the house [fol. 133*a* 2] were terrified, and trembling seized them. And then our Lord cried out to JOSEPH and said unto him, "Be not afraid of the terrors of the Jews. Behold I have come to unloose thy bonds. I am that Jesus, the Nazarene, in Whose suffering thou didst participate. Look at the nail [marks] in My hands and feet, and the mark of the spear in My side, so that thou mayest know that of a truth I am He." Then He caught up JOSEPH from that place, and took him to the city of 'ARMÂTYÂS. And the keepers of the prison house, having gone to PILATE, told him everything which they had seen, and what they had heard from the mouth of our Lord, and how He had set free JOSEPH and taken him away with Him. And when the high priests went [there] they found the doors of the prison open and their seals unbroken. And these saints continued to preach the Gospel with the Disciples, and very much tribulation came upon them; and then they died in peace. Salutation to JOSEPH the rich man who begged the body of Jesus from PILATE. Salutation to NICODEMUS who believed on the Son of MARY.

II. NAḤASSÊ

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

[fol. 133*a* 3] On this day died Saint ATHANASIA. This holy woman was a native of the city of MANÛF, and her parents were rich. When they died she arrived in her mind at the wise decision to make her house a dwellingplace for monks and pilgrims, and this she carried into effect. And she used to receive all those who came to her, and she gave them whatsoever they needed, and at length she came to the end of her money. And certain evil men, whose actions were abominable, gathered together, and they corrupted her mind and induced her to commit sin, which she used to do continually, instead of doing what was good. And the holy old men of the desert of SCETE heard the story of her, and they sorrowed for her with very great sorrow. And they called Abbâ JOHN the Short and informed him of what had happened to her, and they asked him to go to her, and to shew her affection in return for the many kind acts which she had done to them, and to save her soul. And he submitted unto them in this matter, and asked them to help him by their prayers. And Saint Abbâ JOHN rose up and departed, and came to the place where ATHANASIA was, and he said unto the woman who kept the door of her house, "Inform thy mistress of my arrival." And when the woman had informed her about the arrival of the saint, she thought that he had come to her for the purpose of committing sin, and she adorned herself and sat upon her couch. Then she called him, and he came unto her singing these words, "Even if I have to go amid the shadows of death I will fear [no] evil, for Thou art with me" (Psalm xxiii, 4). And when the saint came to her she made him to sit by her side upon her bed, and he looked at her and [fol. 133*b* 1] said unto her, "Why dost thou belittle our Lord Jesus Christ? Why hast thou forsaken thy good deeds and turned thyself to this evil course of life?" And when she heard his words she trembled, and she knew that her heart was melting; and the saint bowed his head and wept. And she asked him, saying, "Why dost thou weep?" And he answered and said unto her, "Because I see the Satans playing on thy face, and therefore I weep for thee." And she answered and said unto him, "Is it necessary for me to repent?" And the saint said unto her, "Yea." And she said unto him, "Take me away, and carry me whithersoever thou wishest"; and he said unto her, "Come," and she followed him, and they departed and came into the desert. And when the eventide was come he said unto her, "Sleep by thyself," and after he had finished his prayer he lay down at a distance from her. And when he rose up at midnight to pray he saw a pillar of light shining upon her, and the pillar reached from earth to heaven, and he saw the angel of God bearing away her soul. And he rose up and went to her, and he found that she was dead, and he cast himself upon the ground and prayed God to give him information concerning her. And there came unto him a voice, saying, "God accepted her repentance when she repented more readily than He did the repentance of those who were in a state of repentance for many years, and who repented even like her." And Saint JOHN went and told the holy old men everything which had happened unto her, and the saints came and made her ready for burial and buried her. [fol. 133*b* 2] Salutation to ATHANASIA.

And on this day also are commemorated Saint DEMÎNÂ (or, DEMÊRSÂT) and her brother.

And on this day also died Saint EUPRAXIA. This holy woman belonged to a race of kings. The name of her father, who was a royal councillor, was "'AṬÊKHANÔS," and the name of her mother was "EUPRAXIA," and they fasted, and prayed to God that He would give them a son; and when they had gotten this saint, they called her by her mother's name "EUPRAXIA." And after a few days her father died, and the king and queen mourned for him, and her mother took Saint EUPRAXIA to a house of virgins when she was six years old. And when she saw the beauty of the excellence of the virgins, she said unto them, "Why do ye lead this life of service?" And they told her, saying, "It is for Christ's sake." And she said unto them, "Where is Christ?" And they shewed her a picture of Christ, and she came up to it, and bowed low before it, and kissed its feet. And she went to the deacons, and asked [them] to receive her as a nun, and they told her mother, and her mother gave her to the deaconess; [fol. 133*b* 3] and her mother, having handed her over to the care of all the virgins, left her and departed. And after a few days EUPRAXIA, her mother, died, and the saint assumed the garb of the monastic life; and she fought the spiritual fight continually and fasted every eighth day. And Satan was envious of her, and tempted her, and sometimes he threw her into the water, and sometimes he wounded her with the axe when she was cutting up wood, and sometimes he poured boiling water over her, but nothing harmed her. And she continued to minister unto the virgins, to each in her turn. Sometimes they commanded her to tend the furnace, and sometimes to bake the bread, and sometimes to draw water, and she never hesitated to perform these works. She never lay down upon the ground, but stood upright for forty days at a time, until at length the virgins marvelled at the severity of her fight. And God made manifest by her hands signs and wonders, and the sick were healed, and the devils went out, and the lame walked, and the blind saw, when she prayed over them. And there was a certain virgin whose name was ÎYÂLYÂ, and it was she who taught EUPRAXIA to read and to write, and the duties of the ascetic life; she was her companion in every work, and they loved each other very much. And when she was thirty years of age she saw a vision wherein the deacons were taking up EUPRAXIA into the royal palace, wherein was the heavenly Bridegroom and never-ending joy; and when she woke up she knew that the death of EUPRAXIA was nigh. And on the following day she told the virgins, and when they went to EUPRAXIA they found that she was in a high fever. And they wept over her, and asked her to pray over [fol. 134*a* 1] them, and she blessed them, and died, and she was buried in the tomb of her mother, at whose tomb she had prayed three days before. Salutation to EUPRAXIA.

III. NAḤASSÊ

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died the glorious holy father, the ascetic and fighter, Abbâ SIMON of the Pillar. This saint came from the island of SÔRYÂ. When his days were three years, his father set him to tend his sheep. And he used to go to church frequently and hear the Holy Scriptures, and the grace of God moved him, and he went to a certain monastery and became a monk, and devoted himself to the ascetic life and fought the spiritual fight for many years. And he used to carry loads of dust and ashes upon his head, and he afflicted his soul with fasting and much prayer, and with prolonged periods of thirst. And then he tied a cord so tightly about his waist that it sank into his body, and very stinking worms used to issue from the wound. And his brother monks were distressed at his filthy smell, and at his dirtiness, and [fol. 134*a* 2] they all gathered together and came to the abbot, and said unto him, "If thou dost not expel this monk SIMON from among us, we shall all forsake thee and depart." And the abbot said unto them, "What hath he done?" And they said unto him, "Call him, and see what he hath done"; and the abbot called Saint Abbâ SIMON. And when SIMON stood before him the abbot saw blood, mixed with pus, flowing down upon his feet, and it was an exceedingly hard matter for the abbot. And he opened SIMON'S apparel and saw the rope which had cut into his flesh, and the abbot was wroth with him, and said unto him, "Why hast thou dared to do this thing, which thou wishedst to do with such toil?" And the abbot had the rope taken off the saint's body. And they continued to treat him in this saving manner for a space of fifty days, until his wound was healed. And the abbot said unto him, "O my son SIMON, depart whithersoever thou wishest." And he went forth from them, and departed, and came unto a dry pit, and he dwelt therein with serpents and scorpions. And the abbot saw a vision by night wherein it seemed that one said unto him, "Why didst thou send away My servant SIMON? Seek him, and bring him back, for it shall be better for him than for thee in the Day of Judgement"; and the voice rebuked him very severely because of the going forth of Abbâ SIMON from the monastery. And when the morning had come, the abbot told all the brethren what he had seen, and how the voice had rebuked him because of Saint SIMON; and the brethren were frightened, and were exceedingly sorry. And the abbot said unto them, "Depart ye and search for him in every place, and come not back to me until ye have found him." And they departed and searched for him in many places, [fol. 134*a* 3] but they found him not. And after this they went to that pit, and they lighted a lamp, and they saw him seated with the serpents and scorpions, without food and without drink; and they let down a rope to him, and they drew him up out of the pit, and they bowed low before him and said unto him, "Forgive us our sin." And Saint Abbâ SIMON said unto them, "Forgive ye me for having caused you all sorrow, for I have transgressed the command of my teacher the abbot." And from the time when he took up his abode in the pit until they took him out he had neither eaten bread nor drunk water; and they took him to the monastery, and he lived there a life of stern self-denial, and he fought many spiritual fights. And when they had set him in the monastery, he craved not for the glory of this fleeting world, and he left the brethren and fled from them, and departed secretly, and came to a certain rock, and stood up before it for sixty days without sleeping. And after this the angel of the Lord came unto him, and comforted him, and made him to know that God had called him for the salvation of many souls. And then he stood for fifteen years upon a pillar, the height whereof was thirty cubits, and he performed signs and many wonders, and great healings; and he used to teach all those who came unto him. And his father sought him but found him not, and he died before he could see him. And after many years his mother heard the report of him, and she came to him whilst he was standing on the pillar, and she wept greatly; and then she used to sleep under the pillar of the saint. And the saint asked God to deal graciously with her, [fol. 134*b* 1] and she died whilst she was sleeping, and they buried her under the pillar of the saint. And Satan became envious of the saint; and smote him a severe blow in one foot, and it became diseased, but he stood upon the other foot for many years, until the diseased foot rotted, and worms dropped on the ground from it. And the captain of a gang of thieves came to him and repented under his direction, and he lived a few days [there] and died. And the saint asked our Lord Jesus Christ, and a spring of water sprang up at the foot of the pillar, for the use of those people who used to come to him to drink water for their troubles. And after this he departed to another high pillar and he stood upon it for thirty years. And when he had completed eight and forty years, during which time he lived the ascetic life and fought the spiritual fight, he departed to the God Whom he loved, having converted many infidels and pagans, and brought them into the Faith of our Lord Jesus Christ. And he taught many men, and arrayed them in the garb of the monastic life, and they became like angels of God; and he died in peace and inherited the kingdom of heaven. And when the Archbishop of Antioch heard that Saint Abbâ SIMON was dead, he came, bringing with him priests, and deacons, and officers, and they took away the body of Saint SIMON with great honour, and brought it to the city of Alexandria, with spiritual songs and psalms. And they laid it in a church there, and many signs, and wonders, and great healings took place through it. [fol. 134*b* 2] Salutation to SIMON of the Pillar.

And on this day also died Saint SOPHIA. This saint was a kinswoman of a race of kings, and she had riches and possessions, and she crossed the Sea of Rômê with her three daughters to receive the seal of Christ. And the Emperor ANDRIANUS, knowing that she was a Christian, had her and her daughters brought before him, and questioned her about her country and her name; and she said unto him, "The name which comes first with me is that of 'CHRISTIAN'; as for what my kinsfolk call me, it is 'SOPHIA,' and I am of a noble family of Italy. And the Lord Jesus Christ hath in His mercy brought me into thy city, that I may offer myself and my daughters as an offering." And she encouraged her daughters, and bade them not to fear the tortures. And after this her three daughters finished their testimony, and she wrapped them in shrouds and buried them outside the city. And she went out to celebrate the commemoration of her three daughters with many other women of the city, and when she arrived at their graves, she bowed down and prayed, saying, "O my perfect daughters who are crowned with crowns incorruptible, may I too receive a crown with you!" And having said these words she died in peace, [fol. 134*b* 3] and was buried with her daughters. Salutation to SOPHIA.

Salutation to the translation of the body of MERCURIUS, the fighter, which was taken to a new grave on the backs of three oxen.

IV. NAḤASSÊ

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died King HEZEKIAH, son of AHAZ, of the seed of DAVID, of the tribe of JUDAH. After DAVID, the prophet, there was never appointed any king over the children of Israel like unto this saint, for all the kings of Israel worshipped idols, and built altars to them, with the exception of this king. When he reigned he broke the idols, and laid waste their altars, and broke in pieces the serpent of brass because the children of Israel worshipped it; and because he had done the things which were good God rewarded him by adding greatly to his days. In the fourteenth year of his kingdom SANÂKRÊM (SENNACHERIB), the King of FÂRS (PERSIA), came and besieged Jerusalem. Now SANÂKRÊM (SENNACHERIB) was a very great and most [fol. 135*a* 1] powerful king, and there was no king as strong and mighty in his days, and all the [other] kings were afraid, and were subject unto him. And HEZEKIAH was afraid of him, and sent to him much money and tribute; but SANÂKRÊM (SENNACHERIB) was not pleased with him, and would receive nothing whatsoever from him. And SANÂKRÊM (SENNACHERIB) sent an angry message to HEZEKIAH, and he uttered many threats against him, and promised that he would destroy him, and blot out his city. And he reviled God, the Glorious and Most High, with his foul tongue, saying, "God is not able to deliver thee out of my hand"; and then he sent to HEZEKIAH two letters, wherein were written wrathful blasphemies. And HEZEKIAH wept, and rent his garments, and he put on hair sackcloth, and went into the house of God and prayed before Him, saying, "Thou O God knowest what SANÂKRÊM (SENNACHERIB) the king and his messengers are saying, This king worshippeth the gods of the land which are of wood and stone, but Thou, O God, alone art the Lord God, the Sustainer of the Universe." And then HEZEKIAH sent a letter to ISAIAH the prophet, and made him to know what SANÂKRÊM (SENNACHERIB), the King of FÂRS (PERSIA), was saying; and he asked him to pray for him.

And ISAIAH answered him with the word of God, saying, "Be of good courage and fear not, for God is about to do unto SANÂKRÊM (SENNACHERIB) an awful thing, the like whereof hath never been heard of in all the earth." And that night MICHAEL, the angel of God, [fol. 135*a* 2] came down from heaven, and slew in the camp of SANÂKRÊM (SENNACHERIB) one hundred and fourscore and five thousand men in a moment. And when [the Persians] woke up and found that their hosts were slain, those who were left of the slaughter fled to the country of FÂRS (PERSIA), together with the king. And SANÂKRÊM (SENNACHERIB) came into [the temple of] his gods to pray, and his sons rose up against him and slew him, and HEZEKIAH escaped from his hand and praised God. And when the time drew nigh for HEZEKIAH to die, ISAIAH the prophet came unto him, and found him lying sick of a most serious sickness, and he said unto him, "Give commands to thy sons, for behold, thou shalt die." And HEZEKIAH prayed before God, and God sent ISAIAH unto him a second time, and made known to him that God had added to his days another fifteen years; and when he required from ISAIAH a sign, he made the sun to go back for him on the sun-dial. And all the kings of the earth were afraid of HEZEKIAH, and they brought tribute unto him, because they knew that God was with him; and he continued in his kingdom nine and twenty years, and all the days of his life were four and fifty years, and he pleased God [and died] in peace. And the prayer of the saint which he uttered through the Holy Spirit when he was healed of his sickness is written in the Psalms of DAVID. Salutation to HEZEKIAH.

[fol. 135*a* 3] And on this day also the saints DAVID and his brethren, and PHILIP, became martyrs in the city of SĔNGĔRÂ, in the north of Egypt. Salutation to DAVID and his brethren who became martyrs in the land of SENGÂR (sic).

And on this day also died Abbâ MATTHEW, the anchorite. This saint dwelt in the desert, and wore hair sackcloth, like a sheep, and he taught MARMEHNÂM to believe on Christ, and he cleansed SÂRÂ of her leprosy. Salutation to MATTHEW.

V. NAḤASSÊ

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died Abbâ ABRAHAM, the second. The parents of this saint were exceedingly rich, and they brought him up in the admonition and fear of God. And when he was grown up, they brought in a wife for him against his will, and on the seventh [fol. 135*b* 1] day, when he was sitting on his couch, the grace of God moved him, and he went forth from his marriage-chamber, the light guiding him, and he found an empty house, and he took up his abode therein. And he built up the door thereof, leaving only a small opening through which his food might be handed in to him. Ten years after he had left the world his father and his mother died, leaving him many possessions, which he distributed among the poor and needy. And he lived a life of fasting and prayer, and he possessed nothing except a head cloth, a tunic, a sackcloth coat, a bowl for water, and a coarse carpet for his bed; and in such circumstances he fought the fight for fifty years. The men in a certain city, from little to great, were pagans, and there was no man who was able to convert them to the True Faith. One day when the bishop remembered the faith and the wisdom of Abbâ ABRAHAM, he urged him to become a priest, and to make the pagans believe; and with difficulty he appointed him a priest, and sent him thither. And having come into their city, he built a church, and made prayer therein, and he entreated God to convert them to the knowledge of Himself. And one day he came into the house of their idols, and cast them down from their seats. And when the men of the city saw this, they were filled with wrath, and beat him, and cast him out of the city, but when the night came they found him in the church praying. And they also bound him with a rope, and dragged him outside the city, and they cast stones at him, and left him well-nigh dead, and went away. And having risen up, by the might of God, they found him praying for their conversion; and being bound with ropes and dragged about by them [fol. 135*b* 2] he lived for three years. And when God saw his patience He turned their hearts to believe on Him, and they were baptized in the Name of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Spirit, from the least of them to the greatest; and they became strong in the Faith of Christ. And when Abbâ ABRAHAM saw the strength of their Faith, he was afraid lest they should bring upon him the pleasure of idleness, and he prayed to God, and made the sign of the Cross over the city. And he went forth, not knowing where to go, and he departed to another city. And Satan, the hater of good, set himself in opposition to him and frightened him with many infernal devices, but the saint conquered him by the power of his prayer. And he continued to fight many strenuous fights, and practised severe abstinence, and not a day passed without his shedding tears; he never laughed with his teeth, he never smiled with his lips, he never anointed his face, he never washed his face and feet with water; and he thought each day that he might die that day. And when his brother, according to the flesh, died, he left a daughter, seven years old, whose name was MÂRTÂ, and her kinsfolk took her to Abbâ ABRAHAM, and she was brought up under his direction. And he taught her the fear of God, and how to pray, and to fast, and to weep, and she was under his authority until she was twenty years of age. And then Satan envied him, and he made her to be on such intimate terms with a certain monk that at length he destroyed her virginity; and she changed her apparel, and her nun's garb, and departed to another city. And that night the saint saw in a vision a huge serpent swallowing a dove, and there remained a little vomit under his feet. And on the following day when MARY (sic) was missing from her place, ABRAHAM was frightened, and he prayed to God, with tears, [fol. 135*b* 3] that He would enable him to find her. And after a few days he heard where she was, and he changed his apparel, and wrapped his face in cloth, so that [none] might know him, and he mounted a horse, and arrayed himself and departed to that city; and when he arrived there, he went to the place where she was. And when he saw her dressed like a serving woman in a tavern, he was very sorry that she had left her seclusion, but he did not know how he could have prevented her flight. And then he gave the master of the house one dînâr, which he had brought with him, so that he might prepare for him food and drink wherewith to make merry with MARY (sic), and he pretended to her that he wished to commit sin with her. And after supper he had her brought inside the house, and he took her hand and looked her in the face, and when she recognized him she became like a dead body. And he said unto her, "Fear not, O my daughter, for thy sin lieth upon me. There is no man without sin, except God. Come, return to thy old life and habit"; and she said unto him, "I will." And on the following day he took her with him, and he set her on a horse, which he led by the bridle, and he marched along rejoicing, because he had snatched his daughter (sic) out of the hand of Satan. And when he had come to his house, he shut her up in a chamber, and she repented in sackcloth and seclusion, and she submitted so completely to his authority that all those who heard about her marvelled. And God made manifest through her signs and wonders in connection with the casting out of devils and the healing of the sick. And when Abbâ ABRAHAM had watched her repentance for ten years, he died at the age of seventy winters, praising God. And MARY (sic) lived five years longer, and [fol. 136*a* 1] devoted herself more and more to the ascetic life, and to weeping by day and by night, and then she died; and those who saw her ascribed glory to God because of the great light which was on her face. Salutation to ABRAHAM.

And on this day also died Saint JOHN, the fighter of the spiritual fight, the soldier. This saint had Christian parents. He was a soldier in the army of JULIAN, and with him were other soldiers, and [JULIAN] commanded them to afflict the Christian people wheresoever they went. And he was the soldier at the head of his companions, and pretended outwardly to them that he hated the Christians, and wished to make war upon them, but in secret he fought on their behalf, and did good unto them, and gave them whatsoever they wanted. And he used to fast and pray continually, and give alms. And he lived a life like unto the lives of the saints, and he pleased God, and died in peace, and many miracles were seen at his grave. Salutation to JOHN, the soldier.

[fol. 136*a* 2] And on this day also died Abbâ PHILIP of DABRA BÎZÂN. Salutation to PHILIP.

VI. NAḤASSÊ

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day Saint JUSTA (or, ÎYALÛṬÂ) became a martyr. This spiritual fighter came from the country of Caesarea in Cappadocia, and she inherited from her parents many possessions; but a certain oppressor robbed her and took away all her money, and possessions, and slaves, and handmaidens by bribery. And when that robber knew that the saint wished to inform against him, and expose his sins, and his lying words, he informed the governor of Caesarea that she was a Christian. And she said within herself, "The possessions of this world are fleeting things; are they anything at all? And behold, they have robbed me, and taken them away by force; but if I gain possession of the habitation which is in heaven, no one will be able to take it from me." And when she came to the governor and stood up before him, she confessed boldly, saying, "I am a Christian, I believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of the [fol. 136*a* 3] Living God, the Creator of the heavens and the earth and of all that in them is." And the governor was wroth, and he commanded the soldiers, and they cast her into the fire, and she delivered up her soul into the hand of God. And the fire neither touched her, nor harmed her in the least degree, and they took her body out of the fire as if it had come forth from water. And instead of her money and possessions, she received an everlasting and never ending kingdom; and Saint BASIL praised her greatly. Salutation to JUSTA.

And on this day also died the holy father and spiritual fighter Abbâ WÎṢÂ, the disciple of Abbâ SÎNÔDÂ, and he lived under his authority for many years. And Saint Abbâ SÎNÔDÂ revealed unto him many of the mysteries which he had heard from our Lord Jesus Christ; and Abbâ WÎṢÂ wrote the history of the fight of Abbâ SÎNÔDÂ, according to what he saw and what he heard from him. And having finished his good course, and pleased God, he died in peace. Salutation to Abbâ WÎṢÂ.

[fol. 136*b* 1] And on this day also died Saint MARY MAGDALÂWÎT (MARY MAGDALENE). This saint followed our Lord Jesus Christ, and He cast seven devils out of her, and she ministered unto our Lord and followed Him, and she also followed the Apostles; and she was present at the time of the Passion, and the Crucifixion, and Death and Burial of our Lord. And on the following day, at early dawn, she saw the stone rolled away, and the angel sitting upon it, and she and MARY, the mother of our Lord, being afraid, the angel said unto them, "Be not afraid, behold I know that ye are seeking Jesus, Who was crucified. Behold He hath risen, He is not here." And our Lord also appeared unto this MARY and said unto her, "Go ye and tell My brethren, that I have ascended to My Father, and your Father, and My God and your God." And this saint came and told the Apostles about the Resurrection of our Lord and Redeemer, and she told them how she had seen our Lord, and she told them how He had spoken to her; and she boasted over them how she had seen our Lord and told them how He had spoken unto her. And after the Ascension of our Lord, she continued to minister unto the Apostles, and the grace of the Holy Spirit Paraclete descended upon her together with them, even as JOEL saith in his prophecy, "Your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and I will pour out my Spirit [fol. 136*b* 2] upon my manservants and maidservants" (Joel ii, 28). And she preached with the Apostles, and she converted many free women, and many slave women, to the Faith of our Lord Jesus Christ. And the Apostles made her a deaconess because of her teaching of women, and she baptized them; and great tribulation came upon her, and opprobrium, and scourging, and much disgrace through the Jews. And she continued to minister to the Apostles until she died. Salutation to MARY MAGDALÂWÎT (MARY MAGDALENE).

Salutation to TAKLA MÎKÂÊL, the singer of hymns and psalms from his youth up. Salutation to the dedication of thy house and to the translation of thy body; neither the teeth nor the claws of wild beasts, or lions, or leopards could harm thee.

Salutation to TAKLA ÎYÂSÛS.

[fol. 136*b* 3] Salutation to JULIA.

VII. NAḤASSÊ

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day God sent the great angel GABRIEL, and he spake unto JOACHIM the righteous man, saying, "Behold, thy wife HANNAH shall conceive, and she shall bear thee a daughter, and in her shall be joy and salvation for all the world"; which actually took place through MARY, the bearer of God in the flesh. This righteous man JOACHIM, and his wife HANNAH, were very old in days, and they had produced no child, for HANNAH was barren, and they were exceedingly sorrowful because of this, for the children of Israel used to thrust aside him that had not begotten a son, and would say unto him, "O thou who lackest the blessing of God." Because of this the hearts of this righteous man and his wife were sad, and they fasted, and prayed, and entreated God frequently by day and by night [for a child]; and they had reached old age and had become old. And they begged and entreated God frequently, and they vowed a vow to Him that if they got a child they would make him a ministrant in the Temple of God. And JOACHIM was in the sanctuary praying frequently and making supplication, and behold, slumber descended upon him and he slept, and GABRIEL, the angel of God, appeared unto him, and told him that HANNAH his wife would certainly conceive, and bear a daughter wherein he would rejoice, [fol. 137*a* 1] and because of whom his eyes would sparkle; and likewise all the world would rejoice, and be glad and would be saved through her. And when he woke from his dream he came to his house, and told his wife the vision which he had seen during sleep; and she conceived forthwith, and brought forth our holy Lady, the Virgin MARY, the God-bearer, the object of boasting of all the world. Salutation to thy spiritual conception, O MARY.

Salutation to AARON, the brother of MOSES.

And on this day also is celebrated the festival of the honourable Apostle PETER, the head of the Apostles, for in it he confessed among the Disciples, saying, "Christ is the Son of God." And when our Lord had brought them outside the city of Caesarea of Philip, even as the Holy Gospel saith, He asked them what men said about Him. He knew all the thoughts and hearts of men, but He took them outside the city by themselves, so that they might talk out what they were thinking in their hearts about Him. Now the Apostles were divided among themselves. [fol. 137*a* 2] Some of them said that He was ELIAS, and some said that He was one of the early prophets. And PETER was wroth with them, and said unto them, "Nay, He is CHRIST, the Son of the Living God." And when our Lord knew this He brought them outside the city by themselves, and He asked them, saying, "What do men say about Me?" And they said what was in their hearts, and some of them said, "One of the prophets." And our Lord said unto PETER, "And thou, what dost thou say and confess?" And he said, "The Apostles have talked when they were by themselves, and they say, 'Thou art Christ, the Son of the Living God.'" And because of this our Lord entreated him kindly, and gave him the keys of the kingdom of heaven, that he might loose and bind; and from that hour PETER became the head of all the Apostles. And he took the place of our Lord in the city of Rômê, and his position was above that of the chiefs of the world, and of Archbishops, and Bishops, and Priests, and Deacons, and every other order of the priesthood. Glory be to our Lord Jesus Christ. Salutation to PETER, the chief of the Apostles and of all the priesthood of the world.

And on this day also died the holy father, [fol. 137*a* 3] Abbâ TIMOTHY, the twenty-sixth Archbishop of the city of Alexandria. God chose this saint, and appointed him Archbishop of the city of Alexandria, after the holy father and spiritual fighter DIOSCURUS died. And great tribulation came upon him, and they drove him out into exile in the island of GÂGRÂ, whither they had driven DIOSCURUS the archbishop, who had lived there before Abbâ TIMOTHY for six years. And then the Emperor LEO sent and brought him back from exile with great honour. And after MARCIAN had become emperor, he appointed an Archbishop of Alexandria. And after MARCIAN died, the men of Alexandria rose up against the archbishop whom MARCIAN had appointed, and killed him; and [they] appointed TIMOTHY archbishop according to the command of Abbâ DIOSCURUS. When LEO, the son of MARCIAN, became emperor he appointed Archbishop of the city of Alexandria one who was called TIMOTHY, and 'ABBÂS, the archbishop, he exiled to the island of GÂGRÂ, the place where he exiled DIOSCURUS; and he lived there for ten years, till LEO died and ZENO reigned. And TIMOTHY the wicked one fled from Alexandria, and Abbâ TIMOTHY returned to the city by the emperor's command with great honour. And he taught the people continually, and rebuked them, and encouraged those who believed in the True Faith. He lived in peace and quietness all the days of his office, and he sat upon the throne of MARK the evangelist for two and twenty years; and he pleased God and died in peace. [fol. 137*b* 1] Salutation to TIMOTHY.

And on this day was born JOSEPH, the son of RACHEL.

Salutation to NÂ'ÔD, King of Ethiopia. [NA'ÔD 'ANBASÂ BAZAR died 31st July, 1508.]

VIII. NAḤASSÊ

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day nine saints became martyrs, that is to say, LAZARUS an aged man, and his wife SALOME, which is being interpreted "Weeper," and their seven children, whose names are 'AN'ÎMÔ, ANTONITUS, and 'ÔZYÂ, and LAZARUS, and 'ASYÔNÂ, and SĔMÛNÂ, and MARCOLUS. And this old man LAZARUS was one of the teachers of the Law of MOSES in his days, and his father was one of the Seventy-two translators who translated the Book of the Law and the Prophets for PTOLEMY, King of Egypt. And this just man taught his children the Law of MOSES. And when ANTIOCHUS, King of Rômê, reigned over the country of Asia, and the land of Judah, he besieged Jerusalem, and reigned over it, and he afflicted the people of [fol. 137*b* 2] Judah, and he punished them with many punishments. And he compelled them to break the Law of MOSES and to eat what was forbidden to eat by the Law of MOSES, that is to say the flesh of swine and such like; and there were many who broke the Law of MOSES, and who set themselves under his authority. But these saints kept the Law of MOSES, which had been given to them by God, and ANTIOCHUS tortured them severely, and he beat them, and sawed their bodies with an iron saw, and cut off their limbs; and the righteous woman SALOME, their mother, encouraged them and made them to endure until they had finished their martyrdom. And after all of them [were dead], she cast herself into the fire of her own free will, and did not wait for them to throw her into it; and they received crowns of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens. And it is right that thou shouldst know, O thou who readest this, that our fathers and doctors of the Church have commanded us to celebrate a festival in honour of the saints of the Old Dispensation, in their divers degrees, and to pay far more honour to them than to the fathers of the New Dispensation, because they did far more than the later fathers. Salutation to the God of the martyrs LAZARUS and his wife.

And on this day also AMMON became a martyr.

And on this day also died the ascetic and father Abbâ JOHN, Abbot of DABRA [fol. 137*b* 3] LÎBÂNÔS, and he was the sixth from our father TAKLA HÂYMÂNÔT. Because of his great righteousness, and his strenuous spiritual fight, [the monks] chose him and set him upon the throne of Abbâ TAKLA HÂYMÂNÔT; and it is said of him that our Lady MARY, in the form of a dove, used to appear to him and wave her wing over him. And after pleasing God with his abundant labours, he died on the eighth day of Naḥassê and departed to everlasting joy.

IX. NAḤASSÊ

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day Saint Abbâ 'ÔRÎ became a martyr. This saint was priest of SAṬÂNÛF, and he was of an exceedingly merciful and compassionate disposition, and was pure in mind and in body, and divine visions were seen by him frequently. And our Lord Jesus Christ appeared unto him upon the altar, and revealed unto him the hidden things which he wished [to know about]. And the report of Abbâ 'ÔRÎ reached the ears of the governor of the city of NAḲYÛS, and he had the saint brought before him, and said unto him, "Offer incense to the gods and idols"; and the saint refused to do so, and he was unafraid of the governor; and although the governor was wroth with him he did not fear his wrath. And the governor tortured him severely, and after that sent him to the city of Alexandria, where the governor also tortured him severely, and cast him into prison. And he used to work signs and perform many wonderful things, and he healed the sick; and the report of him was noised abroad, and many men came unto him from all the cities. And when the governor heard this he commanded [fol. 138*a* 1] the soldiers to cut off his head with the sword, and they cut off the head of the saint with the sword, and he received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens.

And Saint JULIUS came and took his body, and wrapped it in cloths, and sent it to the city of SAṬNÛF (sic), and after the end of the days of persecution they built a beautiful church for him, and laid his body therein, and great signs and miracles took place through it. And his body resteth there at the present time and it performeth great healings for all the sick folk who come unto him in faith. Salutation to 'ÔRÎ.

And on this day also is commemorated PILATE (?), the archbishop.

X. NAḤASSÊ

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day Saint MAṬRÂ became a martyr in the days of DEMETRIUS, Archbishop of the city of Alexandria, and in the days of the Emperor DECIUS, who denied Christ. When this saint had read the Edict which ordered [all men] to deny Christ, and to worship idols, he went and stole the arm of the idol APOLLO, which was of gold, and he broke it [fol. 138*a* 2] into little pieces, and gave them to the poor and needy; and when they (the priests) searched for the idol's arm, and could not find it, they seized many men because of the theft. And at that time this saint came to the governor and confessed before him, saying, "I am he who stole the arm of the unclean idol, and I gave it to the poor"; and when the governor heard this he punished him with great severity, and tortured him. And then he cast him into a red-hot oven, but God delivered him therefrom, and brought him out sound and uninjured. And then they cut off his hands and his feet, and they roasted his body with fire, and they hanged him upon a tree, head downwards, until much blood ran down from his mouth upon the ground. And at that moment the angel of God came down from heaven, and released Saint MAṬRÂ from hanging, and touched his body with his hand, and healed his wounds. And a certain man who was blind came and took some of the blood which was flowing from the nose and mouth of Saint MAṬRÂ, and he smeared his eyes therewith, and he saw forthwith. And when the governor was tired of punishing him, he commanded the soldiers to cut off his head with the sword, and they cut off his head and he received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens; and his body became a means of great healings for the sick. Salutation to MAṬRÂ.

[fol. 138*a* 3] And on this day also Saint CHRISTOPHER became a martyr in the days of MAXIMIANUS, the wicked emperor. And when the emperor had him set before him, he said unto him, "Offer sacrifice to the gods," and CHRISTOPHER said unto him, "I worship my Lord Jesus Christ and to Him I offer up sacrifice." And MAXIMIANUS was wroth with him, and commanded the soldiers to beat him with rods until his flesh dropped on the ground, and then they cast him into prison. And then he sent unto him two women to lead him astray with their beauty, but the saint taught them the Faith of Christ and made them believers. And when they came back MAXIMIANUS said unto them, "What did ye do?" And they said unto him, "We believe in Christ, the God of Saint CHRISTOPHER." And when the governor heard this he commanded the soldiers to hang one of them on a tree and to burn her with fire, and to tie a stone to the neck of the other and to hang her, head downwards; and thus they finished their martyrdom. And then he called CHRISTOPHER, and they gathered together old, dry wood, and set it on fire, and they cast the saint into the flames, his hands and his feet being bound, but the fire did not touch him. And when the people saw this they all believed, and ten thousand men were slain. And they also brought plates of iron made red-hot, and they made the saint to stand upon them, but it injured him not. And when the men of Rômê saw [this] they believed on our Lord Jesus Christ, and twenty thousand and two hundred of them, and forty children, believed and became martyrs. And when MAXIMIANUS saw [fol. 138*b* 1] that all the people believed, he was wroth with CHRISTOPHER and commanded the soldiers to cut off his head with the sword. And having gone forth from the emperor's presence, the saint made a prayer, and sealed his face with the sign of the Cross, and then the soldiers cut off his head with the sword and he finished his martyrdom. Salutation to CHRISTOPHER.

And on this day also Saint BÎKÂBÔS and JOHN became martyrs. BÎKÂBÔS was from the city of 'ĔSMÛṬĔNÂKHA, and he was a soldier; he was a Christian in secret, and one told ANTIOCHUS the governor about him and about the Bishop Abbâ 'AKLÔG, and about Abbâ NÂKHAREW, who was from the city of TARSÂ, and about Abbâ PHILIP. And when one informed the governor that they were Christians, he had them brought before him, and he said unto them, "Are ye Christians?" and they confessed our Lord before him and said, boldly, "Indeed we are Christians, and we believe on our Lord and Redeemer Jesus Christ, the Son of the Living God." And the governor said unto them, "Put away this thing from you, and offer sacrifice to the gods." And the saints answered and said unto him, "We will not sacrifice to unclean idols, which are to be rejected, we will only sacrifice to our Lord Jesus Christ, [fol. 138*b* 2] the Creator of the heavens and the earth." And when the governor heard this he was exceedingly angry, and he tortured them very severely. And he tortured Saint BÎKÂBÔS severely, and often, and he bound him in iron fetters, and threw him on the wheel, and hanged him, head downwards, and cut off his limbs; and God strengthened him to endure, and He raised him up whole and uninjured. And after this the governor sent the saint, with many other martyrs, to the city of BARAMÛN in a ship, and for sixteen days he neither ate bread nor drank water. And when they came to the city of BARAMÛN the soldiers tortured the saint very severely, and then they hacked his body in pieces, and he finished his martyrdom, and received his crown in the kingdom of heaven. And a certain rich official of the city of BARAMÛN took the body of the saint and wrapped it up in costly cloths, and sent it to the city of 'ĔSMÛNÂṬĔKHA (sic). And in the days of his torturing an innumerable multitude of people became martyrs, and through his finishing his martyrdom five and ninety souls became martyrs. And they built a beautiful church for Saint BÎKÂBÔS, and they laid his body therein, and many signs and wonders took place through it. Salutation to Abbâ BÎKÂBÔS.

[fol. 138*b* 3] Salutation to the ancient LAWGIVERS and to the EVANGELISTS who followed after them.

Salutation to the three thousand, two hundred, and twenty men and two women, who suffered martyrdom through CHRISTOPHER.

XI. NAḤASSÊ

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day three hundred people became martyrs with BASILIDES the martyr, general of the city of Antioch.

And on this day also died the holy father Abbâ MYSIS (or, MÔDÔSIS), Bishop of the city of 'AWSÎM. This father was holy and chaste, and a virgin from his youth up, and he learned all the doctrine of the Church, and was made a deacon; and then he went up to the desert of ḤEBÂYĔB of SCETE, and became a monk under the direction of a righteous man, and he lived with him and ministered unto him for eighteen years; and he devoted himself to the ascetic life, and fought the fight in the narrow way in respect of eating, and drinking, and sleeping, and he [fol. 139*a* 1] fasted, and prayed, and kept vigil constantly in his great humility and love. When the report of him, and his virtues, and his righteousness became noised abroad, God chose him to be Bishop of the city of 'AWSÎM, after Saint Abbâ GAMEL. When this father had been made bishop he fought a good fight, and he performed far more strenuous ascetic labours than he had performed as a monk. And he protected the Christian flock from the wolves of the Devil, and he watched unto prayer on their behalf, and he never made any money of this fleeting [world] all the days of his life. When Abbâ MICHAEL was appointed Archbishop of the city of Alexandria, he became a martyr, without the shedding of blood. And this father was with those who were in prison, and great tribulation came upon him, and they beat him with many cruel stripes, and they shut him up in prison, with irons on his legs, for a long time. And God performed by the hands of this father many signs and wonders, and because of his miracles, those who knew nothing of his righteousness and virtues learned about him. And the gift of prophecy was bestowed upon him, and he declared many things before they came to pass; and they did happen, even as he prophesied. He prophesied to Abbâ THEODORE, Bishop of the city of MĔSR (CAIRO), that the king would not come back in his splendour, and his prophecy was fulfilled; and he prophesied as to what would happen to the governor of Egypt, and his prophecy was fulfilled. And he healed many sick and suffering persons by his prayer. And having finished his fight at a [fol. 139*a* 2] good old age, and pleased God, he fell sick of a slight fever, and he knew that the time of his death [had come]. And he called the people, and blessed them, and absolved them, and asked them to pray for him, and they all wept and entreated him to pray for them. And he prayed over them and said unto them, "Take good heed to yourselves and be strong in the True Faith"; and when he had said this he died. And they wept over him with a great weeping, and they wrapped him [in costly cloths] and buried him with great honour, and with the singing of psalms and hymns in the manner which befitteth bishops; and many miracles and great cures took place through him. And all the days of his life were twenty years and more. Salutation to MYSIS, Bishop of 'AWSÎM.

And on this day also Saint PTOLEMY, of the city of UPPER MANÛF, became a martyr. And one informed the governor that this saint was a Christian, and he had him brought before him, and PTOLEMY confessed our Lord Jesus Christ; and the governor tortured him severely, and cut off his head with a sword, and the saint received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens. Salutation to PTOLEMY.

XII. NAḤASSÊ

[fol. 139*a* 3] IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day is celebrated the festival of the glorious Archangel MICHAEL, for on this day he appeared unto the righteous CONSTANTINE above the city of Rômê, and gave him power over all his enemies, and the emperor conquered them, and his kingdom became strong. And he destroyed the houses of idols, and built churches, and decorated them with every kind of decoration. For this reason our Fathers, the doctors of the Church, have commanded us to celebrate the festival of the glorious angel, MICHAEL the archangel, on the twenty-second day of this month. Salutation to thee, O MICHAEL, angel of the covenant and counsel of God.

And on this day also the righteous Emperor CONSTANTINE began to reign over the city of Rômê, and over all the kingdoms of the countries, and the country of Syria, and Jerusalem, and the country of Egypt, and the Christian kingdoms. He reigned with his father ḲAÔNSĔṬÂ in the city of BARÂNṬĔYÂ (BYZANTIUM) [fol. 139*b* 1] and all the borders thereof for twelve years, and his father died, and he reigned in BARÂNṬĔYÂ (BYZANTIUM) and the districts thereof. And he blotted out oppressors and the workers of iniquity in his kingdom, and his righteousness and justice were famous in all the ends of the world. And the chiefs of the city of Rômê sent to him asking him to deliver them from the oppression of the Emperor MAXIMIANUS, who denied Christ, and to save them from his slavery. When CONSTANTINE read their letter he was very sorry, because the oppression of that infidel had come upon them, and he pondered in what way he could deliver them. And the honourable Cross appeared unto him, and he was helped thereby. He departed to fight against MAXIMIANUS, and he crushed him and conquered him, and MAXIMIANUS fled from him; and the bridge which was over the river split asunder and he died an evil death, and his soldiers were drowned in the river. Now this took place in the seventh year of his reign. And straightway the elders of the city of Rômê, and all the men thereof, received CONSTANTINE with great honour, and with joy and gladness, and he made a festival to celebrate his victory for seven days. And all the learned men of the city of Rômê, and the poets (?) thereof, whose words were sweet and who were skilful in declaiming them, pronounced encomiums on the Honourable Cross, and called it the "Saviour of their city"; and they pronounced encomiums on CONSTANTINE, and called him, "Conqueror," and "Conqueror by the might of the Cross." And in the eleventh year of his reign CONSTANTINE was baptized with Christian baptism by the hand of SÂL PETER (sic), Archbishop of the city of Rômê. And his name was mentioned at the altar, as at this day, and how the Honourable Cross appeared unto him, and how he waged war on MAXIMIANUS, [fol. 139*b* 2] and how that infidel was drowned. And behold we have written the description of all this in the section for the eighteenth day of the month of Magâbît, the day of the death of this righteous king. Salutation to the day when CONSTANTINE began to reign in Rômê.

And on this day twenty hundred men became martyrs with BASILIDES.

XIII. NAḤASSÊ

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day is celebrated the festival of our Lord Jesus Christ, and how His appearance was changed on Mount Tabor, when there were with Him three of His disciples, that is to say, PETER, and JAMES, and JOHN. And our Lord said concerning them, "There stand here those who shall not [fol. 139*b* 3] taste death until they see the Son of God and of man coming in His glory." This is the glory wherein the Apostles saw Him. His apparel was white as snow, and His countenance was changed and became like lightning, emitting light. And behold MOSES and ELIAS came to Him, and they talked with Him that all men might know that He was the God of MOSES, whom He had raised from the dead, and the God of ELIAS, whom He had brought down from heaven (sic). And because of this PETER said unto our Lord, "Dost Thou wish, O Lord, that we should make here three tabernacles, one for Thee, and one for MOSES, and one for ELIAS?" In these words which PETER spake there is a sign of lowliness and humility. He saw our Lord, and thought that He would live on the mountain...and he wished to make for Him a place where He could hide from the sun. PETER did not wish for himself, and for his fellow-apostles, as he wished for our Lord, and for MOSES, and for ELIAS; but he made himself and his fellow-apostles like slaves of those lords. And marvel not at the little knowledge of the apostles, for they were not perfect in knowledge at that time. And when PETER said this a cloud overshadowed them, so as to make it clear to PETER that He did not want a habitation made by the hand of man. And a voice came forth from the cloud which confirmed the belief in the Godhead of our Lord in the minds of the apostles, saying, "This is My Son, Whom I love, in Whom I am well pleased; hear ye Him." And MOSES and [fol. 140*a* 1] ELIAS talked with Him, and they confessed His grace and His goodness, for by the coming of our Lord and by His going up upon the mountain [the truth] of the prophecy of the prophets was made known of a certainty. And the apostles and the prophets rejoiced, for they saw His Incarnation which they had known not of, and the apostles rejoiced also when they heard the voice of the Father, which they had never before heard. They heard it at that time, and by the voice of the Father they became certain of the Incarnation of our God the Son, which was hidden from them; and when they heard the voice of the Father the glory of the kingdom appeared, and the apostles knew that it was our Lord Jesus Christ Who had raised up the soul of MOSES, and that it was He Who had brought up ELIAS, for verily none save God Who buried him knew where the grave of MOSES was, and none save He Who had brought him up to heaven knew where ELIAS was. And none was able to make the dead to live save Almighty God, Who hath dominion over the heavens and the earth. And Mount Tabor is a similitude of the Church, and our Lord gathered together therein the Two Laws, the New and the Old. And when the disciples heard the voice of the Father, they fell down and became like dead men; and MOSES returned to his grave, and ELIAS went up to heaven. And our Lord Jesus Christ stood alone, for the voice came because of Him, and the prophets were frightened and the apostles fell down upon their faces, for the Father revealed the Name of His Son, and that He existed for ever with His Father. Because of that voice the Apostles preached that He [fol. 140*a* 2] was God indeed, and also that the flesh (or, body) which He had put on was of the race of the children of men. And in the Gospel our Redeemer preached saying.... If He was not flesh, why did the angel GABRIEL say unto MARY, "God be with thee!" And if He was not flesh, Whom did they lay in the manger? And if He was not God, Whom did the angels praise when He went down from heaven on the day of His birth, saying, "Glory to God in the heights, and peace on earth, His goodwill to men." If He was not flesh, Whom did JOHN baptize in the Jordan? And if He was not God, Who was it that raised up LAZARUS from his grave? It was Christ, the Only Son, the Word of God. We confess that He is perfect God and perfect man, One Person without separation. And when the apostles fell down upon the earth, and became like dead men, our Lord touched them with His Life-giving hand, and He said unto them, "Rise up, and fear not." And they rose up straightway, and they lifted up their eyes and saw no one except our Lord Jesus Christ, Who was alone. Salutation to DABRA TÂBÔR, which is called DABRA ṬĔLÛL.

[fol. 140*a* 3] And on this day also was the martyrdom (?) of Saint ṢAFRÎRÂ, the daughter of MOSES the prophet. [In the Bodleian MS. the saint is called 'AFRÂ, and the NATIVITY of MOSES is commemorated.]

And on this day also died Abbâ GÂLYÔN, the spiritual fighter. This saint was a spiritual fighter, and he ceased from prayer neither by day nor by night. He used to eat one meal only during the whole week, and from the time when, as a young man, he became a monk until he became an old man, he never went outside the court of the monastery; and none of the brethren ever saw him except at prayers. And when Satan saw his spiritual fight, he took the forms of monks and they came to him at the time of midnight, and said unto him, "We are dwellers in the desert and recluses; one of us having died, we want to take thee with us, and we have come to thee." And Abbâ GÂLYÔN thought that their words were true, and he went with them until they brought him to the top of a desert mountain, where there was no food; and when he saw that they were making a mock of him, he made the sign of the Cross over his face, and they disappeared from him. And having turned to this side and to that, he lost the road whereon he should go, and [fol. 140*b* 1] he prayed a long prayer, and then there appeared unto him some holy monks from the monastery of Abbâ SÎNÔDÂ, who were going about from one monastery to another singing the Psalms of DAVID, and they asked him questions about his actions. And when he told them his story they took him with them, and he dwelt a full year with them, and ate fish dried in the sun. And Abbâ ISAAC, his teacher, who had made him a monk, lacking news of him, asked God to be allowed to see his face [again]; and Abbâ GÂLYÔN knew this by the spirit, and went to him. And when Abbâ ISAAC saw him, he rejoiced and said unto him, "Where hast thou been?" and Abbâ GÂLYÔN told him everything, from the beginning to the end. And then at the time of his death the brethren came, and wrapped him in cloths and buried him. Salutation to Abbâ GÂLYÔN.

Salutation to BENJAMIN, who by reason of his spiritual excellence was caught up in the body [to heaven].

XIV. NAḤASSÊ

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died SIMON Shâlûsî and JOHN his friend (or, JOHN FEḲRÛ). These saints were in the kingdom [fol. 140*b* 2] of YÔSṬÔS (JUSTUS), the believing emperor, and their parents were rich and honourable; they wished to keep the festival of the Cross, and they departed to Jerusalem to worship at the holy places. And when they had finished celebrating the festival, as they were riding back to their own city on their horses, they drew nigh to Jericho, and JOHN saw on the plain of the Jordan certain monasteries wherein monks dwelt. And he said unto SIMON, "O my brother, these are the monasteries wherein live the angels of God." And SIMON said unto him, "Can we see them?" And JOHN said unto him, "If we were with them (i.e. the monks) we could see them." Then they got down from their horses, which they handed over to their servants, and they told them to go on slowly in front until they overtook them; now they pretended to them that they wanted to fulfil the law of the body. And when they had drawn nigh to the road of the Jordan they both said, "Come, let us make a prayer. Let one of us stand on the road to our city, and let one of us stand on the road which will bring [us] to the monastery of the monks; and let us cast lots, and where it pleaseth God [for us to go], let us go." And then SIMON stood up on the road to the Jordan, and JOHN stood up on the road whereon their men had departed; and when they had cast lots, the lot went forth for the road of SIMON. And they embraced each other and kissed, and they went along the road to the Jordan rejoicing. And one admonished the other to be vigilant in the doing of good works, and each feared that his companion would not attain to his end. JOHN feared for SIMON, that he would not attain to his end, [because of his] love for his parents, and SIMON [fol. 140*b* 3] feared for JOHN, because of love for his parents, and because he had married in those days a beautiful and rich wife. And then they prayed and said, "O Lord our God, if we find a monastery, the doors of which are open, let this be a sign unto us that it is the monastery wherein we are to become monks." And there was a certain archimandrite who was called NÎḲÔN, and he used to work many miracles, and the gift of prophecy had been given to him. That night he saw, as it were a man, who said unto him, "Open the doors of the monastery in order that sheep may come in." And when SIMON and JOHN came to him, he said unto them, "Welcome to you, O ye sheep of Christ"; and then he received them to himself as men who had been sent by God. And they asked the archimandrite to give them the tonsure, and to array them in the garb of the monk, for they had seen a monk, with a crown of light on his head, surrounded by angels, and therefore they longed to become monks quickly. And on the following day when the archimandrite put the holy garb upon them, their faces were shining with the grace of the Holy Spirit, and even in the night they could see each other's faces as they did by day; and they saw crowns of light upon their heads, like unto those they saw upon the head[s] of the monks. And then there came to them the spiritual thought that they should be separated from among the monks, and should go forth into the ḍesert. That night a shining man appeared to the archimandrite, and said unto him, "Open the gates that the sheep of Christ may go forth." And when he woke up he went down straightway, and found the doors of the monastery open, and whilst [he stood] sad and sorrowing, [fol. 141*a* 1] behold the servants of Christ came, wishing to go forth. And he saw in front of them figures of eunuchs carrying lamps, and some of them were carrying staves of kings, and when he saw them he rejoiced greatly, and he joined them and they told him what was in their hearts, and they asked him to pray for them. And then he wept for a long time, and he turned his face towards the East, and he set SIMON on his right hand and JOHN on his left. Then stretching out his hands to heaven, he made a prayer, and committed them to the care of God, and he entreated Him to protect them from all evil; and he sent them away in peace. Then they departed by the road to the Dead Sea, and they came to a river which was called 'ARNÔN. And they found a cave wherein an old desert monk used to live, now he had recently died, and in it there was what they needed, that is to say, a store of grain and food from which the old man had eaten; and they rejoiced in God exceedingly Who had prepared this for them. And they lived there, and fought the spiritual fight for many days, and they lived apart from each other, the distance between them being a stone's throw. And Satan set himself in opposition to them, and he fought against them, and Saint NÎḲYÔS (sic), their father, used to come to them in a vision, and pray on their behalf, and teach them psalms whilst they were asleep; and when they woke up they would recite everything which he had taught them during sleep, and they rejoiced exceedingly. And heavenly visions were granted unto them, and the power to perform miracles. And they dwelt in that desert nineteen years, and endured the cold of the night and the heat of the day, until they had vanquished Satan by the might of Christ. And then [fol. 141*a* 2] SIMON said unto his brother JOHN, "What doth it profit us to live by ourselves in the desert? Come let us go into the desert, that we may be profitable to others and deliver them." And JOHN said unto him, "O my brother, this thought appeareth to me to be due to the envy of Satan." And SIMON said unto him, "God hath commanded me to become the mockery of the world; come, let us pray a prayer." And then they prayed, and they embraced each other, and they wept until they spoiled their apparel. And SIMON went to Jerusalem, and he continued to pray for three days to God that He would keep hidden his work until he died. And then he went into the city, and pretended to be mad, and sometimes he healed those who were mad, and sometimes he carried fire in his hands. And he found by the gate a dead dog, and he dragged it about by his girdle like people who amuse themselves, and at last the people reviled him and cried out, "The mad monk"; and they used to run after him and buffet him. One day, now it was the First Day of the week, he took a branch (?) of a nut-tree, and went into the church at the time of the Offering, and he broke the lamps, and beat the women until he drove them out of the church. And sometimes he seized women as if he were going to lie with them, and [he kept them fast] until their husbands beat them. And when the time of his death had drawn nigh God commanded His angel to tell him the day of his death, and of the death of JOHN his brother. And he went in under a vine, and he and JOHN his brother delivered up their souls into the hand of God. [fol. 141*a* 3] Salutation to SIMON and JOHN.

And on this day God worked a great miracle in the city of Alexandria, (by reason of which many Jews believed,) by the hand of Saint Abbâ THEOPHILUS, Archbishop of the city of Alexandria, brother of Saint CYRIL. Now the miracle was this: There was in the city of 'ESMADREYÂ a very rich Jew whose name was FALSKÎNÔS, who feared God and performed the Law of MOSES, according to his ability. And there were in the city of Alexandria two men who were Christians, and they were poor and earned their living with their hands. And Satan brought into the heart of one of them a blasphemous thought, and he said unto his companion, "O my brother, why do we serve Christ and [remain] poor, whilst this FALAKSÎNÔS (sic), who is a Jew, is exceedingly rich?" And his companion answered and said unto him, "O my brother, know that the possessions of this world are nothing before God. For if He had power over them, He would not give them to the worshippers of idols, and to whoremongers, and to thieves, and to murderers. The prophets were poor men and lived in tribulation, and also the Apostles, and our Lord saith, 'The poor are My brethren.'" And Satan, the hater of good things, would not permit that man to receive any of these words, but he stirred him up, and he went to that Jew FALAKSÎNÔS, and he asked him [fol. 141*b* 1] and said unto him, "Let me be thy servant." And the Jew answered and said unto him, "It is not convenient to me for thee to serve me. I only want a servant who believeth my Faith, and who is my own man. If thou dost want alms, I will give thee money, and [then] depart." And that wretched man answered and said unto him, "Take me into thy house, and I will do whatsoever thou commandest me." And the Jew FALAKSÎNÔS answered and said unto him, "Wait until I take counsel with my teacher." And the Jew departed and he told his teacher how the man was a Christian. And his teacher said unto him, "If he hath denied Christ his Messiah, take him and circumcise him." And the Jew returned, and told the Christian what his teacher had said to him, and the wretched man accepted this condition, and the Jew took him and carried him to their synagogue. And the chief of the Jews questioned that wretched Christian before all the Jews, and he said unto him, "Is it true that thou wishest to deny thy Messiah, and become a Jew?" And the Christian said unto him, "Yea"; and that debased and contemptible man denied our Lord Jesus Christ, our God, before the Jews. Thus to poverty in money he added poverty in Faith. And the chief of the Jews commanded them to make for him a cross of wood, and they made one for him as the chief of the Jews commanded, and they gave him a reed, on the top of which was a sponge full of vinegar, and a spear. And he said unto the Christian, "Spit upon this cross." And he offered to him the vinegar and said, "Pierce [the cross] with this spear, [saying,] 'I have pierced Thee, O Christ.'" And that debased man took the cross and the spear from them [fol. 141*b* 2] and did as he commanded him. And when he pierced the honourable cross with his cursed hand, much blood and water flowed forth, and ran down on the ground, and it continued to flow for a long time. And straightway that apostate fell down and died, and dried up like a stone. And great fear fell upon all those Jews, and they cried out, saying, "One is the Lord God of the Christians, and we believe on Him." And then the chief of the Jews took some of that blood, and made a sign therewith over the eyes of a girl who was blind, and she saw straightway. And that Jew and all the men of his house believed, and very many of the [other] Jews believed. And then one went and told Abbâ THEOPHILUS, the archbishop, what had happened, and he rose up, and took with him Abbâ CYRIL, and many of the priests, and many of the people, and went to the synagogue of the Jews. And the archbishop saw the cross with blood and water running down from it, and the saint blessed himself, and made the sign of the Cross with the blood on his forehead, and on the foreheads of all the people. And he commanded, and they took up that cross with great honour and brought it with the singing of hymns to the church, and laid it therein; and they gathered up the blood from the ground and laid it in a vessel for "blessing," and it healed the sick. And after this FALAKSÎNÔS and all the men of his house, and many other Jews, followed the archbishop, and they confessed before him [fol. 141*b* 3] our Lord Jesus Christ, Whom their fathers in times of old had crucified, and then he baptized them with Christian baptism in the Name of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost. And he associated them with him in prayer, and he administered to them the Holy Mysteries, and they departed to their houses rejoicing, and praising, and thanking God. Salutation to the conversion of the Jews.

And on this day also died DAMIATES, the martyr, who worked a miracle at the time when he, together with his servants, were stoned to death. Salutation to the great miracle of making a blind man to see, and raising up to life a dead man on his bier.

And on this day also Saint BASILICUS became a martyr. To this saint our Lord Jesus Christ appeared when he was in prison, and He said unto him, "Depart, say farewell to thy kinsfolk, behold the time of thy martyrdom hath come." [The text is corrupt here.] [fol. 142*a* 1] And he passed the night in saying farewell to his mother and to his kinsfolk. And on the following day they brought Saint BASILICUS, and tied him to two pillars, and beat him, and they made for him pegs of brass, and they fastened them to his feet like shoes so tightly that they pierced his feet, and the blood ran out on the ground; and all those who saw him wept for him. And then they tied him to a dry tree, and men struggled with each other to touch the hem of his garment, when they saw the miracles which he performed on many sick folk. And then they took him to the city of ṬERLÎNÔS in a ship, and the soldiers said unto him, "Eat, that thou mayest not die." And the blessed BASILICUS said unto them, "I am filled with heavenly food, and I do not choose [to eat] the food which perisheth." And on the following day they brought him to the governor, who said unto him, "Sacrifice to the gods." And BASILICUS said unto him, "I offer offerings of praise to the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Spirit." And then the governor commanded the soldiers to bring him into the house of his idols, and the saint stood up and prayed to God and at length fire came down from heaven, and burnt up the idols. And the governor being afraid took to flight, and went outside the city, and he was wroth and commanded the soldiers to hang him [on a tree]. And the saint prayed, and gave thanks to God, and they cut off his head, and we saw his soul with many angels who were taking it up [to heaven], and our Lord Jesus Christ called to him and said unto him, "Come, ascend, BASILICUS, for I am not a liar, and I fulfil all that I say." And thus he finished [fol. 142*a* 2] his martyrdom. Salutation to BASILICUS.

XV. NAḤASSÊ

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day Saint CHRISTINA, the daughter of RÛBÂNÔS, became a martyr. Her parents worshipped idols, and she herself offered incense to them according as her father had taught her. And one day the fear of God entered her heart, and she turned herself towards the East, and she asked Him to teach her the path of the kingdom of heaven; and the Holy Spirit taught her the Faith of the Trinity. And when her father came he said unto her, "What hath happened unto thee, O my daughter?" And she said, "I am going to live the life of Christ." And her father was dismayed, and he said unto her, "What hath changed thy heart?" And she said unto him, "I am instructed by the God of heaven"; and then her father departed, being very sad and sorrowful. And Saint CHRISTINA rose up, and prayed to God, and straightway the angel of God came unto her, and he said unto her, "Be strong, for thou shalt be tortured by three governors." And then the angel of God sealed her with the seal of the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, and he gave her the Holy Mysteries. And [she] went [fol. 142*a* 3] into the house of the idols, and broke the idols in pieces, and when her father saw her he commanded them to beat his daughter, until there went forth from her body honey instead of blood. And they also laid her upon an iron bed, and they lighted a fire under her, but the fire did not harm her and it consumed ten thousand pagans [who were there]. And then her father commanded his servants to cast her adrift on the sea on a raft. When she had prayed, our Lord Jesus Christ came with His angels, and baptized her, and MICHAEL gave her, on a trident of fire, the Body and Blood of Christ, and cleansed her from the uncleanness of idols. And that night RÛBÂNÔS her father died. And another governor, whose name was DIOS, came, and he commanded the soldiers to bring Saint CHRISTINA, and to hang her on a tree, and to beat her, and to light a fire under her; and when the women saw her stripped naked they cursed the governor, and he cut off their heads with a sword. And CHRISTINA they cast into the prison house. And when the people saw her three thousand of them believed, and the wicked DIOS died. And there came a third governor, whose name was JULIUS, and he seized Saint CHRISTINA, and forced her to sacrifice to the gods, and when she cursed him he cast her into a vessel filled with boiling pitch, and lead, and wax, but this did not harm her. And he also commanded the soldiers to cast her to the serpents, but they licked the dust at her feet, and bit the keeper of the serpents, who died. And they also slit open and cut her breasts, and cut out her tongue, and she took the piece of her tongue which was cut off, and cast it into the eyes [fol. 142*b* 1] of the governor, and blinded him. And he was filled with wrath, and commanded the soldiers to cast her to the serpents; and one bit her in her heart, and one in her side, and thus she died by the Will of God; and innumerable miracles and wonders were made manifest at her grave. Salutation to CHRISTINA, whom God baptized. Salutation to the three thousand companions of CHRISTINA who were martyred.

Salutation to God Who helped the Apostles to be present at the burial of the Virgin.

And on this day also died Saint MARÎNÂ. This saint was the daughter of a man who was very rich indeed, and he was a Christian; and the name of her mother was MARY. And MARÎNÂ'S mother died when she was a little girl, and her father brought her up with good teaching until she became a woman, and then he wanted to give her in marriage, and to go himself and become a monk [fol. 142*b* 2] in one of the monasteries of the desert of SCETE. And she said unto her father, "Why wouldst thou save thine own soul, and destroy mine?" And he answered and said unto her, "What shall I do with thee, seeing that thou art a woman?" And she said unto him, "O my father, I will take off my woman's dress, and will put on the garb of a man"; and she rose up straightway, and shaved off the hair of her head and put on the garb of a man. And when her father saw the strength of her will, and the earnestness wherewith she fought to carry out her will, he gave all his possessions to the poor and needy, keeping only a very little for himself, and he changed his daughter's name from MARÎNÂ to 'ANBÂ MARÎNÂ; and then he took her with him and carried her to the desert of SCETE. And he went into a certain monastery, and dwelt in a cave with his daughter for ten years, fighting the spiritual fight, and then her father, who was an old man, died; and Saint 'ANBÂ MARÎNÂ was left by herself, and she doubled her fasting, and prayers, and vigil. And the abbot sent the saint, together with three monks, to the city on certain business of the monastery, and he did not know that she was a woman, but by reason of the low sound of her voice, which was due to her manifold ascetic labours, he thought that she was a young man. And having departed with the monks, she and they lodged in a guest house. And that same night there came one of the king's soldiers and lodged in that guest house, and he saw the daughter of the master of the house, and he destroyed her virginity, and he said unto her, "When thy father shall say unto thee, 'What hath happened unto thee?' do thou say unto him, 'It is the young monk 'ANBÂ MARÎNÂ who hath destroyed my virginity.'" And when she had conceived, and her father knew [fol. 142*b* 3] that she had done so, he asked her saying, "What hath happened unto thee, O my daughter? Who hath destroyed thy virginity?" And she answered and said unto him, "It is ANBÂ MARÎNÂ who hath destroyed my virginity." And her father rose up, and went to the monastery and began to curse the monks. And when the abbot heard him he asked him, saying, "Why dost thou curse the monks, and dost not fear God?" And the man told him what had happened to his daughter, and he said unto him, "ANBÂ MARÎNÂ the monk is he who hath destroyed the virginity of my daughter." And when the abbot heard this, he asked him questions, and the man answered believing that what he said was true. And the abbot asked the master of the guest house, and said unto him, "Hide this matter, and do not bring disgrace upon the monks in the eyes of the laity." And then the abbot summoned 'ANBÂ MARÎNÂ the monk, and rebuked him, and cursed him, and Saint 'ANBÂ MARÎNÂ did not know why the abbot cursed her. And when she knew what had happened, she wept and bowed down at the feet of the abbot, and she besought him, saying, "I am young, I have sinned, forgive me my sin"; and the abbot was furious with her, and cast her out from the monastery. And she sat outside the door of the monastery until the daughter of the master of the guest house had brought forth her child; and the parents of the girl took the child, and brought it to 'ANBÂ MARÎNÂ and set it down by her. And she took the child and went over to some shepherds who were pasturing cattle and sheep, and she begged from them, and they gave her milk, and she made the child drink it. And she increased her fasting, and prayers, and spiritual fight, and she lived outside the gate of the monastery for three years. Then [fol. 143*a* 1] the monks gathered together, and asked the abbot to have mercy upon 'ANBÂ MARÎNÂ, and to bring her into the monastery; and he brought her in, and having laid heavy penalties upon her, she mingled with the monks. And the saint used to perform very hard labours, and she boiled the lentils, and cleaned the cells, and took up the dust and ashes and carried them away and cast them outside the monastery, and fetched water; and she gave the boy to drink, and he grew up and became a monk. And when four (?) days were fulfilled for Saint 'ANBÂ MARÎNÂ in that monastery, she was sick for three days, and then died in peace. And when the abbot knew that 'ANBÂ MARÎNÂ was dead, he commanded the monks to blow a trumpet before they buried her. And when they removed her clothing, and found that she was a woman, all the monks cried out, saying, "God have mercy upon us"; and they marvelled exceedingly and glorified God, and informed the abbot what had happened. And the abbot came and looked upon her and marvelled, and he wept because of what he had done to her. And then he sent and had the master of the guest house brought, and told him that 'ANBÂ MARÎNÂ was a woman, and he took him in, and the master of the guest house saw and wondered; then the abbot prayed over her and they wrapped her up, weeping, and singing psalms and hymns; and when they had prayed for her blessing they buried her. Behold now, see what happened. God commanded a certain Satan, and he took the daughter of the master of the guest house, and the young man who had destroyed her virginity, and he tormented them until he brought them to her grave, where they confessed their sin before all the people. [fol. 143*a* 2] And innumerable miracles and wonders were made manifest at her grave. Salutation to MARÎNÂ.

And on this day also Saint LAURENTIUS became a martyr in the days of DECIUS CAESAR. This saint was a man in whom great confidence was placed, and he was appointed an archdeacon, and he had charge of the revenues of the archbishop. And when the emperor had killed the archbishop because of his Christian Faith, he commanded his soldiers to bring Saint LAURENTIUS before him, and when they had brought him, they took him into the prison house. And the saint found there a blind man, and he said unto him, "Wilt thou believe in the Son of the Living God? And wilt thou be baptized in His Name, so that thine eyes may be opened?" And the blind man said unto him, "Yes, my lord." Then the saint prayed over some water in the Name of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Spirit, and washed his eyes therewith, and his eyes were opened, and he cried out with a loud voice, saying, "Blessed be our Lord Jesus Christ Who hath given light to mine eyes, through the prayer of His servant LAURENTIUS." And when the emperor heard this, he commanded his soldiers to bring Saint LAURENTIUS before him, and he urged him to bow down to the idols; and when he refused to do so they broke his teeth with a stone, and tore off his garments, and laid him upon an iron bed, and kept a fire burning under him until his body melted. And the saint continued [fol. 143*a* 3] to pray to his God until he delivered up his soul into the hand of God, and the angels came to meet it, saying, "Hallelujah," and they brought it into the heavenly Jerusalem. Salutation to LAURENTIUS.

XVI. NAḤASSÊ

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day took place the ASCENSION of the body of our Lady MARY, the God-bearer, into heaven. After her death the Apostles continued to be sad and sorrowful, because of her separation from them, and because they were left orphans by her; for our Lord had given them the hope that they would see her in the flesh. Whilst JOHN the evangelist was preaching in the country of Asia, on the sixteenth day of the month of Naḥassê, he was caught up in the spirit to the Garden of Delight, and he saw our Lord Jesus Christ sitting by the Tree of Life, where was the body of our Lady MARY, and He commanded His Seven Angels to summon her from earth. And they said unto her, "God, our Lord Jesus Christ, commandeth that the [fol. 143*b* 1] body of His pure mother shall go forth." And straightway the body of our Lady MARY went forth from the grave at the foot of the Tree of Life, and our Lord Jesus Christ comforted her, and He said unto her, "Come to Me, O My beloved mother, that thou mayest ascend to the kingdom of heaven, to the joy which is everlasting." And straightway all the trees of the Garden bowed their heads, and the angels and archangels took her up, and the righteous bowed low to her.

And DAVID, the prophet, sang a hymn of praise, saying, "And the Queen shall stand at Thy right hand, and her apparel shall be of fine needlework with gold woven through it" (Psalm xlv, 9). And she sat down at the right hand of the Son of God, with great glory, and she went up into the heavens sitting upon the chariot of the Cherubim. And JOHN the evangelist was blessed by her, and he bowed low before her, and he turned and came down from heaven, and found the Apostles gathered together and sorrowing for the body of our holy Lady, MARY the Virgin. And JOHN told them what he had seen, and how they had taken the body of our Lady MARY up into heaven, with great joy, and praise, and songs, and hymns. And when the Apostles heard this they were exceedingly sad and sorrowful because they had neither heard nor seen what JOHN had heard and seen. And whilst the Apostles were sorrowing behold our Lord Jesus Christ appeared unto them, and said unto them, "Peace be unto you, O My children! Why are ye sad about the body of My mother MARY? Behold, I shall shew her to you, and [fol. 143*b* 2] your hearts shall rejoice"; and having said these words He went up into heaven with great glory. And the Apostles continued [to wait] there for a full year. And on the first day of Naḥassê JOHN said unto the Apostles, "Come, let us fast for two weeks, and let us entreat God, and make supplication unto Him, that He will consider us worthy and will shew unto us the body of our holy Lady, the Virgin MARY, sitting on the right hand of her beloved Son, that we may rejoice in her." And they fasted as JOHN had said unto them, and it came to pass that when the sixteenth day of Naḥassê had come, as it were to-day, our Lord Jesus Christ caught all the Apostles up to heaven, and they saw in her flesh our holy Lady, the Virgin MARY, sitting on the right hand of her beloved Son and God in great glory. And she stretched out her hands, and blessed each one of the Apostles, and the souls of the Disciples rejoiced exceedingly. And our Lord Jesus Christ served as priest in His holy Body, and STEPHEN the archdeacon ministered with Him, and JOHN with Him, saying, "Stand up in fear"; and all the Apostles stood up around the altar. And there was great joy at that time, the like whereof before never was. And when our Lord had finished, He gave them the Holy Mysteries. And then [MARY] went up before them sitting upon the chariot of the Cherubim. And our Lord Jesus Christ said unto our Lady MARY, "Tell thy children, the Apostles, to preach in all the world the commemoration of thy Ascension into heaven," as it were on [fol. 143*b* 3] this day. "Whosoever shall celebrate thy commemoration, I will destroy his sins, and he shall never see the fire at all, for mercy shall find every soul who shall take heed and shall receive the Holy Mysteries on this day, which is the day of thy Ascension into heaven." And our Lady MARY said unto Him, "Behold, my sons, behold, they have seen with their eyes, and they have heard with their ears, and they have received with their hands, and they shall see other wonders greater than these"; and as the Virgin was saying these words she gave the salutation of "Peace" to the Apostles, and they returned to the Mount of Olives. And it is meet for us, O beloved brethren, to celebrate the commemoration of the Ascension of our Lady MARY into heaven with joy and gladness, so that she may make intercession for us, at all times, with her beloved Son, our Lord Jesus Christ. Salutation to the ASCENSION OF MARY into heaven, and to MARY as the tree of knowledge, and to her body.

[fol. 144*a* 1] And on this day also took place the translation of the body of Saint GEORGE, the chief of the martyrs, from the country of Persia to the church of Lydda, with great splendour. The translation of his body took place at the same time as the translation of the body of our Lady MARY, and therefore those who know how to love her, paint his picture with her picture, so that it may be a port of salvation for those who pray in his name. Salutation to GEORGE.

And on this day also GÊGÂR, governor of Syria, [became a martyr]; and this was the reason for his martyrdom. When our Lord was with His mother MARY in the mountains of LÎBÂNÔS, and GÊGÂR heard that HEROD wanted to seize them and kill them, he sent horsemen to them to bring them away from the mountains. And because of this HEROD seized him, and tortured him with every kind of torture, and he cut off all his limbs. And then our Lord Jesus Christ appeared unto him, and gave him a promise concerning everyone who should call upon his name, and celebrate his commemoration, and write the history of his strife. And then the soldiers cut off the head of GÊGÂR, and he was crowned with three crowns. [fol. 144*a* 2] Salutation to GÊGÂR, the governor of the martyrs.

XVII. NAḤASSÊ

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day 'ENṬÂWÔS (ENTAEUS), the 'AMÔRÂWÎ, became a martyr. Originally this saint was a wicked man, and knew not Christ, and he devoted all his toil and thought to heaping up money. And having arrived in the city of Damascus, he went into the church of Saint THEODORE, the man from the East, whilst the congregation were assembled there, now it was the day of their festival, and having entered the church, he set fire to the furniture thereof, and broke the cross. And when he went up into the upper part of the church, he saw with his own eyes fire coming down from heaven in the form of arrows, which transfixed all his soldiers, and one of the arrows pierced his right eye, and he suffered great agony, and the sweat dropped from him. And he cried out from the depth of his heart, and, shedding tears, said, "I believe in Thee, Jesus Christ, Son of the Living God, the God of Saint THEODORE, and in the Holy Trinity"; and he pledged himself never again to worship any other [god]. Now the Christians, who were celebrating the Offering, did not know what had happened, and when they heard they marvelled, and their Faith was increased. And when Saint 'ENṬÂWÔS (ENTAEUS) had gone to the bishop, whose name was ELIAS, he told him everything that had happened, and he asked him to baptize him with Christian baptism. And when the bishop prayed over the water in the vessel for baptism, [fol. 144*a* 3] a pillar of light, like unto the rainbow, came down, and all the people saw it. And Saint 'ENṬÂWÔS (ENTAEUS) and those who were with him, both Jews and pagans, sixteen hundred and ninety-eight in number, were baptized, and received the Body and Blood of Christ. And Saint 'ENṬÂWÔS (ENTAEUS) said, as he marvelled at this, "I saw in a dream a shining Lady, and she took me by the hand and led me to the altar, and she brought me near with her hand. And then I went to Jerusalem and I received the Body of Christ. And again I saw on the altar a White Lamb, and having been slain with the knife (?) of the cross, its blood ran into the cup. And when I had partaken of the Body of Christ, the Body became pure bread, and His Blood became wine." And then, when he was departing from Damascus, the people thereof seized him, and took him to the king. And when the king knew that he was strong in the Faith of Christ, he commanded his soldiers to beat his mouth with clubs (?) until his teeth were broken, and his blood filled his mouth. And then they tied him up in strips of hide for several days, without water and food, and they took him out from them and cast him into a furnace, which was heated with pitch, and sulphur, and bitumen, and fat, and there came forth therefrom a sweet and pleasant odour. And when the soldiers looked at him they found him standing up in the middle of the fire praying, and they took him to the king. And the king said unto him, "Where didst thou learn the power of magic?" And the saint said unto him, "I know nothing of magic, but [I know] that the might of my Lord Jesus Christ hath put thee to shame." [fol. 144*b* 1] And being filled with wrath, the king commanded the soldiers to cut off his head with the sword. And when Saint 'ENṬÂWÔS (ENTAEUS) stood up facing the East, he stretched out his hands, and committed his soul to God; and as he was praying, a voice came from heaven, saying, "Come, My servant, in peace, so that thou mayest rest with GEORGE and STEPHEN." And when he had finished his prayer the soldiers cut off his head with the sword, and having finished his martyrdom innumerable signs and wonders were made manifest through his body. Salutation to 'ENṬÂWÔS (ENTAEUS).

And on this day also 'AKRÂṬES, the brother of ANTAEUS, became a martyr. Salutation to 'AKRÂṬES.

And on this day also Saint JAMES, who was from a little city the name of which is MANÛG, on the borders of ABÛS, in Lower Egypt, [fol. 144*b* 2] became a martyr. The parents of this saint were Christians, and fearers of God, and they had begotten three daughters before they begot him. And when they were grown up a little, they committed them to a nunnery to be taught, and brought up, in the fear of God, and they learned many of the Books of the Church and of the Old and New Testaments. And when their parents wished to bring them back from the nunnery, the maidens did not wish to return, but they dedicated themselves as the brides of Christ; and their parents sorrowed because of their separation from them, but God consoled them by means of this Saint JAMES, and they rejoiced in him when he was born to them. And when his days were six years, they sent him to the city of 'AWĔSÛ, to school, and he studied learning of every kind, and was perfect in every branch of knowledge; and his father deputed him to take charge of his money and possessions, and his herds and flocks. And there lived with his father a certain old shepherd of sheep, and he used to perform many works of excellence, and he used to go down into a well of water during the days of winter and stand up therein the whole night praying; and Saint JAMES used to do even as did the old shepherd of sheep, and he continued to do so for many days. And Satan having brought tribulation upon the Christians, many of them became martyrs. And the old man handed over the sheep to the father of Saint JAMES, and when Saint JAMES departed to become a martyr, the father of Saint JAMES asked the shepherd to go with him. [fol. 144*b* 3] And he left [him] with that old man, and [told him] to return. And when he had gone with him, he found that the governor was in Upper Egypt, passing judgement upon JUSTUS, the king's son, who had forsaken his kingdom and become a martyr. And the old man said unto JAMES, "Observe, O my son, if this king of Egypt hath rejected a kingdom of this world, and followed Christ, and hath separated himself from his wife and family, how very much should we, who are poor folk, be consoled. O my son, be not sorrowful because of thy separation from thy parents." And then the old man approached the governor, and confessed the Name of our Lord Jesus Christ before him, and cursed his gods. And the governor condemned the old man, and cut off his head with the sword speedily, and he became a martyr. And he tortured Saint JAMES very severely, and he beat him with whips made of cords, and then he made [an iron] red-hot and laid it on his belly. And Saint JAMES lifted up his eyes to Christ, and prayed, saying, "O my Lord Jesus, help me under this tribulation"; and the Lord delivered him from the torture and raised him up whole and uninjured. And then the governor put him in a sack, and cast him into the river, and the angel of the Lord raised him up from the river whole and uninjured. And the saint stood up before the governor, and cursed him and his unclean gods; and the governor was wroth with him and sent him to the governor of FARMÂ, who tortured him very severely. They cut out his tongue, and tore out his eyes and his eyelids, and they tortured him [fol. 145*a* 1] on the wheel, and they made slits in every part of his body, and at length all his limbs were crushed, and his blood flowed down on the ground like water; and SÛRÎÊL, the angel of God, came down and delivered him, and healed his wounds. And when the governor was tired of torturing him, he commanded the soldiers to cut off his head with the sword, [and they did so,] and he received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens. And when he was in the city of FARMÂ there were two other men who became martyrs with him, that is to say, ABRAHAM and JOHN, who were of the men of the city of GAMNÛDÎ. Salutation to JAMES, who was learned from his youth. Salutation to the aged shepherd who followed the Law of God.

XVIII. Naḥassê

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died the holy father, Abbâ ALEXANDER, Archbishop of the city of Alexandria. This holy father was an honourable man, and much tribulation came upon him through the people of ARIUS. And in his days Abbâ ATHANASIUS renewed the excommunication [fol. 145*a* 2] of ARIUS, and he removed him, and expelled his followers, from the churches of the city of Alexandria. And ARIUS departed to the city of Constantinia, and he went unto the Emperor CONSTANTINE, the son of CONSTANTINE the Just, and he made accusations against ATHANASIUS to him. And when he found no rest with him, ARIUS asked the emperor to command this Father ALEXANDER to receive him with his priests. And the emperor sent messengers to this father, and had him brought, and he said unto him, "ATHANASIUS transgressed our command, and would not receive ARIUS; thou knowest that we appointed thee, and thou must not transgress our command. Make my heart glad, and release ARIUS from thy ban." And Saint Abbâ ALEXANDER answered and said unto him, "The Church will not receive ARIUS, because he doth not worship the Holy Trinity"; and the emperor said unto him, "But he confessed his belief in the Holy Trinity before me." And ALEXANDER answered and said unto him, "If he believeth in the Holy Trinity and if he believeth that the Son is equal with the Father in His Godhead, let him write this with his hand." And the emperor had ARIUS brought, and he said unto him, "Write with thy hand the True Faith," and he wrote with his hand the True Faith, although he did not believe it in his heart, and then he took an oath on the Holy Gospels that this was the True Faith, but he swore falsely. And the emperor said unto this Father ALEXANDER, "There is now no pretext to be found against him since he hath written the True [fol. 145*a* 3] Faith with his own hand, and taken an oath on the Holy Gospels." And Abbâ ALEXANDER said unto the emperor, "ATHANASIUS renewed the proclamation of the excommunication of ARIUS, which was written by the hand of thy Father CONSTANTINE, and was written also by the hands of the Three Hundred and Eighteen [Bishops] of the True Faith, and he expelled him and all his people from the city of Alexandria. But wait, at my request, for one week, and if nothing happeneth to him during this week, then his profession of the Faith is sincere, and his oath is righteous, and I will receive him, and will let him mix with the priests, and he shall take part with them in the service of the Sanctuary." And the emperor answered and said unto him, "Know thou that I will not wait at thy request seven days. If thou wilt not receive him I will levy a very heavy tax upon the churches." And after this Father ALEXANDER went out from the emperor's presence, and departed to his own house, and he fasted there the whole week, and he besought God to deliver ARIUS from his sin. And when the week was expired, ARIUS arrayed himself in fine apparel, and went into the church, and sat down in front of the altar with the priests. Then this Father ALEXANDER entered, being sad and sorrowful, and not knowing what to do. And he stood up and began [fol. 145*b* 1] the service of the Offering. And the bowels of ARIUS were moved, and he went to answer the call of nature, and everything which was in his body flowed away from beneath him, and he was left empty. And when ARIUS delayed in returning, the people searched for him and enquired where he was, and they found him dead in the latrine; and they told this father what had happened, and he praised Christ Who had not cast away the Church. And the emperor marvelled about this, and knew that ARIUS had sworn an oath falsely, and had written a lie with his own hand; and then the emperor knew the holiness of this father, and his righteousness, and orthodoxy, and he knew that ARIUS was an infidel. And the emperor praised the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost, and confessed that their Godhead is One. And this father, having followed a good course, and arrived at a good old age, departed to God, Whom he loved, and received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens. Salutation to Abbâ ALEXANDER.

Salutation to JUSTINUS, who dwelt on the top of a mountain, and learned by heart the Psalms, [fol. 145*b* 2] and the Books of the Prophets and Apostles.

XIX. NAḤASSÊ

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day took place the translation of the body of Saint Abbâ MACARIUS the Great to the desert of SCETE. After his death certain men came from the city of SĔLÂWÎR and stole the body of the saint, and built a church over it in their city; and it remained there until the Muslims ruled over the city, and then the men of SĔLÂWÎR removed it to another city. And they built a church over him in their country, and he remained therein until the days of Abbâ MICHAEL the archbishop, that is to say for a period of four hundred and forty years. When Abbâ MICHAEL was appointed, he became steward (or, administrator) of the church of Saint Abbâ MACARIUS. And when the archbishop went up to fast the Great Fast in the monastery of Abbâ MACARIUS, he cried out, saying, "I wish that our Lord Jesus Christ would help me, and that I shall find happy days, and that the body of Saint Abbâ MACARIUS shall be among us in this monastery." And after a few days Abbâ MICHAEL, the steward of the church, and certain aged monks with him, departed on some business of the monastery, and a spiritual thought moved itself in their minds. And they came to the place wherein was the body of Saint Abbâ MACARIUS [fol. 145*b* 3] that they might take him up, and the governor and all the men of the city gathered together with staves and swords, and prevented them from taking up the body of the saint; and the aged monks fell asleep being very sad and sorry in their hearts. And that night Abbâ MACARIUS appeared to the governor and said unto him, "Why dost thou prevent me from departing to my sons? Let me go with them to my own place, and prevent them not from carrying me away with them." And when the morning was come, the governor rose up, and he was in fear and trembling, and he called the aged monks, and delivered over to them the body of Abbâ MACARIUS, and they received him with great joy. And they placed the body in a ship, and when they arrived in the city of TARNÛṬ, there were many people with them from every city, who had come to bid the body of Abbâ MACARIUS farewell. And the aged monks lodged there that night, and they prayed, and they celebrated the Offering, and received the Holy Mysteries, and then they took up MACARIUS and carried him to the desert. And as they were going along, they came to a place in the desert which was half way, and they wished to rest for a little because of [their] fatigue. And Abbâ MICHAEL said unto them, "As God Who holdeth the place of the Cherubim in His hand liveth, we will not rest until God revealeth unto us and sheweth unto us, [the place wherein] Saint Abbâ MACARIUS shall rest." And when the camel which was carrying the body of Abbâ MACARIUS came to that place, he knelt down, and would not rise up again, and he began to turn his head to this side and to that, and to lick the box [fol. 146*a* 1] wherein was the body of Saint MACARIUS. And the aged monks knew that that was the place where the saint was to rest, and they marvelled exceedingly, and glorified God greatly; and that place is well known to this day. And when they came to the monastery, all the monks went out and received him with great honour, and with singing and with hymns, and with the Gospel, and with the Cross; and they had lighted lamps with them. And they carried him on their heads, and they bore him along singing as they went, until they brought him into the church, with great honour; and God performed many miracles that day. Salutation to the translation of the body of Abbâ MACARIUS. Salutation to the children of MACARIUS.

Salutation to FÎNḤANES (PHINEHAS).

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

[fol. 146*a* 2] On this day died Abbâ SALÂMÂ the interpreter, and on this day also is commemorated Saint ḤÎZÂWÎ (or, ḤÎZÂḴÛ). Salutation to SALÂMÂ.

Salutation to JAMES, the Pure.

And on this day also died the SEVEN holy young men of the city of Ephesus. And it came to pass that in the days of the wicked Emperor DECIUS these seven young men were in his army, and he appointed them to offices in his government. And when he established the worship of idols, certain men made accusations against these saints to him, and he seized them and shut them up in prison. But as he wanted to go to another place he released them from their bonds and sent them away until he returned, thinking within himself that they would turn from their good counsel. And when the emperor had gone out of the city, these saints refused to do the work of the soldiers and would not worship unclean [fol. 146*a* 3] idols, and then they went to a cave in the mountain, and closed up the mouth thereof and went to sleep inside it. And they had among them silver moneys on which was stamped the name of the Emperor DECIUS. And one after another of them used to go into the city every day in the early morning, and buy food for them. One day one of them heard a rumour of the coming of the Emperor DECIUS; and when the news reached them that the Emperor DECIUS had come to the city of Ephesus, they closed the doors of the cave on themselves, and went to sleep. And a certain believing soldier knew the place where they were, and he used to wait for them to come into the city, but after the arrival of the emperor they did not come. And the soldier rose up and departed and came to that cave, and he found that they had shut the doors of the cave from the inside, and he thought that they were dead. And he took a tablet of brass, and wrote upon it the story of their strife, and of what had happened to them, and he laid that tablet in a cavity in the wall of the cave. And sorrow laid hold upon the saints, and they slept by the commandment of God for three hundred and seventy-two years. And DECIUS died, and many other emperors reigned after him, and at length came the days of the Emperor THEODOSIUS. And it came to pass in the thirty-eighth year of his reign, that certain men discussed among themselves the words of those who said, "There is no resurrection of the dead," and many people followed them. And God wished [fol. 146*b* 1] to reveal the truth, and to make men to be certain that the resurrection of the dead would assuredly take place, and He woke up those seven holy young men. And they gave to one of their number some of the moneys which they had, and they commanded him to go and buy them food to eat, and he heard [from] them the story of the wicked Emperor DECIUS. And when he came into the city, the manner thereof appeared to him to be changed, and he saw crosses on the gates of the city and on the walls thereof, and he heard the people taking oaths in the Name of our Lord Jesus Christ. And he asked one of them, saying, "Is not this the city of Ephesus?" And the man answered and said unto him, "Yea." And he took out the silver moneys which he had and gave to a certain merchant in the market, in order to buy from him food to eat; and when the merchant saw the silver money, he did not find it to be the silver money with which one could buy in those days; for he found the name of DECIUS, the wicked emperor, stamped upon it. And the merchant seized him and bound him, and he said unto him, "Thou art a seeker after ancient treasure, and behold this silver money which is on thee is a proof of it." And whilst they were quarrelling together, many men gathered round about them, and they asked him, saying, "Whence comest thou?" And he answered and said unto them, "I belong to this city." And they said unto him, "Whom dost thou know among the men of this city?" And he said unto them, "So and so." And of those men [fol. 146*b* 2] whom he said he knew, there was not one of them left alive; and they dragged him away, and were wroth with him. And the story of the young man was heard by the bishop, Abbâ THEODORE, and by the Emperor THEODOSIUS, who had that man of the Seven brought before him. And the emperor and the bishop asked him, saying, "Tell us what hath happened unto thee, and from what country thou comest." And he answered and said unto them, "We were seven men, and we belonged to the army of the wicked Emperor DECIUS. And when he departed to another place we went out of the city of Ephesus, and came into a cave, and we closed up the mouth of the cave. And we lay down and have slept there until now. And behold my six companions are lying in the cave." And the emperor and the bishop went forth, and all the people with them, and they came to the cave, and they found the saints lying there, and the written and engraved tablet, in the cave. And they read the tablet, on which it was said that it had been engraved in the days of the wicked DECIUS, that is to say, three hundred and seventy-two years before. And when the emperor, and the bishop, and all the people saw this, they marvelled exceedingly, and they glorified God greatly; and those who did not believe in the resurrection of the dead believed forthwith when they saw this miracle. And when the seven young men had been questioned, and they had made known everything which had happened to them, they lay down again, and delivered up their souls into the hand of God. And the emperor made gold coffins for them, [fol. 146*b* 3] and he wrapped them in silk cloths and laid them in the gold coffins, and signs and wonders took place through their bodies. Now their names were these: MAXIMANUS, TÂMÛKÎGRÔS, MARDIMUS, JOHN, CONSTANTINE, ANTONIUS, and DIONYSIUS. Salutation to the SEVEN BRETHREN.

XXI. NAḤASSÊ

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day is celebrated a festival commemorating our Lady MARY, the God-bearer, who became the salvation of the world, and who maketh intercession for us at all times, and for all those who celebrate her commemoration. Salutation to thee, O MARY.

And on this day also died Saint IRENE, which is being interpreted, [fol. 147*a* 1] "Peace." This saint was the daughter of King LUCIANUS, and he built for her a palace, and he placed in the walls eight windows, and round about it were twelve halls. And he made for her a table of gold, and vessels of gold and silver, and he commanded a certain aged man to teach her;

and then he settled her in the palace, with three handmaidens to render her service, and closed the doors of the palace upon her. And the old teacher used to instruct her from outside; and her days at that time were seven years. And one day whilst she was sitting at table, she saw a dove with an olive leaf in her mouth, and she laid it upon the table, and then there came an eagle with a crown, which he laid upon the table, and a raven came with a serpent, which he laid upon the table; and she was frightened at this sight, and she told her teacher about it. And he answered and said unto her, "The dove is the teaching of the Law, and the olive leaf is Christian baptism; the eagle is the conqueror, and the crown is the works of the righteous; the raven is a king, and the serpent is tribulation." And her teacher said unto her, "Thou must fight the fight for the Name of Christ." And her father the king came to visit her, and he said unto her, "O my daughter, I wish to marry thee to one of the great nobles"; and she asked him, saying, "O my father, wait three days, until I can take counsel about it with [fol. 147*a* 2] my soul." And when her father had departed from her, she shaved off her hair, and stood up before the altar of the idols which were in the palace, and asked them to advise her about marriage; but they made no response whatsoever to her. And the saint lifted up her eyes to heaven, and said, "O God of the Christians have mercy upon me according to Thy good pleasure." And the angel of God came to her and said unto her, "Behold, on the morrow there shall come to this city one of the disciples of PAUL the apostle, and he shall baptize thee with Christian baptism"; and on the following day God sent unto her one of the disciples of the apostle, and he baptized her with Christian baptism. And after three days her father and her mother came to her, according to their promise, and she said unto them, "I am a Christian. I believe on my Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of the Living God; the Creator of heaven and earth." And her father was wroth with her, and he had her brought out into the midst of the city, and he commanded his servants to bind her with cords, and to throw her in the road, and to make horses trample upon her; and they did to her as he commanded, but no harm came to her. And when her parents saw this, they believed on our Lord Jesus Christ and marvelled exceedingly, and they forsook their kingdom, and departed to their abode and dwelt there. And when the king, who lived near their country, heard the story of them, and what had happened to them, he came to that city, and [fol. 147*a* 3] said unto them, "Return to your kingdom," but they did not wish to do so; now that king ruled the whole country. And he tortured Saint IRENE, and he set starving lions and serpents to attack her, but no evil whatsoever happened to her. Then he sawed her with a saw, and he hung a heavy stone about her neck, but our Lord Jesus delivered her, and raised her up uninjured from every torture. And her parents called the priest who had baptized her, and he baptized them with Christian baptism, and three hundred of their servants, and many of their kinsfolk and people of the city. And then NUMERIANUS the king heard the report of her, and he sent and had her brought to him, and he took her to the city of ḲALÂNÎ, where he tortured her severely, and shut her up in a brass bull, but God smashed the brass bull, and brought her out therefrom. And NUMERIANUS the king died, and King SÂBÔR reigned in his stead. And he heard the report of Saint IRENE, and he had her brought to him, and then he speared her with the spear which was in his hand, and she delivered up her soul. And our Lord Jesus Christ raised her up from the dead. When SÂBÔR the king saw this miracle, he marvelled exceedingly, and he bowed low before her and believed on our Lord Jesus Christ, and with him were many people of the inhabitants of the city. Now the number of those who believed through her [fol. 147*b* 1] was three hundred and ten thousand...women. And the father and mother of Saint IRENE died in the palace. And the Divine power bore the saint to the city of Ephesus, where she performed many signs and wonders. For her confidence was in our Lord Jesus Christ [when she stood] before the kings of Persia, and the kings of Macedonia, and the kings of KALÂNÎKÂ and Constantinia. And then she died in great honour, and they built a beautiful church for her, and laid her body therein, and many signs and wonders took place through her body, and a great healing of the sick. Salutation to IRENE.

XXII. Naḥassê

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day [is commemorated] the great prophet MICAH, the son of ÎYÛÊL YOAK, and his father also called him "JÔRÂM." This righteous man prophesied in the days of JEHOSAPHAT, King of Judah, the son of JÔRÂM, and of the kings AHAZIAH, and KHATÔLYÂ, and God proclaimed by his mouth [fol. 147*b* 2] great things. And he prophesied concerning the Incarnation of our Lord Jesus Christ, saying, "Behold, God shall come from His place, and He shall come down and walk upon the earth." And he prophesied concerning the Nativity of our Lord Jesus Christ, in Bethlehem of Judah, saying, "And thou Bethlehem [in] the land of Ephratha, shall not be less than the kings of Judah, for from thee shall go forth a king, who shall rule my people Israel; and his going forth shall be before the creation of the world." And he prophesied concerning the destruction of the Temple of the Jews, and concerning the rising up of another Temple in its place in all the ends of the earth. And he prophesied concerning the going forth of the Gospel, saying, "The Law shall go forth from Zion, and the Voice of God from Jerusalem." And he prophesied to AHAB, the King of Israel, saying, "Thou shalt die in the battle of Edom, King of Gilead." And many years having been fulfilled to this prophet, and having reached a good old age, he departed to God, Whom he loved. And he prophesied eight hundred years before the Incarnation of our Lord Jesus Christ, and he was buried in the village the name of which is MĔRÂTÂ. Salutation to MICAH.

XXIII. Naḥassê

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

[fol. 147*b* 3] On this day three (or, thirty) thousand of our Christian brethren in the city of Alexandria became martyrs. And this took place when the wicked Emperor MARCIANUS exiled our father DIOSCURUS to the island of GÂGRÂ; and there was rebellion and great tumult in the city of Alexandria for many years. And when MARCIANUS died, and LEO reigned, the people of Rômê set over themselves a man from the city of Alexandria, whose name was ABRUTARIUS, as archbishop. He had been a priest in the city of Alexandria, and he believed in the Council of Chalcedon. Only a few of the Alexandrians accepted him, and the rest of the people received the Holy Mysteries from the priests whom our father Abbâ CYRIL and Abbâ DIOSCURUS had appointed. And when ABRUTARIUS was appointed, he formed a company of his friends who believed his words, and he excommunicated 'AWTÂKÎ (EUTYCHES), the priest, who declared that the Godhead [of Christ] was mingled in His Incarnation. And by this he wished to seduce the men of the city, and to make them at length to enter into an evil faith; and they believed his words, because they thought that our father DIOSCURUS and his company agreed with 'AWTÂKÎ (EUTYCHES) in [his] denial. Now our father DIOSCURUS excommunicated 'AWTÂKÎ (EUTYCHES), and he cursed [fol. 148*a* 1] all those who mingled the Godhead of Christ with His Incarnation. How could one turn and believe his words? Nay, the Faith of our father DIOSCURUS was like the Faith of Saints BASIL, and GREGORY, and CYRIL, who believed in the One Nature of God, the Word, Which became incarnate, and not that the Godhead changed and became flesh, and not that the flesh changed and became Godhead, but that each of them remained by Itself. And it was not right for them to say that Christ became Two Natures, and Two Persons, and Two Things after His Union, which did not destroy [His] Unity. And 'AWTÂKÎ (EUTYCHES) believed in the mingling of Nature. Our fathers excommunicated those who separate the Natures, after they had become One, and likewise they excommunicated those who mingle them after they were separated. And on the day following the Council which ABRUTARIUS had gathered together, they found ABRUTARIUS killed in his house, and his companions said that it was one of the disciples of our father Abbâ DIOSCURUS who had killed him. And he said unto them, "We are brethren. Perhaps it is one of the companions of

'AWTÂKÎ (EUTYCHES) who hath killed him, or perhaps thieves killed him in order to carry off his money." And this was true, for the Council did not assemble on account of us, nor because of us; but we agree in the excommunication of 'AWTÂKÎ (EUTYCHES). And the companions of ABRUTARIUS sent a letter to the king wherein they said, "Behold, the people have treated the government with insolence, and have behaved contemptuously towards the emperor, [fol. 148*a* 2] and have killed the archbishop whom the emperor appointed." And whilst they were gathered together because of this thing, behold our brethren assembled and appointed Abbâ TIMOTHY archbishop over them. And those wicked men sent another royal official, one 'ABRÔTÂRÎ, to the emperor, saying, "Behold they have killed ABRUTARIUS and have appointed over them an archbishop without the emperor's command." And the emperor was exceedingly angry because of these two letters, and Satan entered into him, and he sent many soldiers, and they slew of our brethren three thousand orthodox Christians, small and great, slaves and free men, and he exiled Abbâ TIMOTHY to the island of GÂGRÂ, where he lived for seven years. And if [they say] that one of the servants of Abbâ DIOSCURUS killed ABRUTARIUS, as Satan taught them, they speak falsehood. Was it meet that they should kill three thousand men instead of one man, especially as they did not kill any one of the wicked Arian heretics, who killed bishops and priests? But let everyone know that this took place through the operation of Satan. And after this shameful slaughter, the emperor knew that our brethren did not kill ABRUTARIUS, and that they did not know who did kill him. And the emperor sent and brought back TIMOTHY from the island, and he paid him great honour, and set him upon the throne of his office in the city of Alexandria. And he sat in the days of [fol. 148*a* 3] LEO for twenty-two years. Salutation to those who died by violence.

And on this day also Saint DAMIANUS became a martyr. They tortured this saint in the city of Antioch with every kind of cruel torture. When the governor was tired of torturing him, he commanded [the soldiers] to cut off his head, and they cut off his head, and the saint received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens. Salutation to DAMIANUS the martyr, the workman of Jesus.

Salutation to MARY the daughter of ABRAHAM.
[fol. 148*b* 1] Salutation to ABRAHAM, the Friend of God.

XXIV. NAḤASSÊ

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died the head of the monks and father of all the world, Abûnâ TAKLA HÂYMÂNÔT. The birthplace of this saint was ZARARÊ, in the country of SHAWÂ. His father's name was ṢÂGA ZA'AB, and his mother's name was ĔGZÎ'Ĕ KHARAYÂ. His father belonged to the family of priests who illumined Ethiopia with their Faith; his wife was barren, and they used to pray to God to give them a son. And whilst they were living thus, Satan made MATALÔMÊ governor of DÂMÔT, and he laid waste the whole of the districts of SHAWÂ, up to the border of 'AMKHÂRÂ. And all the nobles, one after the other, gave him their women, and the beautiful women whom he found during his raid he made his concubines. And in those days he came to the city of ṢĔLÂLĔSH and killed all the Christians, and ṢÂGA ZA'AB fled in fear, and fell into a pool of water, which became like a tent. And ĔGZÎ'Ĕ [fol. 148*b* 2] KHARAYÂ the soldiers seized and carried off, and they brought her to MATALÔMÊ. And when he saw her beauty he rejoiced exceedingly, and he adorned her with apparel of fine linen. Then he returned to his country, and his nobles gathered together in order to make ready for the feast of his marriage with her; and when ĔGZÎ'Ĕ KHARAYÂ heard this she made prayer to God that He would deliver her from this unclean union. And straightway MICHAEL the archangel came, and he took her up upon his wings, and brought her into the church at the time of the third hour, and as ṢÂGA ZA'AB was going out of the church he saw her standing dressed in ornamental apparel,

And he said, "Who is this woman?" and when he asked her he knew that she was his wife; and she told him everything which had happened to her from the beginning to the end. One night MICHAEL, the angel of God, appeared unto them, and told them that they should produce a son whose righteousness should be heard of in all the ends of the earth, and that the heavens and the earth would not be sufficient [to contain] one of his excellences. And after a few days this saint was conceived, on the twenty-fourth day of the month of Magâbît, and he was born on the twenty-fourth day of the month of Ṭâkhshâsh; and there was joy in the house of his father and mother. On the day when they gave him Christian baptism they called him "ZARA YOḤANNES." On the third day after he was born, he cried out, saying, "One is the Holy Father, One is the Holy Son, One is the Holy Spirit." And he grew in the Holy Spirit, and in wisdom, and he worked [fol. 148*b* 3] signs and wonders, thus: When anything which was used for food was wanting in his father's house, he would touch, with a smile, a little flour, and fill all the house therewith, and he did the same with olive oil, and honey, and fat, and wine; and he would fill the house so full that everyone who saw it, and heard of it, marvelled. And when he was seven years old his father taught him the Psalms of DAVID, and all the Books of the Church. And then he took him to the Bishop, Abbâ CYRIL, who made him a deacon and prophesied concerning him, saying, "This boy shall become a chosen vessel of God," and having received the office of deacon [he departed] to his own country. When he was a young man, he used to traverse the desert hunting wild beasts, and [one day] at noon, our Lord appeared unto him, sitting upon the wings of MICHAEL, and said unto him, "O My beloved, henceforward thou shalt not be a hunter of wild beasts, but thou shalt catch many souls in [thy] net. And thy name shall be 'TAKLA HÂYMÂNÔT,' for I have chosen thee from thy mother's womb, and I have sanctified thee like JEREMIAH the prophet, and JOHN the Baptist. And behold, I have given thee power to heal the sick, and to drive out unclean spirits in all the world"; and having said these words He disappeared, and the saint returned to his abode. And after a few days his father and his mother died, and he gave all his goods to the poor and needy, and he left all the house open, and took his staff and went forth by night, saying, "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and destroy his soul?" And then he took the rank of priest, [fol. 149*a* 1] and began to preach the Faith in all the country of SHAWÂ; and he baptized seventy thousand people in his own country. And he destroyed all the shrines of idols, and cut down the trees thereof, so that the Satans, who used to dwell in them, might take to flight. And after three years a voice cried unto him from heaven, saying, "O TAKLA HÂYMÂNÔT, rise up and go to the land of DÂMÔT, that thou mayest receive for me much spoil." And as he was journeying along the road of 'ENÂRTE'AT, he met some men, who were magicians and diviners, and their king, and they were performing acts of divination. During the violent quarrel which he had with them, they beat him with a thick iron rod, until the bones shewed through his skin, and he died; but God gave him strength to endure, and He raised him up sound and unharmed. And he remained thus for four mornings, and after he had prayed the earth swallowed up the magicians and their beasts. Passing on from that place he arrived at the country of DÂMÔT, and he destroyed the diviners. And when MÔTALAMÊ (sic), the governor, heard of him, he commanded his soldiers to bring him to him, bound with strong fetters, and he said unto him, "Why dost thou destroy my country?" And having said this to him, he commanded the soldiers to kill him, and to cast him down a precipice several times. And God gave him strength to endure, and He raised him up unharmed. And having performed signs and wonders before the governor and destroyed the soothsayers, he made the governor to believe on Christ, for he raised up before him many dead persons. Now those who were baptized with him, on that day, were in number twelve thousand and ninety-nine [fol. 149*a* 2] souls. And when the wherewithal for the administration of the Holy Mysteries was lacking MICHAEL brought down to him [some oil of] MÊRÔN from heaven, and he said unto him, "Consecrate the Tabernacle with this, and administer the Holy Mysteries to the people"; and he did as MICHAEL told him. And our father continued to teach the king the Books of the Prophets and Apostles. And when he had lived in DÂMÔT for twelve years, a voice cried to him from heaven on Easter Day, and our Lord gave him the promise that He would give the kingdom of heaven unto all those who called upon his name and celebrated his commemoration, and that He would deliver them from all tribulation and sorrow. And the voice also said unto him, "Go thou to the country of 'ANḤARÊ, to Abbâ BAṢALÔTA MÎKÂÊL," and when he had arrived there he lived with him for ten years; and he served by day with his disciples, and during the night he made innumerable bowings to the ground. And he worked the flour mill, and drew water, and cut wood for the fire ceaselessly. And besides this, he wrought many miracles, raising the dead, and healing sick folk without number. And then God said unto him, "O My beloved TAKLA HÂYMÂNÔT, go thou to the place (or, shrine) of STEPHEN Protomartyr, which is called ḤAYḴ, and there thou shalt find a holy man whose name is ÎYÂSÛS MÔA, and he will give thee the order of monkhood." And he rose up and departed, and came to the sea-coast, and passed over the sea as if he were on dry land, without wetting his feet. When he came to the holy man, he welcomed him, and gave him the apparel of the monk, [that is to say,] the tunic and the head cloth only; and he dwelt there for ten years working signs and wonders, and each [night] he made seven thousand bowings. [fol. 149*a* 3] And then God said unto him, "O My beloved TAKLA HÂYMÂNÔT, go thou to the land of TEGRÊ, and go up the mountain which is called DÂMÔ, and thou shalt find there a holy man whose name is 'YÔḤANNÎ,' and take thou from him the cap and cloak, and dwell there until I tell thee." And he dwelt there fighting the fight, having received the cap and the cloak, for twelve years. And God appeared unto him and said unto him, "Get thee out of this mountain, and travel about through the deserts of TEGRÊ and visit the monasteries and houses of the monks." And he went down from that high mountain, being exhausted by the toil thereof, and he travelled through the deserts of TEGRÊ. And having finished this he went down to Jerusalem, MICHAEL, the angel, guiding him, and when he came to the Red Sea he passed over it, according to his wont, without wetting his feet. Having crossed the sea he came to Jerusalem, and he went round and visited all the holy places. And he returned to the land of TEGRÊ and talked and mixed with all the saints; and he went down to Jerusalem a second and a third time, and wished to dwell there. And the Holy Spirit said unto him, "Go back to the land of MÛLÂDEK, for that is thy lot." And going back he visited Abbâ YÔḤANNÎ of DABRA DÂMÔ. Thence he went down and travelled on towards BÛR, and he found MADKHANÎNA 'EGZÎ'Ë, in a place the name of which is GWÔNÂGUĔNÂ, and that saint gave him the garb of the monkhood, and prophesied to him that he should become the father of all the monks of TEGRÊ, and the son of Abbâ SAMUEL of WÂLDEBBÂ, and of all the teachers who were in TEGRÊ. And when our father TAKLA HÂYMÂNÔT had gone out [fol. 149*b* 1] from TEGRÊ, he went to the place of ḤAYḴ and gave to ÎYÂSÛS MÔA the cap and the cloak. Thence having gone out and passed through all the deserts, he came to the land of SHAWÂ, and he dwelt in the desert of GĔDÂ for many days. And then he departed to the land of GĔRÂRYÂ, and he made a cell among the rocks and he went out neither by day nor by night. And his disciples were in number seventeen, and many came to him, both men and women, and they became monks and widows, and they lived in one house; but no man had knowledge of any woman, because Satan was fettered by prayer. And then he built in his cell a kind of wall to lean against, and he fixed therein sharp points, behind him, on his right hand, and on his left, so that they could pierce his body. And having stood in the cell too long, the thigh bone of one of his legs broke, and then he stood up on one foot for seven years. And our Lord Jesus Christ came unto him, with our Lady MARY, and with the prophets and apostles, and the righteous, and the martyrs, and MICHAEL and GABRIEL, and He said unto him, "O My beloved, thou dost resemble Me in My suffering, and I will make thee My equal in My kingdom. And behold, thy weakness in this world is ended, and it hath been accepted by Me. Come, that henceforth thou mayest inherit everlasting life"; and then He gave him the promise concerning those who should call upon his name, and celebrate his commemoration. And then the saint became slightly sick of the plague, and he died at a good old age, his days being ninety-nine years [fol. 149*b* 2] and eight months. And they wrapped him in cloths with reverence and praise, and buried him in his rock. Salutation to TAKLA HÂYMÂNÔT.

And on this day also died the holy father, the fighter and conqueror, the soldier and apostle of Christ, THOMAS, Bishop of the city of MAR'ÂS, the confessor. The tongues of men are incapable of describing the glory and righteousness of this saint. Beings of flesh are incapable of understanding his excellences and virtues. Originally this saint was an ascetic, and a fighter of the spiritual fight. He fasted and prayed frequently, and kept vigil by night and by day, and he gave alms in abundance to the poor and needy. And God chose him and made him Bishop of the city of MAR'ÂS, and he protected his flock like the Apostles. And when DIOCLETIAN the wicked was reigning, one of his governors came to the city of MAR'ÂS to torture the Christians. And he sent some wicked soldiers to this holy father, and they seized him and brought him to him, and they beat him, as they dragged him over the ground, and he arrived in the presence of the governor with his blood dropping on the ground. And the governor said unto him, "Deny Christ and worship the gods." And the saint answered and said unto him, "I will not worship filthy [fol. 149*b* 3] stones, I will worship only my Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of the Living God. Cursed art thou, and thy filthy idols, and cursed are those who worship them." And the governor was wroth with Saint THOMAS, and he tortured him very severely, and he beat him very cruelly, and he hung him up, and boiled pitch and poured it into his mouth and nostrils, and he tortured him for many days. Now the hearts of those deniers of Christ were like unto stones, and they did not want the saint to die quickly, so they prolonged his torture in order to frighten the multitude, and make them to deny Christ; but they were vanquished, and whilst they were weary of torturing him, he was strong in rebuking them. And they cast him into a dark place and forgot him, and he dwelt in that one place for twelve years. And each year the wicked men came to him, and tortured him, and cut off one of his limbs. And in this place they cut off his ears, and his nose, and his lips, and his hands, and his feet, and they pulled out his front teeth and his grinders, and his whole body was as black as ink. And they forgot him in that dark prison house until at length those members of his flock, who knew him, thought that he was dead, and they used to perform services of commemoration for him every year. And when they shut him up in prison, a certain believing woman saw him, and she used to come to him by night secretly, and throw in food to him through a little window. And he lived in this way until the righteous Emperor CONSTANTINE reigned, and revealed [fol. 150*a* 1] the True Faith of Christ. And he commanded his officers to release all the confessors who were shut up in prison throughout all his dominions. And that believing woman went into their houses and told the priests about Saint THOMAS, and what had happened to him, and how they had shut him up in prison for two and twenty years, and she guided them to the place where he was. And they came to him, and took him out of the prison house, and they carried him on their heads, singing as they went, until they brought him into the church and set him on the throne before the sanctuary. And all the Christians came and received a blessing from him, and they kissed [the places of] his eyelids, which had been cut off. And when the Emperor CONSTANTINE assembled the General Council of the Three Hundred and Eighteen holy Bishops in the city of Nicea, this father was present with them; and the Emperor CONSTANTINE embraced them, and received a blessing from them. And when one made known unto him the fight of this holy father, he drew nigh unto him, and bowed low before him, and he kissed all the places whereupon his limbs had been cut off, and he stroked his face and eyes. And after they had disputed with ARIUS, the apostate, and vanquished him, and had excommunicated him and cursed him, and driven him out, even as the Holy Spirit taught them, and they had proclaimed with their tongues the True Faith, and drawn up the Law and the Judicial Regulations and the Canons, this holy father Abbâ THOMAS departed to the seat of his office. And he assembled the priests and all [fol. 150*a* 2] his flock, and he proclaimed to them the True Faith, and he explained unto them what they found difficult, and he made them to understand it, and he commanded them to keep it and to wax strong therein. And after this he lived a few days, and having pleased God he died in peace; and all the days of his office were forty years. And he departed to God bearing a crown of victory, and inherited everlasting life. Salutation to THOMAS.

And on this day also nine (or, ninety) thousand martyrs of the company of Saint THOMAS were crowned.

XXV. NAḤASSÊ

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day Saint ANDRIANUS, and four and twenty other men who were with him, were martyred. This Saint ANDRIANUS was one of the imperial officers, and was captain of the young men, and whilst MAXIMIANUS was torturing the Christians, [fol. 150*a* 3] because they refused to worship idols, Saint ANDRIANUS saw their boldness of heart and patience under suffering, and he said unto the saints, "What do ye expect to get that ye endure such sufferings?" And the holy martyrs said unto him, "Our mouths are unable to describe the hoped-for things which await us," and they told him in the words of the Law and the Prophets about Christ. When ANDRIANUS heard this he went to the officers and scribes, and said unto them, "I am a Christian. Write down my name with the names of the fighters." And when they told the Emperor MAXIMIANUS this, he called him and said unto him, "Hast thou gone mad, O ANDRIANUS? Dost thou wish to be destroyed for nothing?" And ANDRIANUS said unto him, "I am not mad now, but I have turned aside from my former madness." When the emperor heard this he commanded the soldiers to cast him into prison with the holy martyrs; and one of his slaves told his wife ANTOLIA, and when she heard it she departed to the prison, rejoicing to be associated with him. And she kissed the fetters of the four and twenty saints, and she besought them to encourage her husband to endure every trial. And to him she said, "O my lord, let not this infidel lead thee astray. Thy beauty, thy grace, thy gold and thy silver are all vanity; follow Christ so that thou mayest find with Him the kingdom which never passeth away"; and having said this she went to her house. And when ANDRIANUS knew that they were going to bring him to the torture, he went straightway to bid her farewell, and when she heard him arrive, [fol. 150*b* 1] she thought that he had escaped from the prison, and she shut the door against him, and reviled him from the inside of her house, saying, "Yesterday I called thee 'martyr' and to-day thou hast denied Christ!" And when ANDRIANUS saw [the strength] of her Faith, he marvelled exceedingly, and said unto her, "Open to me, O my sister, for I have come to bid thee farewell." When she heard this she opened the door to him; and then he took her into the prison, telling her everything. And when ANTOLIA had come into the prison she saluted the saints, and washed their wounds. And the overseer commanded his men to bring the saints out of prison, and when he saw that they were exhausted by their torturings, he set ANDRIANUS in front of them, and said unto him, "Sacrifice to the gods"; and when ANDRIANUS reviled him the governor commanded them to beat him with sticks. When ANTOLIA heard this she entreated the saints to pray for him. And the governor also commanded the soldiers to beat him on his belly, until his bowels gushed out. Now at that time ANDRIANUS was eight and twenty years old. And then they took him into the prison with the holy martyrs, and ANTOLIA came and wiped away the blood from ANDRIANUS and the saints, and she embraced him, saying, "Rejoice, for thy name is written in the heavens." And then the governor commanded the soldiers to bring a blacksmith's hammer and to break the thighs of the saints therewith. And ANTOLIA placed first of all the hands and the feet of ANDRIANUS under the hammer, and the soldiers smote, and broke off his hands and his feet, and [fol. 150*b* 2] smashed his bones, and at length he delivered up his soul. Similarly they smashed the thighs of all the saints, and cast their bodies into the fire, which did them no harm. And then the believers took their bodies to another city, and they hid them until the days of persecution were passed. And ANTOLIA took the portions of the hands of ANDRIANUS which had been cut off, and laid them by her pillow. And then the governor of the city wished to marry her, and as soon as she heard about it she fled by boat, taking the fragments of the hands of ANDRIANUS with her. And she came to the place where the bodies of the saints were, and she asked them to receive her with them, and God accepted her petition, and she died whilst she was sleeping, and was buried with the saints. Salutation to ANDRIANUS.

And on this day also died the holy father Abbâ BÎSÂRYÔN (BESSARION) the Great. The parents of this saint were believing Christians and God-fearing people. When this father grew up he wished to put on the garb of the monastic life, that is to say, the garb of the angels, and to devote himself to God. [fol. 150*b* 3] And he went forth from this world, and renounced it, and he departed to Saint Abbâ ANTHONY, and became his disciple and ministered unto him for many years. And after this he went to Abbâ MACARIUS, and ministered unto the holy old men who were monks, and then he wandered about in the desert of SCETE; he never lodged in a place which had a roof, and he possessed absolutely nothing. He had neither a whole garment nor a bed, but only rags of coarse hairy sackcloth, which he girded about his loins, and he used to go round to the cells and caves of the monks, and sit down by the side of the doors thereof weeping. And when there went out to him one who knew him, they would take a blessing, each from the other, and depart. And when there went out to him someone who knew him [not], and said unto him, "O my father, what maketh thee weep?" [the saint would reply,] "My riches have all been destroyed, and I have escaped from death. My family have fallen from honour into disgrace." He who did not understand what his words meant would console him, and say unto him, "God shall restore to thee thy riches which have been destroyed," and give him some bread; and the saint would take it and go and give it to others. But those who understood what his words meant would know that what he was referring to was the spoliation of the virtues of the children of men by Satan. His purity, and virginity, and sincerity resembled those of the angels. And the fathers have described the fights which he fought in his spiritual battles when he lived among them; thus for forty days he never lay down on the ground at all to sleep, and on many occasions, during his spiritual fights, he often fasted for forty days at a time. [fol. 151*a* 1] And he continued to fight the spiritual fight for seven and forty years. And many great miracles were made manifest through him, and of these the holy old men and monks speak. Saint DÛLÂS and Saint JOHN relate a story concerning him, and say that they went with him to the shore of the Red Sea, and that they were suffering exceedingly from thirst. And when he knew that they were thirsty he prayed to God and made the bitter water sweet, and they drank thereof. And on another occasion he came to the River TAKAZZÊ, [wishing] to cross over, and that as he found no ferry he prayed, and [then] walked on his feet on the surface of the water to the other side. And one day they brought to SCETE a man who had a devil that the holy old men might heal him by their prayers. And the fathers discussed the matter among themselves and said, "If we acquaint the holy old man Abbâ BÎSÂRYÔN (BESSARION) with the story of the man in whom is a devil he will not heal [him], for he fleeth from [worldly] honour and [the praise] of men." And the fathers made a plan, and they caused the man in whom was a devil to lie down in the church, on the place where Abbâ BÎSÂRYÔN (BESSARION) used to stand up to pray. And when the saint came into the church and found the man there asleep, he woke him up and seized him by his hands, and said unto him, "Rise up," and the man rose up straightway, sound in heart and [fol. 151*a* 2] healed of his disease. And those who saw him marvelled exceedingly, and they glorified God for the grace which is given unto those who fear him. And this father performed very many miracles besides this, and he pleased God and died in peace. Salutation to Abbâ BÎSÂRYÔN (BESSARION).

And on this day also are commemorated ELIANUS the martyr, and his sister EUDOXIA.

Salutation to the company of priests of the brotherhood of ANDRIANUS.

XXVI. NAḤASSÊ

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day Saint MÔYSES and his sister SÂRÂ became martyrs. The parents of these saints [fol. 151*a* 3] were righteous folk, and they were exceedingly rich. After the death of their parents Saint MÔYSES wanted to give his sister in marriage, and to hand over to her all the possessions which their father had left them, and to go and become a monk. And his sister answered and said unto him, "If thou wouldst first of all marry thyself, thou canst then get me married." And he said, "I have committed many sins, and I want to become a monk to blot out my sins, I cannot think about marriage, but only about the salvation of my soul." And she answered and said unto him, "O my brother, how canst thou cast me into the net of this transitory world, and think of the saving of thine own soul only?" And he said unto her, "If thou wishest for the ascetic life, thou thyself knowest"; and she answered and said unto him, "What thou doest for thyself, I likewise will do for myself, for we both are of one nature, and are from the same father, and the same mother." And when he saw the strength of her will he rose up forthwith and gave all his goods to the poor and needy, and then he brought his sister to a convent for virgins, which was outside Alexandria. And he entered a monastery and he devoted himself to the ascetic life, and fought a great spiritual fight, and his sister did likewise; and the two remained for ten years without meeting. And in the days of the kingdom of SEVERIANUS, the infidel, and under the rule of Abbâ DEMETRIUS, [fol. 151*b* 1] Archbishop in the city of Alexandria, that wicked emperor afflicted the Christian people, and there were very many martyrs in his days, [among them] being many heads of monasteries. And Saint MÔYSES rose up, and sent a letter to his sister SÂRÂ, to greet her and to inform her that he wished to become a martyr; and when she heard she rose up straightway and asked the abbess to release her, so that she might go and become a martyr; and the abbess prayed over her and embraced her and let her go. And SÂRÂ embraced the virgins, and she departed to her brother, and found him on the road wishing to go into the city of Alexandria. And the two of them came into the city of Alexandria, and confessed our Lord Jesus Christ before the governor; and he tortured them severely, and afterwards the soldiers cut off their heads with the sword, and they received crowns of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens. Salutation to you SÂRÂ and MÔYSES.

And on this day also are commemorated Abbâ AMMÔN, and ELIAS, the martyr, and his sister EUDOXIA, and Abûna JACOB.

[fol. 151*b* 2] On this day also AGABUS the soldier and THEKLA the nun became holy martyrs. These saints fought the fight in the days of LULIANUS (JULIAN ?) the governor, one of whose officers tortured them very severely, and then cast them to the lions; and they received crowns of martyrdom in the kingdom of heaven.

And our fathers have commanded us that the people shall celebrate on this day a festival in commemoration of the woman SÂRÂ, the wife of ABRAHAM, whose womb was honourable, and whose breasts blessed. When the King of GÊRÂRÂ wished to seize SÂRÂ in his ignorance, God rebuked him, and told him that he was not to touch this woman, and he restored her to ABRAHAM, together with much money. And again, at the time when God lodged in her house, and told ABRAHAM about the birth of ISAAC, she laughed inside the tent, saying, "Can such a thing still happen to me? I have become old, and my lord is old." And God said unto ABRAHAM, "Wherefore did SARAH laugh? Is there anything too hard for God?" And then when ISAAC was born, and she saw him playing with ISHMAEL, the son of HAGAR, jealousy seized her, [fol. 151*b* 3] and she forced ABRAHAM to cast him out with his mother. And although it was hard to ABRAHAM, God commanded him to fulfil her wish, and he did so knowing that from his seed Christ, the Saviour of the world, should appear. And PAUL called her the "free woman," and likened her to the Church. And then she died at a good old age, and ABRAHAM buried her in the grave which he bought from the children of 'ÊMÔR, the Hittite. Salutation to the womb of SÂRÂ.

XXVII. NAḤASSÊ

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day Abbâ BENJAMIN and EUDOXIA became martyrs. The parents of these saints were believing folk of the city of SABERSÎR, and they shewed affection to pilgrims and strangers, and they preserved their purity, and devoted themselves to God, and fought the spiritual fight. And they brought up their two children very carefully, and in the manner which befitted the followers of Christ; and when the children were grown up, this Saint BENJAMIN wanted to shed his blood for the Name of Christ. And he went to the governor of the city of SEṬÛF [fol. 152*a* 1] and confessed the Lord Jesus Christ before him; and the governor tortured him severely, and shut him up in prison. And when his parents and sister heard about him they came to him, and when they saw him under torture they wept and were exceedingly sorry for him. And he comforted them and said unto them, "The life of this world is as nothing, and the days thereof pass quickly, but life everlasting hath neither end nor finish." And when his sister heard this beautiful teaching from him, she said unto him, "O my brother, as God liveth, from this time onward I will never leave thee, and whatsoever death thou shalt die I myself will die that same death with thee"; and forthwith she confessed our Lord Jesus Christ before the governor. And the governor seized her, and commanded the soldiers to set her with her brother in a dark place, and they did as he commanded; and the saints remained in that dark place for twenty days without food and drink. And after this the soldiers took them out, and hung heavy stones about their necks, and cast them into the river (?). And the angel of God came down, and untied those stones from their necks, and they kept their strength in the river (?) until they arrived at the port of a village the name of which was BÂṬRÂ. And a certain virgin found them and brought them up from the river, and they went and stood before the governor, and cursed him, and [fol. 152*a* 2] his idols; and the governor tortured them severely for many days. And when the governor was weary of their tortures, he commanded the soldiers to cut off their heads with the sword, and the saints received crowns of martyrdom in the kingdom of heaven, and inherited everlasting life. And a holy church was built in their city of SABERSÎR, and they laid their bodies therein, and from them there appeared many miracles, and great healings for the sick. Salutation to BENJAMIN and EUDOXIA.

And on this day also is commemorated SAMUEL the prophet, and how God called him in the days of ELI the priest, and how God made him a prophet to the children of Israel. Salutation to SAMUEL, who sealed DAVID.

And on this day also are commemorated [fol. 152*a* 3] VICTOR(?), the Alexandrian, and his mother SÂRÂ.

And on this day also is celebrated the festival of SÛRÎ'ÊL, the fourth archangel, who remembered the twelve sons of JACOB.

XXVIII. Naḥassê

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day we have received as an inheritance from the early fathers and doctors of the Church, who were strong in the grace of the Holy Spirit, an order to celebrate the festival of our holy fathers, the patriarchs, our fathers ABRAHAM, ISAAC, and JACOB. As concerning our father ABRAHAM, the head of the fathers, who among the children of men hath the ability to describe the virtues and righteousness of this man, who became the father of many nations? He believed on God, blessed be His Name! and was obedient unto Him. And he had confidence in the promise of God until he died, and he never doubted in the smallest degree any of the promises of God. At the beginning the angel of God appeared unto him in a vision by night when he was on the island, and said unto him, "Get thee out from thy city, and from thy father's house, and come unto the [fol. 152*b* 1] land which I will shew thee, that is to say the land of KARÂN (HARRAN), that thou mayest dwell therein"; and he came to the land of KARÂN (HARRAN), which country God shewed him. And when his parents died God removed him again to the land of Palestine, and He promised him that he should inherit it; and he had confidence in God's promise until he died, and his heart remained unshaken and free from doubt. Moreover, he knew, and believed, that God would give that land to his seed after him. And after that God appeared unto him at midday in the form of a man, as he thought, and with Him were two angels, and ABRAHAM thought they were like unto all the other men who used to pass along the road every day. And he made a meal for them, and God gave him the promise concerning ISAAC his son, one year before he got him. Now, at that time the days of ABRAHAM were one hundred years, and his wife SARAH was far advanced in her days. And ABRAHAM believed God, and doubted not, and when he got ISAAC, God commanded him to circumcise him on the eighth day, on which day he circumcised his son. And having believed, according to his confidence, there came to him the seed which God promised him. And God said unto him, "Offer up as a sacrifice to Me thy son ISAAC, on the mountain which I will shew thee, and that place was Golgotha, where the body of our father ADAM was buried," and he neither doubted nor hesitated at the word of God. [fol. 152*b* 2] And he took ISAAC and laid him on the altar, and he knew that God was able to take ISAAC away, and yet that ISAAC should be to him a seed. And having completed the sacrifice of ISAAC in his mind, though not in deed, God shewed ABRAHAM'S righteousness and virtues to all succeeding generations. And then the angel of God called to him, and told him not to stretch out his hands over the young man, and do him no harm whatsoever. And God said unto him, "Behold, it is manifest that thou lovest Me, for thou hast not spared thy beloved son for My sake. Therefore I will bless thee with blessing, and I will multiply thee in great number, and I will make thy seed like the stars of heaven, and like the sand of the sea-shore." And it was even so, and God revealed ABRAHAM'S work from that time and for ever, and the report of him and his name were heard in all the ends of the earth. And it is evident why he was called the "Father of Christ" in the flesh, for He appeared from his seed.

in the flesh. And the spiritual fightings of this father, and his virtues, and his righteousness, and his mercy, and his gifts, which were many, were very great. He did not eat every day, but only when travellers came to him and sat at his table, and it is evident from this that he sat with God and His angels before he knew Him, though afterwards he knew them. And tribulation and [fol. 152*b* 3] great sorrow came upon him in his days, for he was separated from his father, and from his kinsfolk, and he was a wanderer on the earth. And when he arrived in the land of Egypt, he was afraid of the infidels in the days of PHARAOH, King of Egypt. And when the Egyptians wished to take his wife SARAH, who was exceedingly beautiful to look upon, he told them that she was his sister, so that they might not kill him. And when PHARAOH, King of Egypt, heard the report of SARAH, he called ABRAHAM and asked him, saying, "Who is this woman who is with thee?" And ABRAHAM said, "She is my sister," and PHARAOH took her from him. And that night a terrifying angel appeared unto PHARAOH, and wanted to kill him, and he commanded PHARAOH to send back SARAH to her husband, and said that if he would not do so he would destroy him. And when the morning was come PHARAOH called ABRAHAM and said unto him, "Why didst thou say unto me 'This woman is my sister.' She is thy wife"; and he gave her back to him, with gifts, and much money, and HAGAR her handmaiden also. And when ABRAHAM arrived at the age of one hundred and forty-five years, he departed to God, Whom he loved, and he inherited the Garden of Delight and everlasting life. And he left a memorial for good behind him unto the end of the world. Salutation to ABRAHAM, ISAAC, and JACOB.

[fol. 153*a* 1] And on this day also our fathers and doctors of the Church have commanded us to celebrate the festival of the departure of Abbâ ISAAC, the son of ABRAHAM, the patriarch. This righteous man was produced through the proclamation of God and His angels, by ABRAHAM his father, and SARAH his mother. And he finished his fight, and the work of righteousness, and he was subject to God, the Most High, and to his father ABRAHAM, and it pleased his father to offer him up as a sacrifice to God, but God redeemed him by a goat. We know not whether we are to wonder more at the willingness of his father ABRAHAM to slay him, the child of promise, whom God gave him by SARAH when he was far advanced in years (now God said unto ABRAHAM, "There shall be unto thee seed," and yet he spared not ISAAC through natural affection, because of his love for God, the Most High), or whether we are to wonder (and we know not which is more wonderful) at the subjection of this father ISAAC, and his consenting to his father ABRAHAM, even to his slaying him and burning him in the fire. Now ISAAC was a child, for the Book of the Law saith that his father made him carry the wood to a place afar off, to the top of a mountain, but the Book of the Chronicle of Days saith that at that time the days of ISAAC were seven and thirty years. And this father ISAAC submitted to his father ABRAHAM, and he stretched out his neck to the slaughtering knife, [fol. 153*a* 2] and the voice of the angel of God came and said unto him, "Stretch not out thy hand upon him, and do nothing evil to him." And as his father ABRAHAM was called the "Sacrificer" of his son in his mind, even so was this father ISAAC called the "Sacrifice" in his mind. And great tribulation and much sorrow came upon him in his days, and he was a stranger to his country. And ABIMELEK took his wife from him, and when God was wroth with him because of it, he gave her back to him, together with much money and gifts. And this father was exceedingly simple in disposition, for the Book of the Law saith that when the shepherds quarrelled together about a well of water, this father left them, and went and dug other wells. And he begot two sons, ESAU and JACOB, and he loved ESAU because of his strength and might. And when he was far advanced in days, and his eyes were feeble, he called his son ESAU and said unto him, "I have become old, O my son, go and hunt the wild animals of the desert, so that I may eat, and my soul shall bless thee." And ESAU took his weapons, and went out into the desert. And REBECCA called JACOB and said unto him, "O my son, rise up and kill one of thy goats quickly and take it to thy father so that he may eat and bless thee before he dieth." And JACOB said unto her, "I am afraid lest he shall know that I am JACOB, and lest he be angry with me, for though I want to receive [his] blessing, a curse may come upon me instead of a blessing." And she answered [fol. 153*a* 3] and said unto him, "Let thy curse be upon me, O my son." And this took place through her by the command of God. And JACOB did as his mother commanded him, and he offered [food] to his father, and he ate and blessed him. And this father Abbâ ISAAC arrived at the age of one hundred and eighty years, and he died in peace, and was buried in the grave of his father ABRAHAM, which he bought from the sons of 'ÊMÔR and in which SARAH was buried. Salutation to ISAAC.

And on this day also our fathers, the doctors of the Church, have commanded us to celebrate the festival of the departure of JACOB the patriarch whom God called "ISRAEL." This [righteous man] followed the examples of his fathers ABRAHAM and ISAAC in [the practice of] mercy, and in giving alms, and in sincerity and humility. And his brother ESAU hated him because he forestalled him, and bought from him his rights as the firstborn with a meal of lentils; now ESAU was the firstborn, and JACOB acted craftily towards him, and received the blessing from his father ISAAC. And when ESAU threatened to kill JACOB, his father ISAAC advised him to go to the father of his mother's brother, and he went there, and he was betrothed to the daughter of his mother's brother, and he tended his flocks for seven years, and [fol. 153*b* 1] he married her. And then he was betrothed to the second daughter of his mother's brother, and he served him for seven years, and also married her. And his mother's brother gave him a portion of his flocks, and it came to pass that when he said unto JACOB, "Let thy wages be the sheep which are all of one colour," the ewes brought forth only lambs which were all one colour. And when he said to JACOB, "Let thy wages be the sheep which are spotted all over," the ewes brought forth only lambs which were spotted all over; thus his wages were doubled, and he had many possessions. And he returned to the land of his father, and he begot twelve sons. And he saw the vision of a ladder on the earth which reached to heaven, and the angels of God were ascending and descending on it. And when he woke up he said, "This is the house of God, and the door of heaven"; and that place became the Sanctuary in the city of Jerusalem wherein was to be buried the body of our Lord Jesus Christ. And then he saw a second vision, and it seemed as if God were contending with him, and He caused his hip to be benumbed and He called him "ISRAEL"; and because of this the Jews do not eat the muscles of the hip. And in his days came great tribulation and much sorrow. First of all [his sons] sold his son JOSEPH as a slave to the Egyptians. And their father asked them, saying, "Where is your brother JOSEPH?" And they said unto him, "The wild beasts have devoured him"; and because of his excessive weeping JACOB'S eyes became blind. And after this there came a great famine in those days, and they found nothing [fol. 153*b* 2] to eat, and at length JACOB sent his sons into the land of Egypt to buy grain. And they came to JOSEPH their brother, who had become steward to the King of Egypt, and he knew that they were his brothers, but they did not know that he was their brother JOSEPH. And JOSEPH made a pretence to them, and said unto them, "Depart and invite your father JACOB to come hither," and they invited JACOB, and he came to the land of Egypt and dwelt there for seventeen years. And when the time of his death had drawn nigh, he called his twelve sons, and blessed them, and he gave JUDAH sovereignty and made it known that Christ should appear from him, and he blessed him with many words, saying, "The sceptre of sovereignty shall not come to an end in JUDAH, and the rule shall not depart from before his hand until He, to Whom sovereignty belongeth, shall come, Him for Whom the nations wait." And after he had blessed him, JOSEPH brought to him his two sons EPHRAIM and MANASSEH, so that he might bless them, and he made the sign over their heads, and he laid his right hand upon the head of the younger, and his left hand on the head of the elder, and he made his hand [to take] the form of the Cross, indicating that the firstborn should be abased at the appearance of the Cross. And he reached the age of one hundred and forty-six years, and he died with the hands of JOSEPH resting on his eyes. And JACOB commanded him to bury him in the grave of his fathers, and JOSEPH mourned for him with a great mourning, [fol. 153*b* 3] and the Egyptians with him. And then he carried him on the chariots of PHARAOH, and with him were the great nobles of the Egyptians, and they brought him to the land of CANAAN and buried him with his fathers. Salutation to JACOB.

And on this day Abbâ BARSEBÛ (or, BARSÔBÂ), and ten monks who were his disciples, and the captain of the royal horses, became martyrs by the hand of the King of Persia, and eight hundred companions of ISIDORE. Salutation to Abbâ BARSEBÛ.

XXIX. Naḥassê

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day is celebrated the festival of commemoration of the BIRTH of our Lord, and God, and Redeemer, Jesus Christ, in the flesh, of our holy Lady, the Virgin MARY, for the [fol. 154*a* 1] salvation of the whole world. Salutation to Thy BIRTH.

And on this day also Saint ATHANASIUS the bishop became a martyr, and with him were two servants, GÂRSÔMES (or, GARSÎMÔS) and THEODOTUS. Certain men reported to the king that Saint ATHANASIUS had baptized the daughter of 'ANṬÔNÎTÔS the general, and the king seized him, and ATHANASIUS confessed before him that he was a Christian; and the king tortured him greatly, but not only would he not deny Christ, but he increased his Faith in Him. Then the king commanded the soldiers to cut off his head with the sword, and he likewise tortured the two servants GARSÎMÔS and THEODOTUS severely, and he beat them and crucified them. And then the soldiers cut off the heads of all three of them with the sword, and the saints received crowns of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens. And the believers gave much money to the soldiers, and the guards who were keeping the bodies, and they took away the bodies of the saints and wrapped them up in rich cloths, and laid them in coffins, and many signs and miracles appeared through them. [fol. 154*a* 2] Salutation to ATHANASIUS.

And on this day also Saint IRENAEUS, the Bishop of SÔREM, became a martyr. They seized this saint at the first hour of the night, and brought him into the governor's house, and the governor said unto him, "Sacrifice to the gods." And IRENAEUS said unto him, "I will not offer sacrifice, for I am a fearer of God and I am His servant." And the governor commanded the soldiers to drown him in the river, and when he had come to the ferry, he stripped off his apparel, and prayed to God to receive his soul, and to protect his people in SÔREM, and to give peace to the churches. And then he said, "I believe in thee, O my Lord Jesus Christ, and I make supplication to thee as I suffer," and straightway they cast him into the river. Salutation to IRENAEUS.

And on this day also is commemorated the translation of the body of Abbâ JOHN the Short to the desert of SCETE; this took place [fol. 154*a* 3] after his death in DABRA ḲUĔLZEM, which is the desert of Saint Abbâ ANTHONY. And this happened in the days of Abbâ JOHN, the forty-eighth Archbishop of the city of Alexandria, who went to the desert of SCETE, and the holy monks said unto him, "We wish the body of Abbâ JOHN the Short to be in the church of Abbâ MACARIUS, that we may bow down before it." And straightway the grace of God moved him, and he wrote a letter [and sent it] by the hands of a certain abbot, whose name was COSMAS, and with him was an old man of the country of CLYSMA. And when they arrived they were unable [to do anything], for at that time his body was in the charge of CHALCEDONIAN MALKITES (Melchites), who were dwelling in that place. And the abbot, and those who were with him, learned and made certain where that place was, and they returned and found certain men who were orthodox believers dwelling in that city, and they told them the matter concerning which they had come. And after a few days a governor, who was one of the elders of the city, was appointed over CLYSMA, and he was a friend of Abbâ MICHAEL, Bishop of the city of CLYSMA. And the archbishop wrote a letter to the bishop about the body of Saint Abbâ JOHN, and he commanded him to make plans, and to help his messengers, the aged monks, so that they might be able to remove the body of the saint from the hands of the heretics. And the bishop rejoiced [fol. 154*b* 1] with a great joy, and told the scribe of the governor, his friend, and the scribe told the governor about the letter of the old monks. And the scribe said, "How can we find an excuse for introducing the monks into the cave of the place?" And the governor said, "Let the monks put on over their own apparel Arab garments, and let them come with us to that place"; and they did so. And the governor departed having with him many people, and horsemen, and Arabs, and the aged monks from the desert of SCETE, and they came to CLYSMA. And the governor spake unto the Melchite bishop who dwelt in that place, [saying,] "Send out all our men from the church, and let not one of them be left therein, for I wish to go into the church, and to remain there the whole night"; and the heretic did as the governor commanded. And the aged monks made ready their beasts outside the city, and they came by night and took away the body of Abbâ JOHN, and they departed and came to MĔSR (CAIRO), and thence they travelled to the desert of SCETE. And the monks of the monastery of Abbâ MACARIUS went out and met them with crosses, and Gospels, and instruments of music, and incense, and songs, and hymns. And they brought Abbâ JOHN to Saint Abbâ MACARIUS, and all the monks were blessed by him; and they sprinkled many perfumes over him, and they celebrated the Offering. And at the time when the Gospel was being read a miracle which was [fol. 154*b* 2] most marvellous was made manifest; the whole of the church was lighted up with heavenly light, and was filled with the odour of very sweet perfume, the like of which never was. And there was great joy. And the saint remained in the monastery of Abbâ MACARIUS for six days, and after this they took him and carried him to the church, and his sons the monks received him as the Hebrews received our Redeemer, and they cried out before him, saying, "Blessed is he who cometh in the name of God." And they laid him in his place, and signs and wonders took place through him. And after the death of this Saint Abbâ JOHN, Abbâ MARK the archbishop, who lived after him, went up to the desert of SCETE, and he entered the church of Saint Abbâ JOHN, and bowed low before him; and with him were bishops, and many of the elders of the city of Alexandria, and of all the country of Egypt. And he uncovered the body of the saint and found it moist and hairy, and he was blessed by it and wept with a bitter weeping. And when Abbâ MARK uncovered JOHN'S body, there was a loud clap of thunder in the church, and all the men fell in a state of terror and fear. And the archbishop replaced the sackcloth covering over him, and then wrapped him in fine linen. And they carried away the saint, singing praises and a spiritual song, saying, "O thou who wast a swift cloud, and didst bear rain, thou didst go to the country of Babylon, to the THREE CHILDREN, and didst return to the city of Alexandria in the might of the Holy Spirit, which was [fol. 154*b* 3] with thee. And thou didst also go to CLYSMA, and didst overthrow the houses of idols, and didst preach the True Faith, and didst heal the sick, and didst cast out devils, and didst return to thine inheritance; thou art a habitation of blessing, and a traveller to the kingdom of heaven." And the translation of the body of Abbâ JOHN the Short took place in the five hundred and twentieth year of the Holy Martyrs (A.D. 804). Salutation to the translation of thy body, O JOHN the Short.

XXX. NAḤASSÊ

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died the great prophet MALACHI. This righteous man was the completion of the Twelve Minor Prophets, and he was one of the Twelve. And he prophesied at the time of the return of the people from captivity in Babylon to Jerusalem. And he rebuked the children of Israel because of their transgression against God and His Law, and also because of their vile offerings which they offered unto Him, for they did not give the tithe of their goods, nor their first fruits, as God commanded them. And God spake unto them, by the tongue of [fol. 155*a* 1] this prophet, the reproach of God, and He said unto them, "Do mercy, give alms to the poor, and testify ye to Me by giving tithe and first-fruits. I will open to you the doors of heaven, and will bring down unto you blessings, so that at length ye shall say, 'It sufficeth us, it sufficeth us,'.... [And I will rebuke] the caterpillar, and the worm, and the wire-worm, and the moth, so that they may not devour the fruits of your land." And he prophesied concerning the coming of JOHN the Baptist, before our Redeemer, and concerning the coming of ELIAS before him, and also concerning the end of the world. And he prophesied concerning the habit of boasting among the Jews, and revealed to them that there were [other] people on the earth, and priests and righteous men who offered up incense and sacrifices to God, which were accepted. And having pleased God by his strife, and ended the days of his prophecy, he departed to God Whom he loved.

And on this day also is celebrated the commemoration of Abbâ MOSES, Bishop of the city of FARMÂ. Salutation to MOSES, pillar of the city of FARMÂ.

[fol.155*a* 2] And on this day also ANDREW performed a miracle when our Lord appeared unto him in the form of the captain of a ship, and taught him the craft of a spirit ship. And ANDREW said unto our Lord, "Take me up into Thy ship, but we have no money [to pay] the ship's fare. Our Lord commanded us not to carry gold and silver in our wallet." And our Lord said unto ANDREW, "If it be thus, come up into My ship"; and ANDREW and his disciples went up into the ship. And the Lord commanded one of the angels to bring three bread-cakes, and he did so, and our Lord Jesus commanded ANDREW, saying, "Rise up and eat ye bread so that thou mayest be able to support the journey by sea"; and ANDREW marvelled. And he said, "God give thee the bread of life in the kingdom of the heavens." And the disciples of ANDREW could neither speak nor eat food through fear of the waves of the sea, and they were not used to travel by sea. And our Lord Jesus Christ said unto ANDREW, "Tell thy disciples to go back to the shore, for they appear to be timid, and if thou wilt not [do this], teach them with pleasant words [not] to be afraid—if thou art a disciple of God—for behold, the ship is far from land"; and [then] the Lord Jesus departed, and sailed the ship. And ANDREW taught his disciples, and encouraged them, and prayed in his heart, and having prayed they fell into a heavy sleep; [fol. 155*a* 3] and ANDREW rejoiced because of this. Then ANDREW turned to our Lord, and said unto Him, "Verily Thou art a master-sailor! Fourteen [times] have I travelled by sea, and I never saw any man sail a ship as thou dost." And our Lord Jesus answered and said unto him, "When we sail on the sea we often suffer tribulation, but since thou art a disciple of our Lord Jesus Christ, the sea recognizeth thee, and doth not make its waves to rise up against thee." And ANDREW cried out with a loud voice, saying, "I bless Thee, O my Lord Jesus Christ, that I have spoken to a man who praiseth Thee." And our Lord Jesus answered and said unto ANDREW, "Tell me, O disciple of God, why do the Jews [not] believe that Jesus is the Son of God, for," He continued, "we have heard that He hath performed many miracles." And ANDREW said unto Him, "Yea, my brother, He revealed unto us that He was God, and He performed miracles innumerable; He opened the eyes of the blind, He made the lame to walk, He made the deaf to hear, He raised the dead, He cleansed the lepers, He turned water into wine, and He took five bread-cakes and two fishes, and having commanded the multitudes to sit down upon the grass, He brake them, and of what was left over they gathered up many baskets full; yet, in spite of this, [the Jews] have not believed." And our Lord Jesus said unto him, "Doth He do this in public or in private?" And ANDREW said unto Him, [fol. 155*b* 1] "Some things He doeth publicly, and some privately; but it seemeth to me that Thou art trying me." And the Lord Jesus said unto him, "Far be it from Me so to do! Tell Me, O my brother, that My soul may rejoice." And ANDREW said unto Him, "O my son, may God fulfil for Thee every good work. But now hearken to a miracle which the Lord performed when we, the Twelve Disciples, were with Him, and likewise many of the chief priests, and many of the people. We came unto the synagogue, and our Lord saw two images, one on the right of the house, and one on the left thereof. And our Lord said, 'Do ye see that there are similitudes of the Cherubim and Seraphim in the heavens, which have been made by a man on earth?' And He turned to one image, and said unto it, 'Unto thee, I speak, O similitude of heavenly beings which was made by an artificer ...come down from thy place, and revile the chief priests, and declare whether I be God or man.' And straightway the image leaped down, and spake like a man, and said, 'O ye foolish Jews, whose blindness is not enough for yourselves, but who wish to make others blind, why do you say that He Who is God is a man? This is He Who hath fashioned man in the beginning, and who gave him His own breath to breathe. This is He Who made ABRAHAM and Who brought back JACOB to his native land. This is He Who giveth blessing unto those who call upon Him, and Who prepareth punishment for those who do [not] submit to Him. Verily I say unto you that ye have denied [fol. 155*b* 2] God, and have changed the Law. Behold, therefore, your synagogue shall be destroyed, and shall become a church in the Name of the Only Son of God.' And having said these words and others like unto them the image held its peace. And we answered the chief priests and said unto them, 'Behold, the image hath spoken unto you and reviled you.' And the chief priests and the Jews said unto us, 'This hath been done by magic. The image spake of ABRAHAM, but where could it have found ABRAHAM, for it is many days since ABRAHAM died.' And the Lord Jesus turned to the image and said unto it, 'They do not believe that I have spoken to ABRAHAM. Go and say this to ABRAHAM, "Thus saith He Who formed man at the creation, and Who made thee His friend: Rise up, thou and ISAAC and JACOB thy sons, and come forth! Come ye and rebuke the chief priests and make them to know that ye know Me."' And when the image heard these words it rose up, now we were all looking on, and it went to the land of Canaan, to the grave of ABRAHAM, and it stood up outside the tomb, and cried out as our Lord had told it [to do]. And straightway the Twelve Fathers came out from the tomb, and said unto the image, 'Unto which of us wast thou sent?' And the image answered and said unto them, 'I was sent to the three fathers of the people; as for you get ye back until the time of the Resurrection'; and when they heard this they re-entered their tombs. And the three fathers went with the image to the chief priests and the [fol. 155*b* 3] Jews, and they chided them, and told them that He was the Son of God. And then the Lord Jesus said unto the fathers, 'Depart ye to your places and sleep.' And again He turned to the image and said unto it, 'Return to thy place,' and it went back to its place, and became as it was before. And although the chief priests saw this they did not believe. Now there are very many other things which our Lord did, O my brother, and if I were to begin to narrate them to thee I should never come to the end of the telling." And our Lord Jesus answered and said unto him, "I am able to complete the telling, and every hidden word, and every word of the Faith. For the wise few words suffice, but if I were to tell them to the fool, his soul would not believe [them] until he died." And then when the ship was approaching the coast and was nigh to arrive they held their peace. Now whilst our Lord Jesus was talking to ANDREW, He pretended to be sleepy, and He lay down and slept; and ANDREW seeing Him lie down lay down himself and slept. And our Lord Jesus commanded the angels to take up and carry away ANDREW and his disciples, and they went and laid them down outside the city where they wished [to be]. And when the day came, and ANDREW woke up and opened his eyes, and saw the gates of the city, and knew that he was on land, he was greatly frightened; and he woke up his disciples, and said unto them, "What did our Lord do unto us at sea? We did not recognize Him, for He turned His face into that of a man; it was He Who appeared unto us when He was giving us counsel." And they said unto him, "Whilst we were asleep we saw our Lord [fol. 156*a* 1] sitting upon the throne of His glory, and all His angels were surrounding Him. And we saw ABRAHAM, and ISAAC, and JACOB, and all the saints, and DAVID playing upon his harp and [other] instruments of music; and we saw the Twelve Apostles standing before our Lord, and there were twelve angels before Him, and many other angels behind Him. And we heard the Lord saying unto the angels, 'Hearken unto the Apostles in everything which they shall say unto you.'" And when ANDREW heard this, he rejoiced greatly that his disciples were held to be worthy to see this wonderful thing. And then he lifted up [fol. 156*a* 2] his eyes to heaven, and cried out with a loud voice, saying, "O my Lord Jesus Christ, I knew that Thou wast not far from Thy servants. Forgive me, O my Lord, because that when I was talking to Thee on the ship it seemed to me that Thou wast a man whom I could instruct." And our Lord Jesus appeared unto ANDREW a second time, and He said unto him, "I am He Who appeared unto thee on the ship in the form of the captain of the ship, and I steered thee over the sea. Fear not, neither be dismayed, for I will be with thee, and whithersoever thou goest my peace shall be with thee." And having said these words He went up into heaven in great glory, [fol. 156*a* 3] and ANDREW departed on his way. Salutation to ANDREW.

Here endeth the section which is to be read during the month of Naḥassê.

THE INTERCALARY MONTH—PÂGUĔMÊN
(SEPTEMBER 3–7)

[fol. 156*b* 1] IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

I. PÂGUĔMÊN

On this day the blessed Apostle EUTYCHIUS became a martyr. This holy apostle was the disciple of Saint JOHN the evangelist, and he was filled with the grace of the Life-giving Holy Spirit, whilst he was ministering to JOHN the apostle, and he was subject unto him. He longed to go with PAUL the apostle, and JOHN commanded that he should go with him, and he went with him into the preaching. And he preached in the Name of our Lord Jesus Christ, and he converted many of the Greeks and brought them into the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ, and he baptized them with Christian baptism; and he destroyed the temples of idols, and rebuilt them as churches of our Lord Jesus Christ. And he endured great tribulation, and imprisonment, and beatings for many days by the infidels. And the angel of God used to come to him in the prison house, and with him was the food which the saint ate, and which fire had never touched. And the soldiers also cast him to the lions, but the beasts never attacked him, and they were friendly towards him, like sheep with their shepherd. And then he went to the city of Constantinia, and the angel of God went before him and strengthened him. And having finished his fight, and waxed old, and arrived at a good old age, he departed to God Whom he loved. [fol. 156*b* 2] Salutation to EUTYCHIUS, who was called the "Companion of JOHN the evangelist."

And on this day also the holy priest BĔSÔY, the brother of Saint Abbâ ḤÔR, became a martyr. This saint came from the city of Antioch, and he belonged to an honourable family, and because of the nobility of his kinsfolk, and his knowledge and his orthodoxy, he was appointed priest. And when his brother Abbâ ḤÔR, and his mother DIODORA went to the city of Alexandria, and became martyrs on the twenty-ninth day of the month of Sanê, this saint rose up to go to the city of Alexandria to see their bodies, and to be blessed by them. And he gave all [his money] to the poor and needy, and took nothing with him except three bread-cakes and a staff of palm wood on which to lean. And when he arrived in the city of Alexandria he enquired for the bodies of his brother and mother, and certain men guided him and brought him to them; and when he saw them he wept with a bitter weeping, because of his separation from them. And then he went to the governor and confessed our Lord Jesus Christ before him, and he made known to him that he was the brother of Abbâ ḤÔR. And the governor commanded the soldiers to set a great pillar on his belly, [fol. 156*b* 3] and straightway he delivered up his soul into the hand of God. And then the governor commanded the soldiers to burn the body of the saint and the bodies of his brother and mother in the fire, and the bodies of other martyrs, eighty-eight in number, but the fire never touched them. And certain believing men took the bodies of Saint Abbâ ḤÔR, and his brother Abbâ BĔSÔY, and his mother DIODORA, and Saint DÂMÔN, of the city of DĔBKĔYÂ, and the body of Saint BÎMÂKÔS from the city of BARMÔN, and WÛRSÛNÛFÂ of the city of ṬÛLÛYÂ, and carried them in a ship, and brought them to the city of 'ABLÂSÎ with great honour, and laid them in a good place until the days of persecution were ended. And they built a church for them, and laid them in it, and many signs and wonders and many healings were made manifest through them. Salutation to Abbâ BĔSÔY.

And on this day also are commemorated Saints PACHOMIUS and SERAPION. [fol. 157*a* 1] Salutation to SERAPION and PACHOMIUS.

Salutation to the imprisonment of JOHN the Baptist.

II. PÂGUĔMÊN

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died Saint TITUS the apostle, unto whom PAUL the apostle wrote one of his Epistles. The birthplace of this saint was the city of WÂRṬĔS, and he was the son of the sister of the governor of the city, and his kinsfolk were Greeks. And from his childhood he studied the learning of the Greeks, and he was exceedingly wise in his understanding, and sincere in his disposition, and his acts were good, and he loved the poor and needy. And one night he saw [a vision] and it seemed as if one said unto him, "Fight, O TITUS, for the salvation of thy soul, for this world is unprofitable unto thee"; and when he awoke from his dream he was frightened and did not know what to do. Now the story of our Lord Jesus Christ had been preached abroad and it was heard of in the city of SHÂM (DAMASCUS ?), and the people thereof talked among themselves about His doctrine and about His miracles. And when the governor of the city, whose name was 'AKRÂṬĔS, heard of this miracle [fol. 157*a* 2] he marvelled exceedingly, and he wished to know with certainty if the story which he had heard about the Lord and His miracles were true. And he sought out a wise and understanding man whom he could send to the city of Jerusalem to verify the story of our Lord, and to put His miracles to the test, and to find out whether He was a being from the infernal regions, or whether He was a magician, or whether He was truly God; and he chose TITUS to send, for he found no one better than he, and he sent him and commanded him to search into these matters with very great care and attention. And when TITUS came to the land of Judah, and saw the miracles of our Lord Jesus Christ, and His marvellous deeds, and heard the Life-giving words of our Lord, he distinguished between the words and miracles of our Lord, and the words and deeds of the Greeks; and he found a great difference between them, and he knew that the faith of the Greeks was as nothing. Then he believed on our Lord Jesus Christ and followed Him. And he sent to the governor, his mother's brother, and informed him of what he had seen and heard of the signs and wonders of our Lord Jesus Christ. And when our Lord chose His Twelve Disciples, He chose this Saint TITUS to be of their number. And after the Ascension of our Lord the grace of the Holy Spirit Paraclete descended upon him, as upon the Apostles, in the upper chamber of Zion; and he went with the Apostles [fol. 157*a* 3] into the preaching. And when our Lord chose PAUL the apostle, this Saint TITUS followed him, and went with him into many cities. And after PAUL the apostle became a martyr in the city of Rômê, this saint returned to his native city of 'EKERṬES (sic), and built a church therein; and he appointed priests and deacons over the cities which were round about. And having finished his apostolic fight he departed to God, Whom he loved. Salutation to TITUS.

III. PÂGUĔMÊN

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day are commemorated the glorious angel RÛFÂ'ÊL (RAPHAEL) the archangel, the third of the vigilant, holy and heavenly archangels; and the dedication of his church, which was built to him on an island outside the city of Alexandria in the days of Saint THEOPHILUS the archbishop; and the miracle which was made manifest therein, and took place thus. A certain rich woman from the city of Rômê came to Saint THEOPHILUS the archbishop, [fol. 157*b* 1] and with her were her son and a picture of the glorious Archangel RÛFÂ'ÊL (RAPHAEL), and much money which she had inherited from her parents. And she cleared away the heap of rubbish which was in front of the archbishop's house, and there appeared from beneath it a treasure of gold, even as we have written [in the section for] the eighteenth day of Ṭĕḳĕmt. And Saint Abbâ THEOPHILUS built many churches, and among them was the church which was on the island outside the city of Alexandria, and was dedicated in the name of the glorious Archangel RÛFÂ'ÊL (RAPHAEL); and Abbâ THEOPHILUS the archbishop finished the building thereof and consecrated it as it were this day. And whilst the believers were praying in the church, behold the church trembled, and was rent asunder, and it moved about. And they found that the church had been built upon the back of a whale of the whales of the sea, on which a very large mass of sand had heaped itself. Now the whale lay firmly fixed in its place, and the treadings of the feet of the people upon it cut it off from the mainland; and it was Satan who moved the whale so that he might throw down the church. And the believers and the archbishop cried out together, and made supplication to the Lord Christ, and they asked for the intercession of the glorious Archangel RÛFÂ'ÊL (RAPHAEL). And God, the Most High, sent the glorious angel RÛFÂ'ÊL (RAPHAEL), and he had mercy on the children of men, and he drove his spear into the whale, saying unto him, "By the commandment of God stand still, and move not thyself from thy place"; and the whale stood in his place and moved not. And many signs and wonders were made manifest, and great healings of sick folk [fol. 157*b* 2] took place in that church. And this church continued to exist until the time when the Muslims reigned, and then it was destroyed, and the whale moved, and the sea flowed back again and drowned many people who dwelt in that place.

This story was told by JOHN, Archbishop of the city of Constantinia, to HONORIUS, the righteous emperor. And he said unto him, "Know, O emperor, that we were sailing in a ship to come to thee, and as we were going along we saw a church, on the island, on the day preceding the Sabbath, and we came into port, so that we might receive the Holy Mysteries on the First Day of the week. And we found a little monastery by the side of that church, with brethren and monks therein. And, by the commandment of God, we went to them, and we said unto them, 'O brethren, if ye have with you an old manuscript treating of the days of the ancients, give it to us so that we may comfort ourselves therewith.' And they answered and said unto me, 'Behold, we have many manuscripts in the sanctuary, but we do not know how to translate them.' And I said unto them, 'Bring them here that I may see them.' And when they brought them to me, I searched through them, and I found that they treated of the mighty deeds and miracles which our Lord Jesus Christ had performed before His disciples, and also of the beginning of the heavens and [fol. 157*b* 3] the earth, and [they went on] to the end of this world. And as I was examining these manuscripts, I found a manuscript which was written by our fathers, the holy Apostles, and which treated of the appointment of the Seven Archangels, and it said: 'When our Lord Jesus Christ was on the Mount of Olives with His disciples, He revealed to them the mystery of the Godhead.' And the Apostles asked Him, saying, 'O our Lord and God, we beseech and entreat Thee to tell us about the glory of the honourable angel RÛFÂ'ÊL (RAPHAEL), and what day Thou didst appoint him, and in what month, and whether he is the equal of his fellow archangels, so that we may preach him in the world, and that men may celebrate a festival in his honour as they celebrate festivals in honour of his fellow archangels, and that men may pray to him in the time of their sorrow and tribulation, so that they may find grace and compassion with Thee, and his intercession.' And straightway our Lord Jesus Christ commanded, and the seven, and the three archangels, came from the third heaven, MICHAEL, and GABRIEL and RÛFÂ'ÊL (RAPHAEL) with great joy, and they bowed down before our Lord Christ: and our Lord said unto the angel RÛFÂ'ÊL (RAPHAEL), 'Tell the Apostles thy name so that they may know thy great honour.' Now the Archangel RÛFÂ'ÊL (RAPHAEL), a sincere (?) angel, is the third of the archangels, and MICHAEL the archangel is the first of all the angels; and his name [meaneth] the 'compassionate.' And GABRIEL is the second archangel, and his name [meaneth] 'God and man,' and it was he who was sent to our holy Lady, the Virgin MARY, to announce the birth of our Lord Jesus Christ from her." And RÛFÂ'ÊL (RAPHAEL) [fol. 158*a* 1] said, "I make hearts to rejoice, and I am sincere, and good, and merciful to sinners, against whom I never lay information concerning their sins before God; I speak only of my power to save, and my sincerity, and my love for men. I send angels with the souls of sinners, and I treat them with long-suffering until at length they repent of their sins, and forsake their transgressions, I am RÛFÂ'ÊL (RAPHAEL) whom God set over the twenty-three hosts of angels, [and] we praise God the Father, and His compassionate Son, and the Holy Spirit the Comforter. I am RÛFÂ'ÊL (RAPHAEL) whom God commanded to give good things to the saints at the Marriage of One Thousand Years in Mount Zion, when our Lord Jesus Christ made them to drink out of the cup which is filled with honour indeed, as they reclined with Him when He sat on the holy throne. I am RÛFÂ'ÊL (RAPHAEL) whom God commanded to take up branches of the Tree of Life in my hand, and to give them to Christians on that day [of] life and joy. I am RÛFÂ'ÊL (RAPHAEL) under whose hand are kept the treasure-houses of the heavens, and I open them and shut them according as God commandeth me. And if any man shall do a good deed to another man, who is in tribulation upon earth, for my name's sake, or shall write a book about my office, or shall remember any of the poor in my name, or shall offer up an offering or incense on the day of my commemoration, which is the third day of Pâguĕmên, whereon God appointed me, and crowned me with the office of the angels, I will bear them and transport them on the chariot of light, until they enter the heavenly Jerusalem. And I will place in their souls [fol. 158*a* 2] scented branches with an exceedingly sweet odour, the like of which shall never be found upon the earth. Ask of me, O chosen Apostles, at all times so that I may protect you until ye stand before God. And preach ye unto all men in all the world that they must celebrate my commemoration, and I will make intercession with God on their behalf, and I will deliver them from their tribulation, and they shall never see punishment." And having said these words RÛFÂ'ÊL (RAPHAEL) bowed low to the Lord. And this glorious angel RÛFÂ'ÊL (RAPHAEL), the archangel, hath performed many miracles, and it is meet that we should celebrate his commemoration at all times, for he maketh intercession with God on our behalf. Salutation to RÛFÂ'ÊL (RAPHAEL).

And on this day is celebrated the death of MELCHISEDEK. This man was the son of ḲÂINÂN, the son of SHEM. And when he was fifteen years of age God commanded NOAH to send SHEM his son with the body of our father ADAM, and to lay it in the middle of the earth, which is called "ḲRÂNYÔ" (CRANIUM); and he informed him that the Saviour of the world would come, and that they would sacrifice Him there, and that He would redeem ADAM by His blood. And SHEM and MELCHISEDEK took the body of Adam from the house of his father in secret, and he went there, [fol. 158*a* 3] and the angel of God guided them; and MELCHISEDEK was appointed priest. And he took twelve stones and offered up an offering upon them, with bread and wine which came down to him from heaven, and which revealed the mystery of the new Law. And the angels used to bring food unto him from heaven, and his apparel consisted of a hide, and a hide girdle, and he continued to minister before the body of our father ADAM. And when ABRAHAM returned from the war, and had vanquished the kings, he offered him bread and wine, and ABRAHAM gave him tithes of all his possessions, and he was appointed priest and king of SÂLÊM. Salutation to MELCHISEDEK.

And on this day also died SERAPION of LANDÛN. This saint was learned in the Books of the Church, and in the interpretation of the same, and he renounced all the possessions of this world. And then he went and departed into the country of the pagans, and sold himself for twenty dînârs, and he took care of his dînârs. He ate nothing but bread and water, and he used to pray to God to turn [the people] from their error; and then he made them all to believe in the Faith of Jesus Christ, and he taught them all the Law. And then he told them that he was an Egyptian free man, and that for love of them he had sold himself; and he gave them the money of his price to give to the poor. [fol. 158*b* 1] And he departed to another city, the people of which were called "MANKAYÂWĔYÂN," and he sold himself to them, and he served them until he made them to believe in the Faith of Christ. And then he went to Rômê and lived and worked there, with fasting and prayer, until at length he died in peace; and signs and wonders appeared through his body. Salutation to SERAPION.

And on this day also died the good, and honourable, and orthodox, and apostolic king ZARA YÂʿAḲÔB [died 26th August, 1468] after he had established ordinances and laws for the good behaviour [of his people] in all the cities of his kingdom. Salutation to ZARA YÂʿAḲÔB, the preacher of the Faith of the Gospel.

IV. PÂGUĔMÊN

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died the ascetic, fighter, and anchorite Saint Abbâ BENJAMIN (or, BÂYMÔN). This saint was from the city of MĔSR (CAIRO). There were seven brethren, namely, JOHN, and JOB, [fol. 158*b* 2] and JOSEPH, and BASIL, and BAYMÔN, and JACOB, and ABRAHAM, and they all became monks. JOHN was the most advanced (i.e. the eldest) of them in his days, and Abbâ BÂYMÔN was most advanced in knowledge and wisdom. And they all agreed together, and went forth from the world, and dwelt in places which were remote from men; and they bore the yoke of our Lord Christ. And they travelled on the straight road, and put aside the honour of family, and the desire of their mother to see them. Now their mother came to their abode, and she stood outside and having sent them a message she waited (?) for them to come to her, so that she might see them before she departed. And they sent to her a message, saying, "If thou wishest to see us in the generation which is for ever, depart from this place"; and she understood, and accepted [their words], and departed. And this father was a haven and a comforter of the old men and of the young men of the desert of SCETE. And whenever tribulation, and doubt about the Faith, or a temptation of the Adversary [assailed any one of them], he would come to him, and our father would comfort him, and straightway he was cured of his sickness. And this father composed works on Doctrine, and many Homilies, and profitable Admonitions on piety, and the spiritual fight, and the path of the monastic life. And he said in his teaching, "If thou seest a brother who hath transgressed, despair not of him, but wake up his soul, and comfort him, and lighten his heaviness, so that he may rise up from his fall." And he also saith, "Teach thy heart so that it may do what thy tongue sayeth." And one of the brethren said unto him, "If I see a brother who is good, I rejoice in him, and bring him into my abode, and make him to rejoice. And also, [fol. 158*b* 3] if I see a brother whose works are inferior I do not wish to bring him into my abode." And Abbâ BÂYMÔN answered and said unto him, "If thou treatest well the brother who is good, thou must treat that brother whose works are inferior with a double portion of goodness, for he who is sick needeth healing especially." And then he informed that brother who was talking with him, saying, "There was a monk in the monastery whose name was TIMOTHY, and he fell into sin, and he was always weeping; and he wept, and groaned, and petitioned God, saying, 'O Lord, I have sinned against Thee; forgive me.' And a voice came to him and said unto him, I will only cast thee off when thou despisest thy brother in the time of his trial." And this father Abbâ BÂYMÔN also said, "If we cover over the sins of our brethren, God will cover over our sins." And this holy father lived all his days a life of spiritual fighting, and devotion to God, and he arrived at a good old age and pleased God and died in peace. Salutation to thee, O mortal tongue of the seven brethren who refused to see their mother.

On this day also died LIBERIUS, Archbishop of the city of Rômê. This holy father was appointed over the city of Rômê in the days of ḲUĔNESṬÂ (CONSTANTINE), the son of ḲUĔNESṬÂ (CONSTANTINE). And ḲUĔNESṬÂ (CONSTANTINE) [fol. 159*a* 1] having driven his brother, the apostolic Saint ATHANASIUS, from the throne of the city of Alexandria, and having also driven out PAUL, Archbishop of the city of Constantinia, the two of them came to this father LIBERIUS and asked him to help them. And he received them and brought them to the Emperor ḲUĔNESṬÂ (CONSTANTINE), and he wrote for them from himself a letter to his brother ḲUĔNESṬÂ (CONSTANTINE), and commanded him to receive them. And he wrote for them a letter to his brother ḲUĔNESṬÂ (CONSTANTINE) that he might help them. And when the Emperor ḲUĔNESṬÂ (CONSTANTINE) read the letter of his brother ḲUĔNESṬÂ (CONSTANTINE), and the letter of this holy father LIBERIUS, he received them, and set them upon their thrones as before. And when ḲUĔNESṬÂ (CONSTANTINE) was killed in the city of Rômê, ḲUĔNESṬÂ (CONSTANTINE) sent to this Saint LIBERIUS, and asked him to help him, and to drive the apostolic ATHANASIUS out of the city of Alexandria, and to receive the Arians, and he made him many promises. But LIBERIUS did not accept this petition, and he would come to no agreement with him, and the emperor banished him to a remote region; and then he sent and slew the murderer of his brother. And after this he went to the city of Rômê, and with him were the heads of the monasteries and the chief priests, and they begged him to make this father LIBERIUS to come back from exile to his archiepiscopal throne in the city of Rômê; and he accepted their petition, and commanded him to return to his office. And having returned to his archiepiscopal throne, this father taught always his flock to be strong in the True Faith. [fol. 159*a* 2] And he composed many Homilies and Admonitions, and he resisted the followers of ARIUS, and excommunicated them, and drove them out until he died; and he sat on his archiepiscopal throne for seven years. Salutation to Abbâ LIBERIUS the archbishop.

V. PÂGUĔMÊN

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died the pure and holy virgin, Abbâ JACOB, Bishop of the city of MĔSR (CAIRO). The soul's desire of this fighter from his youth up was to wear the holy garb of the monastic life, which is the apparel of the angels. And he went forth from his city, and departed to the desert of SCETE, that is to say, to the monastery of Saint Abbâ MACARIUS, and he took up his abode in a cave close by Saint Abbâ JOHN the Short; and he devoted himself to God and fought the spiritual fight for many years, and he was appointed Archdeacon of the church of Saint JOHN. And the report of his virtues, and his knowledge, and his sanctity was noised about, and God chose him, and he was appointed Bishop of the city of MĔSR (CAIRO). And having taken his seat upon the throne of his office, he added to his fasting, and prayer, and asceticism, and fighting of the spiritual fight, and he did not diminish through [the duties of] his office his former fight. He taught his people continually, and he read the Scriptures to them, and he explained [fol. 159*a* 3] the obscure passages in them, and he admonished them for continuing to commit sin; and he excommunicated them and repelled them from receiving the Holy Mysteries until they repented. And when he had finished his good fight, he fell sick of a slight illness, and he summoned his flock and taught them to hold fast the True Faith. And he summoned the priests and commanded them, saying, "Take heed that ye be not negligent at the time of celebrating the Mysteries," and he made them to know that they would deserve great punishment if they were negligent about the celebration of the Holy and Divine Mysteries, and if they did not minister in holiness, and in the fear of God. And he said unto them, "I am innocent of your sins." And then he made the sign of the Cross over his face and eyes, and stretched out his hands, and made the sign of the Cross, and he covered his eyes with his hands and died in peace. And they wrapped him in a beautiful shroud which was worthy of bishops, and they made a great lamentation over him, and they buried him in the tomb of the fathers, the Bishops. Salutation to JACOB, Bishop of MĔSR (CAIRO).

And on this day also died the great Prophet AMOS, the father of ISAIAH the prophet, one of the Twelve Minor Prophets. This righteous man prophesied in the days of the kings of Israel, [fol. 159*b* 1] JOASH, AMOS, and UZZIAH; and all the days of his prophesying were fifty years and more. And he admonished the children of Israel and their kings, and the kings of Judah, and he told them that God would not accept over many offerings, nor the things which they did not offer up to Him in the days of MOSES the prophet. And he prophesied concerning the Passion of our Lord, and concerning the darkness of the sun on that day, and concerning the lamentation and sorrow which should come upon the children of Israel after this; and how their festivals should be turned into [days of] sorrow, and their joy into weeping; and how they should lack the help of God; and how they should hunger and thirst through the lack of teaching and knowledge; and how they should be scattered in all countries among the nations; and how they should be driven about like spelt. And all these things were fulfilled upon them, for they dwell [scattered] in the world unto this day. And it is said that the people killed him when he rebuked them overmuch for their sins. And he prophesied before the coming of our Lord Christ sixty (read six) hundred years before the coming of our Lord. Salutation to AMOS the prophet.

And on this day also died the holy, and blessed, and chaste Abbâ BARSÛMÂ, the "Naked," the son of TÂBÂN. This saint had God-fearing parents in the city of MĔSR (CAIRO), and they entreated pilgrims kindly and walked in the [fol. 159*b* 2] way of God; and they were exceedingly rich in gold and silver, and they had many possessions. And when they got this blessed son they called his name "BARSÛMÂN," and brought him up in the fear of the Lord, and taught him the Doctrine of the Books of the Church. And when his parents finished their days at a good old age, and died in peace, the brother of the mother of this saint took all the money which BARSÛMÂN'S parents had left. And when this Saint Abbâ BARSÛMÂ (sic) saw how he had seized his parents' money, he meditated in his heart about this fleeting world, and said, "Our Redeemer saith in His holy Gospel, 'He who wisheth to save his soul, let him cast it away, and he who hath cast away his soul for My sake shall find it. What shall it profit a man if he hath gained the whole world, and destroyed his soul? And what shall a man give [as] a ransom for his soul? Verily, verily, I say unto you, the Son of the children of men shall come in the glory of His Father, with His holy angels, and shall reward each one according to his works (Mark viii, 35 f.).'" And the saint went outside the city, and did as JOB the Just did, and sat upon a dust heap for five years, in the heat of summer and the cold of winter, and he wore no clothing on his body, but went naked; and his loin-cloth was made of hairy sackcloth. And he said unto his soul, "O BARSÛMÂ, know thou that thou must stand naked before God." And he devoted himself frequently to fasting, and prayer, and bowings, and vigil, by night and by day, for seven days at a time ceaselessly. And he ate [nothing but] dry bread soaked in water, and at length his body dried up, and his skin stretched itself tightly over his bones. And then he said unto himself, "I will [fol. 159*b* 3] rise up and will depart from this place, so that men may not know me, and award to me the vain praise of this world." And he departed from that place, and came to the church of Saint MERCURIUS in MĔSR (CAIRO), and he dwelt therein and fasted (?) for three and thirty years. And there was a large serpent in a well which was in that church, and men were unable to light the lamp through fear of that snake. And God willed to make manifest the righteousness of this righteous man, Abbâ BARSÛMÂ, and to make signs and wonders to appear at his hands. And the saint went into that cave, and stood up and prayed to God, saying, "O my Lord and God, Jesus Christ, the Son of the Living God, Who hath given unto us power to tread upon serpents and scorpions, and all the might of the Enemy, I ask Thee now to make me strong over this serpent which is in this cave, for Thine is the glory for ever and ever, Amen." Then he sealed himself with the sign of the Honourable Cross, and he sang the psalm, saying, "Thou shalt be strong against the wolf and the serpent, thou shalt tread upon the lion and the serpent" (Psalm xci, 13), and having finished his singing, he seized the serpent with his hand, and said unto it, "Henceforth be blessed! And thou shalt not have power and might over any man, and thou shalt do no evil whatsoever to any man, but thou shalt be subject and obedient to what I shall say unto thee." And straightway that serpent coiled itself at the feet of this saint, even as the lions crouched before DANIEL the prophet in days of old. And this saint fought a great fight against hunger and thirst, and he used to fast two and three days [fol. 160*a* 1] at a time, and after this he fasted for a whole week, without cessation or negligence.

And the light shone upon him, and when he stood up to pray the serpent would go away from him, and when he sat down and called the serpent it would come to him. And there was a spring of water in that place wherefrom water flowed unceasingly in the winter season, and in the period of cold, and he used to stand up [in it] from sunset to sunrise, continually; and he used to eat dry bread, and food which had gone bad, and was full of worms, and had been thrown away, and he drank dirty water. And in those days there took place a period of great persecution of the Christian people in the country of Egypt. And he passed all his time in reading the Books of the Church, and especially the Psalms of DAVID, and the histories of the ascetic labours of the fathers and the stories of their abstinence. And because of this he loved the life of abstinence and purity, and he spake to men profitable words, saying, "Without purity no man can see the kingdom of God, and all his sin shall God forgive when he hath acquired purity." And this saint stood up and prayed, and entreated God by day and by night for seven days, and God received his petition, and he taught the people Christianity. And God performed many signs and miracles by his hands, and on many occasions made manifest to men his extraordinary spiritual fight. [fol. 160*a* 2] His presence was handsome, and he was of fine appearance, and his face was joyful; he rejoiced in being without a bed, and he possessed nothing whatsoever of this world's goods. He wore a tunic only, but he was [otherwise] naked, and his head was uncovered and he covered his body with apparel which was in rags. And he endured the heat of summer and the cold of winter, and he laid no bed between his body and the ground, and he fought the fight that he might reach the Heavenly Garden. And he found trouble through evil men and devils; who is able to explain it? And in spite of this he gave thanks to the Lord Jesus Christ Who helped him in this difficult work. And whilst following this course men heard of the glorious report of him, and everywhere men loved him. He was the comforter of the old men, and of those who were in trouble and misery, and of him that had been tripped up by the enmity [of Satan], and of him whom the temptation of the Enemy or of an evil man had found;

such an one used to seek and find with him healing. And having spent thirty years in his spiritual fight, and pleased God, he died in peace on the fifth day of the month of Pâguĕmên in the one thousand and thirty-third year of the Martyrs (A.D. 1317). And after his death JOHN the priest, his disciple, thought in his soul and said, "Who is there that shall comfort men after our father BARSÛMÂ?" "Abbâ BARSÛMÂ had knowledge through the Holy Ghost," saith his disciple. And he answered saying with his holy mouth, "Know, O my brother JOHN, I am far from all those who call me by my name, and unto all who say unto me, 'Abbâ BARSÛMÂ, the son of TÂBÂN,' I say, 'Behold I will fulfil for him everything which he wisheth with our Lord Jesus Christ.'" And then this holy father looked towards his left hand and said, "Behold, they have made the reckoning about us, and they have not found against us any evil thing." And after this [fol. 160*a* 3] he said unto his disciple ABRAHAM, "Give me a knife or a razor," and he cut off his tongue therewith, and cast it away, and he began to sing, saying, "The Lord illumineth me, and delivereth me, who then shall make me afraid?" (Psalm xxvii, 1)—to the end [of the Psalm]. And he sealed his face with the sign of the Honourable Cross, and delivered his soul into the hand of God, and the angels of light carried it up to the Garden of Joy. And he departed to God, Whom he loved, and he dwelt with the righteous in the Garden of Delight in the kingdom of the heavens. And the monks wrapped him up in pure white woollen cloths, and they took him and laid him in the church. And Abbâ JOHN, the eightieth Archbishop of the city of Alexandria, came, together with priests, and deacons, and the nobles of the city of MĔSR (CAIRO), and a great many Christian folk, and they made a procession in his honour with singing and instruments of music, and they buried him; and they made great mourning for him many days. Salutation to Abbâ BARSÛMÂ.

And on this day also died Abbâ MAḲDER. Salutation to MAGDER (sic).

VI. PÂGUĔMÊN

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

[fol. 160*b* 1] And if the month of Pâguĕmên containeth six days he (i.e. the priest or monk) shall read the following; and if it hath only five days, he shall read it likewise.

On this blessed day, O believing, beloved, and orthodox brethren, it is meet that ye should magnify our Lord Jesus Christ and His honourable Blood, and that we should praise God the Most High, and multiply His praises, and exalt His highness exceedingly, because He hath given unto us the grace of His goodness and the greatness of His compassion, which have brought us to this hour, which is the end of the revolution of the year of mercy of Egypt, and of Ethiopia, and Nubia. And we are sound and healthy in our bodies and souls, and we are strong in the True Faith, following our holy fathers. And God sheweth patience towards us, and He hath mercy upon us, and He waiteth for us to turn from our transgressions and from our evil works. And He doth not destroy us, as He destroyed many nations who were before us, but He abideth us patiently, and He waiteth for us to turn from our sins, and our transgressions, and our folly, and for us to rouse ourselves up out of our sluggishness, and for us to rise up from our fall. And it is meet that we should weep before Him, and cry to Him to set aside His abomination of our transgressions, and our many sins, and that we should ask Him to strengthen us in the True Faith in this world, and in that which is to come, and during all the days of our life, and to preserve us from the snare [fol. 160*b* 2] of Satan, our Enemy, so that we may arrive at the end of this coming year, and that we may be strong in the True Faith, and joyful in good works, and healthy in our bodies. And let us ask Him to give rest to the souls of those who have died among us, and may He set grace in our country, and bless our land, and bring us into our abode in houses in joy, and in peace, for ever and ever. Amen.

PREFACE

The want of a translation into some European language of the ETHIOPIC SYNAXARIUM (MAṢḤAFA SĔNKĔSÂR) has been long felt by students of the Literatures of Oriental Christianity. For none of the extracts printed in Ethiopic, and none of the general descriptions of that work in German or English that are found in the published accounts of Ethiopic Literature, have succeeded in giving a true idea of the nature and scope and variety of the contents of that voluminous work. For some years Bruce's incorrect and contemptuous description of the "Synaxar" (see p. xxxiii) prevented students from examining the manuscripts of the MAṢḤAFA SĔNKĔSÂR for themselves, and it was not until Dillmann and Professor William Wright of Cambridge had published lists of the contents of the Codices in the British Museum and Bodleian Library, that the historian and theologian regarded the work as worthy of serious study. Wright was no sentimental admirer of the literature of miracles, whether Ethiopian or European, but he certainly did regard the MAṢḤAFA SĔNKĔSÂR as a work of very considerable historical and religious value. On many occasions in 1882 and 1883, when reading with him the extracts from it in the section "De viris sanctis" in Dillmann's Chrestomathia Aethiopica, he impressed upon me the importance of reading the whole work for the sake of the historical facts which were to be found in it throughout. As Wright had read through, for cataloguing purposes, the whole of the 350 manuscripts which the British Army brought back from Maḳdalâ, I regarded and, having read through the book, still regard his opinion as incontrovertible.

The first to conceive the idea of publishing the MAṢḤAFA SĔNKĔSÂR in its entirety was, I believe, the late Marquess of Bute. In 1895 he decided to publish the Ethiopic text with an English translation, and commissioned me to undertake the work, which I began forthwith and continued for nearly two years. (For further details see p. xxxv.) In 1897 M. L'Abbé Graffin brought before the Oriental Congress, which sat in Paris that year, a proposal for the publication of the text of the MAṢḤAFA SĔNKĔSÂR with a French translation, and as his plan was generally approved by the Orientalists he began to take steps to carry it out. He obtained the help of four distinguished Ethiopic scholars, and each undertook to edit and translate a section dealing with three months of the year. Their work was to be published in various fasciculi of the Abbé Graffin's great work the Patrologia Orientalis. On hearing of this decision I felt that any attempt I could make to compete with such a syndicate of scholars must fail. I abandoned the work, and at the wish of Lord Bute prepared for publication the edition of the Contendings of the Apostles (Gadla Ḥawâryât) which appeared in 1899 and 1901. The progress in the publication of the Abbé Graffin's edition has been slow, and now, nearly 30 years after the sanction of his proposal by the Oriental Congress, little more than a half of the MAṢḤAFA SĔNKĔSÂR has been printed by him. As the need for a translation is greater than ever it was, it seemed to me that, without unduly trespassing on a field of work marked out so long ago by other students, I might publish my complete English translation of that highly interesting work which had lain among my papers for about 11 years.

The translation printed in the following pages has been made from the famous Codex in the British Museum (Orient. Nos. 660 and 661) which was copied by the scribe Takla Hâymânôt in one year and one month. It was begun in the 21st year of the reign of Fâsîladas, King of Abyssinia (A.M. 7147 = A.D. 1654–55). The manuscript is well written, and Takla Hâymânôt was evidently a competent scribe; here and there he omits words, and even whole lines, but the manuscript is one of the best examples of the Second Recension of the MAṢḤAFA SĔNKĔSÂR to which it belongs. The few passages which contain faulty or defective readings are indicated by dots .... The translation has been made as literal as possible, and the Ethiopic text of the manuscripts is so good that only a few passages have needed paraphrasing. The proper names are a subject of considerable difficulty. The Ethiopian scribe made his translations of them from the Arabic version of the Jacobite Synaxarium, in which many Greek and Roman names appear in corrupt forms. In some of the sections two or three, and even four, different forms of the same name will be found. And many of the saints who are commemorated I have found it impossible to identify.

The MAṢḤAFA SĔNKĔSÂR is a vast storehouse of Christian legends and traditions and popular folk-lore, and as a whole it illustrates clearly the history of Egyptian, Nubian and Ethiopian Christianity for a period of about thirteen hundred years. Some of the historical statements made in it are incorrect, facts are distorted, the actions of religious opponents are misrepresented, the sufferings and numbers of the martyrs are exaggerated, and the miracles out-miracle those recorded in the Old and New Testaments; but in spite of all this the work is full of interesting information, much of which is found nowhere else. The esteem in which the book was held in Abyssinia is proved by the existence of the large number of copies of it which are now preserved in the great libraries on the Continent and in England. The full history of its origin and growth and development has yet to be written, but this can hardly be done until the whole of the Ethiopic text has been printed.

In the Introduction to this translation the reader will find sections in which the compilation and the general contents of the MAṢḤAFA SĔNKĔSÂR are described, and the lists of the Patriarchs of Alexandria, Antioch and Constantinople, and the Popes of Rome, with their dates, which have been drawn up and checked with the aid of the invaluable work of M. Chaine, will be found useful for chronological purposes. The Index of proper names and things has been made tolerably full, for to a work of such miscellaneous contents an Index of this kind is absolutely necessary. The reading of the proofs has been a laborious task, but I have been greatly helped by the readers of the Cambridge Press, whose skill and accuracy are well known, and I am grateful for their suggestions and help. And my thanks are due also to Mr S. C. Roberts, Secretary to the Syndics of the Press, and to their printer, Mr Lewis, for the care they have shewn in the production of this book.

INTRODUCTION

THE ETHIOPIC SYNAXARIUM. ITS COMPILERS & CONTENTS

(MAṢḤAFA SĔNKĔSÂR መጽሐፈ፡ስንክሳር፡)

The ETHIOPIC SYNAXARIUM or "Book of the Saints of the Ethiopian Church," as I have called the present translation of the work, contains the histories of angels and archangels and their dealings with men, and narratives of the lives of the patriarchs, prophets, apostles, archbishops, bishops, anchorites, coenobites and famous ascetics who lived in the deserts of Egypt and Ethiopia. These histories and narratives were translated into Ethiopic (Gĕ'ĕz) from Arabic; the Arabic versions were made from "Lives of Saints" written in Coptic, and these were in turn translated from Greek and, sometimes, Syriac originals. Most of the saints commemorated in the MAṢḤAFA SĔNKĔSÂR were martyrs. The great ascetics, e.g. Anthony and Pachomius, are belauded, but the names of very few of the famous solitaries and anchorites whose lives are given by Palladius in his "Paradise of the Fathers" find mention in the Ethiopic work. It is quite certain that the compilers of the SĔNKĔSÂR had knowledge of the founders of the monastic life who lived in the Scete Desert, and in Akhmîm and Aswân and other places in Upper Egypt, because we find Ethiopic versions of the histories of them, and of their "Sayings" and "Questions and Answers," in the "Gannat" ገነት፡ (i.e. "the Garden," or "Paradise"), and in "The Book of the Histories of the Fathers" መጽሐፈ፡ዜናሆሙ፡ለአበው፡ (Brit. Mus. MS. Orient. No. 766), "The strife of the Holy Fathers" ገድለ፡አበው፡ቅዱሳን፡ or the "Garden of the Monks" ገነተ፡መነኮሳት፡ (Brit. Mus. MS. Orient. No. 763). Speaking generally the MAṢḤAFA SĔNKĔSÂR is the Ethiopian Book of Martyrs.

In the title of the Ethiopic work the compilation is said to have been made by "the honourable father Abbâ Mîkâ'êl (Michael), Bishop of the city of 'Atrîb and Malîg አትሪብ፡ወመሊግ፡ and the honourable father Abbâ John, Bishop of Bûrles ቡርልስ፡ and the other holy and honourable Fathers who collected materials for the SĔNKĔSÂR from the old lives of saints and martyrs." Of the life of Michael, Bishop of Athribis nothing is known, and it is not very certain when he lived, but there seems to be no doubt that a bishop of Athribis called Michael was the compiler of the Jacobite Synaxarium (see Vansleb, Hist. de l'Église d'Alexandrie, pp. 333–335). He must have been a man of great learning and his see was so important that we may justly assume that he possessed great authority in the Jacobite Church of Egypt. Athribis was a very ancient city, and it was the capital of the Xth nome of Lower Egypt; it was situated in the south of the Delta between two of the branches of the Nile, and not far from Banhâ. The ancient Egyptians called the city Ḥe-t ta ḥer ȧb  i.e. "House of the middle land," and from this name are formed the Coptic ⲁⲑⲏⲃⲉ, the Arabic اتريب Atrîb, and the Assyrian Kha-at-khi-ri-bi 𒄩𒀀𒄭𒄿𒁀𒄿𒊑𒁀. The chief goddess of the nome Athribites was Hathor, and when the Egyptians in the Delta adopted Christianity the Virgin Mary took her place in the religious system of the people. In the seventh century of our era there was a very famous church dedicated to the Virgin Mary at Athribis, and according to an Arabic MS. in the Bibliothèque Nationale it was built of stone and was 160 cubits (i.e. about 270 feet) in length. It had four doors, and there were in it 160 pillars. The sculptured apse and altar were decorated with gold and silver inlayings, and it contained a silk-clad figure of the Virgin inlaid with semi-precious stones, and portraits of Michael, Gabriel and other angels. The lamps and candelabra were made of gold and silver and the lights in them burned continually. (Amélineau, Géog. de l'Égypte, pp. 67, 68.)

The situation of Malîg, which formed part of the diocese of Michael, one of the compilers of the SĔNKĔSÂR, is not easily defined. Malîg is undoubtedly the ⲙⲉⲗⲉⲇ (Meledj) of the Copts and the مليج (Malîg or Malij) of the Arabs. But we also find the form Mêdjêl ⲙⲏⲇϫⲏⲗ in Coptic, and this is given as a variant of ⲙⲉⲗⲉⲝ. In a list of the Bishops of Egypt quoted by Amélineau (op. cit. p. 244) we have this equation:

ⲙⲉⲧⲉⲗⲟⲥ = ϯⲫⲁⲕⲓ ⲙⲁⲍⲏⲗ = فوة كرسى وهى مصيل, that is to say, Metelos is the town Madjêl, that is Maṣîl, which is Fuah. Metelos (the Metêlis of the Greeks) is no doubt Meledj, or Mêdjêl, or Madjêl, or Melîg, or Malîg, and it seems certain that Maṣîl and Madjêl are one and the same town, the transcription of ⲍ dj by ص ṣ being due to the local pronunciation. The town or village of Fuah was added to the diocese of the Bishop of Athribis when the importance of Metelos declined.

Of John of Bûrles, the collaborator with Michael the Bishop of Malîg, nothing much is known except that he was Bishop of Bûrles; he is mentioned in the Jacobite Synaxarium in the section dealing with the 19th day of the month of Kihak (see Vansleb, op. cit. p. 18). The town of Bûrles was situated on the side of the great lake of the same name, between Damietta and Rosetta. The diocese was very old, for Athanasius, the bishop of the day, attended the Council of Ephesus. (Amélineau, Géog. de l'Égypte, p. 104.) The little town had various names, i.e. Parallou, Nikedjouaou and Paralia, for in a list of bishops we find that ⲡⲁⲣⲁⲗⲗⲟⲩ = ⲡⲓⲕⲉϫⲟⲩⲁⲟⲩ = ϯⲡⲁⲣⲁⲗⲓⲁ = البرلس, or Al-Burles or Al-Burlos. From this it would seem that Bûrles was the name of a district rather than a town. John was the author of a work on the Ordinances of the Church and the Orthodox Faith, and copies of it are extant in Brit. Mus. Add. 16219, Fol. 234 (Dillmann, Catalogus, No. XIV, p. 19), and Orient. No. 784, Fol. 193 (Wright, Catalogue, No. CCCXLIV, p. 234), and a Paris MS. (Éth. III, Zotenberg, Catalogue, p. 124, § 64).

According to the manuscripts of the MAṢḤAFA SĔNKĔSÂR the date of the making of the compilation is somewhat uncertain. The Paris Codex says that it was made in the 903rd year of the Era of the Martyrs, i.e. A.D. 1187 (Zotenberg, Catalogue, p. 152). The British Museum Codex translated in the following pages dates the compilation in the year 963 of the Era of the Martyrs, i.e. A.D. 1247 (Orient. 660 and 661, Wright, Catalogue, p. 152). This same date is also found in Brit. Mus. MS. Add. 16218, ፱፻፮፻ወ፮ዓመተ፡ሰማዕታት። (Dillmann, Catalogus, p. 45, col. 2). In the Oxford Codex the date given is the 983rd year of the Era of the Martyrs ፱፻፹፫ ዓ.ም: i.e. A.D. 1267 (Dillmann, Catalogus Codicum Manuscriptorum Bibliothecae Bodleianae Oxoniensis, p. 37). But it is quite possible that the scribe wrote ፹ (80) instead of ፷ (60). Other writers mentioned by Zotenberg (op. cit. p. 152) state that Michael, Bishop of Athribis, lived about the 1141st year of the Era of the Martyrs, i.e. A.D. 1425. Thus according to one MS. the compilation was made in the last quarter of the twelfth century, and according to others in the first quarter of the fifteenth century; the earlier date is probably the more correct, and it is quite possible that the latest date given for the compilation of the work may refer to a second Recension of the MAṢḤAFA SĚNKĚSÂR.

The compilers of the ETHIOPIC SYNAXARIUM readily understood that none of the faithful, however pious, would have either the time or patience to sit down and read from beginning to end the voluminous work which they had translated and edited, and they therefore arranged its contents in such a way that they might be read piecemeal. Very few private individuals could ever hope to possess a complete copy of the SYNAXARIUM, for only kings and governors or very rich men could afford to slaughter whole flocks of sheep or goats in order to obtain the skins on which the work was to be written, or would possess money enough to pay the scribe, or scribes, for their labour, which would extend over many months. The churches in some of the great monasteries possessed copies of the SYNAXARIUM, and it was ordered that in these a section of the work was to be read daily, either to the clergy in the monasteries or to congregations of the laity. The king, or the wealthy owner of a copy, no doubt arranged that his private chaplain should read to him a section each day, just as wealthy Muslims caused a number of the Surahs of the Ḳur'ân to be read in their houses or courtyards daily. The ETHIOPIC SYNAXARIUM is usually bound in two or four volumes. When in two volumes the first contains the lives of the saints and martyrs which were to be read during the first six months of the Abyssinian year, and the second those which were to be read during the second six months and the intercalary month at the end of them. The names of the months and the approximate equivalents of the first days of each in the seventeenth century according to our reckoning are as follows:

1st day of MASKARAM	= September 8.
1st day of ṬĔḲĔMT	= October 8.
1st day of KHĔDÂR	= November 7.
1st day of TÂKHSHÂSH	= December 7.
1st day of ṬĔR	= January 6.
1st day of YAKÂTÎT	= February 6.
1st day of MAGÂBÎT	= March 7.
1st day of MÎYÂZYÂ	= April 6.
1st day of GENBÔT	= May 6.
1st day of SANÊ	= June 5.
1st day of ḤAMLÊ	= July 5.
1st day of NAḤASSÊ	= August 4
1st day of PÂGUĔMÊN	= September 3.

The Codices of the SYNAXARIUM which have come down to us shew that the work was usually bound in two volumes; the finest example in four volumes known is the Oxford Codex (Dillmann, Catalogus, Nos. XXII–XXV). One volume of a set of four containing the months Tâkhshâsh, Ṭĕr and Yakâtît is described by Zotenberg, Catalogue, No. 127, p. 178.

The number of the saints whose lives or martyrdoms are described, or whose festivals are commemorated, and of those to whom Salutations are addressed, is considerably over one thousand.

The lives and descriptions of the martyrdoms of the saints vary in length from a single column of text to several folios. The narratives of the Patriarchs are based on the Old Testament, and those of the Apostles partly upon the Four Gospels, and the well-known Apocryphal Acts of the Apostles, especially those which are found in the "Gadla Ḥawâryât."[1] The compilers of the SYNAXARIUM were acquainted with the famous old work, the "Cave of Treasures," which is attributed to Ephrem the Syrian, but whether in the original Syriac or an Arabic translation is not clear (see p. xxii). The sources of a large number of the legends incorporated in the work have still to be traced, but it is clear that some were derived from books containing stories of Persian, Babylonian and Egyptian origin. The principal object of the compilers of the MAṢḤAFA SĔNKĔSÂR was to instruct believers in the doctrines of the Orthodox Faith as understood by the Jacobite Church, that is to say that Christ, the Word of God, was of one Nature, One Person, and One Essence with the Father. The faithful were to abhor and hold as accursed the doctrine of the Two Natures as promulgated by Nestorius and his associates, and the, to the Jacobites, abominable sayings and writings of Arius. Another object of the compilers, almost as important, was to instruct the faithful in the history of their religion, as illustrated by the lives and deaths of the martyrs; and the narratives of the saints' actions were intended to interest and amuse their hearers as well as to instruct them. The writers of these narratives often made mistakes in their historical facts, and the anachronisms in them are many; they accepted and repeated doubtful legends and traditions without question, and as a result their lives of the saints are filled with stories of incredible and impossible happenings.

The principal sections in each of the portions of the SYNAXARIUM to be read day after day deal with the lives and deaths of the saints whether Apostles or martyrs. The rank and social condition of each man are first stated, and then the circumstances which caused him to become a Christian are given. The various steps which he took in declaring his Faith are next detailed, and then follows the account of his martyrdom. After making allowance for much exaggeration it is unfortunately only too clear that in the early centuries of our era "Christian baiting" was as much enjoyed by the governors and officials who persecuted the Christians, as by the populace. The governor called upon the Christian to renounce his Faith, and to sacrifice to Apollo and Artemis or some other god or goddess, full well knowing by experience that it was useless to do so. Then the executioners or soldiers were ordered to begin their horrid work, and scenes of incredible cruelty followed. Ears and nose were slit or cut off, the teeth were smashed and the tongue cut out, red-hot borers were thrust into the eyes, and dismemberment and mutilation followed. The Christians were broken on the wheel, or roasted on an iron bed beneath which a fire was lighted, or beaten to a pulp with iron rods or whips of string and hide, or thrust into red-hot ovens, or boiled in a mixture of oil, pitch and bitumen, or scraped with combs or shells, or tied up in sacks or cast into pits filled with snakes and scorpions, or thrown to the lions, or tied up in sacks and cast into the sea, or crucified head downwards, or eviscerated, or speared to death, and their agonies were further increased by the vinegar and salt which were rubbed into their wounds. Many succumbed under these tortures, but some did not, and when, as we read, the "governor was tired of torturing" the latter he had their heads cut off with the sword. There is no reason for doubting that under the Emperors Decius and Diocletian the Christians were persecuted bitterly, but it is impossible to accept the numbers of those who suffered martyrdom as given in the SĔNKĔSÂR as correct. The roundness of some of the numbers given, e.g. 190,084, 76,000, 25,000, 90,000, 30,000, 2000, 17,000, suggests guesswork on the part of the writers of the narratives, whilst the exactness of the others, e.g. 14,730 men and 7 women, 484 men, 292 men and 49 women, 450 priests, deacons, etc. and 8490 of the laity, is suspicious.

In its oldest form the MAṢḤAFA SĔNKĔSÂR was simply a translation from Arabic into Ethiopic of the SYNAXARIUM of the Jacobite Church of Egypt, and it only commemorated the saints venerated by the Egyptian Christians. But it seems that soon after the Ethiopic translation began to be read in the churches and monasteries of Abyssinia, the scribes began to add to it the names of the saints who were specially venerated in that country. A little later still the scribes added to each of the lives of the more famous saints a Salâm ሰላም: or "Salutation," in a metrical five-lined form. Nearly all the Codices of the SĔNKĔSÂR now available for study include these Salamât or "Salutations" to the saints, and they were written in the sixteenth, seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. The oldest Codex of the SĔNKĔSÂR is No. 66 of A. d'Abbadie's Catalogue raisonné (p. 79), which, according to Guidi, was written at the end of the fifteenth century (Le Synaxaire Éthiopien, Tome I, Fasc. 5, p. 523); in this the Salamât are not found. It would seem then that the insertion of the Salamât in the SĔNKĔSÂR took place in the sixteenth century, and as they are all rhymed verses, we are justified in assuming that each was sung after the reading of the life of the saint to whom it referred, by the congregations of the monks or laity. If this were the case the singing of a Salâm at intervals would break agreeably the monotony of the reading, and help to fix the acts of the saints in men's minds. We may note in passing that in the large illustrated manuscripts containing the miracles of the Virgin Mary, each text describing a miracle is followed by a Salâm. The Salamât were in fact hymns of praise, and the singing of hymns has always formed a very important part of religious services in the East.

The Salamât in the SĔNKĔSÂR number some hundreds, and are in fact so many that in a collected form they fill a large volume. There is one collection in the British Museum (Orient. No. 534, No. 5, Fol. 153*a*–185*a*; Wright, Catalogue, p. 84) and another in the Bibliothèque Nationale (Zotenberg, Catalogue, No. 129, p. 195). The latter bears the title ውዳሴ፡ሰማያውያን፡ ወምድርያን፡ i.e. "The Praise of the Heavenly and the Earthly Beings." As the Salamât contain very little information which is not already given in the lives of the saints which they follow, I decided that it was unnecessary to add translations of them all in the present work, which is already sufficiently voluminous. But that the reader may be able to judge of their character and contents I have given translations of the Salamât for the month of Sanê, made from Guidi's text, on pp. xxxvii f. The following examples illustrate the form and rhyme of the Salâm.

1. To Bartholomew, who worked as a slave in a vineyard on the Great Oasis:

1st day of Maskaram

Salutation to BARTHOLOMEW whom they rolled into a sack.
When they were about to cast him into the deep sea,
This righteous man before the crowds of the people a miracle
Made manifest. In his hand was the similitude of a thick cluster of fruit
On a little twig which was cut off the stem of an old vine.

2. To Abbâ Matthew who dwelt in the desert:

Salutation to MATTHEW who lengthened his stay in the desert
Until he was covered with hair like a sheep (or, goat).
In order to shew his righteousness and his glorious miracles,
He washed the unclean body of MARMEHNÂM in the water of baptism,
And at the same time cleansed the body of SÂRÂ of leprosy.

1st day of Pâguĕmên

Salutation to EUTYCHES who was called the friend
Of the Evangelist JOHN, who had endued him with the purity of the angels.
The wicked governor having, because of the Faith, cast him [to the beasts], Neither the lions could touch him, nor the fire seize him,
For his guardian, the angel, shielded him from all harm.

The compilers of the MAṢḤAFA SĔNKĔSÂR drew their information from many sources. The chief authority for the lives of the Patriarchs and Prophets was the Old Testament, and Psalms and the Books of the Prophets, both major and minor, are frequently quoted. For the lives of the Apostles and the Seventy-two Disciples, the Four Gospels were drawn upon, and some work similar in contents and character to the Gadla Ḥawâryât or The Book of the Contendings of the Apostles. The Gospels are frequently quoted, as well as the Revelation of St John, which has always been, and still is, a favourite book with the Abyssinians. The lives of the Jacobite Patriarchs of Alexandria are derived from the old Jacobite Synaxarium, the Arabic version of which was translated from Coptic. The lives of many of the saints and martyrs given in it were translated some from Coptic and some from Greek. The lives of Ethiopian saints were compiled from native records preserved probably in the Libraries of the great monasteries. The compilers of the Jacobite Synaxarium were acquainted, perhaps through Greek translations, with the Book of Enoch, and the Wisdom of Jesus, the son of Sïrach, and some of the early Hebrew works on Adam and Eve, Moses, and others enumerated by Mr Gaster in his Asatir, London, 1927, pp. 322 f. Portions of the early part of the "Book of the Cave of Treasures" were also known to them, but not in the original Syriac, and many passages in the MAṢḤAFA SĔNKĔSÂR suggest that the writers of the works upon which its compilers, or translators, drew, had access to all the apocryphal works which were current in Palestine, Syria, Egypt and Nubia from the sixth century downwards.

Every now and then we find passages which suggest that the writer had in his mind confused remembrances of some of the ancient legends of his country. Thus in the story of one of the miracles of St Michael the Archangel (infra, p. 988) we are told of a certain rich man whose interest it was to destroy a certain youth who was the son of a pious neighbour. After the death of the father of the youth, he took advantage of the widow's poverty which forced her to accept a gift of twenty dînârs (about £10 sterling), and to hand over her son to the rich man, who promised to feed and clothe him and employ him as his servant. Having got possession of the youth the rich man made a wooden box as long as the boy was tall, and he forced the boy into the box, and fastened the cover over him, and he carried the box to the river, and cast it into the water, and he also cast the key of the box into the river. The box floated down the river, until it reached a certain place where it grounded, and a certain shepherd seeing it arrive went and dragged it out of the water, and carried it to his house; but as he lacked the key he could not open it. Whilst pondering how he could open the box, God told him to go back to the river. He did so, and finding a fisherman there bade him cast his net in his (the shepherd's) name, and promised to buy the fish he could catch. The fisherman cast his net and brought out a large fish, which the shepherd took and paid for, and carried home. When he slit open the fish, preparatory to cooking it, he found a gold key, and after thrusting this into the keyhole of the box, he found that he could turn the lock, and so was able to open the box. To his amazement he saw the youth, who was alive, and he took him out of the box, and the youth became to him as a son. The shepherd called him "Baḥrân," because he found him in the river (Baḥr). The youth grew and flourished, and by the help of Saint Michael married the daughter of the rich man who tried to kill him, and inherited all his wealth.

In this story we have, clearly, a mixture of the old legends of Osiris, and the finding of Moses who was reared by Pharaoh's daughter, and the finding of Cyrus who was reared by a herdsman, and the finding of Sargon I who was reared by Akki the ferryman.

Elsewhere we have a story (p. 1008) which recalls an incident described in the old Egyptian story of Setna. One day when Palâmôn was going to Egypt to sell the things which he had made, Satan met him, and cast a spell upon him so that he might not call upon the Name of Christ. And he led him to a splendid city where there were gardens and ornamental waters and trees. Whilst he was walking about here wondering how he could dispose of the produce of his handicraft, a rich widow suddenly appeared and offered to buy his wares. Then she took him to her house, and bringing him up into the upper storey, she removed the basket from his head; and having made him sit down she washed his feet. The widow commanded her maidens and they brought a table and wine, and she pressed him to eat, and they ate together and drank and got drunk. The maidservants left them alone together, and the fire of lust burning hotly within Palâmôn, he forgot God and His angels, and turned to the widow and consorted with her. Later when he came to himself there was no woman, no house, no table, no people, no beasts, no water, and no garden, and his head was spinning round and he felt as if he had neither eaten nor drunk. He wept much and when he looked up he saw Satan standing by his side and grinning at him.

The old Egyptian story of which the above is a tolerably exact parallel, states that Setna Khāmuast, the son of Pharaoh Usermarā, saw a woman and became enamoured of her, and he sent a slave to her with ten pieces of gold to ask her to arrange a meeting with him. In answer, the woman, who was called Tabubu, sent him an invitation to come to her in her house in Per-Bast, where they could enjoy strict privacy. Setna took a boat and went to Per-Bast forthwith, and he found there Tabubu's house, which was splendid and stood in a garden. He passed into the garden and thence into the guest chamber, and his arrival having been announced to Tabubu, she came and received him and led him up into the upper storey, and into a room which was handsomely furnished. The floor was inlaid with lapis lazuli and turquoise, and in it stood couches covered with byssus, and many cups of gold stood on the table there. A gold cup filled with wine was handed to Setna, and Tabubu invited him to eat; perfumed unguents were brought to him, and sweet smelling incense was burnt before him in a censer. Setna spent a happy day with Tabubu, who was a woman the like of which he had never before seen. She was dressed in transparent apparel, and bewitched him to such an extent that he settled all his money on her, and had all his children slain before her so that they could make no claim on his estate at a later period. Then she invited Setna into her own apartment, and he lay down on a couch of gold and ebony with her. When he approached her she uttered a loud cry of horror, and Setna leaped up and found that he was burning hot and naked.

The Demonology of the Abyssinians was much the same as that of the Copts, who inherited many of their beliefs in devils and evil spirits from their ancestors, the so-called Pagan Egyptians. They believed in a personal Devil, who was able to take any or every form and shape at will, and who could travel with equal ease through earth, air and water. In the pictures which illustrate Ethiopic manuscripts he is usually represented as a huge black man, with large fiery eyes and long body, arms and legs; on his head is a pair of horns, and he has claws and a long tail. The Typhonic animal which represents him has also scales on his body. But the Devil, who is called Diabolos, Masṭêmâ or Satan, could assume the form of an ordinary individual, and transact business with men, especially in the matter of buying their souls from them. A typical instance of this will be found on pp. 46–48. A certain young man fell in love with his master's daughter, and asked a magician to help him to obtain his desire. The magician wrote a deed of sale of the young man's soul, and gave it to him and told him to go and stand by a grave in one of the pagan cemeteries at midnight holding the paper in his hand. This he did, and a devil appeared and led him to Satan, who made him write on the paper a statement in which he declared his belief in Satan, and denied Christ; then Satan took the paper, and the young man left him, being satisfied that he would obtain the maiden. Satan then inflamed her with lust for the young man, and she importuned her father so strongly, that he and his wife consented to her marriage with her lover. The marriage took place, and the couple lived happily together for a time, but the parents knew that their son-in-law was not a Christian, and they told their daughter so. Husband and wife went to church together, but the young man never partook of the Eucharist, and this fact grieved his wife sorely. One day she insisted that he should receive the Sacrament with her, and then he confessed to her that he had denied Christ and sold himself to the Devil in order to obtain her to wife. On hearing this the young woman went to St Basil the bishop, and entreated him to save her husband. The bishop had the young man brought to him, and succeeded in making him repeat the confession that he had made to his wife, and express the wish to be saved. Basil took the young man into his house, and shut him up in close confinement for forty days, and fed him on bread and water. Every third day he questioned the penitent and learned from him that the devils were always prowling round about his room and terrifying him, and at the end of forty days he summoned all the monks from the monasteries, and they and all the people prayed all night for the salvation of the young man, crying out to God "Have mercy upon us." Finally their prayers were answered, and the paper which the young man had written and given to the Devil fell down from above among all the people. Basil took up the paper, and unrolled it, and read it to the congregation, and then he blessed the young man and gave him the Holy Mysteries.

The little Books of the Dead which were written in the first century B.C. and the first century A.D. prove that the Egyptians had abandoned many of the beliefs which their ancestors had held in respect of the Other World. But they retained the very ancient belief in the Last Judgement, and clung to the opinion that souls would be weighed in a pair of Scales, and that those that were "light on the balance" would suffer punishment in the River of Fire. When the Egyptians became Christians they substituted God for Osiris in the Last Judgement, but they retained their belief in the pair of Scales and the River of Fire. In the pagan cult the souls of those who were condemned in the Judgement were handed over to the executioner Shesmu and his assistants, who hacked their bodies in pieces and cast their members into the River of Fire and the fire pits of Sekhet. The Christianized Egyptians substituted the Devil for Shesmu, and his fiends for the servants of Shesmu, but the fate of the damned was the same, for they were destroyed by fire. The Ethiopians adopted the views of the Copts about the Scales, and they are mentioned more than once in the MAṢḤAFA SĚNKĚSÂR (see pp. 96, 541). In one of the Miracles of the Virgin Mary we read that the soul of a certain cannibal who had murdered and eaten seventy-eight men, was weighed in the Scales, and that the one good deed which he had done, viz. giving a drink of water to a thirsty man, made it outweigh the seventy-eight murders which he had committed (Budge, Miracles of the Virgin, London, 1923, No. XXIX). The punishments of the wicked in the River of Fire in hell are minutely described in many Ethiopic apocryphal works, and in some of them we have allusions to the "worm which dieth not." The prototype of that "worm" seems to have been the "Watcher at the Bight of the Lake of Fire, who devoureth the bodies of the dead and swalloweth hearts," whose face was like that of a greyhound, and whose brows were like those of a man (Book of the Dead, XVII, Nebseni, ll. 40–1).

Details of the life of the beatified in heaven which are so abundant in the ancient Egyptian and Coptic works are almost entirely wanting in the MAṢḤAFA SĔNKĔSÂR. The righteous man and the martyr receive the crown of life when they depart from this world, and we hear nothing of the clean white apparel and sandals, and the dainty bread cakes, and the abundant beer, and luscious fruits, and the reunion of the family of which the dwellers in the Valley of the Nile dreamed. The highlands of Ethiopia lacked the flat fertile plains and the network of canals of Egypt, and therefore we find no mention of such things existing in the Ethiopian heaven. The souls of the beatified dwelt with the various Ranks of Angels, and, presumably, assisted them in praising the Persons of the Trinity.

THE CODICES OF THE MAṢḤAFA SĔNKĔSÂR

We have seen above that in some manuscripts the compilation of the SĔNKĔSÂR is said to have been made in the twelfth century of our era, and in others in the thirteenth century, and that some authorities consider that the work was not carried out until the first half of the fifteenth century. It is possible that copies in Ethiopic may have been in use in Ethiopia in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, but if so none have come down to us. Littmann in his Geschichte der äthiopischen Litteratur (Leipzig, 1907, p. 210) says that the SĔNKĔSÂR is first mentioned in the year 1495, and that as one of the authors of the work did not live until about 1425, the translation of the SYNAXARIUM into Ethiopic did not take place until the first or second half of the fifteenth century. Dr Harden (Introduction to Ethiopic Christian Literature, London, 1926, pp. 29, 69) simply repeats Littmann's statement. A great revival in the study of Ethiopic Literature took place in Ethiopia in the fifteenth century, as is proved by the manuscripts of the Gadla Ḥawâryât (Orient. 678), the History of King Lâlîbalâ of Lâstâ (Orient. 719), the Book of Prayers (Add. 11678), the Miracles of the Virgin (Orient. 650), and the Acts of Fâsîladas (Orient. 706), and it is therefore not impossible that the SĔNKĔSÂR of that century was a second Recension of that work.

The Codices of the MAṢḤAFA SĔNKĔSÂR preserved in the British Museum and Paris shew that the Abyssinians of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries usually bound the work in two volumes, but the fine Codex in the Bodleian Library is bound in four volumes (Dillmann, Catalogus, Nos. XXII–XXV), and Orient. Nos. 662 and 663 in the British Museum are two of the volumes of a set of four. The oldest half of the MAṢḤAFA SĔNKĔSÂR in the British Museum is Orient. No. 667. It contains the lives for the first six months of the year, and was written for the church of St Michael by Sarṣa Krestôs, the son of Yamâna Krestôs, during the reign of Sûsenyôs, Malak Sagad III, Selṭân Sagad I, who began to reign in 1607 and died in June 1632. The MS. Orient. 670, which contains the lives for the second half of the year, does not belong to Orient. 667, but was written about the same time. Other Codices of the seventeenth century are: Orient. 660 and 661 (dated 1654, 1655); Orient. 656 and 657 (dated 1681); Orient. 659, written by order of King John I 'Alâf Sagad, 1667–82; Orient. 666, written between 1662 and 1682; Orient. 673 and 676, written between 1667 and 1682; Add. 24180 and Orient. 674, written in the second half of the seventeenth century; and Orient. 675, written between 1682 and 1706, and perhaps also Add. 16218 (Dillmann, Cat. Brit. Mus. No. XXXIX, p. 46). To the eighteenth century belong Orient. 662, 663, 664, 665, 668, 669, and Add. 24187. Descriptions of these MSS. will be found in Wright, Catalogue of the Ethiopic Manuscripts in the British Museum, acquired since the year 1847, London, 1877, pp. 152 f.

After a careful examination of all the manuscripts of the SĔNKĔSÂR written during the first half of the seventeenth century, I decided to make a translation of the work from Orient. 660 and 661. These two fine folio volumes contain the complete Ethiopic text, and as they were written for a king who was himself a devout follower of the teachings of the Church of Alexandria, we may assume that neither pains nor money were spared in the production of this copy of the SĔNKĔSÂR, which was intended for his personal use. The two volumes contain 339 vellum leaves measuring about 19 inches by 16 inches, and of these the texts of the SĔNKĔSÂR fill 324 folios. Each page is filled with three columns of text which is written in a fine bold hand; the number of lines to the column varies from 40 to 57, the average number being 40. The titles of the main sections, etc. are written in red ink. Both volumes were written by the same scribe, as the colophons on folio 164*b* of the first Part and folio 159*b* of the second Part shew. The colophon on fol. 164*b*, col. 3 supplies the history of the making of the Codex; the text reads:

TRANSLATION

This is the Book of SĔNKĔSÂR which our King YÔḤANNES (JOHN) [he began to reign in October A.M. 7160 = A.D. 1667, and died in July A.M. 7174 = A.D. 1682] acquired when the Holy Spirit disposed him and made him anxious to hear the story of the spiritual fights, and of the deaths of the fiery martyrs, and the commemorations of the blessed righteous men, and the narratives of watchful angels, and the preaching of the Apostles who were sent forth, and the prophecies of the holy Prophets, and the stories of the perfect monks, and the messengers (or, angels) of the Spirit.

I acquired it by the help of God, the Most High (remembering Him who sware an oath unto them, saying, "Whosoever writeth the mention of their fight, and whosoever celebrateth the commemoration of them, I will blot out their sins, and I will share My kingdom with them in this world, so that they may assign to Me a commemoration in the world which is to come"), so that I might find grace, and salvation, and a place whereon to stand with those who are on His right hand, [viz.] he who wrote it on paper, and he who had it written, and explained it, and he who caused it to be read, and he who translated it into the new language, and he who hearkened unto the voice thereof with the ear of the Spirit, through the prayer of His mother MARY, who is free from all blemish. And at the same time may Jesus Christ teach us!

And its writing took place in the time of our King FÂSÎLADAS (June 1632–October 1667), who by the grace of God was called 'Âlam Sagad, when he reigned in the 21st year, the year of mercy, which is the year of the world 7147, MARK being the Evangelist, and there was no Epact that year. It was begun on the day of 'Âreb (Friday) on the 28th day of the month of Maskaram. And its ending took place in one year and one month, that is to say on the 30th day of the month of Ṭĕḳĕmt, in the period of LUKE the Evangelist, by means of great diligence, through the abundant praising of God. [It is He] Who granteth the prayer of him that hath prayed, and for him that hath made a beginning He bringeth the conclusion of what he hath planned. But may He say unto our King YÔḤANNES (JOHN) "My son, since thou hast toiled toil in thy love for Me, after thy departure [from this world] come, thou shalt be with Me that thou mayest sit for ever on My right hand."

O God, Who hast completed for us the first month, in health and in peace, do Thou likewise complete for us and shew us the end of the last month, which is the circuit of the year. And do Thou bring us again to another circuit of another year in happiness, without toil and fatigue, and without sickness and fever. And moreover, may the prayers of Thy righteous ones guard you in your lives in this world, and may the blessings of Thy martyrs be with you for ever and ever. Amen.

This Book of SĔNKĔSÂR, which belongeth to the King of Kings, 'A'ELÂF SAGAD, who is by the grace of God called JOHN, and Queen SABLA WANGÊL, behold, we have given it to the Tâbôt of our Lady MARY, the mother of God, of Gemdja Bêt that it may be for us the salvation of soul and body. Whosoever shall steal it, or damage it, or remove it by fraud from the church, whether he be King, or bishop, or governor, shall be excommunicated by the power of PETER and PAUL.

The name of the scribe who wrote the two volumes in 13 months was Takla Hâymânôt.

On foll. 2 and 3*a* of Orient. 660 is written the commemoration (for a translation see pp. lxxii f.) of King Îyâsû I, 'Adyâm Sagad, the son of John I, who began to reign in 1682 and was deposed in March 1706 and murdered in the following October. At the end of the narrative are the following encomiastic lines:

ሀብተ ፡ መንፈስ ፡ ቅዱስ ፡ ዜና ፡ ጽድቅከ ፡ በከመ ፡ ከሠተ ፡ ሊተ ።

Full details of the deeds, hymns, etc. which are found in various parts of Orient. 660 and 661 are given by Wright (Catalogue, Nos. CCXXXII, CCXXXIII, pp. 153–4).

THE PUBLICATION OF THE MAṢḤAFA SĔNKĔSÂR

There is abundant evidence in Ludolf's Historia Aethiopica that its great author was well aware that Lives of the professional Ascetics and Saints and Martyrs existed in Ethiopia (see Bk. III, chap. IV, No. 46), but no Codex of the MAṢḤAFA SĔNKĔSÂR seems to have been known to him. The List of the Sacred Festivals of the Ethiopian Church which he printed in his Commentarius (pp. 389 f.) might well have been compiled from a manuscript of this work, but as a matter of fact it was derived from a manuscript which contained a collection of the Salamât, i.e. "Salutations," i.e. the rhymed verses which were added to the Ethiopic translation of the Old Jacobite Synaxarium by John of Bûrles. The great Codices of the MAṢḤAFA SĔNKĔSÂR in London, Oxford and Paris shew that Ludolf's List is incomplete and inexact in many places, and Zotenberg's view[1] that it was compiled from a copy of the ውዳሴ፡ሰማያውያን፡ወምድርያን፡ i.e. "The [Book of] Praise of the Heavenly and the Earthly Beings," is undoubtedly correct.

In his Travels to discover the Source of the Nile (2nd ed., Edinburgh, 1805, vol. II, p. 416) Bruce gives a list of the books which were in use among the Abyssinians in his day, and of the manuscripts which he bought or had copied and brought to England. Among these was the "Synaxar" or the Flos Sanctorum "in which," he says, "the miracles and lives, or lies, of their saints are recorded at large, in four monstrous volumes in folio, stuffed full of fables of the most incredible kind. They have a saint that wrestled with the devil, in shape of a serpent nine miles long, threw him from a mountain and killed him. Another saint, that converted the devil, who turned monk, and lived in great holiness for forty years after his conversion, doing penance for having tempted our Saviour upon the mountain: what became of him after they do not say. Again, another saint, that never ate nor drank, from his mother's womb, went to Jerusalem, and said mass every day at the holy sepulchre and came home at night in the form of a stork. The last I shall mention was a saint, who, being very sick, and his stomach in disorder, took a longing for partridges. He called upon a brace of them to come to him, and immediately two roasted partridges came flying, and rested upon his plate to be devoured. These stories are circumstantially told, and vouched by unexceptionable people, and were a grievous stumbling block to the Jesuits, who could not pretend their own miracles were better established, or more worthy of belief." Bruce had some slight acquaintance with the Ethiopic language, but a perusal of the translation given in the following pages will convince the reader that Bruce either did not understand the texts he was trying to read or that his interpreter translated them wrongly for him. Be this as it may, Bruce must be forgiven his splenetic utterances in respect of Ethiopian miracles, because he brought to England and gave to the Bodleian Library one of the finest Codices of the MAṢḤAFA SĔNKĔSÂR now known, and thereby provided scholars with the material for discovering what the work really contained.

The first European scholar to describe the contents of any part of the MAṢḤAFA SĔNKĔSÂR was Dillmann, who, in his Catalogus Codd. MSS. Orientalium qui in Museo Britannico asservantur (pp. 45–6), gave a general account of the sections of the work dealing with the lives of the saints who are commemorated during the first six months of the Abyssinian year (Maskaram to Yakâtît) as found in Add. 16218. This manuscript was acquired either by the Rev. C. W. Isenberg or the Rev. J. L. Krapf, and was presented to the British Museum by the British and Foreign Bible Society. Dillmann printed the text of the title and colophon in full, but was uncertain about the date to be assigned to it; the general arrangement of the texts and the character of the writing justify us in thinking that it was written early in the second half of the seventeenth century.

In 1848 the Oxford Press published Dillmann's Catalogus Codd. MSS. Bibliothecae Bodleianae, and in this work the author gave a full and detailed account of the contents of the four large folio volumes of the MAṢḤAFA SĔNKĔSÂR which Bruce gave to the Bodleian Library (Nos. xxii–xxv, pp. 37–68). The MS. was written presumably for Tawalda Madkhan ተወልደ፡ መድኅን፡, and the scribe's name was Batra Mîkâ'êl በትረ፡ ሚካኤል፡ Though the writing is in places somewhat careless (Dillmann says minus accurate exaratus) I think the MS. was written in the reign of Îyâsû I (1682–1706) and not in that of Îyâsû II (1730–55). The palaeographic evidence suggests the seventeenth rather than the eighteenth century for the period of its production.

In 1868 Dillmann provided scholars with the means for judging the nature and character of the contents of the MAṢḤAFA SĔNKĔSÂR by publishing extracts from it in his valuable Chrestomathia Aethiopica, pp. 16–39. Section 2 of this work contained the lives of Melchisedek, Mark the Evangelist, Dionysius, Patriarch of Alexandria, Macarius, Abbâ Salâmâ, Yârêd, the musician, and Takla Hâymânôt, edited from manuscripts at Tübingen and Oxford. The texts of the lives of Abbâ Salâmâ and Takla Hâymânôt he collated with the versions of them which G. Sapeto had published in his Viaggio e Missione Cattolica fra i Mensa i Bogos e gli Habab, Rome 1857.

Early in the year 1895 the late Marquess of Bute, for whom I was copying and translating Three Encomiums on St Michael the Archangel in Coptic, and the Gadla Ḥawâryât, or Contendings of the Apostles, suggested that I should include in the series of Oriental Texts which he hoped to publish an edition of the MAṢḤAFA SĔNKĔSÂR, with an English translation. He was a profound student of the Literature of Oriental Christianity, and spent a great deal of time with me in the British Museum, where I translated for him many passages from Coptic and Ethiopic MSS. After carefully considering the matter Lord Bute came to the conclusion that he would like to begin his series of Oriental texts with the MAṢḤAFA SĔNKĔSÂR, and I therefore began to copy the Ethiopic text from the manuscripts in the British Museum, Oriental 660 and 661, which were written in the middle of the seventeenth century. I had copied more than half of the first volume (Orient. 660) when in the summer of 1897 the Congress of Orientalists took place in Paris. At one of the meetings M. L'Abbé (now Mgr) Graffin brought forward a plan for the publication of the MAṢḤAFA SĔNKĔSÂR, and it was resolved that Conti Rossini, Perruchon, René Basset and Guidi should each undertake to edit and translate one quarter of the work. Now the MAṢḤAFA SĔNKĔSÂR is a very voluminous work. The two volumes of the Codex which I was copying contain about 334 large folio leaves, and as there are three columns of text, with an average of 40 lines to the column on each page, the columns are 2004 in number and the lines 80,160.[1] It was impossible to say when I could hope, single-handed, to complete such a task, for I had only my own private time to devote to it. I therefore ceased the copying and translation of the MAṢḤAFA SĔNKĔSÂR, but did not abandon the idea of publishing an English translation of the work at some future time.

In due course the Abbé Graffin began to publish the MAṢḤAFA SĔNKĔSÂR in his Patrologia Orientalis. The first part to appear was the section for the month of Sanê, which was edited and translated by Guidi, with the assistance of L. Desnoyers (Tome I, Fasc. 5). The second part contains the section for the month of Ḥamlê, edited and translated by Guidi (Tome VII, Fasc. 3). The third part contains the sections for the months of Naḥassê and Pâguĕmên, the text edited by Guidi with a translation by S. Grébaut (Tome IX, Fasc. 4). The fourth part contains the sections for the months of Tâkhshâsh, Ṭĕr and Yakâtît, edited and translated by S. Grébaut (Tome XV, Fasc. 5, 1927). The earlier fasciculi are undated. Thus at the time of writing (Nov. 1927) nearly one half of the MAṢḤAFA SĔNKĔSÂR remains to be published in the Abbé Graffin's edition. This edition, which it is to be hoped will be completed at no distant date, will always have a special value, because it it based upon the oldest known Codex of the MAṢḤAFA SĔNKĔSÂR, viz. that which was formerly in the possession of d'Abbadie, and is now in the Bibliothèque Nationale. Further, the text has been edited and translated by competent scholars, and as regards excellence of typography and paper leaves nothing to be desired.

[1] The translation printed in the following pages contains over half a million words.

SALUTATIONS TO THE SAINTS AND MARTYRS COMMEMORATED DURING THE MONTH OF SANÊ (JUNE 5–JULY 4)

I. SANÊ

1. Salutation to LAWENTYÔS who endured tortures in his soul
Until his body was consumed, and until his skin was rent.
After DIOCLETIAN the king was removed from the earth,
They consecrated his church on this day
And transported his bones—pearls of price!—therein.

2. Salutation to JOSEPH who was called the similitude
Of the chief of the army of God.
All my bones sing to this wise man, the bearer of a gem,
The storehouse of his riches, saying
"O MARY, he is thyself."

3. Salutation to 'ASNÊT, whose splendour is like the sun,
And like the flower of the red rose, which cometh forth from its leaves.
The bees who feed her ascend on the wings of the wind,
And those who wish to inflict a wound in her Fall down upon the ground, and perish straightway.

4. Salutation to ḲAZMÂ and to his associates
Who sprang from the town of ṬÂHÂ;
Salutation to BÎFÂMÔN who fought much.
May they cleanse the untilled field of my heart so that It may never bloom with tares and sharp thorns.

II. SANÊ

5. I cry Salutation to the appearance of The body of JOHN the Baptist and the body of ELISHA unseparated.
TÊWÔFLÔS (THEOPHILUS) seeing
That they were able to deliver the heathen woman from the pangs of giving birth, [Knowing] their miraculous power, offered to them prayer and entreaty.

III. SANÊ

6. Salutation to MÂRTÂ (MARTHA), sweet of memory and fame,
Who girded on sackcloth rejecting apparel of gold.
When the doorkeeper rebuked her [saying], "Thou canst not come into the sanctuary without purity,"
He became the cause of her
Conquest of the evil thought.

IV. Sanê

7. Salutation to SANÛSÎ whose knees and hands were cut
And the soles of whose feet were hollowed out like a tree trunk.
Salutation to MARY, the lover of the pilgrim,
Who was tortured with him, and made to suffer with him before the throne [of the governor],
And with the sorcerer also who believed in the Son.

8. Salutation to JOHN, the boast of ḤARKĔLÎ and the districts round, Healer of the sick with his bones.
And Salutation to those who were with him, who fought before him,
And Salutation to those who were after him, whose blood was shed,
The brother of his mother, BÎFÂMÔN was his name.

9. Salutation to 'AḲRÔNYÔS and to DÎMÛNÂSYÂ, his sister,
To 'AMÔNÎ, and MÎNÂS, martyrs of God.
When the king cast the four of them into the pit of fire,
There came to deliver them from heaven [he who was] the salvation of the Three [Children],
The Angel of joy, GABRIEL, whose journeying is swift.

10. Unto thee, 'AMÔNYÔS, I offer Salutation,
And also to SÔFYÂ (SOPHIA), who shared [thy] pain.
For the sake of JESUS CHRIST, by His perfect will
May it be to you to rear me, an orphan,
Thou thyself being father and she the mother.

V. Sanê

11. Salutation to JACOB (JAMES) who appeared in the East,
Being in innocence the servant of God.
Inasmuch as he had prophesied against the Arian Emperor
Who had fled to the country from before his enemies,
He and his soldiers with him were consumed in the fire.

12. Salutation to ABBÂ 'ĔBSÔY, whose country was BÔḤA.
Those who extracted with a knife the muscles of his hands and his feet
When they continued their attack upon him
Submerged one half of his body in the sea
And tied the other half to a pillar, so that it might not descend [into the water].

13. Salutation unto thee, MACARIUS, chosen one,
Who for the sake of Christ died by drowning.
Before I myself descend into the valley of tears,
Come, come, Keeper of all magic (or, sorcery),
For I, the sick man, desire health from thee.

VI. Sanê

14. Salutation to thee, THEODORE, the monk,
Who wast tied by the hands and feet to the foot of a horse.
The head, which, having been cut off from thy trunk, sprang
Up into the air through the violence of the galloping [of the horse]
And flew along like the wind, God shall crown with three crowns.

15. Salutation I say to the four governors
Who satisfied the hungry with food, and gave drink to the thirsty.
When ARIANUS came and laid waste the town of 'ĔSNÂ
They were, for CHRIST'S sake, the first to go out from among Their people that they might become martyrs.

VII. Sanê

16. Salutation to 'ABASKÎRÔN who endured his trial
Up to the point that his members and his head were cut off with a knife.
To the five soldiers [slain] by the hand of 'ARMÂNYÔS, the dead man,
(For he was a stranger to the life of CHRIST), who were crowned with him,
And on whom diadems (literally helmets) were laid, I say Salutation.

17. Salutation I say [unto thee, MARY]. Thy house was opened this day.
As ELIJAH opened the gates of the rain
[After] six months and three years,
MARY be thou pleased to open my mind which is sealed,
So that upon me may be poured out righteousness and peace.

VIII. Sanê

18. Salutation I say to the consecration of thy house, built Where thy Son poured out the blessed water.
MARY, on him who prays in thy name, a name of benefit,
May there be given at all times
A beautiful gift and a perfect present.

19. Salutation, Salutation to TĔMÂDÂ and her children,
To 'ARMÂNÔS and his mother who shared honour,
Thy image and martyrdom are written in Jerusalem and round about it.
By the blood of their martyrdom may they bear for me the obligation of my debt,
When reward cometh for sin and righteousness.

IX. SANÊ

20. Salutation to SAMUEL who from his childhood grew up
In the sanctuary of God.
As when of old SAUL held him with his hand so that he might not flee,
[And] he rent his apparel,
So also did God rend his [SAUL'S] reign.

21. Salutation to LÛKYÂNÔS who acquired praise
When he endured the cruel torments of martyrdom with four [other] men,
When he would not offer sacrifice to the gods, preferring to sacrifice to the Most High.
After they smashed his jaw with stones
And the moment when they nailed him [to the cross] he delivered up his soul.

X. SANÊ

22. Salutation to SÔFYÂ and her daughters DABÂMÔN and BASṬÂMÔN who had made a pact together
To share martyrdom with WARESNÔFÂ,
YÔNÂ and his mother in the city of DENFÂ.
When I am about to fall may they encircle me [with their hands]
As the hen covereth over her young with her wings.

XI. SANÊ

23. Salutation to GALÂWDÊWÔS, who arrayed in the faith of CHRIST
Had no liking for royal apparel.
He chose to be thrust through whilst reproving the wicked governor,
Who [held] the sharp spear in his hand,
Rather than to hearken to his command and obey it.

24. Salutation to the dedication of Thy Church, JESUS our Redeemer, Which was at Alexandria.
I lift up mine eyes unto Thee, O Lord,
That Thou mayest give me freedom from the bondage of sin,
Which I await for from time to time (i.e. always).

XII. SANÊ

25. Salutation to 'AFÔMYÂ (EUPHEMIA), who vanquished MASṬÊMÂ (the Devil)
When he opposed her with lying words,
On this day, even as she wished,

Whilst laying the picture of MICHAEL on her forehead
She departed from suffering into eternal rest.

26. Salutation to MICHAEL, the merciful one,
Who ordereth the affairs of man for his good.
At the sound of the blast of the trumpet of this angel,
Even as was His ascent into heaven in olden time
So shall take place the second coming of God.

27. Salutation I say to ḲÊRLÔS (CYRIL), whose Patriarchate came by the prophecy of a righteous man.
Through the flow of the words of this teacher
Who was empty of the praise of this world, branches budded,
[And] his children dwelt in his teaching.

28. Salutation to LÂLÎBALÂ, the wise builder of sanctuaries
In dry stone without wet mortar
So that it might be known that to him would be judgeship and administration, [and that he would be]
Like honey, and the joy of kings and peoples,
On the day of his birth he was surrounded with bees.

XIII. SANÊ

29. Salutation I say to JOHN, the perfect one, Bishop in Jerusalem.
Having rejected the greatness and honour of this world,
And having given alms to the poor, without measure and without stint,
At his death not a single dirham was found [in his house].

30. Salutation to GABRIEL by whose hands were fettered
Both the angels of God and the daughters of men who had committed error together.
Because of the majesty and honour of this angel
In the country of Egypt, the doctors of the law have laid it down
That his commemoration shall be celebrated on this day.

XIV. SANÊ

31. Salutation to 'ABṬELMÂ and PÎLPÔS, the friends, [And] YÔḤANNES and 'AKRÂ from the north of Egypt.
When they stood up for martyrdom before the savage governor,
God saved them when the arrow flew
And delivered them from the fire that was waiting for them.

XV. Sanê

32. Salutation to the consecration of thy house which was built in MARYÛṬ (MAREOTIS)
By the order of the mighty king.
[O] MÎNÂS, thou hast woken up from inertness the body of the pig[1]
Which the men, each contributing two kîrât, brought
As an offering to thee, having purchased it by payment.

XVI. Sanê

33. Salutation to 'ABÛNÂFER, at the time when death came to him,
His face being changed into a likeness of fire.
After BABNÛDÂ had buried him inside the cave,
No other folk were to inherit the food which had been given to him,
For the spring of water dried up, and the palm tree fell down.

34. Salutation to you, ye many excellent ones [more in number] than the sand,
A company of sainted brethren who dwelt in the land of FÊṢA.
When your righteous habits stabbed his heart acutely
'ABÛNÂFER removed himself from the face of the world
So that his soul might become a companion of the soul[s] of the humble.

35. Salutation to thee, blessed ZA-ÎYÂSÛS, a partner in the Faith with YEKÛNÔ-'AMLÂK.
When thou didst drive away anxious care from the minds of the brethren
Thou didst throw away the wax candle,
At the same time performing the service,
And the cup of beer remained standing in the midst[1].

XVII. Sanê

36. Salutation to Abbâ LATṢÛN who, through his long drawn out suffering, was able
To bring out from punishment a man who was doomed.
Eating herbs only every third day,
Through his stern abstinence, and through the multitude of spiritual fights which he fought,
His body became as light (or, tenuous) as the air.

[1] Details of this incident are wanting.

37. Salutation to Abbâ PALÂMÔN. Having been led astray by [Satan], the lover of iniquity,
Who produced from the infernal regions phantoms of divers shapes and forms,
God, the Merciful and Compassionate,
Pardoned him his sin. A voice was sent
Which said, "I have set this (i.e. the sin) upon the head of Satan."

38. Salutation to Abbâ GARÎMÂ, who making manifest his power,
And who when fashioning seed corn provided it with ears full of grain.
From the place where this righteous man was Through the majesty of his face and the terrifying sound of his voice, Stones removed themselves and trees departed in flight.

XVIII. SANÊ

39. Salutation to the Patriarch DEMYÂNÔS, our father,
Who was zealous and careful for the ministration of the Sacrifice.
Those men who pretended that what had taken place on the Friday of the [Jewish] passover [had taken place on Good Friday],
He repelled and excommunicated so that they might not receive the Offering (Ruerbân)
Having drunk wine the whole night before.

XIX. SANÊ

40. Salutation to GEORGE, who had borne all testings.
Whilst they were opening his reins and excoriating his brain, Straightway MARY, the dove of Galilee, appeared to him.
Salutation to his wife and friend BASYULÂ,
Whose striving mingled with the sweet perfume of his strife.

41. Salutation to Abbâ NÔB BESÔY,
Which being interpreted is "refined gold."
Where he finished his martyrdom at 'ÂYNA ṢAḤAY
That he might mount upon him as on a fine horse there came to him
A lion fettered which had escaped from his keeper.

42. Salutation to 'ARSANÔFÎS, and PETER, his counterpart, And to 'ASKÊRÊWÔN, and to 'ARGÊNES, and to BÊLFEYÔS, all his friends.
When fighting for Jesus Christ,
Being hungry and thirsty they were slain,
Without eating food or supporting themselves with water.

XX. Sanê

43. Salutation to ELISHA who asked ELIJAH
For a double portion of the holy spirit when he ascended into heaven.
Having thus obtained power which was great
He was able to raise the dead twice,
And twice he divided the river.

XXI. Sanê

44. Salutation to thy house which God, thy Son,
The marvellous One, hath consecrated by His Blood.
Do thou, His mother who dost supplicate for mercy, say on my behalf,
"Destroy not the work of Thy hand, which Thou didst fashion of old, Shall the workmen have laboured in vain?"

45. Salutation to MARY. When the love for man forced her
This day whereon she made supplication for LÎTÔSTERÂ,
God, her Firstborn, swore to her
That He would deliver for ever from every trial
Those who called upon her name and celebrated her commemoration.

46. Salutation to TIMOTHY in the midst of the crowds, who declared That save Jesus Christ there was no other god.
When he paid no heed to the command of the wicked Emperor,
Having lighted a fire they boiled him in a vessel
Until his flesh melted [and became] like water.

47. Salutation to THOMAS. When after he had made to live
A woman whom they had murdered in a tavern,
He asked her to tell him whither she was going on her journey,
She said, "Since thou wast with me, behold
Why dost thou question me, thy slave?"

48. Salutation to thee, KERDYÂNÔS, who art inscribed
As the fourth in the number of the Fathers.
By reason of thy excellence, which was greater than that of any [other] man,
And baptism, and rank of the priests, rightly
Hast thou graced the blessed MARK, the stem of the Patriarchs.

XXII. Sanê

49. Salutation I say to their holy house
Which was built for them after the trouble was overpassed.
The good sons of TÊWÔDÂDÂ, and the company of ḲÔZMÔS, the martyr.

In the place of torture beatings could not kill them,
Neither was the fire able to consume them.

50. Salutation I say to PAUL, who was separated
From his harlot-wife, whose form was beautiful.
He stood upright, with none to comfort him,
Upon a stone which was made burning hot by the sun,
Until the sick man was set free from the evil spirit.

XXIII. SANÊ

51. Salutation to SOLOMON. The food of knowledge was his sustenance
And the possession of wisdom his possession.
As this king saith in his Song,
"In the month of Christ get ye out and see How the vines flourish and the pomegranate trees blossom."

52. Salutation to NÔB, who is called the "Confessor,"
The follower of the ten thousand martyrs whom DIOCLETIAN slew.
His companions who were round about him proclaimed him blessed
When they wished to wash his wounds
According to the decree made by CONSTANTINE, the righteous man.

XXIV. SANÊ

53. Salutation I say to the seven brethren
Who, together with MOSES the Black, died by the sword of the Barbarians.
One of them, through his fear, hid himself,
But when the angel who was carrying their crowns appeared to him,
His fear was turned into courage.

54. Salutation I say to MOSES the Black,
Who dwelt withdrawn into the recesses of the desert.
When calling to mind his own former evil deeds
On that very day he was slain by the sword of the Barbarians, Saying, "Without blood blood cannot be purified."

XXV. SANÊ

55. Salutation to JUDE, the servant of God,
Whose feet were pierced with a red hot spear.
Since, teaching the perfect Faith of the Gospel,
The Apostles included his Epistle with their Epistles,
His memorial is written side by side with the [memorials of the] Apostles.

56. Salutation to PETER whose Ordinances and Law were good,
Who was named governor of DABRA ZEGÂG.
Of the clear and unpolluted water of his teaching,
Which flowed over him like a river,
The young drank and the old refreshed themselves.

57. Salutation to you, PETER and PAUL, each in his turn,
Shining jewels in the foundations of the Church,
Who though being two teach one Ordinance only.
Bless ye the entrance of this winter,
And grant that the fields of this country which have been sown may be fertile.

58. Salutation to PILATE, who washed his hands
To shew that he himself was innocent of the blood of Jesus Christ.
And Salutation to 'ABRÔḲLÂ (PROCLA) his wife
Who sent him a message, saying, "Do thou no harm to Him,
For this man is good and righteous."

XXVI. SANÊ

59. Salutation to the consecration of thy house, O GABRIEL, equal of the Cherubim,
That house which was builded with wisdom in DABRA NAḲLÔN.
At each consecration it made [water] to flow from the wood of the roof.
By an abundant flow abundance was proclaimed,
And by a slight moisture only [the coming of] scarcity was made known.

60. Salutation to JOSHUA, who served MOSES so well
That he received even a double portion of his majestic spirit.
When God wished to deliver His people by his hand,
He defeated the soldiers of the king at GABÂ'ÔN sorely,
And upon those who fled He rained hail.

XXVII. SANÊ

61. Salutation to ḤANÂNYÂ on whom came, for righteousness' sake, Stoning with stones and slitting of the sides with the edge of the sword.
According as the voice of God had spoken to him from heaven,
He gave baptism to the Apostle PAUL
When the cord of mercy had drawn him from Judaism.

62. Salutation to Thy grave, which JOSEPH the councillor Dug deep, the mystery of the Faith having penetrated into him.

O Jesus Christ, wash me and baptize me with the Blood of Thy piercing,
The Blood of justification, even as ḤANÂNYÂ baptized
Paul the Jew [removing] all doubt.

63. Salutation to thee, THOMAS, who wast tortured
With mighty blows of the club sheathed with iron.
In the place wherein I am, coming without the hand [of man]
May the stone which was fastened to thy neck
Break the head of Satan my enemy like a potter's vessel.

64. Salutation to you, O ye companions of THOMAS,
Seven hundred men and nine women,
Who on the day of his suffering and martyrdom
Eagerly desired to receive with him crowns of life.
Come ye, and pay me a visit from heaven.

65. Salutation I say to the glorious consecration of thy church,
Which was builded for thee at the end of the time of persecution and suffering,
O Abbâ THOMAS, by the men of BANHÛR.
Teach me the law of humility, O thou who didst raise up the poor on earth;
For where there is pride, there also is disgrace.

XXVIII. SANÊ

66. Salutation to THEODOSIUS, who had to bear the weight
Of suffering and exile,
Whilst teaching his children the words of the Orthodox Faith
Because he did the will of Christ.
The reward of the Apostles shall be his without any diminution whatsoever.

67. Salutation to ABRAHAM, and to ISAAC his son,
And to ISRAEL JACOB, one of them.
In accordance with what God promised them when He made a covenant with them, Behold, the number of their seed is far greater than the number of the stars,
And greater than the [number of] the sands of the sea, which is very great.

XXIX. SANÊ

68. Salutation to Thy Nativity, O God Most High,
Which [took place] through the only Virgin without coition and seed.
A symbol of Thy Nativity was made known in olden time

When the earth put forth green things, inasmuch as Thou hadst commanded it to produce verdure, Without the fall of rain, and without the outpouring of the dew.

69. Salutation to you, O ye 140 saints,
Associates of Seven martyrs, ye interdicted ones.
The sharp sword and the boiling cauldron
Which they had made ready for you before the governor,
Did not make you to be afraid, though ye saw them with your eyes.

70. Salutation to BÂSADÎ, and KÔSLÂS, and 'ARDÂMÂ—three.
MOSES, and 'ĔSHÊ and BÎLÂKÂNÔS, their brethren,
And the other KÔTLÂS, who is to be added to them.
These seven interdicted ones were tortured
And died, for the sake of Christ, by the hands of drunkards.

71. Salutation to thee, O soldier BESÔY,
Whom they tied with a rope and dragged about by an ox.
I offer unto thee a sacrifice of praise, as an offering,
And to thy brother ḤÔR, and to thy mother YEDRÂ,
Who for Christ's sake suffered many tribulations.

72. Salutation to thee, O king of the country of Ethiopia, THEODORE, son of the Lion [of Judah].
Not only thy mother, ṢEYÔN MOGARÂ, celebrateth this day thy festival
With the slaughtering of sheep and oxen,
But the clouds of heaven have rained down fish.

73. Salutation to MARK. When his time had come to an end, SARÂPYÔN being then in his place DABRA TÔRMÂḴ and Reading the Holy Gospel of MATTHEW,
When the tongue of the angel of heaven said, "Stand still and listen,"
His body was lifted up in the air a height of twenty cubits.

XXX. SANÊ

74. Salutation to Thy Nativity, even as GABRIEL ordered it,
Who had declared the Nativity of Christ six months earlier.
O JOHN, each time I read eagerly the salutation of thine effigy,
Which is sweeter than incense and cinnamon.
Place it like a sheaf in thy bosom.

75. Salutation I say unto thee, O Abbâ GĔRÂN,
Who in an island did mighty deeds [of asceticism].
When Satan deceived him under the guise of a beautiful woman,
He beat in and broke his breast bones with a stone
Until he attained the share of all mortal beings.

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

COMMEMORATION OF ÎYÂSÛ I 'ADYÂM SAGAD

King of Abyssinia from 1682 to 1706

V. ṬĔḴĔMT (1)

[fol. 2*a* 1] On this day died ÎYÂSÛ I, king and martyr, who was the likeness of ABEL, whose blood was poured out through violence. JOHN, the righteous king of the country of Ethiopia, and his God-fearing Queen SABLA WANGÊL, got this [man] ÎYÂSÛ by fasting and by prayer. And when they had gotten this ÎYÂSÛ the martyr, they rejoiced in him with great joy, and they gave him to a nurse, and they reared him carefully and well. And then when he had grown a little they taught him the ordinances of the Church, and all native and foreign learning. And he became so greatly skilled as a horseman and as a swimmer in the water that all the men who were in his retinue of servants and attendants marvelled when they saw the greatness of his powers. And the holy men and monks who lived in the deserts and monasteries began to discuss with him the words of prophecy as they by the divine grace had visions of hidden things (i.e. mysteries). And they said unto him, "Thou shalt sit upon the royal throne, and thou shalt receive the royal crown of thy father." And when the men of HABÂR saw him, they became servants unto him, saying, "O noble ÎYÂSÛ, son of a king, thou lord of the stadium for horses, the oil of sovereignty of thy father JOHN is upon thy head." And then in the ninth year of the reign of the righteous King JOHN, his son JUSTUS, the righteous man, who was governor of SÂMÊN, died. And when he died his father the King and his mother the Queen, made a very great mourning, and all the people of his retinue of servants and attendants, both men and women, wept a great weeping, for he was an exceedingly just and upright man, and they buried him in the island which is called MEṢRÂḤÂ. And forty days after JUSTUS, the king's son, died the king appointed ÎYÂSÛ to the governorship of SÂMÊN, which had been in the hand of his brother, and he made him to inherit all the furniture in his brother's house, and his stables and horses, and all his weapons of war. And when four years from the time when ÎYÂSÛ had been appointed to the governorship of SÂMÊN had passed by, certain men who were in the habit of making charges against men made many accusations concerning many matters against him to his father, and at length he departed to the Land of the Nations (i.e. to a foreign country) leaving behind him his servants and attendants. [fol. 2*a* 2] And when his father and his mother heard that their son had departed from them and had gone to a far country they sorrowed with a great sorrow. And they sent to the holy men [and] monks of the deserts and monasteries, and instructed them to pray the prayer that God would bring back their son to them in safety, and that they might meet each other [again] face to face. Then four months after he had departed to the Land of the Nations, he made a pact with his father, and returned from the place where he had gone, and came into the camp (or, palace).

And then, when King JOHN had reigned for fifteen years, the time arrived when God wished to make him to rest from the toil of this world. And King JOHN fell ill of a violent disease when he was living in 'ARÎNGÔ and he came, suffering as he was from his sickness, into his fort of GWÔNDAR, which his father King FÂSÎLADAS had built. And having come into this place he died on the fifteenth day of the month Ḥamlê (July 5–August 3). And when he was dead all the nobles of the Court and his wife the Queen mourned for him with a great mourning, and they wept for him, saying, "Our King, our King, and our Lord, adorned with goodness! Wherefore hath a fleeting cloud covered the sun of thy natural body? Where shall we find [another] who is like unto thee, O noble one, the King who loved justice and accepted the person of no man? Would that it had been possible for us to have departed instead of thee so that we might have become for thee a means of redemption!" These and other things like unto them did they say, and they wept and took him away with chants and dirges and buried him in the church which is called ṢADÂ, which he built during his lifetime. And they took his son ÎYÂSÛ, and made him king, and seated him upon the royal throne of his father. And this King ÎYÂSÛ during his reign judged his people with righteousness and justice according as his father had advised him, saying, "Judge those who are poor among thy people righteously, and be a salvation to the children of thy poverty"; and all people, both alien and native, feared him, and submitted to him.

And then when he had been reigning for a short time ÎYÂSÛ the king built a beautiful church close to his palace (or, fortress) and he brought into it a TÂBÔT in the name of TAKLA HAYMÂNÔT, the light of the world. [fol. 2*a* 3] And he appointed priests thereto to recite the Offices therein and to chant the Psalms therein by day and by night; and he endowed them with an estate sufficient for their maintenance, and the name thereof was BALASÂ. And he also built on the border of the palace a large church, and he decorated (or, furnished) it with every kind of beautiful adornment, and he called its name DABRA BERHÂN. And he brought into it a TÂBÔT in the Name of the Holy Trinity, the Sustainers of the World. And he appointed priests who were to carry away the minds (or, hearts) of the people by the sweet sounds of their chanting; and he endowed them with estates sufficient for their maintenance. As for the other churches which he built and furnished with every kind of beautiful equipment, we do not know their number. If we were to narrate the accounts of the righteousness of this King ÎYÂSÛ how long would it take us to do so (i.e. think how long it would take for us to narrate them)! In his days robbery and thieves were blotted out.

And whilst he was occupied with this good work, a spiritual thought came into his mind, and he pondered on the fleeting character of this world, and he remembered the word of the Gospel which said, "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul" (Matt. xvi. 26). And he said within himself, "How long shall I remain submerged in the sea of sin? From this moment I will go to Jerusalem, and when I arrive there I will die by the tomb of my Lord." And having said these things he began to give alms to the poor and needy, and at length nothing of the wealth of his palace was left unto him. And he made his son chief of all his nobles and governors, so that he might hear in his stead the cases [which they brought to him]. And he gave unto him (i.e. his son) in writing a document containing blessings and a document containing curses, and he said unto him, "If thou wilt hearken to my counsel, and wilt walk in my commandments, the blessings which are written down in this book shall dwell upon thee; and if thou wilt not hear my counsel, and wilt not take heed to my precepts, the curses which are [here written] shall come upon thee quickly. O my son, be wise, and understand the admonitions of thy father; for the curses of a father destroy the foundations and break the bones." And having admonished his son with these admonitions and many others like unto them, he departed from his house leaving his kingdom to his son. And when the officers of the Court and all [fol. 2*b* 1] the governors who were his friends, and his kinsfolk, heard that their lord ÎYÂSÛ was departing to Jerusalem, they followed him weeping, and they said unto him, "Why dost thou leave thy flock to the ravening wolves?" And they made great lamentation before him, and they went with him as far as the ቍንጽላ፡ and they excommunicated him with the word of the bishop. And when ÎYÂSÛ the king saw the distress of the people, his heart was greatly moved, and he said unto thèm, "Why will ye break my heart and counsel me not to seek after the salvation of my soul? Henceforth the command of God shall be with you. I agree to submit to your words, and I will return and will come with you; get ye back and return to the Court." And having made peace with them he departed to the old city, and he turned back quickly and went into the island which is called KEBRÂN, and he dwelt there for a season. He fasted, and prayed, and began to recite regularly the Psalms of David, and the writings (or, songs) of the Prophets, for he knew well that the Book said, "Recite the Psalms"; and he also prayed the remaining prayers which were to be recited by day and by night. And he reduced his body by means of many prostrations, and protracted fasts. And by reason of the exceedingly great severity of his rule of abstinence, a severe disease broke out in his body which separated his members, and broke his bones. And he remained there for many days, but as soon as he was recovered somewhat from his illness, he rose up and departed from KEBRÂN, and went into DAḲ and dwelt there. And whilst he was living in the island of DAḲ, there rose up against him certain men whom he had rebuked in former times for the wickedness of their deeds. And he restored the governors of the Court, and he persuaded them with great wisdom of speech until they hid their counsel, and made his son TAKLA HAYMÂNÔT king. Now there were other governors (or, nobles) who were allied in counsel with them. And he shut up in strict confinement those who loved ÎYÂSÛ their king, because he was afraid that they would kill them. And when King ÎYÂSÛ [fol. 2*b* 2] heard that his nobles had acted improperly in respect of him, and had made his son king against his will, he was exceedingly angry. And he went forth from the island in which he was living, and he sent forth a herald, and collected a large army, and he departed and made war upon those who had wronged him and had snatched away his kingdom. But God did not wish for this thing, and He made that illness from which the king had suffered aforetime to increase. And when King ÎYÂSÛ knew that his illness had increased in him, he said, "Blessed be God, the Lord of Israel, Who hath fettered me with the chain of severe illness, so that the Christians may not be destroyed by my sword and spear; for He knoweth what is detestable and what is good." Then he began to curse his son, saying, "Another shall take thy governorship, O my son TAKLA HAYMÂNÔT, because thou hast disregarded the word of thy father. Thy glory shall belong to another, thy seed shall be blotted out from the earth, and thy children shall be orphans, and thy wife a widow. And this error shall not be done away for thy mother who hath done this thing by means of her counsel. And as for this writing of blessing which thou hast disregarded—having given unto thee that which I had written, thou wouldst have dwelt over my children who have performed my command and fulfilled my will." This and such like things [did ÎYÂSÛ say]: and he took a heavy curse and laid it upon the head of his son. Then he summoned his soldiers, and blessed them, and made peace with them and gave them permission to depart to their own towns (or, countries).

Then King ÎYÂSÛ went into the island of DAḲ, and he arrayed himself in the garb of a monk, and his sickness waxed sore in him. Now the nobles who had wronged him did not trust him, and they were greatly afraid, and thought that he was going to kill them. And having assembled secretly they plotted deeply against him—now they knew from what had happened before that he was great in counsel, and that his wisdom could not be fathomed by them. And they sent messengers and brought him out from the island of DAḲ and took him to an island called TEHÊḲLÂ MANGÔ. And when he had arrived there, he said, "Blessed be God, the Lord [fol. 2*b* 3] of Israel, my father, who hath brought me into this place, for in it my soul shall go forth from my body, and this shall be my resting-place for ever." And then he began to weep, saying, "How have I been repaid twofold by the hand of my son, the sorrow which I made my father and my mother to suffer, and the great grief wherewith they grieved." And when the men who were with him asked him to cease from his lamentation he said unto them, "Why will ye urge me when ye hear that those who sit in the gates make chatter about me, and those who drink wine make songs about me? From now and henceforward death is better for me than life." And having said this he ceased from his lamentation, and held his peace; and then he devoted himself to praying to his Creator that He would deliver him from the nets of Satan, and save him from the corruption of the Enemy. And in each of his prayers he said, "Have mercy upon me, Lord, have mercy upon me, and deliver me not over to my sin." And he bore patiently with the craftiness and fraud of the watchmen who kept guard over him. Then when two of the nobles who were called HONORIUS and JACOB heard of the strength of his counsel, and the greatness of his suffering, now they had brought in the daughters of King ÎYÂSÛ by the ordinance of the Law, they swore a mighty oath to each other, and made a covenant together. And they gathered together a large number of soldiers and men of war, and they rose up from the country of GUOJÂM, and came that they might bring their lord ÎYÂSÛ out of the island and take him back to the throne of his kingdom by their fighting. And when the King TAKLA HAYMÂNÔT heard that HONORIUS and JACOB had come to make war upon him, he feared greatly and was terrified, and he summoned his mother and all his kinsfolk and friends. And they counselled a counsel of violence—to kill King ÎYÂSÛ. And they sent DARMEN and PAUL, her brothers, to his mother, to see how the matter would happen. And having been despatched they departed quickly by the road of the river, and they came to the place where King ÎYÂSÛ was, and they brought him out from the inside of the fortress to the people of his house. And when he saw them [fol. 3*a* 1] arriving King ÎYÂSÛ said unto them, "What are ye going to do in coming hither, and what are the commands that have been laid upon you?" And straightway there reached him the voice of anger of the man of blood DARMEN, and he said unto him, "I have come to make thee king, and to establish thee as lord." And King ÎYÂSÛ answered and said unto him, "Thou hast spoken the truth. I am going to reign in heaven, for thou art going to kill me craftily; the kingdom which is of earth is a fleeting thing." And whilst he was saying these words, DARMEN smote him four times with a burning torch, and he stabbed him with the point of his javelin and he died. And the house wherein the king was they set on fire, and then they went out quickly and departed by the river road, being afraid that [some one] would kill them. Then the servants of the king's house came and dragged him out of the fire, and they began to weep for him, and to make lamentation, saying, "ÎYÂSÛ, ÎYÂSÛ, ÎYÂSÛ our king was the clothing of the naked. ÎYÂSÛ, ÎYÂSÛ, ÎYÂSÛ our lord was the food of the hungry. ÎYÂSÛ, ÎYÂSÛ, ÎYÂSÛ was the quencher of the thirst of the thirsty. ÎYÂSÛ was the mighty man and man of terror, who didst slay the peoples of the Wallô and the mighty Tûlômâ, and didst carry off their fat cattle in large numbers. ÎYÂSÛ, thou man who didst make men to fear, who didst bless the country of the black peoples of GÎSÂ and DÛBÔNÎ, and didst kill them all, and didst carry into captivity their women and little children and make them slaves. ÎYÂSÛ, the mighty man, the son of DÂWÎT (DAVID), thou didst slay ṢÎLÂMÔ, the mighty man, the second GOLIATHRA'AYATÂWÎ. ÎYÂSÛ, thou wise man, thou son of Solomon, who didst encamp in GÎBÊ four months, and thou didst come into thy country with thine army in peace and in safety. ÎYÂSÛ, who didst travel like the winds on horseback when thou wast hunting elephants and every other kind of wild beast. ÎYÂSÛ the righteous monk, the son of JOHN the righteous. How hast thou been destroyed by the hands of little (i.e. mean) men!" And saying these words they continued to weep during their watch over him for four days; and then they took him to the island which is called MEṢRÂḤ, and with psalms and dirges they buried him in the sepulchre of his fathers. May the blessing of the prayer of this ÎYÂSÛ be [fol. 3*a* 2] with his son our king ÎYÂSÛ, and with us who hear [his history] for ever and ever!

THE BOOK OF THE SAINTS OF THE ETHIOPIAN CHURCH

[Brit. Mus. MS. Oriental No. 660.]

[fol. 4 a 1] IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD, we begin by the help of God and His good gift to write the MASḤAFA SĔNKĔSÂR which is being interpreted the Collection which our holy Fathers and Teachers of the Church compiled, namely the honourable father Abbâ MICHAEL, Bishop of the city of ATHRIBIS and MALÎG, and the honourable father JOHN, Bishop of the city of BÛRLES (PARALIA): and the other holy and honourable fathers who compiled this book from all the histories of the contendings of angels, and prophets and apostles, and of righteous men and martyrs, and of holy archbishops, and monks who dwelt in the desert, so that men may commemorate them and may read their contendings every day from the dawn of the first day of Maskaram until the end of the year. The compilation of this Book took place in the nine hundred and sixty-third year of the holy martyrs (A.D. 1247). May their prayer and blessing be with our King JOHN [I, 1667–1682] and his wife SABLA WANGÊL for ever and ever. Amen.

THE FIRST MONTH—MASKARAM

(SEPT. 8–OCT. 7)

I. MASKARAM

This blessed month of Maskaram is the first of the circle of the years of Egypt and Ethiopia. The [first] day and the night of this month are equal—twelve hours. Then the day during this month Maskaram diminisheth because this month is the first of the circle of the years of Egypt and Ethiopia. Now it is meet that we should make therein a great feast in all purity, because this [fol. 4 a 2] day is holy and blessed, and we should remove ourselves from evil works. And we should begin [to do] good works and new, whereby God is pleased, even as PAUL the apostle saith: "Behold, every work is made new in Christ. Behold old works have passed away, and behold new works are known, and every work is from God" (2 Cor. v, 17). Thus hath God had pleasure over us in Christ, and He hath given us the ministration of His mercy and compassion. And ISAIAH the prophet saith: "The Spirit of God is upon me; therefore hath He appointed me and sent me to preach to those who are in captivity, and to those who are in prison, and to set them free, and to the blind that they may see the light, and to those who are bound that they be set free, and to preach the year of the mercy of God" (Isaiah lxi, 1, 2). And DAVID saith: "Thou hast blessed the crown of the year [with] mercy, and the desert is satisfied with dew by Thy blessing" (Psalm lxv, 11).

On this day also JOB the righteous man washed in the water of the TAKAZÊ and was healed of all his sickness. And the people were in the habit, when the river TAKAZÊ was full of water, of dipping themselves in the new water, whereby they were blessed for all the rest of the year.

On this day died the holy Apostle BARTHOLOMEW, who was one of the Twelve Apostles. To this apostle the lot fell that he was to go to the city of EL-WÂH (the great Oasis, AL-KHÂRGAH). He and PETER [fol. 4*a* 3] went together to the people there, and they preached to them, and called them to the knowledge of God. After that they performed before them signs and great wonders which terrified their hearts. After this PETER contrived to go into the city, and there he sold BARTHOLOMEW to be a slave, and BARTHOLOMEW worked in the vineyard with his master. And when he was preparing the young plants for planting out, they burst into flower and bore fruit immediately. When the son of the governor of that city died, BARTHOLOMEW the apostle raised him up from the dead. And all the people believed, and BARTHOLOMEW strengthened them in the knowledge of God. After this our Lord Jesus Christ commanded him to go to the city of BARBAR (i.e. the city of the Barbarians), and He sent to him ANDREW the apostle with his helper to help him. And the people of that city were exceedingly wicked, and they would not receive the apostles who were working before them signs and wonders. And God commanded one of the Dog-faced cannibals to submit to the apostles, and not to resist them in anything which they ordered him to do, and they took him with them to that city. And the men of that city brought out wild beasts against the apostles to eat them up, and straightway that Dog-face rose up against those wild beasts, and rent them asunder, and he also slew a great many of the men of that city. Because of this all the people were afraid [fol. 4*b* 1] and they turned, and did homage at the feet of the apostles, and they submitted to them, and they entered the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ—to Him be glory! And he appointed priests over them, and built churches for them, and the apostles left them praising God.

And BARTHOLOMEW the apostle departed to the cities which were on the sea-coast, whereof the people knew not God, and he preached unto them and converted them to the knowledge of God. And they believed on our Lord Jesus Christ, and they performed the works which were meet for Christ. And BARTHOLOMEW the apostle commanded the men to be pure, and to be remote from fornication. When AGRÎPÂ the king heard of him he was exceedingly angry with him, and he commanded his servants to put the Apostle BARTHOLOMEW in a hair sack and to fill the sack up with sand, and to cast him into the sea; and they did so. And thus BARTHOLOMEW consummated his martyrdom.

On this day died the holy father Abbâ MÊLYÔS, Archbishop of the great [fol. 4*b* 2] city of Alexandria, the third from MARK the apostle and evangelist, and this abbâ archbishop was appointed in the twelfth (?) year of the reign of VESPASIAN the Emperor of Rome, fifty-four years after the Ascension of our Lord Jesus Christ. He pastured and guarded the flock of our Lord Jesus Christ nobly, and he sat on the episcopal throne twelve years. And he pleased God and died in peace.

And on this day died the righteous and excellent Abbâ MÊLKÎ. The fathers of this righteous man were among the nobles of ḲUELZEM (KOLSÛM, i.e. CLYSMA), which city is on the borders of Egypt; they were rich in gold and silver, and they gave alms to the poor and needy. His father loved God exceedingly, and he had no son. One day he saw the children learning their lessons, and in their hands were tablets whereon were written, "Let us remember our fathers who have taught us by their lives so that we may become children of God. O God, make their souls [fol. 4*b* 3] to have rest in the heavens with the righteous and the martyrs." And when the father of Abbâ MÊLKÎ heard these words from the mouths of the children he was very sorrowful saying, "Woe is me, for I have no son. Who will remember me when I die?" And he and his wife gave themselves up with zeal to fasting, and prayer and the giving of offerings. And God heard their petition and He gave them two children at once, a boy and a girl; and they rejoiced greatly in them. And the father brought them up as Christians, and he called the boy MÊLKÎ, and his sister SEFNÂ, which is being interpreted "Dove." And he had them reared very carefully. And when the boy was seven years old his father took MÊLKÎ to a teacher, and he taught him all the Books of the New and Old Testaments. And the Holy Spirit came upon him in full measure, and he did not play with the other children or indulge in games with them, but he read the Scriptures day and night.

And when the boy was twelve years old, the parents of the children called him and spake with him about their wish to take a wife for him, so that they might have a memorial; but MÊLKÎ was not pleased with this, and pretending to agree with them he said, "I consent to your words, and that which ye order me to do I will do." Now his soul wished to flee from the world. Then Abbâ MÊLKÎ said unto his father, "I wish to make a festival for the children who are at school with me"; and his father gave him ten hundred dînârs in gold (about £500) so that he might make a feast according to his desire, and he ordered the servants and the waiting men to minister unto him according to his wish. [fol. 5*a* 1] Then Abbâ MÊLKÎ mounted his horse, and went out before his father and said unto his serving men, "Take ye one hundred dînârs in gold and make haste and prepare a feast for us; I will go alone and invite my companions thereto." And his serving men hearkened to his voice, and turned away, and he departed by himself. The money which he had he distributed among the poor and needy, and his horse he gave to a certain poor man, and he had nothing left except the clothes which were on him. And as his return was delayed his serving men sought for him, but they could not find him, and they turned back weeping; and they told his father and mother and they wept a bitter weeping. His sister's eyes by reason of her excessive weeping went blind and she died. And Abbâ MÊLKÎ went to DABRA ṬUR, which was the monastery of his mother's brother MÂR 'AWGÎN. And this 'AWGÎN was a righteous man and he worked many signs, and under his authority there were seventy-two chosen monks. And Abbâ MÊLKÎ prostrated himself at his feet, and he said unto him, "I wish to dwell under thy shadow, and I wish thee to array me in the garb of the monk." And Abbâ 'AWGÎN said unto him, "From what city comest thou?" And he told him that ḲUELZEM was his city, and that he was the son of 'AWGÎN'S sister; and when 'AWGÎN heard this he rejoiced with a great joy, and he permitted him to be a probationer for three years, and he arrayed him in the garb of monasticism. And he contended with such great vigour in the ascetic life and kept such strict vigil always, that his fame was heard of in all the country of Persia. And when he had been a monk for three years God gave unto him the gift of healing and he was able to drive out devils by his word. One day whilst he was [fol. 5*a* 2] walking about by himself reciting the Psalms he came to a place where there was a hollow, and in the hollow was a fig tree, and there were a great many shepherds weeping there. And Abbâ MÊLKÎ said unto them, "Why do ye weep?" And they said unto him, "The son of the governor of the city was eating figs here, and whilst he was doing so a great snake came out and swallowed him up, and the boy hath gone into its belly." And whilst they were telling him this the father of the boy with the people of the city arrived, and their clothes were rent and they were beating their faces; and he made entreaty to Mâr MÊLKÎ on behalf of his son. And Mâr MÊLKÎ said unto him, "Fear not, O my son, believe in God and thou shalt see a wonderful thing," and he turned his face towards the east and stretched out his hands and prayed for a long time. And when he had finished his prayer he summoned the serpent in the Name of our Lord Jesus Christ, and commanded to cast up the boy from inside him; and he cast up the boy who had suffered no pain whatsoever. And Satan, who was inside the serpent, cried out and said, "Whither can I go from thee, O MÊLKÎ, thou man of ḲUELZEM?"; and having said these words he dissolved himself into smoke. And when the father of the boy saw that his son was alive he brought gold and silver to the holy man. And MÊLKÎ refused to accept it from him, but he said unto him, "Let us become partners in the building of a monastery for me." And the father of the boy rejoiced and he built him a monastery which contained 300 cells for the monks, and he enclosed the building with a wall and provided iron gates therefor. Whilst they were building the church they found in one corner a huge stone which could not be raised by 300 men, but by the prayer of this [fol. 5*a* 3] righteous man the church was built out of that stone even as the builder wished. Then there assembled there 500 souls and they were chosen monks. And the report of the holy man was heard throughout the country, and the people used to bring unto him the sick folk who were suffering from sicknesses of every kind, and those who were possessed of devils, and they were all healed of their diseases through his prayer, and the men of Persia and Rômê were saved through the intercession of this righteous man. And when Satan, who is the enemy of good, saw this righteous man, he was jealous of him, and he went to the daughter of the King of Rômê and drove her silly, and she cried out and said, "There is no healing for me except through MÊLKÎ of ḲUELZEM." And the king her father hearkened unto her, and sent 400 men from his army out unto all directions so that they might bring Abbâ MÊLKÎ with care to him, and he took an oath that if they did not do so he would cut off their heads with the sword. And the soldiers who had been sent out found the holy man with difficulty, and they bowed down at his feet, and they told him the king's message, and about the illness of his daughter, [and said,] "Tell us what thou sayest." And Abbâ MÊLKÎ said unto him, "I am an old man, and I cannot travel to Rômyâ." And the soldiers said unto him, "If thou wilt not go with us the king hath promised to put us to death." When the holy man heard this he was very sorry, and he said unto them, "O my children, go ye your way, I and you will meet at the gates of Rômyâ"; and when they heard his words they departed. And at the end of the year, on the day when he knew through the Holy Spirit that they would arrive in Rômyâ, he prayed a prayer to God, and the Holy Spirit lifted him up and bore him [fol. 5*b* 1] to the gates of Rômyâ. And when the envoys found the holy man there they rejoiced greatly and they told the king of his arrival; and the king rejoiced greatly and went out and received him and brought him into his palace and seated him upon his throne, and told him concerning his daughter's sickness. And Abbâ MÊLKÎ ordered that she should be brought, and when they had brought her, the devil hurled her down and rent her until they thought that she was dead. And straightway Abbâ MÊLKÎ rose up and prayed a long time, and he sprinkled water over her face and anointed her with oil, and he commanded Satan in the Name of our Lord Jesus Christ to go forth from her. And Satan went forth from her in the form of a black man, and the holy man seized him, and shut him up in the house, and marked him with the sign of the Cross so that he should not go out. And when the king saw this, he bowed down at Abbâ MÊLKÎ'S feet, and he brought to him many possessions for the needs of his monastery, and the holy man refused them. And the king said unto him, "O my father, dwell here and I will build thee a monastery"; and the holy man said, "I cannot forsake my children." And the holy man dwelt in Rômyâ for a few days, and healed their demoniacs. And when he went out to return to his city, the king rose up and set him on his way with [an escort of] soldiers, and he came to the gates of the palace. And the holy man saw a great mass of stone which had been hollowed out and had been placed at the mouth of a fountain of running water, and a stone bowl so that horses might drink out of it. And he said unto the king, "Give me these stones for the use of my monastery." And the king said unto him, "Who will carry for thee? the stones which twelve men could not [fol. 5*b* 2] lift and carry them outside the city. If however, thou hast the strength [to carry them] do thou what thou pleasest." Then the holy man brought the Satan forth from the place wherein he had bound him, and he suspended the hollow stone from his neck, and he bound the bowl on the top of his head, and he ordered him to go before him. When the king saw this he marvelled exceedingly, and he turned and glorified God. And Saint Abbâ MÊLKÎ made the Satan to come into his monastery carrying these stones, and he ordered him to set them down at the gates, and they are there to this day. And he shut up the Satan in a cave and sealed him with the sign of the Cross so that he should not go forth again and tempt men. And when this holy man had been a monk for forty and five years, a voice came unto him from heaven saying, "Behold the day of thy death hath drawn nigh, and there remains unto thee three days only before thou shalt enter into everlasting joy." Then the holy man summoned his children and he commanded them to serve God and to keep themselves away from the error of Satan. After three days there came unto him the fathers of the monks, Abbâ ANTONY, and Abbâ MACARIUS, and Abbâ SÎNÔDÂ, and Abbâ BESYA, and Abbâ PACHOMIUS, and they said unto him, "Come, O our brother, and rejoice with us in the kingdom of the heavens." And when they had said this unto him, his soul went forth from his body and the angels took it up into glory singing as they went, and they said, "He hath toiled in the world and he shall live for ever"; and they brought him into [fol. 5*b* 3] the Garden of Delight. And the archbishops, and the bishops and the priests assembled and they buried him in the church, and innumerable signs and wonders took place at his grave.

And on this day is celebrated the festival of RÂGUÊL, the angel, one of the nine archangels, who informed ENOCH concerning the fire which burneth, and the destruction of the world; and he is the angel of lights. May the intercession of this angel be with [us all].

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

[fol. 6*a* 1] On this day Saint JOHN the Baptist, son of ZACHARIAS the priest, became a martyr by the hand of HEROD the wicked king. This JOHN the prophet rebuked HEROD because of HERODIAS, the wife of PHILIP, for he had married her and taken her to be his wife, and JOHN said unto him, "It is not right for thee to take thy brother's wife." And HEROD took Saint JOHN and cast him into prison, and he kept him there because he was afraid of him. And when his birthday came HEROD made a feast for the nobles of his kingdom and for the magistrates of the city of GALÎLÂ (GALILEE). And his brother's daughter came and stood up among the festal company and she danced and pleased the king, and he swore an oath that he would give her anything which she might ask from him, even if it were as much as the half of his kingdom. And she went out to her mother, and she said unto her, "What shall I ask the king to give me?" And her mother said unto her, "Ask him to give thee the head of JOHN the Baptist lying in a bowl." And when HEROD heard this he was exceedingly sorry, but because of his oath and also because of those who were sitting at meat with him, and because he did not wish to be put to shame, he straightway commanded his servants to cut off the head of Saint JOHN, and to give it to the maiden. And they cut off the head of JOHN in the prison house and gave it to the daughter of HERODIAS in a bowl and she gave it to her mother. And there was great consternation that day, and their joy was turned to sorrow. And when the holy head of Saint JOHN was cut off, [fol. 6*a* 2] it flew up into the air out of the hands of the soldiers, and it cried out, saying, "It is not right for thee to take thy brother's wife"; and it is said that the head is at the present time in the country of Arabia. And the disciples of the holy man came and took his body and carried it away and laid it in a grave [where it lay] until the days of Saint ATHANASIUS, Archbishop of the city of Alexandria. And God commanded him to uncover the body of Saint JOHN, and Saint ATHANASIUS did so and laid it up by him until he could build a church for it. May his intercession be, etc.

And on this day died DÂSYÂ the soldier, a native of the city of TÂYDÂ of Egypt. ARIANUS, [fol. 6*a* 3] the governor of the city of ANTINOË, inflicted great tortures on this saint, and he cut off his head with a sword, and DÂSYÂ received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of heaven.

And on this day also DIDYMUS and the holy woman MARÎNÂ became martyrs.

III. MASKARAM

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day the General Council of Bishops took place in the city of Alexandria in the second year of the rule of the glorious father Abbâ DIONYSIUS the archbishop. This assembly took place because of certain evil men who had appeared in the country of Arabia, and who believed that the soul dieth with the body, and that on the day of the Resurrection it shall be raised up with it. And they composed a discourse on the wicked belief and sent it to the men who were living in the city of Alexandria. And when the Abûna, the Archbishop Abbâ DIONYSIUS heard this thing he was exceedingly sorry about it, and he admonished them and commanded them to turn from this evil affair, but they would not hearken unto him. [fol. 6*b* 1] Therefore the Council assembled to discuss them, and he debated the matter with them, and made manifest their error, but they neither repented nor turned away from their evil counsel; and the archbishop and the whole Council anathematized them and cursed them. And he wrote a discourse on them wherein he said, "the love of God for the children is exceedingly great and mighty." And he explained in that discourse that the soul neither dieth, nor perisheth, nor decayeth, but that it abideth even as the angels abide, for it is a spiritual thing and is immutable and incorruptible. When it goeth forth from the body it is taken to the place for which it is suitable. And on the day of the Resurrection, when the trumpet soundeth, the dead bodies of men shall rise up by the command of their Creator. And all the souls of men shall go each into the body whereto it belongeth, and it shall rise with it, and according to its work it will either rejoice for ever, or suffer punishment for ever. And the two (i.e. soul and body) will remain in the state in which they have risen for ever and for ever and ever. May the prayer of this Council be, etc.

[fol. 6*b* 2] And on this day also a great earthquake took place in the country of Egypt and in all its borders, and the church of DÂSYÂ fell down at the time of the third hour of the day. And this church was in the name of MICHAEL the archangel. And it is said that a certain ungodly man asked the Christians to pay tax to him, but they would not give him anything; and when it was evening this man came with his followers and pulled down the church. This happened in the ninth year of Archbishop Abbâ MACARIUS, in the eight hundred and twenty-eighth year of the Holy Martyrs [A.D. 1112]. May their prayer and blessing be, etc.

And on this day are commemorated DIOSCURUS the martyr, and Archbishop DIONYSIUS, and the martyrs who were in TENSEL YÂḲÔTÔN, and many martyrs in Persia. May their prayer and blessing, etc.

And on this day died Abbâ 'ANBAS (Father LION) of the country of Ethiopia.

[fol. 6*b* 3] And on this day died Abbâ MÛSÊ (MOSES) of the desert of SCETE.

When this man became a monk he forsook the world, and departed into the desert, and he put himself under the yoke of fasting and prayer until God lightened his eyes to see a garden of olive trees and palm trees. At the beginning of each month he took what fell of the fruit of these trees, and ate it, and the amount of food which he was in the habit of eating was like that of a small bird. And his apparel was made of the fibre and bark of the palm. And the heat of summer and the cold of winter attacked him, but in spite of these he devoted himself to his prayer and fastings. And he had no knowledge of letters and writing. And all the various kinds of wild animals of the desert used to visit him, and he made friends with them and when the time of prayer drew nigh he made a sign to them with his hand and they departed. And when there was a time of want they would come and stand before him as if they wished to speak to him, and he knew through the Holy Spirit what they were seeking after, and he would bring down rain for them; and he lived in this manner for thirty and five years. And Satan was jealous of him, and he disguised himself and took the form of a very aged monk, and appeared in front of the cave of MÛSÊ (MOSES) and walked along limping. When the holy man saw him he thought that he was a dweller in the desert. And he went to him and took him into his cave and he continued in prayer for three days. And when the wild animals who used to visit the holy man saw this old man, they withdrew from him. Then that old man asked the holy man concerning his country and his belief, and Abbâ MÛSÊ (MOSES) told him all his work, [fol. 7*a* 1] and asked the old man in return concerning his city and belief. And the old man said unto Abbâ MÛSÊ (MOSES), "As for me I have lived in the world and have committed sin for many years, and I have begotten a daughter. Then when I remembered the transitoriness of the world, I came out into the desert and have lived herein for forty years. I have remembered my daughter and I can find no one to whom to marry her except thyself, and it is for this purpose that I have come hither. When I die thou shalt bury me; I have orchards and gardens and thou shalt inherit them all." When Abbâ MÛSÊ (MOSES) heard these words he was terrified, and he said unto the old man, "How can I who am a monk do this?" And this old man brought unto him testimony from the Scriptures how ABRAHAM, and MOSES, and DAVID, though they were righteous men, had married wives. And through this the old man made the heart of Abbâ MÛSÊ (MOSES) to yield. And he shewed him a beautiful palace, and in it there was a beautiful maiden, and there came before Abbâ MÛSÊ (MOSES) a vision wherein the old man was dead, and the holy man was weeping over him, and was preparing his body for the tomb and then burying him. And when he went to consort with the maiden a mighty wind arose and he was driven backwards. When his senses returned the palace had disappeared, and the garden, and the maiden, and he was forced to go back to his dwelling. And he wished to eat a meal of the fruit of the tree from which he ate formerly, and the fruit was bitter in his mouth. And when famine compelled him he went forth into the desert, and again he met Satan under the form of an aged pilgrim who was going to Alexandria, and he was riding an ass, and was provided with meat and drink, and he took him with him and brought him into the city and left him there. And Satan appeared unto him in the form of a woman who was carrying [fol. 7*a* 2] water. And seeing him in the garb of the men of the desert she asked him about himself, and he told her everything which Satan had told him; and she laughed at him in her heart, and she took him to her house and gave him meat and drink. And she told him the affair of her marriage, and how she was the daughter of a king who was dead, and how she possessed much property. When she saw that his heart inclined to her, she said to him also, "I am a Jewess and we are many"; and then she seduced him with many crafty arts until he denied his Faith. And again she said unto him, "Come, let us take possession of my property in the place where I deposited it"; and she took him to an empty desert wherein there was no water. And she took him up to the top of a mountain, and she transformed herself before him, and she said unto him, "I am that Satan who leadeth very many into error. I seduced thee from the desert, and I enticed thee away from thy Faith. Behold, thou shalt die in this desert, and thy soul shall go into GAHÂNAM" (GEHENNA); and having said these things he disappeared from him. And the holy man turned to his right hand and to his left, and there was no way to escape and no water to drink. And as the matter pressed sorely upon him he fell down on the ground and scattered dust on his face and he became dizzy and wept until his soul wished to be set free from him. And God heard his cry, and He sent an angel unto him to console him, and he said unto him, "Thy sin is remitted unto thee. In three days thou shalt die and my servant SAMUEL, the dweller in the desert, shall bury thee." And straightway Abbâ SAMUEL came to him, and gave him peace, and comforted him, and took him with him into the church which 'AGÂBÔS the king had built in the desert which was hidden from the eye of man, [fol. 7a 3] and it was the cemetery for the company of monks. And when they arrived there they found the company of holy men, and they offered up the Offering, and received the Holy Mysteries. And there being a press of people Abbâ SAMUEL departed to obtain a blessing at the grave of the saints. And when [Abbâ MÛSÊ (MOSES)] arrived there, he knelt down on his knees and died straightway; and Abbâ SAMUEL buried him and wrote the history of him.

IV. MASKARAM

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died the holy father, Abbâ MACARIUS, Archbishop of Alexandria; now he was the sixty-ninth archbishop of the city. This father was an ascetic and practised strenuous self-denial from his earliest years, and he craved for the garb of monasticism. He went up to the desert of SCETE and became a monk in the church of Abbâ MACARIUS, and he performed great and severe ascetic labours. He illumined his soul by reading the Holy Scriptures and translations of (or commentaries on) them, and he learned the explanations of them. He excelled in the working of righteousness, and he was appointed priest in the desert of SCETE. And when Abbâ MICHAEL the Archbishop, his predecessor, died, the bishops [fol. 7b 1] and many priests and doctors of the Orthodox Faith went to the monastery of Abbâ MACARIUS, and they assembled in the church with the senior monks of SCETE, and sat there with them for many days debating and discussing the question of who would best fill this honourable position. And they found that this Abbâ MACARIUS was the best man, and they agreed unanimously to appoint him, because very many of the holy men of SCETE testified that he would best fill this position because of his righteousness, and his strenuousness and self-abnegation, and devotion to the ascetic life. And they took him and bound him with cords against his will, and he cried out and begged them to release him, and he said unto them, "I am not qualified to be raised to the dignity of archbishop, for my mother married two men." Now they knew that he said this so that they might let him go. And many came and bore witness concerning him, shewing that his mother was a virgin and that she had only married one man. Then they took him against his will, and they brought him to the city of Alexandria, and they appointed him archbishop. Then they brought him to MĔSR (CAIRO) and the deed of his appointment was read in the church of our Lady, the holy Virgin Mary, of Mu'allaḳah in the Greek, Coptic and Arabic languages. And during the whole time in which he sat he added to his works of righteousness daily, and he contended most strenuously. Every day he taught the people and admonished them in the fear of God. He gave alms and did works of mercy [fol. 7b 2] for the poor and needy. During the whole of the period of his rule he never took anything from the Church, on the contrary he used to give God Most High a large portion of the dues which were paid to him. He sat as archbishop for twenty and seven years, and he pleased God and died in peace.

And on this day also are commemorated SIMON the anchorite, and JOSHUA the son of NAWÊ (NUN), the disciple of MOSES, and 'ARDÂSÊ the archbishop, and 150 martyrs who suffered in Antioch, and 'ĔNTĔYÂ, one of the Seventy, of the people of 'ENṢĔNÂ, and THEODORE the bishop, from DABRA 'ĔLDÂNÛ, and theologian.

V. MASKARAM

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day Saint SÔFYÂ (SOPHIA) [fol. 7*b* 3] and her two daughters whose names were 'AKSÔSYÂ and BARNÂBÂ became martyrs; now this woman was a pagan ('aramâwît) and her parents worshipped idols. After this she came to the Bishop of MANÛFÊ (i.e. MANÛF AL-'ALÎÂ, or PANOUF RÊS, capital of the province of MANÛFÎYYAH) and believed in Christ, and said unto him, "I have believed in thy God." And after this he taught her all the Law of the Church, and he baptized her and her daughters in the Name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Ghost. Thereupon they laid an accusation against her before KALDĔYÂNÔS (CLAUDIANUS), the governor of the city, saying that she had become a Christian and had forsaken the worship of idols. And the governor questioned her closely and she did not deny it, and he condemned her and her daughters to be punished severely. And she exhorted them to be patient and said unto them, "Be strong, my daughters, and endure like the daughters of SÔFYÂ (SOPHIA), my lady 'ANGABÊNÂYT. I am her kinswoman and ye are as her daughters PÎSṬÎS 'ALÂPÎS and 'AGÂPÎS." And they answered and said unto her, "Fear thou not, we will follow thy steps"; and when they had said these things she kissed them devotedly. And when the governor saw them embracing her, he ordered his men to scourge the mother with whips in order to terrify the virgins. Then her daughters saw an angel of God come down and hide the body of the holy woman, for the wicked men had stripped her naked to beat her, and they rejoiced and were glad. And whilst the men were beating their mother she never ceased to cry out, "I am a Christian." Then the governor commanded them to cut out her tongue down to the root, and they did so, and even after this she ceased not to cry out and to shout at him. After this the governor commanded them to take her into the prison, [fol. 8*a* 1] and he sent his wife unto her to persuade her; and when she would not be persuaded he commanded them to cut off her head with a sword, and they did so. And a certain woman took her body and hid it in her house, and she lighted a lamp before it and burnt incense to it. Then the governor summoned her daughters, and threatened them so that they might consent to obey him, but when they refused him he cut off their heads one after the other; and thus they consummated their martyrdom. And that believing woman took their bodies and laid them side by side by the body of their mother. And many signs appeared at their graves. And people with every kind of sickness were healed there. When CONSTANTINE was reigning he heard the history of Saint SÔFYÂ (SOPHIA) and he took up her body and translated it to Constantinople. Before [he heard] her history his people built a church, and wrote upon a tablet, "This is the house of CONSTANTINE"; and an angel of God came down and destroyed it. And he wrote, "This is the house of SÔFYÂ" (SOPHIA), and although the workmen wanted to cut it they left it written. One day whilst the son of the king was playing with his friends there, the angel of God whose name was RÛFÂ'ÊL appeared unto them and said unto them, "What is the name of this house?" And the youth said, "I do not know." And the angel said unto him, "Tell thy father to call it the house of SÔFYÂ" (SOPHIA). And the youth said unto him, "Wilt thou wait here until I come back?" and the angel said, "I will." And when his father heard this he knew that it was an angel, and he killed his son, and said, "The angel will not depart from that place because he must wait for the youth." And that angel is there to this day [fol. 8*a* 2] waiting for the youth. The length of that church is 709 cubits, its breadth is 309 cubits, its pillars are in number 366, its doors are 4, its altars are 8, its pools of water are 4, and the cherubim which are above the mercy seat have each two wings which overshadow the ark of the Law of God. And they brought here the coffer of Saint SÔFYÂ (SOPHIA), and the coffers of her daughters with great honour and glory. And they buried that woman who had gathered together their bodies with them. May the prayer of these holy women be with, etc.

And on this day also Saint MÂMÂS became a martyr. His father was called THEODOTUS and his mother was called THEOPHILA. This man lived in the days of the reign of YÔLYÂNÔS (JULIAN) the emperor, and his position was that of governor of the city of 'AWLÂTÔS. The parents of this holy man were Christians, and because of their belief in Christ he had shut them up in prison, and the mother of this holy man gave birth to him in prison. After his father and his mother had died [fol. 8*a* 3] in prison, a certain Christian woman took the blessed child and brought him up as her own son, and she called his name "MÂMÂS," the interpretation of which is "orphan," for he had neither father nor mother. And when he was fifteen years old the people brought an accusation against him before the governor saying that he was a Christian. And they took him and beat him with rods, and they hung him up head downwards with a heavy lump of lead tied to him, and they cast him into the sea, but he was saved from the sea by the might of God. And he hid himself under a cave and he fed himself on the milk of the gâmûs, (i.e. buffalo), those great black animals of the desert. Then the governor seized him again and cast him into the fire, but he was saved from the fire by the power of God. After this the governor's men let loose lions upon him so that they might rend him asunder, but by the power of God he leaped upon the back of a lion. Then the governor tortured him, and his men dragged him on the ground, and tore out his intestines with a three-pronged iron fork. By this torture the blessed MÂMÂS consummated his martyrdom, and received a crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens. May his prayer and blessing be with, etc.

[On this day also is commemorated LEBNA DENGEL, or DÂWÎT (DAVID) II WANÂG SAGAD, King of Ethiopia from Aug. 15, 1508, to Sept. 2, 1540.]

VI. MASKARAM

[fol. 8*b* 1] IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died the great Prophet ISAIAH, the son of 'AMÔṢ, MANASSEH having sawn him in twain with a wood saw. This prophet prophesied in the days of the reigns of five kings, that is to say UZZIAH, and JOTHAM, and AHAZ, and HEZEKIAH his son, and MANASSEH the son of HEZEKIAH. And he prophesied to AHAZ, saying, "A virgin shall conceive, and she shall bear a son, and his name shall be called 'AMÂNÛÊL, the interpretation of which is, 'God with us.' And it shall come to pass that he shall teach the nations, and shall bring them into his kingdom and into his faith, and he shall destroy the altars of the Jews and their priests. And offerings of praise, bread and wine, shall be received from priests who shall be from among the people" (Isaiah vii, 14 ff.). And he prophesied to HEZEKIAH and encouraged him when SANÂKRÊM (SENNACHERIB) the King of Persia (sic) besieged Jerusalem, and informed him that God would blot him out because of his blasphemy against Him (Isaiah xxxvi). And that night God sent MICHAEL the archangel to the camp of SANÂKRÊM (SENNACHERIB), and slew of the soldiers 180,000 and 5000 men, and those who remained [alive] left the camp and fled. And when HEZEKIAH the king was sick, God commanded him by the tongue of this prophet [fol. 8*b* 2] to set his house in order for he was to die. And when HEZEKIAH prayed to God, He sent unto him ISAIAH the prophet who made known to him that God had added to his days fifteen years. And God shewed him a sign so that he might be sure that what the prophet had told him was true (Isaiah xxxviii). And ISAIAH prophesied concerning the blotting out of the children of Israel, and he made manifest that only a few of them would believe him. And God made rain to fall by reason of his prayer, when the people obeyed. And on one occasion when he was thirsty God made to flow the spring of water of SILOAM. And ISAIAH prophesied also to MANASSEH the king, the son of HEZEKIAH, who established the worship of idols, and he rebuked him because of his evil deeds. For this reason MANASSEH the king was wroth with him, and he sawed him in twain with a wood saw from his head to his feet. And all the days of the prophesying of this prophet were seventy years, and more than that. And he prophesied in the nine hundred and thirteenth year before the coming of Christ our Lord.

Salutation to 'EBNÔDÎ.

And on this day also the holy woman [fol. 8*b* 3] BASLANTYÂ in the days of DIOCLETIAN, the emperor who denied [Christ]. This holy woman was a Christian, and when she was nine years old the deniers of our Lord seized her and bound her hands and her feet, and cast her into the fire; but she was saved from the fire by the might of God. When she was thirsty she made a petition to God for water, and He caused water to come down and she drank. Then she committed her soul to the hand of God and cast herself into the fire, and she finished her testimony.

And on this day also are commemorated JAMES the monk, and 'ATÎMÔS the bishop, and BÂSLÎS, and 'ARÔNṬÔS, and RAWRĔWÔ, and SAWLWÂS, and SAWÂ, martyrs of God.

VII. MASKARAM

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died the holy and blessed father Abbâ DIOSCURUS, Archbishop of Alexandria; now he was the twenty-fifth archbishop of that city. His death took place on the island of GÂGRÂ after a [fol. 9*a* 1] great debate about the Orthodox Faith at the Council which the Emperor MARCIANUS (A.D. 450–457), the denier of Christ, had convened and to which he had summoned him. And when he arrived there he saw a great assembly containing six hundred and thirty bishops. And Saint DIOSCURUS said, "In what is the Faith lacking that it is necessary to gather this great assembly because of the Faith?" And they said unto him, "This assembly hath been convened by the emperor's command." And DIOSCURUS said unto them, "If this assembly hath been convened by the command of our Lord Jesus Christ, to Whom be praise! I will remain, and I will utter with my tongue what God hath given me to say; but if this assembly hath been convened by the emperor's command, let the emperor manage his assembly as he pleaseth." Then the blessed DIOSCURUS tore up the document wherein LĔYÔN (LEO the Great, A.D. 440–461), Archbishop of Rome, had written the wicked creed wherein he had assigned to Christ two Natures, and two Wills after His Unity. And Saint DIOSCURUS spake by the Holy Ghost before the assembly and shewed that our Lord Jesus Christ was One—He Who was invited to the marriage-feast in Cana of Galilee as a man, and also He Who changed the water and made it sweet wine,—for He is God Almighty, and He is not separated in His works. And Abbâ CYRIL, Archbishop of the city of Alexandria, sent forth his testimony concerning the Word, and he said, "The union of the Word of God with the flesh is like the union of the spirit with the body, and like the union of fire with iron. And if there are two different Natures, [fol. 9*a* 2] and they are one in their unity, similarly our Lord Christ is one Messiah and one Lord, and one Nature, and one Will"; and none of those who were gathered together at that assembly dared to contradict him. And some among them had gathered together at the Council of Ephesus, which had been convened because of NEṢṬÛR (NESTORIUS), that infidel and enemy of our Lord Christ. And they informed the Emperor MARCIANUS the infidel, and the Empress BELKÂRYÂ, saying unto them, "There is no one who resisteth your commands concerning the Faith except DIOSCURUS, Archbishop of the city of Alexandria." And they brought DIOSCURUS to the emperor, and there were with him the senior bishops of the city and Council, and they debated the matter among them from morning until evening, but Saint DIOSCURUS would not change his Orthodox belief. And the emperor and the empress were irritated at this, and the empress commanded them to smite Saint DIOSCURUS on his mouth, and to pluck out the hair of his beard, and they did so. Then he took the hair of his beard which they had pulled out, and his teeth which had dropped out, and sent them to the city of Alexandria, and he said unto the people, "Behold, this is the fruit of the Orthodox Faith." And when the bishops saw what great tribulation had fallen upon DIOSCURUS, they became afraid for themselves lest there should come upon them what had come upon DIOSCURUS. Therefore the bishops came to an agreement with the Emperor MARCIANUS, the infidel, [fol. 9*a* 3] and they wrote with their hands on his roll, saying as they did so with their tongues—may they be cut in pieces in Sheol!—and declaring that Christ hath two distinct Natures. And when DIOSCURUS returned, he sent to them and ordered them to bring to them the roll whereon they had written. And they sent it to him thinking that he would write on it even as they had done. And Saint DIOSCURUS wrote at the foot of the roll and excommunicated them all. And he also excommunicated every one who departed from the Orthodox Faith which our fathers the Apostles, and our holy fathers the Three Hundred and Eighteen Orthodox bishops who assembled in Nicea laid down. And the emperor was wroth, and he commanded that DIOSCURUS should be banished to the island of GÂGRÂ. And they took him there, and with him was Abbâ MACARIUS, bishop of the city of ḲÂW, and four others fled. And those six hundred and six bishops were sitting in Chalcedon. And when they had taken Saint DIOSCURUS to that place, there came upon him great tribulation through the bishop of that district, for he was a Nestorian. And he treated him with great contempt until God performed by the hands of Saint Abbâ DIOSCURUS signs and mighty wonders, and all [the people] bowed down at his feet, and were subject unto him, and they magnified his greatness. Thus God honoureth His chosen ones in every place. And Abbâ DIOSCURUS said unto Abbâ MACARIUS, [fol. 9*b* 1] "Thou shalt receive the crown of martyrdom in the city of Alexandria"; and he sent him with certain believing pilgrims to the city of Alexandria, and there he ended his testimony according as DIOSCURUS prophesied concerning him. And Saint DIOS-

CURUS having ended his good fight and pleased God, departed from this transitory world, and received the crown of his fidelity and entered into everlasting life. He died in the island of GÂGRÂ, and they laid his body there.

And on this day also died the holy father Abbâ SÂWÎRÔS (SEVERIANUS), Bishop of the city of GABLÂ (BYBLOS). The name of the father of this holy man was 'ABLÂRYÂNÔS (APOLLINARIS), and he studied foreign wisdom in the city of Athens. He went to the city of Caesarea and studied [Greek] philosophy and literature, and he returned to Rome and studied the doctrine of the Church, and he learned by heart [fol. 9*b* 2] the Books of the Old and the New Testaments in a few years. After this his parents died and they left him exceedingly great wealth and endless possessions, and he wished to give them all to Christ so that he might receive it back a hundredfold. He built a great house wherein might be received travellers, and pilgrims and strangers, and the poor, and the afflicted. And he planted gardens and made for them storehouses whereto the fruits of the earth might be carried, and those places which he made for the poor and the needy are called by his name to this day. His brother was a magistrate of that city and he laid an accusation against him before HONORIUS, Emperor of Rome (A.D. 395–423), and said unto him, "SÂWÎRÔS (SEVERIANUS) hath scattered all his possessions and he saith, I give it to Christ, and I shall receive a return therefor from Him as it is promised in the Holy Gospel." And these words pleased the emperor, and he rejoiced in Saint SÂWÎRÔS (SEVERIANUS) and loved him exceedingly. And HONORIUS the emperor commanded that SÂWÎRÔS (SEVERIANUS) should neither be separated from him nor leave the royal palace, and he used to go with him to church always and stand all night in prayer [with him]. Moreover the righteous Emperor HONORIUS used to practise the works of the monks in secret, and to wear next his body a hair shirt under his royal apparel. In those days the Archbishop of the city of Rome was Saint YÔNÂKĔNDÎNÔS (INNOCENT I?), and it was revealed unto him by God that SÂWÎRÔS (SEVERIANUS) should be appointed bishop over many peoples. And he loved him [fol. 9*b* 3] and he honoured him exceedingly, and he wished never to be separated from him; everyone loved him, and THEODOSIUS (II), Emperor of Constantinople (A.D. 408–450), heard of his fame. And when SÂWÎRÔS (SEVERIANUS) saw that everyone honoured him, he was afraid that his labour would be wasted, and he wanted to leave that place secretly. And the angel of the Lord appeared unto him and commanded him to go to DABRA GABLÂ and to become the father of the monastery and of many souls. And having put on the monkish garb he went forth by night, and with him was his disciple THEODORE. And God sent forth a light like unto a wheel which went before him until he came to DABRA GABLÂ. And there was there a certain righteous man who was the abbot of that monastery, and he learned in a vision concerning the coming of Saint SÂWÎRÔS (SEVERIANUS). And he went out to him, and welcomed him and embraced him, and told him how a vision concerning him had appeared unto him, and he marvelled greatly. And his fame arrived in every region, and all the people came to him, and the number of the men who thronged to him could not be counted. And the Emperor THEODOSIUS sent forth from him men of position to build monasteries for Saint SÂWÎRÔS (SEVERIANUS). And the angel of the Lord marked out for them the places wherein they were to build monasteries for him. And he was the comforter of many souls, and God performed many signs by his hands and wonders innumerable, and among them was the wonder concerning the daughter of the governor of GABLÂ, in whom Satan used to dwell. And Satan said to her father, "If thou [fol. 10*a* 1] wilt drive away SÂWÎRÔS (SEVERIANUS) from this place I will go out of thy daughter." And when the father of the girl heard this word, he rose up and went to Saint SÂWÎRÔS (SEVERIANUS), and told him what Satan had said to him and asked him to heal his daughter. And the holy man wrote upon a paper for him these words: "In the Name of the Lord Jesus Christ get thee out of her"; and her father took that paper and carried it to his daughter, and straightway Satan went forth from her. And again there were gathered together many people, the SÂMRÂWÎYÂN and others. Now they formed a large company, and they wished to come into the monastery of Saint SÂWÎRÔS (SEVERIANUS) and to pillage it. And God brought a darkness upon them, and they remained for three days and three nights without seeing anything at all; and they made supplication with many tears to Saint SÂWÎRÔS (SEVERIANUS), and he dismissed them and they departed. And when any of those monks who were under his authority fell sick, he prayed over them and healed them, and he comforted them all and taught them the fear of God until they all became like unto the angels of God. And there was a bishop of that city whose name was PHILOTHEUS, and he learned from a vision of God that Saint SÂWÎRÔS (SEVERIANUS) would succeed him as bishop, and he sent letters to all the peoples and commanded them to take Saint SÂWÎRÔS (SEVERIANUS) and to appoint him bishop, because God had chosen him for this dignity. Then straightway the righteous Emperors HONORIUS and ARCADIUS and their governors, took [fol. 10*a* 2] Saint SÂWÎRÔS (SEVERIANUS) and appointed him bishop of the city of GABLÂ, and he fought a great and strenuous fight for the preservation of his flock and of the peoples. And there was in that city a certain Jew whose name was SEḲṬÔR, and he was very learned and boasted himself of his knowledge of the Law of MOSES. This man came to Saint SÂWÎRÔS (SEVERIANUS) and disputed with him, and he would not listen to one word which came out of the mouth of Saint SÂWÎRÔS (SEVERIANUS). After this God appeared unto the holy man in a vision and informed him that the Jew would become one of the holy and blessed people of Christ. And when the Jew went to his house he saw during a sleep the places of severe punishment, and it seemed as if one said unto him, "Look upon these unbelieving Jews, thy kinsmen, and observe how they and all those who have not believed in Christ, dwell in severe punishment which shall be for ever." And on the following day that Jew came to Saint SÂWÎRÔS (SEVERIANUS) and fell down and did homage at his feet, and asked him to make him a Christian. And straightway he baptized him with Christian baptism, and his house and all the men of his city. When all the other Jews heard that their chief had become a

Christian, they believed and were baptized and became Christians, and they became even as those who were born in the Christian Faith. And Saint SÂWÎRÔS (SEVERIANUS) entreated some other men who were called NÎMÔNṬÔS, now they were magicians, to enter the Christian Faith, but they would not hearken unto him [fol. 10*a* 3] because they were puffed up by their magic. Now when a man was coming to them they would scatter dust in his face, and he would not be able to see anything. And Saint SÂWÎRÔS (SEVERIANUS) entreated our Lord Jesus Christ with tears, to bring those men into the Christian Faith. And God brought upon those men a severe disease which did not affect anyone among the Christians, even as He did in the land of Egypt when He brought a plague upon PHARAOH, and his army, and the Egyptians in the days of old. And the magicians perceived their error, and that this disease had come upon them because they had not hearkened to Saint SÂWÎRÔS (SEVERIANUS). And they rose up and came to the saint and became Christians, and all that city became one pasture. And Satan groaned and cried out like an old man who has rent his garments, and he said, "Behold, I am in distress in every part of the world. Holy monks have filled all the country of Egypt from one end to the other, the Archbishop YÔNÂKÊNDÎNÔS (INNOCENT I) dwelleth in the country of Rômê, JOHN of the Golden Mouth dwelleth in Constantinople, and this place only was left unto me, and behold SÂWÎRÔS (SEVERIANUS) hath taken it from me." And the men of Persia sent a despatch to the Emperors HONORIUS and ARCADIUS, seeking to be their allies in battle, and these righteous emperors sent the Persian dispatch to Saint SÂWÎRÔS (SEVERIANUS). And when [fol. 10*b* 1] he had read it he wrote a dispatch to the Emperors HONORIUS and ARCADIUS to instruct them [in his views], and he said unto them, "If we belong to Christ, and if our kingdom belongeth to Christ, we have no need of armour, or spears, or troops." And he began to remind them of the signs which God had wrought for the righteous kings of olden time, and how He had made them strong and how they had vanquished their enemies. And before the great fast came the Persians being ashamed departed from them. As concerning

JOHN CHRYSOSTOM. Having brought Saint SÂWÎRÔS (SEVERIANUS) with the bishops, the holy man admonished with great severity the Empress EUDOXIA, because of JOHN CHRYSOSTOM, for he had done nothing whatsoever worthy of banishment. And when the empress would not hearken unto him, he returned to his city and wrote discourses in which he admonished her severely, and these discourses are read in orthodox churches unto this day. And Saint SÂWÎRÔS (SEVERIANUS) waxed old, and his days were one hundred years. Before his departure from the body, at the tenth [hour] of the day the angel of God appeared unto him, and summoned him to go forth from this world and from toil into rest. And the holy man ordered his people to continue to keep the Law of God; then he died and delivered his soul into the hand of his Creator. His death took place two years after JOHN CHRYSOSTOM died, [fol. 10*b* 2] and one year after Saint EPIPHANIUS, Bishop of Cyprus, died (A.D. 394). When Saint SÂWÎRÔS (SEVERIANUS) was dead, they prepared his pure body for burial as was meet, and they sang spiritual songs and laudatory sentences and buried him in a grave.

And on this day also AGATHON, PETER, JOHN, AMMÔN, and AMMÔNÂ and their mother RAPÎḲÂ (REBECCA) became holy martyrs. These holy men came from the city of ḲÔNYÂ, on the borders of the district of ḲÛS in Upper Egypt. And our Lord Christ appeared unto them and informed them what would happen unto them, how they would receive the crown of martyrdom in the city of SEBRÂ which is near the city of Alexandria, and that they would take their bodies to the city of NÎḲRĔHÂ to the north of the land of Egypt. And the holy men rejoiced at this vision, and they rose up early in the morning and gave all their possessions to the poor. Now AGATHON their eldest brother was a man of high position in his city, and everyone loved him, and RAPÎḲÂ (REBECCA) their mother encouraged them and incited them to bear patiently punishment for the Name of Christ. Then they came [fol. 10*b* 3] to the city of ḲÛS and confessed Christ before DIONYSIUS the governor, who condemned them to a severe punishment; and he tortured their mother before them, and she bore the torture bravely and rejoiced, and then he tortured her five sons. And when he was weary of torturing them they advised him to send them to the city of Alexandria so that they might not lead astray the people, for they were held in great affection by all, and many men through them believed in Christ and received a crown of martyrdom. And when they had brought the holy men to ARMENIUS, the governor of the city of Alexandria, now he was in the city called SÂBRÂ, and he learned about their fight, he tortured them very severely. He hacked their bodies with knives, he cast them into a large vessel and kindled a fire on top of them, he threw them on to the wheel, and hung them up head downwards. And in all these tortures our Lord Christ supported them against death until the governor and all his people were ashamed. Then the governor commanded his men to cut off their heads with a sword, and to sink their bodies in the sea. And straightway they cut off their heads with a sword, and they laid their bodies in a small boat so that they might cast them into the sea. And God sent forthwith an angel to a certain rich man of the city of NEḲRÂHÂ to the north of Egypt, on the borders of MAṢÎL, and commanded him to take the bodies of the saints. And that rich man went and gave much money to the soldiers, and took the bodies of the holy saints, [fol. 11*a* 1] and he heard a voice which said, "This is the abode of the saints." And he laid them in the church until the time of tribulation passed by, and then he revealed their existence; and they built a fine church and laid their bodies therein. And God made manifest from their bones many great signs and wonders, and recently they translated their bodies to the city of SAMNÛṬYÂ (SAMHÛD in the province of FARSHÛṬ).

And on this day also FÂSÎLADAS (BASILIDES) and two thousand [of his companions] were martyred.

And on this day also are to be commemorated DÂS, GÂGRÂ, NÂWLÂ, Bishop of Antioch, and PETER the monk.

And on this day also is commemorated the birth of ḤANNÂ the mother of our Lady.

VIII. MASKARAM

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day Saint ZACHARIAS the priest, the son of BERACHIAH, was martyred by the hand of HEROD the king. When the angel GABRIEL announced to this priest [fol. 11*a* 2] the birth of JOHN his son, he did not believe his word. Because of this Gabriel said, "Thou shalt be dumb until the child is born," and he was dumb until the child was born; but when he was born, he spake and he glorified God, and he wrote and said, "His name is JOHN." And the Holy Gospel beareth testimony concerning him, and sheweth that he and his wife were righteous, and that they walked in the Law of God without blemish. When our Lord Christ was born, and the men who were soothsayers came to worship Him, HEROD was troubled and feared for his kingdom. For this reason he sent and slew all the children of Bethlehem of Judah whose days were two years and less than two years, and HEROD thought that among their number he would kill Christ. And the angel of God appeared unto JOSEPH in a dream, and he took our Lord and MARY His mother and they came to the land of Egypt. And the mother of JOHN took him, and went out into the fields, and fled into the desert of SÎNÂ, and she dwelt there bringing up her child for seven years. Then the mother of the boy died and left her child alone in the desert, and there he stayed until his shewing himself to Israel. When HEROD killed the children he thought in his heart that JOHN was Christ, and he sent his lictors to seek for him with his father ZACHARIAS. And ZACHARIAS said unto him, "I know neither where the boy is nor his mother." And HEROD said unto him, [fol. 11*a* 3] "If thou dost not bring thy son unto me I myself will slay thee"; but ZACHARIAS was not afraid of him. And HEROD told his soldiers to slay ZACHARIAS, and they slew him between the sanctuary and the altar; and God hid his body and his blood became like unto stone. And when the priests and the people were coming to prayer according to their wont, one of the priests arrived and went into the sanctuary, and he found the blood and he heard a voice which cried out in the altar, saying, "ZACHARIAS the son of BERACHIAH hath been slain"; and his blood continued to cry out until it was avenged. Now this ZACHARIAS, the son of BERACHIAH, was not one of the twelve sons of the prophets, for that ZACHARIAS was not killed, but died in the country of ÛRÂTÎ where his body was found in a perfect state and undecayed, and they built a church for it. As for this holy man ZACHARIAS, [the father of JOHN,] his body was never found, but his blood became a witness of his slaughter. And it is also said that when HEROD slew the children a certain Jew said unto him, "Behold, a son hath been born unto ZACHARIAS even as the angel of God told him, peradventure he is Christ." And HEROD sent his lictors to slay the child JOHN. And ZACHARIAS said unto them, "I have taken the child to a certain place; come ye with me and take him from that place." And the lictors went with him until he brought them into the sanctuary. And he set his son JOHN on the wing of the altar, where the angel of God [fol. 11*b* 1] had announced [his birth], and immediately the angel of God snatched away the child, and carried him off to the desert ZÎFÂTÂ. And when the lictors could not find the child they slew ZACHARIAS his father. Therefore did our Lord say unto the Jews, "The blood of ZACHARIAS whom ye slew shall come upon you," for it was the Jews who were the cause of his slaughter.

And on this day also died MOSES the prophet and righteous man, and the head of the Prophets. This prophet laboured with the people of God, and he suffered tribulation with them until [his] death and he delivered up his soul. This man it was who worked signs and wonders in Egypt and in the sea 'ÊRTÊRÂ (RED SEA), and he was not well pleased to be called the "son of Pharaoh's daughter," who brought him up, when his parents had cast him into the river of Egypt because of the decree of Pharaoh [fol. 11*b* 2] who commanded that all the male children of the Hebrews should be destroyed. When the daughter of Pharaoh the king found him she took him and reared him as if he had been her own son. And when he was fully forty years old he saw an Egyptian slay one of the Hebrews, and straightway he avenged the Hebrew and slew the Egyptian. On the following day he saw two other men fighting together, and he attempted to make peace between them. And he who was in the wrong rose up and said unto him, "Dost thou wish to slay me as thou didst slay the Egyptian yesterday?" And because of this MOSES fled to the land of Midian and there he married a wife and begot two sons. When he was eighty years old there appeared unto him a vision and a fire in the pâṭôs tree, and when he came to look and to learn [what it was], God spake unto him from out of the tree, and commanded him to depart to Egypt, and to bring out the Children of Israel from there. Then God worked ten plagues with His own hands upon the Egyptians; the first was the river which became blood, and the last was the slaughter of the first born of the Egyptians. After this He brought the people out of the land of Egypt, and He divided the sea 'ÊRTĔRÂ (RED SEA) and made them to pass through it, and He brought back the water of the sea over their enemies, PHARAOH and his host, and drowned them in the sea 'ÊRTĔRÂ (RED SEA). And He brought down [fol. 11*b* 3] for them "Manâ" in the Arabian desert forty years, and He made water to flow forth from a rock; all these beautiful things did MOSES the prophet perform for them. And they used to curse him, and many times they wished to stone him, but he was longsuffering with them, and he prayed to God for them, and because he loved them greatly he said unto God, "If Thou wilt not forgive this people their transgression, then blot out my name from Thy book" (Exodus xxxii, 32). And the Book is a witness concerning him—that he spake with God five hundred [times], and the words testify [that God talked with him] as a man talketh with his friend. And his face shone with the light of the glory of God, and he was obliged to veil his face so that the children of Israel might not die when they looked upon it. When he was fully one hundred and twenty years old God commanded him to deliver the people over into the hand of JOSHUA, the son of NUN, his disciple, that he might shepherd them. And he called JOSHUA and commanded him with the command of God and the Law, and he delivered the people into his hand, and informed him that he was to bring the people into the land of [their] inheritance. And after MOSES had made the Tabernacle of Witness and everything which was in it by the command of God, he died in the mountain and was buried there, and God hid his body so that the children of Israel should not take it and worship it. And the Book testifieth among the children of Israel there never rose up a prophet who was like unto MOSES. [fol. 12*a* 1] When Satan wished to uncover (or reveal) the body of MOSES, MICHAEL the archangel rebuked him, and prevented him from doing so, even as JUDE the apostle testifieth in the book of the apostle (verse 9). And the children of Israel mourned for MOSES three days.

And on this day also DÎMÂSYÔS (DIMASIUS) became a martyr. This holy man was from the city of DĔRSĔBÂ on the borders of DANṬU to the north of the land of Egypt, he loved the Church, and the poor, and he visited the sick. And a man who was shining with light appeared unto him and commanded him to go and receive the crown of martyrdom, and he made covenants with heaven and rejoiced greatly. And he forsook his father and went forth from his city, and he prayed to God to give him help during the torture for His holy Name's sake. And he came into the city of ATHRIBIS and confessed Christ before the governor, who tortured him severely and sent him to LUCIANUS the governor of the city of Alexandria. And whilst he was in the boat, our Lord Christ appeared unto him, and comforted him, [fol. 12*a* 2] and encouraged him, and promised him everlasting happiness; and his soul rejoiced and was exceedingly glad. And LUCIANUS tortured him very severely and then cut off his head with a sword; thus DIMASIUS received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of heaven. And the people of his city came and took away his body, and paid great honours to it, and through it signs and mighty wonders took place.

And on this day also are commemorated: LUCIANUS the martyr, 'ÊRMĔYÂS (JEREMIAH), and the nobles 'ANDÊWÂ and 'ÊLYÂNÔS (ELIANUS ?), and 'AMMÔN the monk.

IX. MASKARAM

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day the holy father Abbâ BÎSHÔRÂ (PISOURA), Bishop of the city of MAṢÎL (the MELEDJ of the Copts and METELIS of the Greeks), became a martyr. This holy man became Bishop of the city of MAṢÎL, which is beloved of God, [fol. 12*a* 3] of the country of Egypt. When DIOCLETIAN was reigning and was persecuting the Christians, this holy man wished to pour out his blood for Christ's sake. And he gathered together all the people, and set them before the Holy Offering, and taught them many righteous ordinances, and after this he informed them that he wished to pour out his blood for Christ's sake. And they all, both great and small, wept, and said unto him, "What aileth thee that thou wouldst leave us? We are thy pupils; we will not permit thee to depart." And they wished to prevent him, but they could not prevail upon him [to stay], and they allowed him [to depart]. And he committed them to Christ, and he embraced them, and he went out from them, and they set him on his way weeping bitterly as they went. And three bishops went with him, who were BASKÔS and FENÂBÎKÔS and THEODORE. And they went together to the city of the governor, and they confessed Christ before him, and he tortured them cruelly and multiplied their punishments. And when he knew that those bishops were the parents of Christians, now the bishops were bold and endured the tortures with great fortitude, for our Lord Christ confirmed them, the governor ordered [his men] to cut off the heads of the three bishops. And they cut off their heads with a sword, and they received their crowns of life in the kingdom of the heavens. And the holy body of BÎSHÔRÂ (PISOURA) resteth to this day in the city of NASÊL [fol. 12*b* 1] on the other side of the river.

And on this day FÂSÎLADAS and 14,730 men and 7 women were martyred [with BASILIDES].

And on this day also is commemorated the miracle which took place in the city of FRÛMYÂ in the country of Rômê. This man, like the people from the country of the Greeks, was fired excessively with devilish envy of the signs and wonders which used to appear in the church of the glorious angel MICHAEL, the captain of the hosts of heaven. And they wished to turn the stream of water from the Nile which flowed through the district on to the church, so that they might submerge it, and destroy the sacristan who had it in charge. And straightway MICHAEL the captain of the heavenly hosts, the divine angel, appeared unto NÂRṬÎNÔS, the sacristan of the church, and he drew nigh unto him, and said unto him, "Be strong, and fear not." And he smote a rock with the staff which was in his hand, and the rock was split open like a window, and the stream of water flowed out through it. [fol. 12*b* 2] And those who saw this marvelled and praised God, and paid honour to MICHAEL the archangel. And from that day to this that stream of water can be seen flowing through the rock, and not approaching in any way the church of the Archangel MICHAEL.

And on this day also died King YÂSÂY (YÛSYÂS who lived in the eighteenth century) who finished his fight on a tree, and pleased God.

X. MASKARAM

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day was revealed the miracle of our Lady MARY in the city of ṢÊDÊNYÂ when oil dropped from the tablet with her portrait [painted] upon it [fol. 12*b* 3] as if it had been clothed with flesh. Now, it is said that LUKE the evangelist painted this portrait. And the cause of its coming to ṢÊDÊNYÂ was a certain widow whose name was MARTHA, and who turned her house into a habitation for pilgrims; and she loved our Lady MARY exceedingly, and ministered unto her with all her power. One day there lodged with her a certain righteous monk whose name was THEODORE, and she received him with joy.

And on the following day when she was bidding him farewell, she said unto him, "Whither goest thou, O father?" And he said unto her, "I go to worship in the Sanctuary in Jerusalem." And she said unto him, "Take a little money from me to buy me a picture of our Lady MARY, and bring it to me when thou returnest to me"; and he said unto her, "I will buy [a picture] with my own money, and bring it to thee." And when he had arrived in Jerusalem he knelt and prayed in the holy places, and he set out on his return journey without having bought the picture. And immediately he heard a voice which said unto him, "Why hast thou forgotten to buy the picture?" And being troubled by the voice he turned back into the market-place, and found a picture of our Lady MARY, which had sweet features and a beautiful form. Having bought it he wrapped it up in cotton and in fine linen. And as he was travelling along a terrible road in the desert thieves rose up against him, and when he was wishing to take to flight, a voice came forth from that picture which said, "Fear not: complete thy journey"; and he went on his way and none challenged him. Another time a savage lion rose up against him and wanted to rend him, and straightway an awful voice came forth from that picture and drove away the lion. And when THEODORE saw [fol. 13*a* 1] all these signs and wonders, he wanted to carry that picture to his own city, and he did not wish to give it to the widow. And as he was travelling by boat on another journey, the wind rose up against him and carried him towards Damascus. And having disembarked he went into the house of that widow with several other pilgrims, and he did not discover himself to her, and she did not know him. And on the following day when he wished to go forth secretly and to depart to his city, the gates of the house failed to work and they remained jammed throughout the day; in the evening the monk returned to his abode, and when the widow saw him she wondered. And he continued to do this for three days, returning each evening; he saw the gate, but when he wished to go through it, he was unable to go on his way. Then the widow took him and said unto him, "O my father, what aileth thee? Is thine heart troubled that I see thee thus disturbed?" And then he told her everything that had come upon him in the matter of the picture. And straightway she brought him into her house, and she opened the wrappings of the picture and found that drops of sweat were falling from it; and by reason of her joy she kissed the hands and feet of the monk. Then she took the picture into her prayer-chamber, and laid it upon a stand in a recess with great honours. And she made for it a brass grating, so that no one could touch it, and she hung before it lamps which burned by day and by night, and outside these she hung silken curtains. Beneath the picture she set a marble bowl into which the drops of oil which sweated out from it might be collected. And that monk dwelt [fol. 13*a* 2] with the widow, and ministered to the picture of our Lady MARY until they both died. And when the archbishop of that city heard the report of the picture, he, and the bishops and the priests and all the people came [to the house], and when they looked at the tablet with the picture they found that it was in the condition of being covered with flesh; and they marvelled at this divine work. And having emptied out the oil from the bowl, and divided it among themselves as a blessed thing, the bowl filled up [again] immediately. When they attempted to remove the picture to another spot a great earthquake took place, and many people died; and the picture remaineth there until this day.

And on this day died JUDITH the prophetess, who delivered Israel from the hand of HOLOPHERNES, the evil one, through the wisdom and counsel which she employed until at length she cut off his head by the might of God which was upon her.

[fol.13*a* 3] And on this day also the birth of our holy Lady, the Virgin MARY, took place according to what is written in the Book of Exposition of Saint Abbâ MACARIUS of DABRA SKETE (the monastery of SCETE). And it is also written in the Book of Exposition of Upper Egypt, and it is written in the Holy Scriptures. On the thirteenth day of the month Ṭâkhshâsh (Dec. 7–Jan. 6), the righteous woman ḤANNÂ, the mother of our holy Lady, the Virgin MARY, conceived, and her bringing forth took place on the first day of Maskaram (Sept. 8–Oct. 7). And it is found in other books that on the seventh day of the month of Naḥasê (August), God sent the angel GABRIEL to the righteous JOACHIM and told him, saying, "Thy wife ḤANNÂ shall be with child." And immediately she had union with her husband JOACHIM she conceived, and she brought forth on the first day of the month Genbôt (May 6–June 5). And it is meet that we should commemorate the festival of the birth of our holy Lady the Virgin MARY on both of them, because she maketh intercession for us to her beloved Son at all times, and behold, we will write the commemoration of her birth on the first day of the month Genbôt. May her intercession be, etc.

[fol. 13*b* 1] And on this day also the MÂTRÔNYÂ became a martyr. This holy woman was a handmaiden to a Jewish woman, and she was a Christian even as her parents were Christians. And that Jewish woman her mistress hated [Christianity], and she wished to make her maid abandon the Christian Religion, and to bring her over to the Jewish Faith, which she would not embrace. For this reason she reviled MÂTRÔNYÂ and made her service heavy upon her. One day MÂTRÔNYÂ followed her mistress the Jewish lady until she brought her to the Jewish synagogue, and MÂTRÔNYÂ turned aside and went into the holy church. And when her mistress asked her, saying, "Why didst thou not come into my synagogue?" the holy MÂTRÔNYÂ answered and said unto her, "God is very remote from thy synagogue, and how would it be seemly for me to enter therein? But the place which is seemly for me to enter is the holy church, which our Lord Jesus Christ purchased with his precious blood." When her mistress heard these words she was wroth with her and beat her severely, and shut her up in a dark place wherein she remained for four days without food and drink; then the Jewess had her brought out from her prison [fol. 13*b* 2] and beat her cruelly with many, many stripes, and once again she sent her back into the prison, where she died. And after her death her mistress took her body, and carried it up to the roof of her house, and according to what the men say who saw her, she cast it out, and it fell down by itself. Now the mistress of MÂTRÔNYÂ was afraid of the Government, and alarmed lest they should examine her about her murder. And the wrath of God fell upon that Jewish woman, and as she was coming down from the roof of her house, she fell down headlong, and died, and departed into fire for ever. And this holy woman MÂTRÔNYÂ went to joy everlasting.

And on this day also are commemorated Saint ATHANASIA and her three children.

XI. MASKARAM

On this day FÂSÎLADAS (BASILIDES), the father of the kings of Antioch and their counsellor, became a martyr. This holy man was a general of the kings of Rôm, and the whole kingdom stood by reason of his counsel; and he had many slaves and handmaidens. There was a certain prince in Rôm in those days whose name was NUMERIANUS [son of the Emperor CARUS], and he married a sister of Saint FÂSÎLADAS (BASILIDES), a lady of high rank, the mother of THEODORE Banâdĕlêwôs. And by him she became the mother of JUSTUS, and CLAUDIUS, and 'ABÂDÎR. These were the sons of the sister of Saint FÂSÎLADAS (BASILIDES), who was the sister of the mother of VICTOR. And FÂSÎLADAS (BASILIDES) begot by her two sons, one whose name was 'AWSÂBYÔS (EUSEBIUS) and the other was [called] MACARIUS. And at that time the men of ḲUĔZ and Persia were at war with Rôm [about A.D. 283], and they sent JUSTUS, the son of the king, and 'AWSÂBYÔS (EUSEBIUS), the son of FÂSÎLADAS (BASILIDES), with their armies, and they went to the war. And NUMERIANUS the prince went to fight against the other [enemies], who slew that king in that war. Thus the kingdom of Rôm was without a king to rule it and to administer the affairs thereof. At that time the men of Rôm gathered together large numbers of mighty men of war from every city into their army. And among them was a certain man whose name was 'AGRÎPÂDÂ, and who was a native of [fol. 14*a* 1] Upper Egypt, and a goat-herd. And the Government took him and set him over the royal horses, and he was bold in character and a mighty man in action. And one of the daughters of prince NUMERIANUS saw him from a window of the royal palace, and she loved him and lusted for that 'AGRÎPÂDÂ, and she took him and married him, and made him king, and called him "DIOCLETIAN." And after a few days he forsook the Lord God, the God of heaven, and worshipped idols. And when FÂSÎLADAS (BASILIDES) heard this thing, he was very sorry, and he did not return to reign in his kingdom. And JUSTUS, the son of NUMERIANUS, and 'AWSÂBYÔS (EUSEBIUS), the son of FÂSÎLADAS (BASILIDES), returned from the war with great joy, for they had slain all their enemies, and had laid waste their countries. When they arrived in the city of Antioch and found that DIOCLETIAN, the denier of Christ, and the worshipper of idols was king, they were exceedingly sorry. And they drew their swords and wished to slay DIOCLETIAN the king, and to appoint king JUSTUS, the son of NUMERIANUS, but FÂSÎLADAS (BASILIDES) kept them from this act. After this Saint FÂSÎLADAS (BASILIDES) gathered together all his kinsfolk, and his soldiers, and his slaves, and informed them that he wished to pour out his blood for the sake of Christ's Name; and they all said unto him, "The death which thou diest we also will die with thee." And they all agreed together [fol. 14*a* 2] and stood before King DIOCLETIAN, who feared them with a very great fear, for they belonged to the kingdom (i.e. the royal family). And HERMINIUS the father of VICTOR advised him to banish them to the country of Egypt, and to punish them there. And he sent them all away, each to a different city, namely 'ABÂDÎR, and 'ÎRÂ'Î, the sister of 'AWSÂBYÔS (EUSEBIUS), and MACARIUS, the brother of CLAUDIUS, and VICTOR. THEODORE Banâdĕlêwôs he hung upon a kômôl tree, and drove one hundred and fifty-three nails through his body, and thus THEODORE consummated his martyrdom. FÂSÎLADAS (BASILIDES) he sent to a city of 'AFRÂḲYÂ, of Five Cities (Pentapolis ?) to MAṢRÛS the governor; and when MAṢRÛS saw him he marvelled exceedingly why he had left his kingdom and his glory. And our Lord Christ sent His angel and lifted him up by the spirit into heaven and shewed him the spiritual habitation; and his soul rejoiced exceedingly. Of his slaves, some he set free, and some received the crown of martyrdom with him; now the number of the latter was 7033. And [DIOCLETIAN] tortured the holy man on the rack, and they cut his body into pieces with sharpened rods of iron, and he died; but our Lord Jesus Christ, to Whom be glory! raised him up from the dead whole and uninjured. And when all the people who dwelt there saw this, they marvelled exceedingly, and they believed in our Lord Jesus Christ, to Whom be glory! and they cursed the governor. And the governor was wroth with them, and he commanded his soldiers to cut [fol. 14*a* 3] off their heads, and they cut off their heads with the sword, and they received crowns of martyrdom in the kingdom of heaven; and the number of these was 5700 men and 37 women. Then they threw FÂSÎLADAS (BASILIDES) into a frying-pan and roasted him, and he became like water, and his whole body was melted. And the governor commanded them to dig a deep pit on the mountain top, and to bury him therein, and they did so; and straightway our Lord Christ, to Whom be glory! raised him up from the dead a second time. And FÂSÎLADAS (BASILIDES) came once again before the governor, and he cried out and said, "Be ashamed, O governor MAṢRÛS, thou infidel king, and let thy idols be ashamed with thee! For behold, my Lord Jesus Christ hath raised me up from the dead, whole and uninjured." And when the people who were there saw this miracle, they believed on our Lord Jesus Christ and became martyrs, and they were in number 2300. Then the king made Saint FÂSÎLADAS (BASILIDES) to go up upon a machine with wheels and a saw inside it, and he inflicted severe tortures upon him, and then he made him to lie on his liver upon an iron bed, and had a fire lighted under him. And straightway our Lord Jesus Christ, to Whom be glory! appeared unto him, and raised him up from the torture, and made him whole and uninjured. He made him a promise, and said unto him, "O my chosen one FÂSÎLADAS (BASILIDES), know thou that everyone who shall celebrate thy commemoration, or shall give alms to the poor for thy name's sake, or shall give [fol. 14*b* 1] clothing to the naked, or shall give incense to the church for thy commemoration, and everyone who shall celebrate thy commemoration, whether in little or whether in much, to all these will I give remission of sins, and I will make their habitation to be with me in the kingdom of heaven." And having said this unto him, our Lord went up into heaven in great glory. When Saint FÂSÎLADAS (BASILIDES) heard this from our Lord he rejoiced with great joy. Then MAṢRÛS the governor took counsel with his advisers, and said unto them, "What shall I do about this man whose name is FÂSÎLADAS (BASILIDES)? I have no other torture left which I can apply to him, and he will not turn from his opinion." And they counselled him and said unto him, "Cut off his head with the sword, and be quit of him, for behold, all the men of the city are being corrupted through him." And straightway the governor commanded his men to cut off the head of Saint FÂSÎLADAS (BASILIDES), and they cut off his head, and he received a crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of heaven in the place of the earthly kingdom which he had cast aside and forsaken. And signs and great wonders were made manifest through his body. Now the number of all those who became martyrs with him was 5793. May their blessing and prayer, etc.

[fol. 14*b* 2] And on this day also the holy woman BANAFZEZ [literally "violet"], the interpretation whereof is, "Whose odour is sweet," became a martyr. This holy woman was old and very far advanced in years, and she fought her fight in the days of SÂBÔR, King of Persia; they carried her away bound into captivity together with nine thousand Christians whom they had captured. The general of the army first tortured her very severely and then cut off her head with the sword; and after they had cut off her head, the blood which flowed from her neck spurted out a very long way. And the strength of [her] enemies, that is to say the soldiers who dwelt there, drooped, and the light of the sun was turned to darkness, and the odour of a very sweet smell filled the place.

And on this day also three husbandmen of the city of 'ASNÎ [in Upper Egypt], [fol. 14*b* 3] whose names were SÛRĔS and 'ANKÎṬYÔS and MASKHADRÂ, were martyred. When ARIANUS was returning towards the north he slew all the people everywhere and spared no one, and at length his soldiers were exhausted and they put back their swords into their sheaths. And these three holy husbandmen met him on the bridge (ferry) on their way back from the field, and they cried out and said unto him boldly, "We are Christians." And when ARIANUS heard them, he said unto his officers, "Hear ye these men? Do ye wish to kill them?" And his soldiers said unto him, "We are aweary, and we have put back our swords into their sheaths." And when the holy men heard them they said unto him, "Behold, here are our digging tools, kill us with them." Then they laid their heads down on a stone, and the soldiers hacked through their necks.

And on this day also is the commemoration of the blessed CORNELIUS, a general and righteous man. He lived in the days of the holy Apostles, and he fought the good fight strenuously, and was well-pleasing unto God. And an angel appeared unto him and commanded him to send men to invite PETER the apostle to come to him, so that he might hear from him what was right. And when PETER the apostle came to him, he told him, and all those who were with him, [fol. 15*a* 1] the word of our Lord Jesus Christ; and CORNELIUS believed, and he and all his house were baptized; and PETER the apostle appointed him to the Church of Alexandria. And when he arrived there he found [the city] filled with the worship of idols, and he baptized many of the men thereof and baptized them with Christian baptism. And DEMETRIUS the governor believed, and CORNELIUS baptized him and all the people of his house with Christian baptism. And he passed his whole life in fighting like the Apostles, and he was the first of the Gentiles who believed [on Christ].

And on this day also died Saint THEODORA. This holy woman was a native of Alexandria, and she lived in the days of ZENO the emperor; a strange man forced her, and also took her handmaiden and defiled her. And straightway she sorrowed with a bitter sorrow, and wept bitter tears. And she put on male attire secretly, and went forth from the city of Alexandria in the guise of a man, and she called herself THEODORE. Then she went to a monastery of monks, and arrayed herself in the garb of the monks, which is the garb of angels, and all those who saw her thought that she was [fol. 15*a* 2] an eunuch. And she devoted herself to the ascetic life, and fought a most strenuous fight, and she endured thirst, and hunger, and the weariness of night vigil, and the standing up by day; and she continued to lead this life for many years. Now a certain man committed fornication with a certain woman, and she conceived by him and brought forth a child; and her parents said unto her, "Who is it that hath defiled thy virginity?" And she uttered a lie against this holy woman THEODORA, and said, "It is THEODORE the monk who liveth in the monastery that hath defiled me, and I am with child by him." And when her parents heard these words they were exceedingly sorry, and they took the child and carried him to the abbot of the monastery, and said unto him, "Take this child, for he is the son of THEODORE the monk, thy son." And the abbot summoned this holy woman, and said unto him (sic), "Why hast thou done this abominable thing, and brought shame and disgrace upon the whole community of monks?" Now he did not know that it was a woman to whom he spake. And the holy woman THEODORA said unto him, "I have sinned. Have mercy upon me, O my father." And straightway the abbot was wroth, and he gave her the child, and expelled her from the monastery; and she dwelt in the desert seven years, and the child was with her. And she endured many trials and tribulations caused by devils, and Satan tortured her cruelly. After this she was received, and one brought her into the monastery again, where she lingered a few days and then died, and delivered her soul [fol. 15*a* 3] into the hand of God. And she received life everlasting with all the saints, and she finished a good fight.

And on this day also are commemorated Saint BASIL the martyr, THEODORE, Bishop of Jerusalem, ḳAWESṬÔS (CAUSTUS), the chief of the martyrs of the city of Alexandria, and those who were martyred with him.

XII. MASKARAM

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day is commemorated the glorious angel MICHAEL the archangel. On this day God, to Whom be glory! sent him to ISAIAH the prophet, the son of AMOS, and He had mercy upon him, and shewed compassion unto him after He had been wroth with him for twenty-eight years. And God commanded him to go to HEZEKIAH the king, and to tell him that God would heal him of his sickness, and had added fifteen [fol. 15*b* 1] years to his days, so that he might marry and beget MANASSEH.

And on this day took place the General Council of the Saints, two hundred bishops, in the city of Ephesus. This was the third of the great General Councils, and its bishops assembled in the twentieth year of the reign of THEODOSIUS the Less, the son of ARCADIUS, the son of THEODOSIUS the Great. They assembled because of the error of NESṬÛR (NESTORIUS) who was Archbishop of Constantinople, and who said, "Our Lady, the Virgin MARY, did not give birth to God in the flesh, but to a mere man, and that afterwards the Son of God dwelt in him, and not that He dwelt and was one with him, but that He dwelt [in him] according to his desire and pleasure only; therefore Christ had Two Natures and Two Existences." This is the wicked belief of NESṬÛR (NESTORIUS) the infidel. Because of him these fathers, two hundred bishops, were convened, [fol. 15*b* 2] and they debated the matter with him, and they urged him strongly and shewed him that He Who was born of our holy Lady MARY the Virgin, was God Who had become man. And they brought before him the testimony of the words of the angel GABRIEL when he said unto our Lady MARY in the holy Gospel of Saint LUKE (i, 28), "God be with thee! He Who shall be born of thee is holy and shall be called the son of the Most High." And they brought before him also the words of ISAIAH (vii, 14) the prophet in his prophecy, "Behold a virgin shall conceive, and she shall bear a son, and his name shall be called Emmanuel." And again he saith, "There shall go forth from JESSE a root, and he who shall arise from it shall be the hope of the Gentiles" (Isaiah xi, 1, 10). And moreover, our father Saint CYRIL, Archbishop of the city of Alexandria, rebuked him, and admonished him, and said unto him, "Natures cannot be separated after they have become one in their unity, on the contrary, and we believe and declare that the Word of God that became man is One Nature only." And NESṬÛR (NESTORIUS) the unbeliever would not believe this, and he would not turn from his unbelief, and the whole General Council rebuked him and threatened him that they would cut him off from his priesthood and office unless he turned from his evil counsel. And he would neither hearken nor accept the words of the whole Council, and they therefore cut him off from his priesthood, and they anathematized him, and excommunicated him, and drove him forth from the Council into Upper Egypt, where he died an evil death and departed into Sheol for ever. And these fathers, the two hundred bishops, [fol. 15*b* 3] confirmed the belief and made known in writing the declaration of this Council, and they said, "Our Lady MARY, the holy Virgin, the God-bearer, brought forth the Word of God made flesh." And they drew up the CANON and laid down the LAW, and they signed it with their own hands, and gave it to the faithful unto this day. And if it be said that in these days the Nestorians do not believe in the faith of NESTORIUS, the unbeliever, we reply that this is due to the fact that the Nestorians have mingled with the Jacobites who are in Syria, and in the country of the East generally, and that some of them have turned from their evil counsel. And we will beseech God to guide us in the way of salvation—to Whom be praise and glory for ever and ever! Amen.

Salutation to 'AFLÂḤÔS the martyr, and to those who were martyred with him.

And on this day also is commemorated the translation of the bodies of Saint 'AFLÂḤÔS the martyr and his companions in the city of Alexandria.

[fol. 16*a* 1] And on this day also are commemorated LÛRÂS (LÛYÛRÂS) and GALANICUS (CALANICUS) the martyrs, and JOACHIM and ḤANNÂ, and on it a festival is held in Rômê in honour of STEPHEN (protomartyr).

XIII. MASKARAM

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

And on this day is commemorated the miracle which the great Saint Abbâ BASIL, Bishop of Caesarea and Cappadocia, wrought in connection with the young man who lusted for his master's daughter, and whose heart was inflamed with love and desire for her. And that young man went to Satan, the enemy of our race, by the help of an unbeliever and magician. And that denier of Christ wrote a paper and gave it to him, and commanded him to go to the cemetery of the 'ARAMÎYÂN (Pagans) and to stand up by one of the graves therein at the time of midnight, and to lift up on high his [right] hand with that paper in it. And this vile man having received these words from him, went and stood up among the graves of the 'ARAMÎYÂN (Pagans), with the paper in his hand, according as the magician had directed him. And straightway there came to him one of the Satans who seized his hand and brought him to Satan, the chief of the Satans, and he took that paper out of his hand. And Satan asked him, saying, "Dost thou believe on me, O young man? And wilt thou deny [fol. 16*a* 2] thy Messiah and not turn again to Him after I have fulfilled for thee thy desire?" And the poor slave answered and said unto him, "Yea, my lord, I will do as thou commandest me." And Diabolus, the crafty deceiver, said unto him, "Write with thine own hand on a piece of paper that thou wilt do this." And the young man wrote for him on the paper, and denied Christ our God, and he believed on Satan our enemy, and he separated himself from Christ in the body after he had been one with Him in heart and soul. And then Satan kindled lust in the heart of the daughter of the slave's master, and she loved the young man exceedingly. And she could not bear to be away from him for a moment, but she cried out boldly to her father, saying, "If thou wilt not give me in marriage to thy servant, then assuredly I will kill myself." And her father was sorrowful and wept bitterly because of this thing, and he tried to make her to be patient, but she could not be patient, and moreover, her love for the man was increasing continually in her heart. And she overcame her father, because he was afraid that she would kill herself, being ashamed before the people. And her father gave her to the young man, and he received the maiden from her father, and he took her into his house, and he satisfied his desire of her. And after she had dwelt with him many days, her father and her mother multiplied their weeping and lamentation for her, and her father cried out to God beseeching Him to have compassion upon them, and to remove their sorrow. And our Lord Jesus Christ heard their cry, and accepted their petition, [fol. 16*a* 3] and He made their daughter to know, and made it clear to her that the young man whom she loved was not a Christian. And on the one occasion during the whole of the time which he had lived with her, when he went into the church, she saw that he did not partake of the Holy Mysteries and that he did not make the sign of the life-giving Cross over himself; and the maiden wept, and repented and was exceedingly sorry. And when the young man knew that his matter was revealed unto her plainly, he said unto her, "I have not done any evil whatsoever." And she answered and said unto him, "If thou art a Christian, and if what thou sayest is true, come with me and we will go and enter the church together, and we will receive the Holy Mysteries." And having forced him he told her of all that he had done for her sake, and how he had gone to that magician and written that paper for him with his own hand, and how he had denied Christ and believed on Satan, and had written that paper for him with his own hand, and had given it to Satan. When the maiden heard this thing from him she was exceedingly sorry and rebuked herself. And straightway she rose up and made haste to go to that pillar and light of the church, Saint BASIL, bishop of her city, and she told him what had happened unto her, and she wept and did homage at his feet, and entreated him to deliver and save her. And Saint BASIL sent and had the young man brought to him, and he learned from him his affair, and the young man revealed unto him what he had done. Then Saint BASIL asked [fol. 16*b* 1] him, saying, "Dost thou wish to return and to be a Christian once more?" And the young man answered and said unto him with tears, "Is it possible for this to happen unto me, my lord?" And the saint said unto him, "Be of good cheer, and fear not," and he made the sign of the Cross over him, and he shut him up in a chamber near him, and commanded him to pray until the third day; and BASIL went and prayed for him. And after the third day BASIL visited him, and he said unto him, "What hath happened unto thee during the past three days?" And the young man made known unto him that he had been in very great tribulation which was caused by the cries of Satans, who shewed him the paper which he had written and were very wroth with him. And Saint BASIL said unto him, "Be not afraid of them, for God will help thee, and strengthen thee, and preserve thee." And Saint BASIL gave him bread and water, and took him back into the place of his confinement, and prayed over him again. Later he visited him again, and he said unto him, "What hath happened unto thee?" And the young man said, "I hear their cry, but I see them not." And again Saint BASIL gave him bread and water, and admonished him and rebuked him, and said unto him, "Be not afraid"; then BASIL took him back again into his place of confinement, and went away and prayed for him. Now Saint BASIL shut him up in this way for three days at a time, and visited him every third day for forty days. And when the saint visited him at the completion of the forty days he asked the young man what had happened to him. And the young man said unto him, "O my holy father, last night I saw thee waging war against Satan [fol. 16*b* 2] on my behalf, and thou didst vanquish him straightway"; and when Saint BASIL heard these words from him he rejoiced exceedingly. And he summoned all the monks from the monasteries, and the priests, and they prayed for that young man all that night. On the following day he brought the young man to the church, and the people of that city came there also, and Saint BASIL commanded them all to lift up their hands to heaven, and to pray and to make entreaty to God and say, "Have mercy upon us"; and they did as he commanded them. And they continued to cry out and to say, "Lord have mercy upon us," until that writing which the young man had written with his own hand for Satan fell down; and it fell down in the presence of all the people. And Saint BASIL unrolled the paper and read it before all the people, and he blessed the young man and gave him the Holy Mysteries. And he took the woman and blessed them together, and they departed to their house rejoicing and exulting in their salvation, and in the remission of their sins. And they praised God and ascribed thanks to Saint BASIL who by his prayer had saved them from the error of Satan.

[fol. 16*b* 3] And on this day also Abbâ ISAAC the anchorite became a martyr.

XIV. MASKARAM

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died the holy father, Abbâ AGATHON of the pillar. This holy man came from the city of TENÎS (TANIS, or the Field of Zoan, i.e. ṢÂN AL-ḤAGAR) in the north of the land of Egypt. His parents were righteous folk, and fearers of God, and they loved to give alms and gifts to the poor and needy. The thoughts of his mind tended to monasticism, and they moved in his heart continually. The name of his father was MAṬRÂ, and the name of his mother was MARYÂ. When he was thirty-five years old he was appointed priest, and straightway he devoted himself continually to the Church. And he entreated God by day and by night to make straight for him his departure from this world, and he departed to the desert and became a monk. And the Lord Christ prepared the means for him, and he went out from his city, and came to the city of MAREOTIS, and thence he departed to the SCETE desert. And the angel of God [fol. 17*a* 1] appeared unto him in the form of a monk who journeyed about with him everywhere in the desert and brought him to the monastery of Saint Abbâ MACARIUS in SCETE. And Saint Abbâ AGATHON came to the holy old men Abbâ ABRAHAM and Abbâ GA'ARGÎ, and he became their disciple and lived with them for three years. After this they set him before the sanctuary and before the abbot, Abbâ JOHN, and they remained three days in prayer over his garb of monasticism, and they arrayed him in the garb of angels. From that hour he became a devotee of God, and he fought a great fight with fasting and prayer, continually, day and night; and he slept on the ground without a mattress, and at length the skin of his body clave to his bones. And he read continually the history of the striving of Abbâ SIMON of the pillar (SIMON STYLITES), and he was always envious of his striving. And he meditated in his heart, shutting himself up, and he took counsel with the holy fathers concerning it, and they said this counsel is good; and he was blessed by them and they prayed over him. And he went out of the desert, and came nigh unto the world, to the city of SAKÂ (i.e. SAKHÂ, in the province of GHARBÎYAH), and he dwelt in a little church. And the believers built him a pillar there, and he went up on it and stood on it, and laboured strenuously in the ascetic life for a space of fifty years. In his days there appeared a man in whom was a filthy Satan and who led many people astray. And that man dwelt in a church, and the people used to throng about him to hear his doctrine, and with them they carried branches of trees [fol. 17*a* 2]. And Abbâ AGATHON sent and had him brought to him, and he prayed over him, and drove out from him the devil who used to address the people through him. Similarly, a certain woman used to say, "MÎNÂS the martyr holdeth converse with me." And she commanded her followers, and they dug a pool of water in the name of Abbâ MÎNÂS the martyr, and [pretended that] all those who bathed therein were healed. And Saint Abbâ AGATHON prayed over that woman until he cast out from her that unclean spirit. And Saint Abbâ AGATHON commanded the men of that city to fill up that pool. And there was also another man who used to raise up those who were mad and who were possessed of the devil, and when he beat them the devil used to leave them for a short time; and very many of those who were possessed of devils gathered together to him. And Saint Abbâ AGATHON sent messages to him very often bidding him to come to him, and he would not obey him and neither came to him nor forsook his error. And when the governor of that city passed by, those who were possessed of devils cursed him, and for this reason the governor took that man, and punished him with exceedingly great severity, and he died straightway during his punishment. And another man, a priest, fell into fornication with a woman in the church, and polluted (or destroyed) his portion of it; and the people took him and brought him to Saint Abbâ AGATHON, and he prayed over him and God healed him. And the holy man commanded that priest to take good heed that he did not minister in the priesthood during all the remaining days of his life. And the holy man AGATHON worked many [fol. 17*a* 3] miracles, and he healed very many sick people. And there appeared unto him in the forms of angels very many Satans who sang unto him very sweet songs, and ascribed blessing to him, but by the might of Christ, to Whom be praise, he knew their guile, and he made over them the sign of the Glorious Cross, and they fled from before him speedily. And when God wished to make him to rest from the toil of this world, AGATHON fell sick of a slight illness, and he delivered up his soul into the hand of God. Now very many people used to gather together to him, and he would teach them the way of God and would heal them of their sicknesses through his prayers. When they found out that he was dead they wept bitterly because they had lost their father who was wont to comfort them, and because they were the orphans of this glorious father. Now all the days of the life of this holy man Abbâ AGATHON were one hundred years. He dwelt in the world forty years, and in the desert ten years, and he toiled in ascetic labours and lived upon a pillar for fifty years.

And on this day also are commemorated MAḲÂRÎ (MACARIUS) the martyr, and BARTHOLOMEW, and 'AWĔDRÂ, and NÂSEN (NASO), and DÊGANÂ the priest.

[fol. 17*b* 1] And on this day also died Abbâ DÊGANÂ the priest.

XV. Maskaram

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day the translation of the body of Saint STEPHEN the archdeacon and protomartyr took place. And how did the translation take place? It took place after very many years had passed since his death, and more than three hundred years after the reign of the righteous Emperor CONSTANTINE who worshipped God nobly, and after the revelation of the Right Faith. There was a certain man who lived in the garden which was nigh unto the place where the body of Saint STEPHEN was, and that garden was called the "garden of GAMALIEL," and was nigh unto Jerusalem; and the name of that man was LUCIANUS. And Saint STEPHEN the fighter appeared unto him several times in dreams, and said unto him, "I am Stephen," and he informed him that his body was buried in that place; [fol. 17*b* 2] and that man LUCIANUS went and told the bishop of the city of Jerusalem, and when the bishop heard this thing he rejoiced exceedingly. And he rose up straightway and took with him two bishops, and certain men of the church, and they came to the place wherein the body of the saint lay, and they dug into the ground there. And a mighty earthquake took place, and the coffin wherein was the body of the holy man was revealed. And there ascended from it an odour which was exceedingly sweet, and they heard the voices of angels praising God and saying, "Glory to God in the heavens, and peace upon earth, His good pleasure to men." And they praised and sang in this wise three times. And the bishops and the priests bowed down before the coffin containing the body of the holy man, and then they bore it away with songs and hymns and many brightly shining lamps until they brought it into the citadel of Zion. And after this, a certain man whose name was ALEXANDER, and who was a native of Constantinople, and who lived in Jerusalem, built a beautiful church to Saint STEPHEN, and he removed the body of Saint STEPHEN into it. Five years after this ALEXANDER died, and his wife buried him by the side of the coffin of Saint STEPHEN. And when eight years more had passed the wife of ALEXANDER decided to go to the city of Constantinople [fol. 17*b* 3] and to take the body of her husband with her. And she came to the place wherein she had buried his body by the side of Saint STEPHEN, so that she might take her husband's body and bury it in the church which ALEXANDER had built in Constantinople in honour of Saint STEPHEN. Now her husband's coffin was like unto the coffin containing the body of Saint STEPHEN—and by the will of God she took the coffin wherein was the body of Saint STEPHEN, and carried it away to the city of Ascalon, and there she embarked with it in a ship to go to the city of Constantinople. As they were sailing over the sea she heard singing and many praises coming from the coffin, and she marvelled exceedingly. And she rose up that she might look at that coffin, and she knew that it was the coffin wherein was the body of Saint STEPHEN, and she understood that this had happened through the Will of God, to Whom be praise! She was unable to return to Jerusalem, and she gave thanks unto God the Most High, because of what He had done unto her. When that woman arrived in the city of Constantinople, she went to the emperor and made known unto him the history of Saint STEPHEN, and how signs had taken place, and how he had arrived at the port of the city of Constantinople. And the emperor and the archbishop, and priests, and the people of the city went forth and they came to the body of the saint, and they carried it upon their heads with singing and many hymns, and with joy and gladness until they brought it to the royal palace. [fol. 18*a* 1] And both in the ship and in the royal palace God made manifest many signs. And they laid the body of the holy man upon a wheeled cart drawn by two oxen, and when they came to the place which is called Constantinople, wherein the holy man wished them to lay his body, the oxen stood still and would not go any further and they stood there. And when they beat the oxen they heard a voice which came from one of the oxen, saying, "It is meet for them to deposit the body of Saint STEPHEN in this place." And all those who saw and heard this praised God, and they knew that He Who had made the unclean she-ass of BALAAM to speak was He Who had made to speak the oxen which were carrying the body of Saint STEPHEN. And the emperor commanded his people to build a beautiful church for him, and they built a beautiful church, and they laid therein a gem, a pearl of great price, a holy thing, that is to say the body of that holy and blessed man STEPHEN the apostle, the archdeacon and protomartyr.

[fol. 18*a* 2] And on this day is commemorated the righteous father, Abbâ PETER of the town of ṬARÂW (DARAW in Upper Egypt ?). This holy man was blessed before God from his mother's womb. When he grew up to man's estate he was perfect in heart, and he laboured strenuously in ascetic works, and he served God with fasting and prayer day and night continually. He never ate the food which is usually eaten by men, but he lived upon the small quantity of grass which he found in the desert, and because of his lack of human food he resembled the angels in his strife. Moreover, his food was the repetition of the Name of our Lord Jesus Christ by night and by day ceaselessly. And it was meet for him to walk on his feet into the stream which is called 'ALÔN without wetting them, for his body had become exceedingly dry (or hard) through the great tribulation caused by the heaviness of the iron which he wore on his body all the days of his life; for he was like unto a beast and not a man. And he pleased God with this manner of striving, and he was healed (?) by Him.

XVI. MASKARAM

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

[fol. 18*a* 3] On this day took place the consecration of the Church, and the Sanctuary, and the grave of our Lord Jesus Christ, to Whom be praise! in the holy city of Jerusalem, and of all the holy places which 'ĔLÊNÎ (HELENA), the empress, laid bare. And this took place in the twentieth year of the reign of her son CONSTANTINE, after he had gathered together the Council of Three Hundred and Eighteen Saints in the city of NICEA. And the blessed woman 'ĔLÊNÎ (HELENA) took a large sum of his money, and she said unto her son CONSTANTINE, "I wish to be blessed by God, and I will go to the holy city of Jerusalem, and I will seek for and discover the Wood of the life-giving Cross." And CONSTANTINE rejoiced at these words, and he sent soldiers with her; and he gave her much money and apparel made of costly silks threaded with gold. When she arrived in the city of Jerusalem, and had knelt in prayer in certain of the holy places, she made enquiries about the Wood of the honourable and life-giving Cross. And with much toil and tribulation she found the Wood of the Cross, and she praised it with great praises, and she paid unto it very great reverence and honour. Then she commanded her men to build the altar of the sanctuary, and [shrines at] Gôlgôthâ, and Bethlehem, and the cave wherein our Lord Jesus Christ was born, and the fortress of Zion, and Gethsemane wherein was buried the body of our Lady the holy Virgin MARY, and the Mount of Olives, and all the holy places; and she commanded [the builders] to decorate them with pearl, and with gold, and with silver. Now there was in Jerusalem a certain bishop whose name was Abbâ MACARIUS, and he gave her counsel, [fol. 18*b* 1] saying, "Do not thus, for after a few days [foreign] peoples will come and will rule over this country, and they will take possession of this place, and will lay it waste, and will seize whatsoever is made of gold and silver and precious stones. But it is meet that you should build a good, strong building which can neither be overthrown nor torn up from the foundations. And the remainder of this money give unto the poor and the needy." And the Empress 'ĔLÊNÎ (HELENA) accepted his words and delivered much money into his hand, and she commanded all the nobles to build [a building of this kind], and to obey Abbâ MACARIUS the bishop in everything which he ordered them to do in the matter of the building. When the Empress 'ĔLÊNÎ (HELENA) returned to her son CONSTANTINE and told him what she had done in Jerusalem, he rejoiced exceedingly, and he sent a further large sum of money, and overseers were appointed over the building. And the emperor commanded them to pay the workmen and all those who served in the work of building their wages daily at eventide without fail, for the emperor feared lest they should suffer and lest they should complain if their wages were not paid to them, and lest God should be angry with him because of their complaint. And when the building of the holy places was finished in the third year of the reign of the righteous Emperor CONSTANTINE he sent holy vessels and apparel made of silk and gold which was exceedingly costly. And he sent messages to the Archbishop of the city of Constantinople to take his bishops, and to ATHANASIUS, the Archbishop of the city of Alexandria, to take [fol. 18*b* 2] the bishops of his diocese, and also to the Archbishop of the city of Antioch, and he commanded them all to gather together in the city of Jerusalem and to consecrate the sanctuary and all the altars of the places which had been built [by 'ĔLÊNÎ (HELENA)]. And they all assembled in the city of Jerusalem, and they tarried there until the seventeenth day of the month Maskaram, by which day they had consecrated the sanctuary and all the altars of the places (i.e. shrines) which had been built. On that day there was joy, the like of which had never before existed. They performed the appointed service, and they consecrated the Holy Offerings, and they partook of the Holy Mysteries, and a great light appeared, and many signs [were wrought] on that day, the sixteenth of Maskaram. And they marched round into all the holy places with the Honourable Cross, and they worshipped God therein, and they received the Holy Mysteries, and they adored the Honourable Cross and sang litanies thereto, and [then] they departed to their countries in peace.

And on this day also died TOBIT, the son of GABÂÊL of the seed of 'ASÂÊL, of the tribe of NAPHTHALI, who was carried off into captivity in the days of 'ANÊMÊSÔR (SHALMANESER ?), the King of Persia (sic), he was a native [fol. 18*b* 3] of TÂBÊS, on the right hand of ḲÂDÊS, which is NAPHTHALI in Galilee, which is above 'ASÊR. TOBIT walked the path of righteousness and integrity all the days of his life. And the alms were many which he made to his brethren, and to his kinsfolk who went to the country of Persia, and all the people who had apostatized and who offered sacrifice to Baal and the Calf. And TOBIT went frequently to Jerusalem, and he took the wool of his flock with him, and the tenth of his crop, and he gave one-third to the poor. When all his brethren were taken captives to Nineveh they ate with the Gentiles, but he restrained himself from eating because he remembered God with all his heart. One day he found the dead body of a man in the market-place, and he rose up although fasting and brought it into a house until the sun set, and when the sun had set he dug a hole in the ground and buried him. That night he lay down to sleep against the wall of his garden, and he did not know that there were birds [nesting] in the wall. And when he uncovered his face these birds voided warm dung into his eyes, and a smoke went forth through his eyes and there was no man who could give him relief. And TOBIT entreated God, saying, "Remember me, O Lord, and look upon my miserable estate, and remember not my sins nor the sins of my fathers, for Thou hast made us to be led away into captivity and to be scattered. And now, even according as it pleaseth Thee deal with me before Thee, and command that my earth may return so that I may dissolve and become dust; for it is better for me to die than to live." And on that day the evil spirit ASMODEUS found SÂRÂ, the daughter of RÂGUĔÊL, for [fol. 19*a* 1] he had married her to seven men, and when these men approached her he slew them. At length the handmaidens of her father reviled and abused her, and she continued to weep and pray to God that He would save her from their abuse; and her prayer and the prayer of TOBIT were heard before the Majesty, praise [be unto Him], and RÛFÂÊL [was sent to heal them both]. And TOBIT remembered the silver which he had committed to the care of GABÂÊL, and he called his son TOBIAS, and he said unto him, "Seek out for thyself a hireling who shall go with thee to GABÂÊL that he may bring back the money which I committed to his care before I die." And TOBIAS found RÛFÂÊL, who was in the form of a hired servant, and he went with TOBIAS, who named him "AZARIAS." And they journeyed along the road, and they arrived in the evening at the Tigris, and TOBIAS went down to the river to wash, and a fish leaped out upon him. And RÛFÂÊL said unto TOBIAS, "Seize him, and take out his heart, and his liver, and his gall"; and TOBIAS did as RÛFÂÊL had commanded him. And when they arrived in the house of RÂGUĔÊL, SÂRÂ received them, and TOBIAS desired her, and he spake unto her father so that he might give her to him; and RÂGUĔÊL said unto him, "I have married her to seven men, and all of them have died"; and TOBIAS said, "The Lord's will be done." And when they brought TOBIAS and SÂRÂ into the marriage-chamber, TOBIAS remembered the words of RÛFÂÊL, and he burned away in smoke the heart and the gall of the fish, and the devil fled from SÂRÂ. And he returned with her to the house of his father, and when TOBIT had received him TOBIAS smeared his father's eyes with the gall of the fish. And when TOBIT rubbed his eyes and there removed itself from his eyes as it were smoke, and he saw his son, he rejoiced and he prophesied concerning the sufferings of Christ, saying, "Blessed be all those who sorrow for Thy suffering, for they shall rejoice in Thee [fol. 19*a* 2] when they see all Thy glory." And again he said, "The walls of the Jerusalem which is in the heavens shall be built of sapphire, and emerald, and precious stones, and its tower and its gates shall be of pure gold. And the court thereof shall be made of beryl and carbuncle and sapphire, and all its paths shall say 'Hallelujah.'" And he also prophesied that the Israelites who were captives in Babylon should return, and should build Jerusalem with glorious mason's work. And TOBIT commanded his son TOBIAS to depart from Nineveh, for he knew that the spoliation thereof which JONAH the prophet had prophesied would take place. And he said unto his son, "See my son that thine alms do save thee and justify thee"; and with these words his soul went forth into its rest in the one hundred and fifty-eighth year of his age; and TOBIAS buried him with honour.

And on this day also are commemorated WARḲĔLÂ, and SIMEON, and MARḲÊNÔS (MARCIANUS) [and 'AZYÂNÔS, and ḤALÎ, and RÔNÎḲÔS], and LUCIANUS, and 'AZRĔMÂNÔS, and PETER, and ḤANNAH, and Abbâ AGATHON who stopped his mouth with a stone.

XVII. MASKARAM

[fol. 19*a* 3] IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day is celebrated the festival of the HONOURABLE CROSS of our Lord Jesus Christ, to Whom be praise! for this is the day on which the holy woman, the Empress HELENA, beloved of God, mother of the righteous Emperor CONSTANTINE, revealed the Cross, for having cleared away the hill of Golgotha she found [there] the Honourable Cross. And why did this great hill come into being? It was because of the many signs and wonders which were made manifest at the holy tomb of our Lord Jesus Christ; for the dead were raised, and the paralytics were healed, and the sick were made whole. And because of these things the Jews were furiously angry, and they sent forth a decree throughout all the country of Judea and Jerusalem ordering that every man should cast the sweepings of his house, and the ashes, and offal of every kind on the grave of our Lord Jesus Christ. And the Jews did this for more than two hundred years, and the ashes and the offal formed a very great heap, and they did so until the Empress HELENA came to Jerusalem. And HELENA seized certain Jews and shut them up in prison until they told her where the grave of our Lord Jesus Christ was, and she forced them to remove that hill, and the Honourable Cross was discovered. And she built [fol. 19*b* 1] a beautiful church for it, and she consecrated it, and she made a great festival in honour thereof on the seventeenth day of Maskaram which is this day. And all the Christian people came from all their countries to Jerusalem, and they made a great festival in honour of the Honourable Cross, similar to the festival of the Resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ. Now as certain Christians were journeying along the road, there was with them a certain man, a Samaritan, whose name was ISAAC, and there were many Samaritans with him. And that ISAAC the Samaritan was jibing at the Christians and reviling them and saying unto them, "Why do ye trouble yourselves in vain? Why do ye go and bow down before a mere log of wood?" And among the Christians was a certain righteous man, a priest whose name was 'ODÔKÎS (EUDOXIUS), and as they were travelling along the road some of the Christians became thirsty, and they could not find water to drink. And they arrived at a certain well, and they found in it foul and bitter water, and they were suffering greatly from thirst. And ISAAC the Samaritan began to laugh at them, and he said unto them, "If your faith was the True Faith this foul and bitter water would change itself and would become sweet water." And when 'ODÔKÎS (EUDOXIUS) the priest heard these words from him, he became moved with a divine zeal, and he debated with ISAAC the Samaritan. And ISAAC the Samaritan said unto him, "If I saw any power in the Name of the Cross then I myself would believe in Christ." Then the holy man 'ODÔKÎS (EUDOXIUS) prayed over that foul water, and it became sweet immediately, and all the people and their animals drank therefrom. [fol. 19*b* 2] When ISAAC the Samaritan was athirst and wished to drink of the water which was in his own water-skin, he found that it was stinking and that there were worms in it. And he wept very bitterly, and he came to Saint 'ODÔKÎS (EUDOXIUS) the priest, and he bowed down at his feet, and he believed on the Name of our Lord Jesus Christ. And he drank of that water which had become sweet, through the prayer of the holy man 'ODÔKÎS (EUDOXIUS). Now there was in that water such great power that it became sweet to those who were believers and bitter to the infidels and pagan folk. And there appeared in that water a cross of light, and they built over that water a beautiful church. When ISAAC the Samaritan came to the city of Jerusalem, he went to the bishop, who baptized with Christian baptism, him and all the men of his house, and they entered the Christian faith and became believers. Now the Honourable Cross appeared unto them on the tenth day of Magâbît, but as they were unable to celebrate a festival in its honour during a fast, they celebrated its festival on the day of the consecration of the church, which was the seventeenth day of Maskaram, the day of its appearance in the holy tomb.

[fol. 19*b* 3] And on this day also the blessed THEOGNOSTA died. The holy woman lived in the days of the righteous Emperors HONORIUS and ARCADIUS. In those days an envoy came with gifts from the King of India to the righteous Emperors HONORIUS and ARCADIUS. And when the envoys of the King of India were returning, they found this virgin THEOGNOSTA with a book in her hand which she was reading, and they seized her and carried her back with them to their country. And she became the head of the ḥarîm, and she had charge of the wives of the King of India, and of all the people of his house. And in those days the son of the king fell sick of a grievous sickness, and Saint THEOGNOSTA took him into her bosom and made over him the sign of the Cross, and he recovered straightway. And the report of this virgin was heard throughout the land by reason of the wonderful thing which took place through her, and from that day onward she was no longer regarded as a handmaiden but as a great lady. When the King of India went to war there came upon him clouds, and storm winds, and fog and darkness, and the king knowing of the wonder which the holy woman THEOGNOSTA had wrought by means of the Cross, made the sign of the Cross against the clouds, and the storm winds, and the fog and the darkness, and the sun appeared and there was [fol. 20*a* 1] joy and great gladness, and through the sign of the Cross the king vanquished his enemies. And as soon as the king returned from the war, he bowed down at the feet of Saint THEOGNOSTA, and asked her to give him holy Christian baptism, him, and the men of his house, and all the men of his city. And she said unto the king and unto all those who were with him, "It is not seemly for me to do this thing, but send ye to the Emperor HONORIUS and ask him to send you a priest, for I am unable to baptize anyone." And straightway the king sent a letter to the Emperor HONORIUS, and told him that they had withdrawn [from Paganism] to the Faith of Christ, and he asked him to send to them a priest to baptize them with Christian baptism. And HONORIUS sent unto them a priest who was a righteous anchorite, and he baptized them with Christian baptism, and consecrated for them the Offering, and gave them the Holy Body and Honourable Blood of our Lord Jesus Christ. And the virgin THEOGNOSTA, the beloved of God, rejoiced exceedingly, and she knew that priestly anchorite, and they each blessed the other. And she built for him a house for the religious, and very many virgins gathered together there, and they loved the nun's garb of THEOGNOSTA and became like unto her. When that priestly anchorite had baptized them with Christian baptism, he returned to the Emperor HONORIUS, and related unto him how he had baptized the men of India, and how they had entered into the Faith of Christ. And the Emperor [fol. 20*a* 2] HONORIUS rejoiced exceedingly, and he commanded the Archbishop of the city of Rômê to consecrate that anchorite bishop of the Indians; and the archbishop consecrated him bishop, and he returned to the Indians and they rejoiced greatly. Whilst they were building a church they wanted pillars, but there were none to be found; now there was in that place a house of idols wherein were some very fine pillars. And the virgin THEOGNOSTA prayed to our Lord Jesus Christ with tears, and the pillars which were in the house of idols removed themselves and came to the church, and the believers glorified our Lord Jesus Christ, to Whom be praise! And those who were worshippers of idols smashed their idols, and turned and entered the Faith of our Lord Jesus Christ; and there was great joy in that city. And Saint THEOGNOSTA the virgin ended her days, and she was well-pleasing unto God, and she died in peace in that nunnery among the virgins.

And on this day also died the holy father Abbâ DIONYSIUS, Archbishop of the city [fol. 20*a* 3] of Alexandria; of the number of the archbishops he is the fourteenth. The infidel Emperor DECIUS wished to kill this holy man, but God hid him from him. This father was a wise and learned man, and he translated many of the Books of the Church. In his days Saint MERCURIUS became a martyr by the hand of DECIUS, the Emperor of Rômê, and in his days also the SEVEN YOUTHS went to sleep for three hundred and seventy and two years. These Youths were among the sons of the elders of the city of Ephesus, and they fled from the Emperor DECIUS when he sought for them to make them worship idols. And in the days of this father lived our great and holy father ANTHONY the Egyptian, the head of the monks, who built monasteries. And this holy father Abbâ DIONYSIUS sat as archbishop for nineteen years, and he guarded his flock and the Gentiles in right and in peace; and he was well-pleasing unto God and he died.

And on this day also are commemorated LABÎBÂ (or LÎBÂ), and 'AKÎRYÂNÔS (CIRIANUS), and JUSTIN, and TÊKÂSÊLṬĔS (or TÊKÂLÊLṬĔS).

XVIII. MASKARAM

[fol. 20*b* 1] IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died EUSTATHIUS, a teacher of the faith and a preacher of the Gospel. The name of the father of this holy man was KRĔSTÔS MÔ'A, and the name of his mother was SĔNA ḤAYWAT; and they were both righteous and fearers of God, and they walked in all His judgements. And when KRĔSTÔS MÔ'A, after the glad tidings of an angel, begat this child he called him MÂ'AḲABA 'ĔGZÎ'Ĕ. When he grew up he taught him the Psalms of DAVID and the Books of the Church. Then he took him to the monastery of Abbâ ZACHARIAS, his mother's brother, who when he saw him knew that the grace of God was dwelling upon him, and he taught him all the rules of monasticism, and he arrayed him in the apparel of the angels. And the young man fasted and prayed with such intense devotion that the aged men of the monastery marvelled at the sternness of his strife; and he was girded with wisdom and knowledge. After a short time he was made a deacon, and he ministered in the church like STEPHEN the archdeacon. And our Lord Jesus Christ appeared unto him with MICHAEL and GABRIEL, and He embraced him and breathed into his face the Holy Spirit. And He said unto him, "O my beloved EUSTATHIUS, I have chosen thee from thy mother's womb, and have appointed thee to become a teacher of many [fol. 20*b* 2] nations from Ethiopia to Armenia. And thou shalt preach the Gospel without fear and trepidation. He who heareth thee heareth Me; he who rejecteth thee rejecteth Me." When our Lord Jesus Christ had said this unto him He went up into heaven. And Saint EUSTATHIUS went to the bishop and was appointed priest, and he began to preach the faith of the Gospel. At length very many men gathered together to him, and they became monks through him and they became disciples [of him], now the greatest of them was Abbâ 'ABSÂDÎ, and he turned many from their iniquity, and at length they forsook their evil works. And his doctrine filled the whole earth, and in his days the honouring of Sabbaths and days of festival was established, and he turned not aside from [the ordinances of] the Apostles, neither to the right hand nor to the left. And he made two pilgrimages to Jerusalem, and God made manifest through him signs and wonders which were innumerable in opening the eyes of the blind, and in healing the paralytics, and in casting out devils. Then he decided that he would go to Jerusalem by the will of God, and he gathered together his sons, and he laid upon them the charge of keeping all the canon of the monks, and of keeping themselves from mingling with the pagans; and he appointed his son 'ABSÂDÎ chief over them. And he went to Jerusalem and kept the Sabbath as he went, and he taught the faith of Christ. And he came to the Archbishop 'Abbâ BENYÂMÎ and was blessed by him, and they conversed together on matters of the Faith. Then [fol. 20*b* 3] he went down to Jerusalem and was blessed in the holy places, and was baptized in the Jordan. Thence he departed to Armenia, and having arrived at the sea of 'ÎYÂRÎKÔ he asked the sailors to allow him to embark in a ship. And when they prevented him from doing so, he cast his head-fillet into the sea, and said a blessing over it in the Name of the Trinity, and made over it the sign of the Cross. Then he got up upon the fillet as upon a ship, and two angels acted as sailors, and our Lord acted as captain, and they carried over his sons who had no fear of the terror of the sea. And EUSTATHIUS said unto his sons, "Only take heed that ye do not lay up revenge and malice in your hearts; it seemeth to me however that one of you is about to perish." And before he had finished uttering these words one of his sons dropped into the sea and was drowned because he was treasuring revenge and malice in his heart. And by God's Will they crossed over the sea and came to the country of Armenia, and he held converse with the archbishop, and did homage to him, and was blessed by him. When the archbishop saw him he rejoiced with exceeding great joy, and he received him gladly. And our father EUSTATHIUS continued to teach the men of Armenia the canons of the apostles which are in the ordinance of the Sînôdôs until they were all one brotherhood in doctrine. When the time for his departure from this world had drawn nigh, our Lord Jesus Christ appeared unto him, and made a covenant with him in respect of those who should invoke his name, and those who should celebrate his commemoration, and those who should do into writing the story of his fight. And when he died the bishops and priests prepared him for burial with great honour, and they buried him in the church of [fol. 21*a* 1] Mâr MEHNÂM (i.e. BEHNÂM) the martyr, and many miracles happened through his body.

Salutation to EUSTATHIUS and to his fillet whereon he crossed the sea.

And on this day also is commemorated Saint HELENA, the mother of CONSTANTINE the righteous emperor. In the days of this holy woman the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, to Whom be praise! was found.

And on this day also died Saint Abbâ 'ONÔRÊWÔS (HONORIUS) the teacher [in the monastery] of ṢĔGÂDJ.

And on this day also Saint MERCURIUS [fol. 21*a* 2] became a martyr. This holy man was a Persian jester and musician; originally he was a Christian. When CONSTANTINE, the son of CONSTANTINE the Great, died, there reigned after him JULIAN the infidel, who slew Saint MERCURIUS. Now JULIAN was the son of CONSTANTINE'S sister. This denier of God worshipped idols, and he afflicted the Christian peoples grievously, and by his means very many became martyrs. When he was born there were gathered together those who jested and played music, and those who made men laugh, and this holy man MERCURIUS was among their number. And the infidel JULIAN ordered the holy man to shew him what the system of Christianity was, and what they did in church. And MERCURIUS did according to what the infidel emperor had commanded him, and he made a jest and mockery of all the ordinances of the Church. And there was very great merriment. And when he was making a mockery of the ordinance of holy Christian baptism, and was making the sign of the Cross over the water in the Name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Ghost, One God, the Lord illumined the heart of MERCURIUS, and he saw the Divine Grace of God through heaven, and an exceedingly great light enveloped him. And straightway MERCURIUS stripped off his apparel, and went down into the water, and was dipped in the water three times in the Name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Ghost, One God. Then he went up out of the water, and put on his raiment and confessed that he was a Christian. And the emperor was wroth with him and he threatened him, saying, "Unless thou doest as I command thee, and unless thou castest [fol. 21*a* 3] incense to the gods, I will torture thee with the greatest severity. On the other hand, if thou wilt hearken to my command I will give thee very much money and I will honour thee exceedingly." And Saint MERCURIUS answered and said unto him, "If thou wert to give me all the money in this world and the kingdom thereof, I would not deny my Lord Jesus Christ." Then straightway the infidel emperor commanded his soldiers to cut off his holy head, and MERCURIUS received an incorruptible crown in the kingdom of the heavens.

And on this day it is meet that we should celebrate also the festival of the Honourable and Life-giving Cross of our Lord and God Jesus Christ.

And on this day also died the warrior Mâr JACOB, the Egyptian. This holy man had righteous and believing parents, and they gave him as a votive offering to God. When he had finished his instruction in the school house his parents took him into the mountains of Alexandria, and they gave him to the Archimandrite Abbâ GABRIEL, and he made him [fol. 21*b* 1] a monk when he was a boy twelve years of age. When he was twenty years of age he went forth with his teacher into the desert in order to strive in the ascetic life. And they found there a high tower, and at the bottom was a spring of water, and Abbâ GABRIEL and Mâr JACOB went up to the top of the tower; and they used to draw water from the stream and pour it out into hollows which were like troughs in the ground, and every day the wild animals of the desert used to come there and drink therefrom. And the holy man Mâr JACOB used to milk them, and make cheese from the milk, and he and his teacher lived thereon. When Abbâ GABRIEL died, Mâr JACOB went up to the top of the tower, and by the Will of God there came to him twelve desert monks, and they dwelt with him in fasting and prayer, and they lived upon the milk of the animals, and the want of wheat for the monastery was supplied by the pilgrims who came from afar. One day they said, "It is our desire to see Abbâ MOSES the Black (i.e. the Negro), and to be blessed by him." And Satan because he coveted to be loved by them, took the form of Abbâ MOSES the Black, and he came flying on his wings and said unto them, "Why do ye trouble me to drag myself from mine own place, seeing that I am an old man?" And they said unto him, "We wish to hear the word of life from thy lips, and we wish thee to bless us." And he said unto them, "How do ye live?" And they said that they poured out water for the wild animals of the desert, and that when they came to drink, they milked them and lived upon their milk each evening. And Satan said unto them, "Will ye not listen unto what I shall command you?" And they said unto him, "Yea." [fol. 21*b* 2] And Satan said unto them, "Take ye not the milk of the beasts and ye shall not do violence unto them, for ye are monks. And fast ye forty days at a time, and do not pray the Psalms of DAVID, for DAVID took the wife of URIAH by violence and slew him." And he addressed a very large number of profitless exhortations to them so that he might ensnare them by his wiles, and they received his words imagining that they were the words of Abbâ MOSES the Black. Then the Holy Ghost made Mâr JACOB to understand that his words were the teaching of Satan, and he commanded his disciples to consecrate the Offering on the first day of the week, and afterwards he shewed his sons that the words that had been said to them were of Satan. And Satan came unto him again disguised as the Archbishop of Alexandria, and there were bishops with him, and when he came he cursed them and anathematized them, saying, "Why are ye living here without my permission?" And Saint Abbâ JACOB saw the extent of his power with his disciples, and he made a prayer, and straightway Satan disappeared and his counsel did not remain. Sometimes Satan came unto him in the form of a serpent, and sometimes in the form of a king, and sometimes in the forms of beautiful virgins, and sometimes he took the forms of eagles and ravens who tore [his] face with their claws. And he was tempted for seven years. Then when God saw his weariness and his prayer, He sent lightning from heaven, and it rent Satan in pieces, and scattered him like smoke. And Satan cried out, saying, "Woe is me by reason of thee, O JACOB, for thy prayer hath burned me up." And then God commanded [fol. 21*b* 3] Mâr JACOB to go to the monastery of 'ABDÎN, and he told his sons this, and having laid upon them the charge that they were to dwell in the tower, he departed alone to the shore of 'ÎYÂRÎKÔ. And as there was no ship there, he blessed a wave of the sea, and he embarked upon it, and travelled upon it as upon dry land until he crossed the sea and arrived at TARSÊS.

And as he passed through a market-place in the city, he found a wounded man with worms devouring him. And the holy man said unto him, "What is thy name?" And the man said unto him, "My name is 'ANTHONY'; my father gave me money for the physicians, and they have not healed me." And Mâr JACOB saw that the man was grieving because of his disease, and he made a prayer, and laid his hands on every part of his body, and said unto him, "In the Name of our Lord Jesus Christ be made whole," and straightway the man was healed. And forthwith ANTHONY followed him and became his disciple. Then the holy man and his disciple went on their way, and when they arrived at the city of 'ÂMID they found the son of King ANESTUS mad, and he was beating his head on the stones, and no one could restrain him. And Mâr JACOB commanded his disciple ANTHONY to seize him, and to bring him to him; and when he arrived he made over him the sign of the Honourable Cross, and he commanded Satan in the Name of our Lord Jesus Christ to go forth from him. And Satan went forth from him in the form of a black slave, and the young man recovered and followed the holy man; and when his father and the people saw him they rejoiced with very great joy. Now the king wished to give Mâr JACOB much money, but the holy man refused it and would not take it. And by the commandment of God he departed with Abbâ [fol. 22*a* 1] BARSÂBÔ, a teacher of the monastery of the city of 'ABDÎN, and as he was travelling on the road ANTHONY fell sick of the smallpox, and on the third day he died. And when Mâr JACOB came to a city, the name of which is 'AWĔRSÂ, he found that the son of the governor was sick, and through the prayer of the holy man Mâr JACOB he recovered. When his father saw that he had recovered he rejoiced with very great joy, and he handed him over to the holy man to be his disciple until the day of his death; now the name of the young man was FĔḲÛR (VICTOR ?). And when they drew nigh unto the monastery of BARSÂBÔ, the monks welcomed them and brought them in with much singing. Now there was built by the side of this city a certain temple, and the King of Persia, who was called SÂMÊR, used to come there every year and celebrate a festival in honour of his idols. And Mâr JACOB said unto the monks, "Behold, we have heard that the King of Persia hath come, let us go to him and shed our blood for the sake of the Name of Christ, to Whom be praise!" And whilst the monks were considering this advice the soldiers of the king arrived in the monastery, and they saw that the monks were wearing black apparel, and they said unto them, "What are ye? Which of the gods do ye worship?" And the holy men said, "We worship the Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of the Living God, Who came down from heaven, and became man through the Holy Ghost by MARY the holy Virgin, to Him do we bow down and Him do we worship." When the soldiers heard them they carried them away to the king, and when they arrived before the king they confessed the faith [fol. 22a 2] of our Lord Jesus Christ. And the king enquired what their country was, and Abbâ BARSÂBÔ said, "I and my brethren are Romans," and Saint Abbâ JACOB saith, "I am by myself; I am an Egyptian." When the king heard his words he commanded his soldiers to remove JACOB against his will, for he did not wish to kill him because he had a treaty with the men of Egypt. And the king ordered his soldiers to beat the monks, and they beat them until their blood flowed from their bodies like water, and he then had them cast into the prison house [where] the angel of the Lord healed them; on the following day when the soldiers found them alive, the king [promised to] bestow many gifts upon them. But when they treated his word with contempt he commanded his soldiers to torture them by crushing their feet into [iron] boots, and by beating them, and drawing out their front teeth, and grinders, and by drawing out of the nails of the hands and feet, and by cutting off their noses, and lips, and ears; this they did for a period of six days; but our Lord Jesus Christ gave them strength [to endure]. On the eighth day he commanded the soldiers to cut off their heads, and Mâr BARSÂBÔ addressed them, and after he had exhorted them, he delivered them one by one into the hand of the swordsman, and ten monks were crowned. And the captain of the horse of the king on seeing the crowning of the saints stripped off his apparel and confessed our Lord Jesus Christ, and his head also did they cut off with the sword.

After the sons of Mâr BARSÂBÔ were dead he himself stretched out his neck, and said unto the swordsman, "Finish what thou hast been commanded [to do]," and straightway he gave him his neck. And the martyrdoms of the saints were finished on the twenty- [fol. 22*a* 3] eighth day of the month Naḥasê (Aug. 4–Sept. 3). Then the king ordered his soldiers to burn their bodies with fire, but the earth opened her mouth and covered them. And the king being ashamed wanted to depart to his own country. Thereupon Mâr JACOB prayed to God and He rained upon him fire [mingled] with black clouds, and hail and snow, and he and all his soldiers perished, and not one of them remained [alive]. When the men on the frontiers heard this they all went out and took their horses and all their goods, and they carried them to Mâr JACOB and said unto him, "Take all these goods for thy needs," but he refused to do so, and commanded them to build a little church over the grave of the holy martyrs; [and they did so] and there it remaineth unto this day. One day there was a plague (or smallpox) in a certain city, and the people sent to Mâr JACOB asking him to help them by his prayers; and when Mâr JACOB heard of the plague he was very sorry. And having taken the censer he went into the church, and he prayed a long time, and having gone forth from the church he said unto the messengers, "Be not afraid, neither grieve ye; depart ye in peace." When the messengers arrived they found the city in a healthy state, and they praised the God of Saint JACOB. And there was a certain maiden who came with her father to [fol. 22*b* 1] the holy man, and she lusted for the holy disciple whose name we have mentioned, and she wanted to cast him down in sin. When he refused her she became with child by a certain servant of her father, and she acted craftily in the matter. When her father heard of this he set out to kill Mâr JACOB and his disciple, and as he was going along the road [to do so] lightning fell upon him and blinded his eyes. After a few days his daughter brought forth her child, and she carried the child to Saint Mâr JACOB in the midst of the congregation. And Mâr JACOB said unto the child, "In the Name of the Lord Jesus Christ I command thee to declare the name of thy father." And the child said, "My father is so-and-so, the servant of my mother's father"; and when the people heard this they marvelled and praised God. When the time of Mâr JACOB'S departure from the world drew nigh, he commanded his disciple DANIEL, saying, "Behold my departure draweth nigh. When I am dead bury me with Mâr BARSÂBÔ and his sons." Three days after this he died in peace, and the angels took his soul up into Jerusalem.

Salutation to JACOB the strenuous ascetic!

Salutation to JACOB the priest!

[fol. 22*b* 2] And on this day also are commemorated Saint STEPHEN the priest, and NICETA the martyr.

And on this day also were found the bones of THOMAS and of Archbishop ATHANASIUS; and on this day are commemorated our father the admirable PHILOTHEUS [the Thaumaturge], and Abbâ NÔB the anchorite, and the martyrs who were with 'ABÔLÎ—forty men and twenty women.

And on this day also are commemorated 'ÊFÔMYÂ (EUPHEMIA ?) the martyr, and Abbâ FÎNÔMÎS, and SELḪÂN, and 'AKALÂÊLES, and ISAAC.

And on this day also took place the miracle which THOMAS the apostle wrought when he went to preach the Gospel in the country of India. Now he was afraid, and he said, "How can I go to India, the country of which I know not?" Then our Lord Jesus Christ appeared unto him and said unto him, "Fear thou not, for My grace is with thee." And whilst he was with our Lord there came a merchant from India. And our Lord said unto him, "What dost thou want?" And the merchant said, "I want a [fol. 22*b* 3] carpenter." And our Lord said unto him, "Take this My servant, for he is a carpenter"; and he sold him for three lĕṭra of silver. And he wrote a paper which testified, saying, "I have sold my servant, the son of JOSEPH the carpenter, to 'ABÊNÊS, a merchant of GÔNÂ"; and THOMAS'S [new] master took him to the city of the king. When they drew nigh unto the city they heard [the sound of] organs and pipes, and they said, "What is this?" And the people said unto them,

"The king has made a marriage-feast for his daughter, and he has ordered that whosoever doth not come to the wedding shall be punished." And 'ABÊNÊS and THOMAS went into the room of the feast, and while the guests ate and drank THOMAS the apostle ate nothing at all. And there he found a Hebrew singing maiden who was singing songs in the Hebrew language. And whilst the apostle was praying in the Hebrew language one of those who were at the feast struck him; and the apostle said, "I see a hand with the dogs tearing at it"; and the singing woman alone heard him because he spake in the Hebrew language. And the man who smote THOMAS went down to the lake (or well) to draw water, and a lion sprang out and slew him and left him lying in pieces. And a dog seized the right hand and carried it in among the people at the feast, and one said unto THOMAS, "Who is dead?" And he said unto them, "This is the hand of him who struck one who serveth." When the singing maiden heard this, she cast away her tambourine and went and sat at the feet of the apostle, and she said, "I heard thee say unto him, 'The dogs shall tear the hand which smote me.'" When the people heard this some believed and some did not. When the king heard this he said unto THOMAS, "Come and pray over my daughter, for this day [fol. 23*a* 1] have I given her in marriage." And when the apostle had entered the marriage-chamber he prayed to the Lord in the form of THOMAS, on behalf of the bride and bridegroom, and admonished them with the words of faith, and they believed the words of the apostle, and abandoned their marriage.

XIX. MASKARAM

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day is commemorated Saint GREGORY, Archbishop of the country of Armenia, who became a martyr without the shedding of his blood. This man established himself in the country of Armenia in the days of DĔRṬÂDĔS the king. Now that king was an infidel, and when he came into his temple to offer up incense to the gods, he summoned GREGORY to offer up incense to his gods likewise; but GREGORY would not obey the king's command, and he tortured him with exceedingly severe tortures, and had him burned with fire. After this he cast him into a pit naked, and he lived therein for fifteen years. And there was a certain old woman a widow, near the king's palace, and she saw a vision wherein one said unto her, "Make bread regularly, and cast it into the pit wherein the holy man is." And the old woman continued to act in this wise, [fol. 23*a* 2] and she cast bread into the pit until the fifteen years were ended. In those days that king killed the virgins, namely Saint 'ARSÎMÂ, and the virgins who were with her, and their bodies were thrown out upon the mountain. And Satan made himself master of King DĔRṬÂDĔS, and the Lord changed his appearance, and he became like unto a wild boar, and Satan also made himself master of very many of the royal officers, and there was very great sorrow in the royal house. And the king's sister saw a vision one night wherein it seemed that a man said unto her, "Unless ye bring up GREGORY out of the pit thou wilt never be able to cure him (i.e. the king)." And straightway they went unto the pit and brought Saint GREGORY out therefrom, and he healed the king forthwith and all those who were in his house. And he made the bodies of the virgins ready for burial, and laid them in a beautiful tomb. Now the whole history of him is written in the section for the fifteenth day of Ṭâkhshâsh, which is the day whereon he died.

And on this day also is celebrated the festival of the Holy and Honourable Cross, for then it was found the people made a festival for three days with joy and gladness. Similarly it is meet that we ourselves should celebrate a festival of commemoration in its honour [fol. 23*a* 3] with great joy, for in it there is the joy of our salvation from our enemy Satan, and praise to our Lord Jesus Christ.

Salutation to the Tree of Life, the bed of the Son of MARY!

Salutation to the Tree of Life which was sprinkled with the Divine Blood!

And on this day also died ḲIRḲÔS (CYRIACUS), the dweller in the desert. This holy man lived in the days of Abbâ BENYÂMÎ, and he fled from the Emperor MARCIANUS, the evil one, and established himself as an anchorite on the top of a high mountain. He lived in a cave wherein wild animals lived, and he begged his food from God. And God commanded a she-buffalo to go to him every third day, and he drank milk from her; and he lived in this manner for ten years. And Satan, the accursed one, having become jealous of his strenuous ascetic labours, began to tempt him in all the ways and means which he hath. At one time he would come to him in the form of a black man to terrify him, and at another he would come to him in the form of a company of soldiers, who threatened him with dire threats. And horsemen seized him, and bound him with fetters, and beat him with whips, and dragged him along the road by his feet. When [fol. 23*b* 1] he knew that these men were Satans he made the sign of the Cross over himself, and they disappeared from before him. Once when he was kneeling down at night praying, a thing which was like unto a huge serpent coiled itself about his neck and wished to shoot venom into his face, and again he entreated the help of God Who sent His angel and delivered him. When the time for his death drew nigh, he went to the father Archbishop Abbâ BENYÂMÎ, and told him everything, and he sent to him three archbishops to undertake the preparation of his body for burial. When they had gone into his cave they found him very ill, and at the moment when his spirit went forth from his body they saw great and indescribable splendour; and then they buried him in his abode.

XX. MASKARAM

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died the holy father Abbâ ATHANASIUS, the twenty-eighth Archbishop of the city of Alexandria. This father was the steward of the church of the city of Alexandria. When PETER [fol. 23*b* 2] the archbishop, his predecessor, died, all the bishops, and the governors (or nobles), and the elders, and the people, with one consent agreed to appoint Saint ATHANASIUS archbishop, for the holiness of his life was proverbial, and he contended splendidly in the way of God, and the Holy Spirit dwelt in him. And they took him against his will and appointed him archbishop, and he protected the flock of our Lord Jesus Christ well and carefully against the wolves of Diabolus, who are wicked Satans, by means of his admonitions, and teachings and prayers. He sat as archbishop seven years, and he was well-pleasing to God, and he died in peace.

And on this day also the holy virgin MÂLÎDÂMÂ became a martyr.

And on this day also are commemorated the virgin ATHENE, and MÂRÊNÂ, and PÎLÂ, and ABRAHAM the monk, and RADE'Ĕ, and SÂDĔS, and THADDEUS, and EPIPHANIUS, [fol. 23*b* 3] and the righteous man 'ARMÂNYÔS (ARMENIUS), and SIMEON, the head of the bishops of Jerusalem, the martyr.

XXI. MASKARAM

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day the holy and honourable CYPRIANUS and the virgin JUSTINA became martyrs. This holy man CYPRIANUS was at one time a magician, and an infidel, and a teacher of sorcery in a city of the West, and in knowledge of magic he excelled every other man in the city of the West. And because of his excessive impudence, and his arrogance, and his infidelity, and his sorcery, he rose up and went to the city of Antioch in order that he might find out whether there existed among the people of that city any other kind of magic; if there was, and if it was superior to his own knowledge, he intended to learn it, and if there was not he intended to triumph over them through his knowledge of sorcery. When he arrived in the city of Antioch the report of him was heard therein, and a certain young man, the son of one of the elders of the city of Antioch, heard of him. Now the young man lusted for a certain Christian virgin who was called JUSTINA, whom he had seen going to church; and his heart was hot like the fire which blazeth because of his longing and his love for her. And he was unable to obtain her either by the gift of money, or by the threat of death, or by the operation of sorcery. When the young man heard of the arrival of Saint [fol. 24*a* 1] CYPRIANUS in the city of Antioch, and knew that he was reported to be superior to every man in Antioch through his sorcery, straightway he went to him, and told him about the sorrow in his heart, caused by the virgin JUSTINA, and how he longed for her, and how he loved her exceedingly, but could not obtain possession of her. And Saint CYPRIANUS promised him, saying, "Fear thou not, I will fulfil for thee all thy desire." And he directed against her all the works of his sorcery, but failed to obtain possession of her. Every time when he sent against her any of the powers of Satan, he found her praying, and they were unable to stand before her, and they were powerless to fight against her. When CYPRIANUS was tired and was unable to gain the mastery over her, he called the Satans, and said unto them, "If ye are not able to bring JUSTINA the virgin to me, I shall turn and become a Christian." And the chief of the Satans meditated and thought out one device whereby he might seduce her, and that was by making one of his Satans to disguise himself and to take the form of JUSTINA, and then to make him to appear to CYPRIANUS as if he were shewing him JUSTINA. And that Satan did as Satan his master commanded him, and he hastened and made him known to CYPRIANUS. And he said unto him, "Behold JUSTINA is coming to thee"; and CYPRIANUS rejoiced exceedingly, and he imagined that it was true, and he sat down and waited. And behold, Satan disguised as JUSTINA came unto him, and CYPRIANUS rejoiced, and rose up straightway to embrace her by reason of his great joy in her, and he said unto her, "Good is thy coming, O JUSTINA, queen of women." And as soon as he had uttered her name only, [fol. 24*a* 2] that Satan who had disguised himself as JUSTINA melted away and disappeared like smoke, and there was a foetid smell [there]. And CYPRIANUS knew that this thing was a debased and deceitful trick of Satan; and if Satan did not dare to stand before her face, and could not endure the mention of her name, how could he have the power to seduce her? And CYPRIANUS rose up straightway and burnt and destroyed his books of magic, and was baptized with Christian baptism by the Archbishop of Antioch. Then he became a monk, and after a few days he was made a deacon, and a little later a priest. And when he had grown old in doing good works and in the doctrine of the Church, he became fit to be bishop of the city of ḳERṬÂGĔNÂ (CARTHAGE ?) in the country of the West. And he took Saint JUSTINA and made her the abbess of a house of virgins. When a General Council of the saints assembled in the city of . . . this holy man was one of those who were assembled there. And after many days DECIUS the infidel emperor heard of CYPRIANUS and JUSTINA, and he had them brought before him, and he demanded from them a denial of Christ, and he endeavoured to make them worship idols. When they would not obey his command, he tortured them with very great severity. After this he ordered his soldiers to cut off their heads with the sword, and they cut off their heads and CYPRIANUS and JUSTINA received incorruptible crowns of martyrdom in the kingdom of heaven.

[fol. 24*a* 3] And on this day it is meet for us to celebrate a festival of commemoration of our Lady, the holy Virgin MARY. [A note in the Bodleian MS. says that this festival must be kept on the 21st of every month of the year.]

And on this day also there took place the death of Saint TIBERIUS the apostle, one of the Seventy-two disciples.

XXII. MASKARAM

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day the Saints KÔTÔLÔS (COTYLUS) and his brother (sic) 'AKSÛ became martyrs. These holy men were the sons of SAPOR, King of Persia, and [fol. 24*b* 1] they had a companion whose name was ṬÂṬÔS. Now SAPOR, King of Persia, worshipped fire and the sun, and he afflicted and tortured many believing men, and no man throughout his country dared to mention the Name of Christ. And his son KÔTÔLÔS

(COTYLUS) had a friend whose name was ṬÂṬÔS, and he was governor of the country of the MAYDÂSWÎYÂN; and certain people laid an information against him before SAPOR the king, and told him that he was a Christian. And the king sent to him a certain noble whose name was ṬÛMÂGER to find out whether that which was said about ṬÂṬÔS was true or not, and he commanded that noble, if he found that ṬÂṬÔS was a Christian, to inflict heavy punishment upon him. When KÔTÔLÔS (COTYLUS), the son of the King of Persia, heard these words, he rose up and went to that country where his friend ṬÂṬÔS was. When the noble arrived in that country and found that ṬÂṬÔS was a Christian, even as the king had been informed, straightway he ordered his men to make an oven red-hot and to roast him to death in it. And Saint ṬÂṬÔS made the sign of the Cross over his face against the fire, and the fire died down and was extinguished. When KÔTÔLÔS (COTYLUS), the son of the king, saw this miracle, he marvelled exceedingly, and he said to ṬÂṬÔS his friend, "How didst thou learn this magic, O my brother?" And ṬÂṬÔS answered and said unto him, "This is not magic, O my brother, but it is through faith in our Lord Jesus Christ that signs and wonders like this are performed." And KÔTÔLÔS (COTYLUS) answered and said unto him, "If [fol. 24*b* 2] I believed in Christ, should I be able to do this?" And ṬÂṬÔS said unto him, "Yea, thou wouldst not be able to do this only, but something even more that this"; and straightway KÔTÔLÔS (COTYLUS) believed on our Lord Jesus Christ. And they lighted a fire and made it to burn until the flames thereof reached a great height, and KÔTÔLÔS (COTYLUS) drew nigh unto the fire, and he made the sign of the Cross over it, and the fire turned backwards a distance of twelve cubits. And that noble wrote his despatch and sent it to SAPOR the king, and in it he informed him what had happened to ṬÂṬÔS and to KÔTÔLÔS (COTYLUS), the son of the King of Persia. And the king sent messengers and had them brought to him, and his men cut off the head of ṬÂṬÔS with the sword, and he received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of heaven. His son KÔTÔLÔS (COTYLUS) he tortured with great severity, and he delivered him over to another noble who was to torture him, and when this noble had tortured him cruelly he shut him up in prison. And 'AKSÛ his sister came unto him in the prison house, for the king had sent her a message that she must persuade him to return to his former relations with him. And Saint KÔTÔLÔS (COTYLUS) admonished his sister, and he taught her the Right Faith, and straightway she turned from her error, and believed on our Lord Jesus Christ. Then KÔTÔLÔS (COTYLUS) sent his sister to a certain priest and he baptized her secretly with Christian baptism, and she returned to her father the king and said unto him, "It would be a good thing for thee if there happened to thee what hath happened to me and to my brother KÔTÔLÔS (COTYLUS). For there is no God but Jesus Christ, the Son of the Living God, [fol. 24*b* 3] Who hath made the heavens, and the earth, and the sea, and all that is therein." And when the king her father heard these words from her he was exceedingly wroth with her, and he commanded his men to torture her very severely, and they did so until she yielded up her soul unto the hand of the Lord, and she received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of heaven. And he tied her brother Saint KÔTÔLÔS (COTYLUS) to the tails of horses and he made him to run behind them over the mountains until he yielded up his soul into the hand of His Creator. Then he had his body cut into three parts, and his men cast them out on the tops of the hills so that the birds of heaven might consume them. Thus Saint KÔTÔLÔS (COTYLUS) finished his strife, and received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of heaven. When the king's soldiers had departed the Lord commanded the priests and the holy deacons to take the bodies of the martyrs, and they went by night and took the bodies of the saints, and they found that they had become as white as snow. And they prepared them for burial with honour, and they laid them in a beautiful tomb until the end of the days of persecution. After the days of the persecution they built a beautiful church for them, and laid the bodies of the saints therein, and through them very many signs and wonders were wrought.

[fol. 25*a* 1] On this day also Saint JULIUS became a martyr. This holy man came from the city of 'AḲFĔḤÂS, and our Lord set him up to care for the bodies of the holy martyrs, and to write the history of their contendings and to prepare their bodies for burial, and to despatch each body to its native city. And the Lord brought blindness into the hearts of the governors, and they never held converse with Saint JULIUS about any matter whatsoever, and they never forced him to worship idols, for the Lord protected him for the sake of His servants the martyrs. And there were three hundred men who knew how to write, and they used to write the histories of the contendings of the holy martyrs. And JULIUS used to minister to the holy martyrs, and dress their wounds with healing medicines with his own hand, and the martyrs used to bless him and declare unto him, saying, "Thou art as if thou hadst poured out thine own blood for the Name of our Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be reckoned among the number of the martyrs." When the days of the reign of DIOCLETIAN the infidel emperor were ended, CONSTANTINE the righteous emperor reigned. And our Lord Christ wished to place and to associate Saint JULIUS with the number of the holy martyrs and all the righteous saints. And our Lord Christ commanded Saint JULIUS to go to the city of GAMNÛDÎ in the northern part of the country of Egypt, to ARMENIUS the governor, and to confess before him his belief on the Name of our Lord Jesus Christ. And Saint JULIUS went, as our [fol. 25*a* 2] Lord Jesus Christ had commanded him, to ARMENIUS the governor, and he confessed before him that he believed on the Name of our Lord Jesus Christ; and the governor tortured him many times, and God raised him up whole and unharmed. Then Saint JULIUS prayed to God and entreated Him to let the earth open her mouth and swallow up the idols. And straightway the earth opened her mouth and swallowed up the seventy idols, and their one hundred and forty priests. Now the governor had commanded his men to bring Saint JULIUS to him so that he might bow down to the idols; and straightway they and their priests were destroyed and they went down into Sheol for ever. And very many of the people who were there when they saw this miracle marvelled exceedingly, and they believed on our Lord Jesus Christ and became martyrs. When ARMENIUS the governor saw that his gods and their priests were destroyed, he believed on our Lord Jesus Christ, and went with Saint JULIUS to the governor of Athribis and confessed before him his belief on the Name of our Lord Jesus Christ. And the governor of Athribis tortured Saint JULIUS with very great severity, but our Lord Christ raised him up safely and unharmed; JULIUS died thrice, and our Lord Jesus Christ raised him up from the dead thrice. One day there was to be a festival in honour of the idols, and the people were decorating the temple with all kinds of ornaments and lamps, and with palm branches, and branches of other trees, [fol. 25*a* 3] and they closed the gates of the temple; and the people expected to come on the following day and to celebrate the festival. And Saint JULIUS entreated God to blot out their idols, and straightway God sent an angel who smashed the heads of the idols, and blackened their faces with charcoal and ashes, and burnt up all the palm branches, and destroyed all the other decorations of the temple. On the following day when the people dressed in apparel of great price came to do according to their custom, and saw how their idols had been destroyed, they recognized the impotence of their idols, and they conversed among themselves and said, "If our idols are not able to save themselves, how will they have the power to save us?" And straightway the governor of Athribis believed on our Lord Jesus Christ, and very many men, the number whereof could not be counted, did the same. From this place also Saint JULIUS departed to the city of ṬÛWÂ, and with him were the governor of the city of GAMNÛDÎ and the governor of the city of Athribis. And Saint JULIUS spake unto ISKANDER the governor of ṬÛWÂ, and said unto him, "Finish my strife for me, and command thy men to cut off my head and let me receive the crown of martyrdom, and depart to my Lord Jesus Christ." And ISKANDER said unto him, "I will not torture thee, and I will do nothing evil unto thee whatsoever." And Saint JULIUS commanded his five hundred slaves to sharpen their swords, and to rise up against ISKANDER. And they said [unto him], "If thou dost not command [his soldiers] to cut off the heads [fol. 25*b* 1] of all of us, so that we may become martyrs of Christ, we will kill thee."

Then JULIUS commanded an unclean spirit to ride ISKANDER, and straightway the unclean spirit did so, and ISKANDER wrote a decree ordering his servants to cut off the heads of the slaves of JULIUS with the sword. And straightway the soldiers cut off the heads of all the saints, that is to say, of Saint JULIUS, and Saint THEODORE his son, and Saint IONIAS (DIONYSIUS ?) his brother, and his five hundred slaves, and the governor of GAMNÛDÎ, and the governor of Athribis, and a great many [other] people. Now the number of those who became martyrs on the day of the martyrdom of Saint JULIUS was fifteen hundred, and they all received their crowns of martyrdom in the kingdom of heaven. And they took the bodies of Saint JULIUS and his son and his brother, and carried them to the city of Alexandria, for there he used to live, although he was born in the city of 'AḲFĔḤÂS, and they laid them in a beautiful tomb. Afterwards they built over them a beautiful church wherein many signs and wonders took place.

Three salutations to JULIUS, THEODORE and IONIAS (DIONYSIUS ?).

And on this day is commemorated BÂLÂN.

XXIII. MASKARAM

[fol. 25*b* 2] IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day the righteous Saints EUNABIUS and ANDREAS became martyrs. These holy men were sons of elders of the city of ZALDÂ, and from their youth up they were friends in good counsel, and they went and became monks in one of the monasteries of a city in Syria. Afterwards they went to the holy and honourable Abbâ MACARIUS and they became his disciples, and they dwelt with him, and were in submission to him, and they followed his counsel, and they continued to devote themselves to a life of prayer for three years, and they fasted and prayed by day and by night continually, in love and humility. And the report of their fair strife and of their strenuous ascetic labours was heard [everywhere], and the people chose EUNABIUS and made him a bishop, and ANDREAS they made a priest, and they protected the flock of Christ well and carefully. And they fought a great fight, and they afflicted their souls and bodies with toil and tribulation, and they continued to do so for some years. [fol. 25*b* 3] And JULIAN, the infidel emperor, heard the report of them, and he sent messengers and had them brought to him, and he commanded them to deny Christ, and to enter the foul and wicked faith, that is to say, the worship of idols; and they would not obey his command, and they cursed him and they cursed his filthy idols. And JULIAN was wroth with them, and he tortured them severely and broke their bodies up each into several pieces; and they yielded up their souls into the hand of God, and they received their crowns of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens, as a reward for their monastic life, and for their fair worship, and for their strenuous fighting and their stern asceticism, and for the shedding of their blood, and for their faith in our Lord Jesus Christ.

And on this day also EUSTATHIUS and his son and his wife became martyrs.

Salutation to EUSTATHIUS who saw our Lord Jesus Christ between the horns of a stag.

[fol. 26*a* 1] And on this day also are commemorated THECLA the virgin, the bride of Christ, and forty-four martyrs, and the admirable GREGORY [the Thaumaturge], and 'ĔNṢÎNÂ, and BELÎNÂ, and Abbâ SALÂMÂ the lamp of the world.

XXIV. MASKARAM

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died the holy father, Abbâ GREGORY the monk. This holy and blessed man was a native of Upper Egypt, and his parents were holy and righteous Christians, and they were exceedingly rich, and their possessions were very great. And they taught their son every kind of sacred and profane learning, and then they taught him the doctrine of wisdom and the art of speaking, and the Books of the Holy Church. Next they sent him to Father ISAAC, bishop of their city, and he laid his hand upon him and made him a reader; then they required from him that he should marry a wife, but this thing he refused [to do]. After this they brought him to the bishop, and he appointed him a full deacon. And GREGORY used to go continually [fol. 26*a* 2] to Abbâ PACHOMIUS, and learn from him the way of God, and he took very much money from his parents and brought it to the holy father Abbâ PACHOMIUS. And he made many petitions unto him, beseeching him to give this money to those who built monasteries, but Saint Abbâ PACHOMIUS devoted it to the building of a church, and a lodging for the monks and for his own meetings. And after this he renounced the whole world, and all the goods and possessions thereof, and he went to Abbâ PACHOMIUS, who arrayed him in the garb of the monastic life. And GREGORY dwelt with him, and laboured both in soul and body, and he fought a great fight with fasting and prayer, in lowliness, and humility and submission, and gentleness and love. Even the fornicators when they saw him learned from his appearance and example the fear of God, and they forsook their evil deeds and repented, and became men of clean lives. And he dwelt with Abbâ PACHOMIUS for thirteen years. When Saint Abbâ MACARIUS came to Abbâ PACHOMIUS, and dwelt with him for a few days (now he wanted to return to the desert of SCETE), this holy man GREGORY entreated Saint Abbâ PACHOMIUS, saying, "O my father, permit me to go with Saint Abbâ MACARIUS to the desert of SCETE," and he commanded him to go with him, and Saint GREGORY went with Saint Abbâ MACARIUS, and he dwelt with him for many years. Then he asked Saint Abbâ MACARIUS to allow him to live the life of an anchorite in the desert for a little; and he said, "Do what thou wishest." And he departed into the mountain and dug out a small cave for himself, and he dwelt [fol. 26*a* 3] there for seven years. And he used to come to Saint Abbâ MACARIUS twice each year, once at the time of the festival of the birth of the Glorious

One, and once on the day of the festival of the resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ; and he partook of the Holy Mysteries [on each occasion] and returned to his cave. And Abbâ MACARIUS questioned him about all his work each year, and he revealed unto him everything which he saw, and Abbâ MACARIUS used to lay down for him the ascetic labours of the monastic life which he had to perform. When he had completed two and twenty years of strife God wished to give him rest from this world. And He sent to him an angel who said unto him, "After three days thou shalt depart from this fleeting world, and shalt enter everlasting life." And Saint GREGORY called the old men of the desert of SCETE, and embraced them, and asked them to remember him, and they also asked him to remember them before God; and after three days he died and went into everlasting life.

And on this day also died Saint BĔDRÂṬÔS (QUADRATUS), one of the two and seventy disciples whom our Lord Jesus Christ chose. This holy apostle was one of the sons of the elders of Athens, and he was one of their learned nobles; he believed on our Lord Jesus Christ, to Whom be praise! and served Him. And having received the grace of the Holy [fol. 26*b* 1] Spirit, the Paraclete, on the day of the festival of Pentecost, he departed into many cities, and preached the Holy and Life-giving Gospel. And he went into the city of MAGNÎS and preached the Holy Gospel therein, and he illumined the hearts of the men of that city with the Faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, and he baptized them with Christian baptism. And he taught them the life-giving commandments of the Gospel, and he appointed priests and deacons for them. Then he went forth from them and entered the city of Athens and preached therein; and they stoned him and tortured him very severely. After they had tortured him they cast him into the fire, and he yielded up his soul, and received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of heaven.

And on this day also are commemorated BÊTRĔWÂ and LATÂYN the martyrs, and the death of GABRIEL the archbishop, and THEODORE, and NETROLOMES, and the strife of Saint EUSANIUS (AUSANIUS), and NESTIUS, and ZÎÂNUS, and JUSTUS, and his brother 'ĔLSAREY, and FRATUS (PHRATUS), and COSMAS, and DAMIANUS.

XXV. Maskaram

[fol. 26*b* 2] IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died the great and righteous prophet JONAH. This holy man was the son of the widow of BÊTH-SARÂPTÂ of Sidon whom ELIJAH the prophet raised from the dead. And he followed ELIJAH the prophet and ministered unto him, and he toiled with him and he was held to be worthy of the grace of prophecy by his command to him. And God, blessed and exalted be His name! said unto him, "Get thee to the city of Nineveh, and preach unto the people thereof, and tell them, 'after three days your city shall be overthrown.'" And when God said this unto him JONAH pondered in his heart, and said, "If God wished to destroy them He would not have commanded me to go and preach unto them. If I go and preach unto them, and say unto them, 'God wisheth to destroy you,' I am afraid that God, Who is merciful, will have mercy upon them, and that I shall be unto them as a lying prophet, and that they will never listen to my preaching at all. Now especially I am afraid that they will kill me if I am sent unto them with a false message from God, I will arise and flee and I will not go to that city, and I will not preach to them." O my brethren, is there any man whatsoever who hath the power to flee from God, the Most High? If the heart of this prophet of the prophets of the children of Israel was thus, how could their hearts be to the people? Now, I think that God, blessed be His Name! by the operation of His wisdom worked in such a way that [fol. 26*b* 3] this prophet fled so that there might be made manifest the miracle of his remaining in the belly of the whale for three days and three nights, and then going forth from him whole and uninjured. Now this was a sign of the remaining of our Lord Christ in the grave for three days and three nights, and of His rising from the dead unchanged. And the Prophet JONAH rose up and fled. Now he wanted to go to the city of TARSUS, but when he had embarked in a ship and they had put out to sea a little way, stormy winds, and the waves and the billows of the sea, rose up against them, and they were within a very little of sinking into the sea, and being drowned. And God put understanding into the heart of the captain, and he said unto those who had embarked on the ship, "Cast lots among yourselves so that we may know because of whom it is that this tribulation hath come upon us"; and when they had cast lots among themselves the lot fell upon JONAH the prophet. And the captain said unto him, "What hast thou done that through thee such an affliction should come upon us?" And JONAH said unto them, "Cast me into the sea and ye shall be saved." And the captain and the crew entreated God, saying, "O God, demand Thou not from us the blood of this man"; and they took him and cast him into the sea, and a great whale swallowed him. And he remained in the belly of the whale for three days and three nights, and then the whale cast him up on the sea-shore. And JONAH rose up straightway and came into the city of Nineveh, and he preached unto the people thereof even as God the Most High had commanded him, and he said unto them, "Know ye that [fol. 27*a* 1] three days from this day, your city shall be overthrown, and ye shall all be destroyed"; and he went round about the city of Nineveh for a space of three days. When the men of Nineveh heard the preaching of JONAH the prophet they were exceedingly afraid, and they believed on God and they repented and fasted and put on sackcloth made of hair, both rich and poor. And the preaching of JONAH reached the King of Nineveh, and he came down from his throne, and took the royal crown off his head, and he put on sackcloth made of hair and sat in the ashes. Then the king commanded that a herald should go round about proclaiming thus: "The king hath commanded that his nobles, and all the people, great and small, and women and children, and sheep and oxen and goats shall fast, and that they shall neither eat nor drink any water whatsoever, and they shall put on sackcloth made of hair; and similarly, even the beasts shall not eat grass. And let all men forsake their evil works, that is to say, oppression, and fornication, and lying, and theft, and fraud, and blasphemy, in order that God may, peradventure, have mercy upon you, and remove His wrath from you." And straightway all the people repented, and they fasted, and begged for mercy from God, blessed be His Name! and God had mercy on them. And the prophet JONAH was sad with a very great sadness, and he said, "O God, take my life, for death is more preferable to me than life." And JONAH went outside the city and sat down there and fell asleep. And God commanded a root of the cucumber plant, and it sprouted and grew into a large plant, and it had offshoots and it became very leafy, and very high, and it cast its shadow over JONAH as he was sleeping. And JONAH woke up from his sleep [fol. 27*a* 2] and saw the cucumber plant, and he rejoiced with great joy. And on the following day God brought slumber upon JONAH, and he fell asleep, and God commanded a worm to gnaw the cucumber plant, and the root thereof was cut through; and God commanded a wind-storm and it withered the cucumber plant, and the sun scorched JONAH'S head, and he woke from his dream. When he saw that the cucumber plant had withered he was exceedingly sorry, and he demanded for himself death. And God said unto JONAH, "Art thou exceedingly sorry that the cucumber plant hath withered?" And JONAH said, "Yea, O Lord, I am exceedingly sorry, even unto death." And God said unto him, "If thou art sorry for a cucumber plant which thou didst neither sow nor plant, and for which thou hast in no way laboured, but which flourished in a day, and withered in a day, why should I not spare Nineveh, the great city wherein dwell more than ten hundred thousand men who know not their right hands from their left hands, besides very many beasts? For I am the Merciful and the Compassionate God Who sheweth mercy upon every one who turneth from his sins and repenteth." And JONAH rose up and returned to the land of Israel and he died there. And the prophecy of JONAH [was made] two hundred years and more before the advent of our Lord Jesus Christ, and he prophesied in the days of 'AMÔṢ the king and his son

'ÔZYÂN. And all the days of his life were one hundred years; seventy years as a prophet, and thirty years before he prophesied.

[fol. 27*a* 3] Salutation to JONAH who slept in the belly of the whale.

Salutation to BARBARAH, and to JULIANA, who appeared to two men when they came to steal the book containing her history, and slew one and blinded the other. [This paragraph is wanting in the Bodleian MS.]

Salutation to those who are saturated with the Law and the Gospel. [This paragraph is wanting in the Bodleian MS.]

And on this day also are commemorated RÔḲÂ (or FÔḲÂ), and JOHN, and ANDREW, and PETER, and ANTONIUS.

XXVI. MASKARAM

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day God sent the angel GABRIEL to ZACHARIAS the priest, the son [fol. 27*b* 1] of BARACHIAS, and told him concerning JOHN the Baptist, his son. Now ZACHARIAS was a righteous man, and he was exceedingly old, and his period for begetting children had passed; moreover, his wife ELISABETH was childless, and her period for conceiving and bringing forth children was passed. And ZACHARIAS was praying and beseeching God continually to give him a child, for the sake of the children of Israel who reviled him because a son had not been born unto him, and they treated him with ignominy and contempt, and because of it they said unto him, "He hath lost the blessing which God promised to give to our father ADAM, 'Be fruitful and multiply, and fill the earth'"; therefore he entreated God to give him a son. And God, blessed be His Name! had compassion upon him, and He hearkened unto his petition, and He sent the angel GABRIEL unto him, and the angel told him about the birth of JOHN his son. And this angel came to ZACHARIAS when he was standing and praying in the sanctuary, even as the Holy Gospel saith. And he preached to him the great prophet JOHN, that he should precede Christ, and that he should prepare for Him His way, even as it is said concerning the prophet, that he shall become a preacher before Him. Now ZACHARIAS knew his own weakness, and how far advanced his days were, and his old age, and that his wife was barren, and for this reason he contradicted the angel and said unto him, "How can this thing possibly happen to me, seeing that I have become old, and am a very aged man, and my wife is barren, and she also is very old, and her days [for childbearing] are passed." And the angel rebuked him, and told him, saying, "I am sent [fol. 27*b* 2] unto thee from God to speak to thee and to tell thee this thing, and it is not seemly for thee to doubt; but thou shalt be dumb until this thing shall be fulfilled in its appointed time." And ZACHARIAS was dumb until JOHN, the preparer of the way of the Lord, was born. When they were circumcizing the child they asked his father and said unto him, "What shall he be called?" and he wrote upon tablets saying, "His name is JOHN." And straightway his mouth and his tongue were opened, and he spake and praised God—blessed be His Name! And ZACHARIAS prophesied concerning his son that he should become a prophet and should go before the face of the Messiah of God, and he prophesied concerning our Lord Jesus Christ.

Salutation to ELISABETH.

And on this day also is commemorated the translation of the body of 'ABÔLÎ (or 'ÔBÔLÎ) the martyr, the son of JUSTUS.

Salutation to the translation of the body of 'ABÔLÎ (or 'ÔBÔLÎ).

[fol. 27*b* 3] And on this day also are commemorated ten thousand martyrs and 'AGÂTÎ of Egypt, and our father, GEORGE the martyr.

XXVII. Maskaram

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day EUSTATHIUS and his two sons and his wife became martyrs. This man was one of the chief generals of the Imperial Army of Rômê, and he knew not God. His own original name was ḳÎDÔS, and he gave alms in abundance, and expended much charity on the poor and needy, and God did not wish that his toil should be in vain. And EUSTATHIUS was in the desert hunting wild animals, and one day there appeared unto him the figure of a cross between the horns of a stag, and the cross reached up to the clouds. And EUSTATHIUS chased the stag into the mountains, and he pursued it that he might kill it. And the Lord spake unto him from between the horns of the stag, and told him His Name, and He commanded him to go with his sons and his wife to the bishop of that city, and be baptized with Christian baptism. And our Lord Jesus Christ informed him that poverty should come upon him speedily. When EUSTATHIUS heard these words, he went down from the mountain, and departed to the bishop, and he and his wife and his sons were baptized with Christian baptism; and he abandoned his former name and called himself "EUSTATHIUS." And straightway all his property disappeared, and his slaves, and [fol. 28*a* 1] his handmaidens, and his horses; and he took his wife and his sons, and he went forth from the city of Rômê and embarked in a ship. Now he took with him neither money to pay for their passage, nor anything else which he could give the captain [in its stead]. When they arrived in port the captain took his wife instead of passage money, and EUSTATHIUS took his two sons and departed. And he came to another stream which he had to cross, and he took up one of his sons on his back to take him over the river, and he passed over; and he returned to his other son to carry him across the river, but he found him not, because a wolf had seized him. Now a lion had seized and carried off his other son. And EUSTATHIUS sorrowed with a very great sorrow because of the loss of his wife and his two sons, but God, great in counsel, in Whom there is power, protected both of them unharmed. And EUSTATHIUS went on to a certain city, and he became a guard of the village and remained one for many days. After those days the Emperor of Rômê died, and there reigned in his stead another emperor who enquired for EUSTATHIUS and found him not. And he sent messengers out into all the district to seek for him, and one of those messengers who had been sent out by the emperor to seek for EUSTATHIUS came to the village wherein he dwelt. And the two men recognized each other, and they embraced, and the messenger carried EUSTATHIUS to the emperor in great honour. When EUSTATHIUS arrived the emperor honoured him exceedingly, and appointed him to the position in which he was formerly. And the emperor commanded that two men should be recruited from every city for use in war. Now the two sons of EUSTATHIUS were brought up in the same city, neither knowing the other. One day, when the two sons of EUSTATHIUS, who had been placed [fol. 28*a* 2] in that city, were talking together, they discovered that they were brothers; and then [the messengers] took them to the city of Rômê and God was pleased to set them in the house of business of their father who did not know them. As concerning their mother whom the pagan captain of the ship seized, God protected her and delivered her uninjured from his hand; now she was a keeper of the gardens of the city of Rômê. And the two young men came to the village where their mother was, and whilst they were holding converse together, the younger brother spake, and their mother recognized that they were her sons, and she embraced them, and rejoiced in them, and they rejoiced in her exceedingly. And the three of them met together and they went to EUSTATHIUS and informed him what had happened to them, and he knew that the woman was his wife, and that the young men were his sons, and they embraced each other and rejoiced together greatly. Thus they were all gathered together [again] in one place, even as God had promised them. And they dwelt together, and whilst marvelling they praised God, blessed be His Name! because He had done good things for them. After this the emperor who loved EUSTATHIUS died, and there reigned another emperor who worshipped idols;

and he summoned EUSTATHIUS and his wife and his sons, and had them brought unto him. And he said unto them, "Cast incense to my gods." And the holy men said, "We will not worship idols, [fol. 28*a* 3] and we will not bow down to them, for we bow down to our Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of the Living God." And straightway the emperor was wroth with them, and he commanded his soldiers to torture them, and they tortured them very severely, but God raised them up whole and unharmed. Then he commanded his soldiers to cast them into a brazen cauldron, and [when] they had done so he commanded to light a fire on top of them, and thus they delivered their souls into the hand of God, and they received crowns of martyrdom from our Lord Jesus Christ.

And on this day also died the holy woman ṬÊḴLÂ (THECLA) who was a martyr without the shedding of blood. This holy woman had parents who were rich and honourable Macedonians, and they brought her up strictly according to the custom of their country; now they worshipped idols. When PAUL arrived in the country of Macedonia, he began to preach in the Name of our Lord Jesus Christ, saying, "Blessed are those who are poor for righteousness' sake, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. Blessed are those who mourn here, for they shall rejoice. Blessed [fol. 28*b* 1] are those who are persecuted for righteousness' sake, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. Blessed are those who have a wife and who are as if they had not one, for they shall inherit everlasting life"—these and such like words. When Saint THECLA heard these words, she remained in the upper floor of her house and only came down for food and drink. And her mother said unto her, "Why dost thou not come down from the upper floor of thy house, and why dost thou not eat?" And she came down from the upper floor of her house, and went to PAUL secretly, and she bribed the doorkeeper of her house with her hair-comb of gold not to talk about her [leaving the house]. When PAUL saw her he received her gladly and taught her the Faith of Christ. On the following day when her mother came to PAUL she found THECLA sitting with him, and she went to the governor and reported to him that her daughter was a Christian. And the governor commanded his soldiers to bring THECLA with PAUL, and when they had brought her he was wroth with PAUL and ordered them to cast him into the fire; [and they did so] but God delivered him. And the governor commanded them to cast THECLA into the fire, and all the children of the city assembled to look upon her torture. And without the use of force on the part of the soldiers she threw herself into the flames after having made over herself the sign of the Cross; and she went forth from the midst of the fire, which had not touched her. And she went to PAUL, and shaved off her hair, and girded herself with a belt and followed PAUL. When another governor heard this he seized her and pressed her to abandon the Christian Faith, and when she refused he cast her into a den of lions and bears, and [fol. 28*b* 2] these animals bowed down before her and licked the dust off her feet. When the governor and those who were with him saw that life was hers, they believed and were baptized in the Name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Ghost. And THECLA continued to follow PAUL, and to preach in the Name of our Lord Jesus Christ; and having worked many miracles she died in peace.

On this day also died Saint ANTILARIUS. This holy man was an officer of the tax-gatherers, and he had no mercy on anyone. One day certain poor folk were sitting in the sun, and they began to mention the names of the charitable and the avaricious, and they mentioned the name of ANTILARIUS as that of a man who had never bestowed any alms on any one of them. And one of the poor said, "What will ye give me if I succeed in drawing a gift from him?" And they promised to give him something. And the needy man went to ANTILARIUS and begged for alms from him, and ANTILARIUS wanted to throw a stone at him in great wrath, but as he had no stone he threw at him the piece of bread-crust which was left in his hand. And taking this the beggar went to his companions, and told them that he had received alms from ANTILARIUS. And ANTILARIUS had a dream, and in it he saw himself at the Judgement, [fol. 28*b* 3] and certain black men were disputing concerning him, and there were other men there who were white; now their faces were austere, and they said, "We cannot find attributed to him any alms except the piece of bread-crust"; and when the speaker cast the bread into the scales it balanced exactly all his sins. When he awoke from his sleep he distributed all his possessions among the poor and he departed to Jerusalem where he sold himself for three dînârs, and [he gave away] in alms the price of his sale, and he lived and served like a slave. And when the slaves of his lord caused him sorrow, a shining man appeared unto him, and said unto him, "Sorrow not, for I have received the price of thy sale, and behold it is here in my hand." When certain men who had come from his city revealed what he had done, he fled secretly and came to the gates of the city, the keeper of which was deaf and dumb. When ANTILARIUS said unto him, "Open the gates to me," there went forth from his mouth something which was like unto fire, and the ears of the gate-keeper were opened, and he spake with his mouth, and he opened the gates to ANTILARIUS who went forth into the desert and died there. When the people missed him, the gate-keeper told them all that had happened, and they marvelled at his holiness and at his admirable behaviour.

And on this day also died Abbâ JOHN of DABRA ṢĔGÊ. This holy man by means of excessive fastings, and prayers, and vigil made his body emaciated, and he became like a dried clod of earth. One day when certain men poured over him a cupful of water, because of the excessive dryness of his skin he left only unabsorbed a very small portion of it.

XXVIII. MASKARAM

[fol. 29*a* 1] IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day Saint 'ABÂDÎR and his sister 'ÎRÂ'Î (IRENE ?) became martyrs. This holy man was a son of the brother of BASILIDES, commander-in-chief of the royal army of Antioch. Now 'ABÂDÎR succeeded his father as commander-in-chief, and he had a mansion wherein he used to pray. And our Lord Jesus Christ appeared unto him at midnight, and He said unto him, "Rise up, and take thy sister 'ÎRÂ'Î (IRENE ?) and get thee into the land of Egypt so that thou mayest receive a crown of martyrdom. And I will command a certain man whose name is SAMUEL to take care about your bodies, and he shall prepare them for burial"; and He gave him a benediction and went up into heaven with great glory. And our Lord Jesus Christ appeared unto his sister 'ÎRÂ'Î (IRENE ?) also, and He said unto her, "Hearken unto the voice of thy brother, and do not transgress his command." When she woke from her sleep she trembled exceedingly, and she went to her brother and told him how our Lord Jesus Christ had appeared unto her, and how He had spoken unto her, and she rejoiced exceedingly; and she agreed with her brother not to transgress that command. And they swore to each other that they would go to the land of Egypt, and that they would pour out their blood for the Name of our Lord Jesus Christ, to Whom be praise! When the mother of the blessed 'ABÂDÎR knew this thing, she rent her garments, she and her handmaidens, and they came to 'ABÂDÎR and wept before him, and she adjured him not to become a martyr. And he swore unto her that he would not [fol. 29*a* 2] speak to DIOCLETIAN concerning martyrdom, and her heart became quiet, and she ceased from sorrow, and she did not think that he would go to another place to become a martyr. And Saint 'ABÂDÎR changed his apparel that night, and he went forth from his house, and he drew water secretly for those who were shut up in the prison house, until the dawn came. And he commanded the keeper of the gates of the city not to tell this matter to anyone whatsoever, and he said unto him, "If thou revealest this matter to anyone I will cut off your head with the sword." After this [our Lord Christ] appeared unto him again, and He commanded him to go to Egypt and to become a martyr; and straightway Saint 'ABÂDÎR rose up, and took his sister 'ÎRÂ'Î (IRENE ?) and they departed to the land of Egypt, and they arrived in the city of Alexandria. And some of the soldiers knew him, and they said unto him, "Thou art our Lord 'ABÂDÎR, the commander-in-chief." And 'ABÂDÎR smiled and said unto them, "Many people tell me this, and I say unto them, I am not 'ABÂDÎR, but only someone like unto him." And again in another place some soldiers recognized him, and they said unto him, "Thou art 'ABÂDÎR," and 'ABÂDÎR said unto them, "I certainly am not 'ABÂDÎR." Then they went forth from the city of Alexandria and came to the city of GREAT MĔSR (GRAND CAIRO), and they found Saint 'ABKARAZÛN there, and 'ABÂDÎR knew 'ABKARAZÛN and blessed him. Then he came to the city of ESHMÛNÊN, and foregathered with SAMUEL the deacon. And on the following day SAMUEL went with them to the city of 'ĔNṢĔNÂ, and they confessed our Lord Jesus Christ before ARIANUS, governor of ANTINOË, [fol. 29*a* 3] and he tortured them severely. And the holy man 'ABÂDÎR prayed and entreated God to strengthen his faith and the faith of his sister 'ÎRÂ'Î (IRENE ?) during the torturing. And God took the soul of his sister 'ÎRÂ'Î (IRENE ?) and carried it to the Jerusalem which is in the heavens, and she saw the habitation of the martyrs and of the righteous; then He brought her soul back into her body. When the governor was tired of torturing them, he commanded his soldiers to cut off their heads with the sword. And before they cut off their heads ARIANUS the governor said unto Saint 'ABÂDÎR, "I adjure thee by thy God to inform me whom thou art, and what is thy name, and whence comest thou." And 'ABÂDÎR said unto him, "Swear unto me that thou wilt not change the decree which thou hast decreed in respect of cutting off my head"; and the governor swore unto him even as the holy man had said. And the holy man answered and said unto him, "I am 'ABÂDÎR, the commander-in-chief of the army." And ARIANUS the governor cried out, saying, "Woe is me, O my lord, it is meet that I should die before thee. Why didst thou not make me to know that thou wast my lord, instead of hiding thyself from me and permitting me to go so far as to condemn thee to all these severe tortures?" And Saint 'ABÂDÎR answered and said unto him, "Fear not, for thou art about to receive a crown of martyrdom. The emperor will seek for me and will not find me, and he will hear that thou hast killed me, and he will punish thee with very great severity, and thou wilt die for the sake of the Name of our Lord Jesus Christ. And now, make speed to finish our martyrdoms." And straightway the governor commanded his soldiers to cut off the heads of 'ABÂDÎR and his sister, and they cut off their heads; and the saints [fol. 29*b* 1] received crowns of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens. And [the believers] spread out fine apparel, and wrapped up their bodies therein, and SAMUEL the deacon took them and laid them in his house until the days of the persecution were ended; and he built a fine church for them, and many signs and wonders took place through their bodies.

Three salutations to 'ABÂDÎR and his sister.

And on this day also died SÔSNÂ (SUSANNAH). The father of this holy woman was CHELCIAS (HELKIAH), and she was the wife of JOACHIM, a Jewish nobleman, and one of those who had been carried away captive into Babylon; and all his kinsmen used to come to him to judge their causes. Now SÔSNÂ (SUSANNAH) was exceedingly beautiful and she feared God, and her righteous parents taught their daughter the Law of MOSES. And she had a [fol. 29*b* 2] fruit-garden (or orchard) which belonged to her husband, and she used to go at noon and walk about therein. And in those days there appeared two Rabbans who were hypocrites, such as God spake of [when He said] "Sin went forth from Babylon through hypocritical Rabbans who said, Let us protect the people"; and these men frequented the house of JOACHIM. When they saw SÔSNÂ (SUSANNAH) walking in the garden they lusted for her, and their hearts went astray and they turned their eyes perversely to her, and they remembered not the judgement of God. Both loved her and both wished to lie with her, but neither told to the other what was in his heart, for they were afraid to declare their lust. And they waited the whole day long to find her, and one of them acting craftily towards his fellow said, "Let us go to our houses for it is the time of evening." And they passed out [of the garden] and separated from each other, and then they met again, and they looked at each other and told each other of their desire, and they agreed together upon a time when each would find her [alone], and then they waited for her. And on a day according to her wont, she came with two of her handmaidens, and she wished to bathe in the garden because she was heated and there was no one in the garden. Now the two old men had hidden themselves and they were awaiting her. And she said unto her handmaidens, "Let them bring to me the oil and the soap wherewith to wash myself, and let them shut the doors." And when her handmaidens were departed, the two Rabbans rose up, and seized her, and they said unto her, "We wish to lie with thee, and if thou refusest we will be witnesses against thee that we found a man with thee." And SÔSNÂ (SUSANNAH) wept, and said, "I am in affliction in every way: If I do [what ye want] I shall die, and if I do not [fol. 29*b* 3] I cannot be saved. It is better for me to fall into the hand of God than to sin before Him." And SÔSNÂ (SUSANNAH) uttered a cry at the top of her voice, and the Rabbans cried out at her, and one of them ran and opened the doors of the garden. When the cries were heard by the members of her house they all ran out and came by way of a side door, and they saw what had happened. And when the Rabbans had told them this matter, all the servants of her house were ashamed, for such a thing had never been heard in connection with SÔSNÂ (SUSANNAH). On the following day all the people gathered together to JOACHIM, and these two Rabbans came with their hearts of violence, and they declared before all the people, laying their hands upon her head as they did so, "We were walking alone in the garden, and this woman came with two of her handmaidens, and they shut the doors of the garden; and she sent her handmaidens away, and there came out a young man from the place in which he had hidden, and lay with her. And when we ran after him we could not catch him, for the door was open and he had gone out; we seized SÔSNÂ (SUSANNAH), but when we asked her she would not tell us his name." And the bystanders believed them because they were Rabbans of the people. And SÔSNÂ (SUSANNAH) who was weeping, and whose heart trusted in God, looked up to heaven, and cried out with a loud voice, saying, "O God of the world, Thou knowest that they have laid false information against me, and I, behold, I must die, although I have not committed [the sin]." And God heard her petition, and whilst they were carrying her away to kill her, the Spirit of God moved a certain young man called DANIEL, and he cried out, saying, "I am innocent of this woman's blood." And they said unto him, "What is the meaning of these words?" And he said unto them, "Are ye fools that ye condemn a daughter of Israel to death [fol. 30*a* 1] without making any investigation [of the charge against her]?" And when the council had come back unto the synagogue, they had the two Rabbans brought, and set each at a distance from the other. And DANIEL said unto one of them, "By what kind of a tree didst thou see her?" and he said "under a sakînôn tree," and the other Rabban said "under a pĕrwôn tree." And DANIEL condemned them by their own words, and the people blessed God Who had saved SÔSNÂ (SUSANNAH), the daughter of CHELCIAS (HELKIAH); and they slew those two Rabbans according to the Law of MOSES.

And on this day also are commemorated 'ÊRÂNÎ (IRENE) the martyr, and 'ANḲUÔ MÂRYÂM, and STEPHEN his son, and ḤANNAH, and PORPHYRINA, and LUKE the monk.

XXIX. MASKARAM

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

[fol. 30*a* 2] On this day is commemorated the festival of the birth of our Lord Redeemer Jesus Christ by MARY, the Holy Virgin.

Salutation to the birth of the FLOWER, Jesus Christ.

And on this day also took place the translation of the body of Saint JOHN the evangelist and apostle, the proclaimer of the Deity.

Salutation to the translation of the body of Saint JOHN the evangelist.

And on this day also became martyrs the holy virgin 'ARSÎMÂ, and AGATHA, and the two virgins who followed them, and many men; and the number of them all was two and seventy souls. Now when DIOCLETIAN the infidel was reigning he sought out a maiden of beautiful appearance to marry her. And he commanded certain painters to depart into every country, and to choose for him a maiden of beautiful form and appearance, and they were to paint a picture of her on a tablet for him, and shew him all her limbs and her movements. [fol. 30*a* 3] When those painters arrived in the city of Rômê they discovered a certain nunnery, and they found therein this virgin 'ARSÎMÂ; and there was in the nunnery none like unto her in her appearance, and there was none who resembled her. And the painters painted a portrait of her and sent it to the Emperor DIOCLETIAN. When the emperor saw her portrait he rejoiced exceedingly. And he sent to the kings and governors and bade them come to him for the marriage. When the virgins knew this thing, they wept, and they rose up and went forth from that nunnery entreating God to help them, and to keep them in their virginity; and they came to the country of Armenia, and entered the royal city of DERṬÂDĔS the king. And they dwelt in a certain village camp of nomads in a plain, and their number was five and seventy men and women, besides the nine and thirty virgins. And they dwelt in great tribulation, and they could not find food, and one of them made a...and used to feed them by means of the work thereof. When DIOCLETIAN sought after 'ARSÎMÂ he found her not, and he heard that she was in the country of Armenia, and he informed DĔRṬÂDĔS concerning the matter of 'ARSÎMÂ, and he said unto the governor of Armenia, "Take care of her and send her to me." When the virgins heard these words they hid themselves in another city, but certain men went and gave information to the king about them, and DĔRṬÂDĔS commanded his soldiers to bring the virgin 'ARSÎMÂ to him with great honour; and when she did not wish to go to him, they dragged her and forced her to come to him. When DĔRṬÂDĔS saw the beauty of the holy woman [fol. 30*b* 1] he wanted to defile her virginity, but he was not able to do so. And he brought her mother AGATHA to her to persuade her to be submissive to the king's command. And when her mother came to her she besought her to endure patiently, and she comforted her, and she exhorted her, and told her and taught her that she must not forsake her true Bridegroom, who is the Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of the Living God, and that she must not defile her virginity with a filthy pagan and a stranger. When DĔRṬÂDĔS heard that she had persuaded her daughter to endure patiently, he commanded his soldiers to break the teeth of AGATHA her mother. And God gave to the holy woman 'ARSÎMÂ power and strength over DĔRṬÂDĔS, the king, and she hurled him backwards, and dragged him along. Now DĔRṬÂDĔS was well known in battle, for he was exceedingly strong, and the king was put to shame having been vanquished by the virgin 'ARSÎMÂ; and he commanded his soldiers to cut off the head of Saint 'ARSÎMÂ. And the soldiers came and dragged her away with ropes, and they cut off her head, and tore out her tongue, and put out her eyes, and they cut off her limbs and hacked her body to pieces. When the king awoke from his fall, and his senses returned to him, he repented the killing of Saint 'ARSÎMÂ; and when he knew that she was dead he commanded his soldiers to slay all the [other] virgins. And the soldiers came and bored holes in the soles of their feet, and they flayed them, and cast them out [to the beasts]. Now there was one of them who was sick and was lying on her bed, and she cried out to the soldiers and they came to her, and cut off her head with one blow. Thus they all received crowns of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens. [fol. 30*b* 2] And they slew all the men who had come with them from the city of Rômê, and the number thereof was two and seventy souls; and their bodies were cast out into the desert. After the death of these martyrs a certain devil took possession of the king, and he continued to punish him until Saint GREGORY came to him, and prayed over him, and he was healed of his pain immediately, and he believed in Christ. And they took the bodies of the holy martyrs, and laid them in a holy place until the days of the persecution were ended; and a beautiful church was [then] built for them, and signs and great wonders took place through them.

Salutation to 'ARSÎMÂ.

Salutation to JOHN the Baptist.

XXX. Maskaram

[fol. 30*b* 3] IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day is celebrated the festival of the great commemoration which our Lord and Redeemer Jesus Christ made for the holy and honourable Abbâ 'ATNÂTÊWÔS (ATHANASIUS) the apostle, Archbishop of the city of Alexandria. Now at that time the emperor was CONSTANTINE the Less, son of CONSTANTINE the Great, who denied the One Son, and separated the Godhead of His Father; and he believed in the faith of ARIUS, the accursed one, and supported his views. And the emperor sent a certain man whose name was GÊRGÊWÔS to the country of Egypt, and he gave him five hundred horsemen; and he wrote for him a letter [to take] with him authorizing him to become Archbishop of Alexandria, and the head of all the country of Egypt, and of all archbishops and bishops. And he ordered GÊRGÊWÔS to support the faith of ARIUS, and to slay all those who believed in Christ, and those who were obedient unto Him. When GÊRGÊWÔS, the accursed, had arrived in the city of Alexandria he preached his infidelity, but only a very few of the men of Alexandria accepted his words and his polluted preaching. Therefore he killed all the believing men of the city of Alexandria, that is to say a large and innumerable collection of people; and Saint 'ATNÂTÊWÔS (ATHANASIUS) fled and hid himself for a period of six years. At the end of this time he came forth and went to the city of Constantinople, to the Emperor CONSTANTINE the Less, who denied the Son of God, Whose Name be blessed! And he said unto him, "Either restore me to my see, [fol. 31*a* 1] or slay me and let me receive the crown of life of martyrdom." When the emperor heard these words from him he commanded his soldiers to place the archbishop in a small boat, and to supply him neither with bread nor water, nor with a captain for the boat, and to drive him forth to sea. Now the emperor thought within himself that Saint 'ATNÂTÊWÔS (ATHANASIUS) would die at sea, either through the foundering of his boat or through hunger and thirst; and the emperor was afraid of him, and [he did this] so that the saint might not rebuke him for his denial of Christ. And the soldiers did to him according as the emperor had commanded. Now although the emperor had not given him bread and water, behold the saint had with him the bread of God which was from heaven, and the water of life which flowed down from Him. And although he had no captain in the ship with him, behold, he had with him in the ship He Who directeth the heaven and the earth by His Word. And the boat wherein Saint 'ATNÂTÊWÔS (ATHANASIUS) was seated travelled along smoothly and in peace, and the angels bore it along on their wings, and on the third day he arrived in the city of Alexandria. When the believing folk heard that their good shepherd had arrived, they went out to meet him and they welcomed him with lighted lamps, and songs of joy and instruments of music, and they praised God and brought him into the church; and GÊRGÊWÔS the infidel and those who were with him went forth therefrom. And on that day Saint 'ATNÂTÊWÔS (ATHANASIUS) made a great festival to God—blessed be His Name! and it was then as now, and they celebrated the festival regularly. Praise be unto God Who [fol. 31*a* 2] honoureth His chosen one with this honour.

And on this day also they commemorate Saint GREGORY, Archbishop of the country of Armenia.

And on this day also took place the calling of JAMES and JOHN, the sons of ZEBEDEE, and on it the martyrs Abbâ BÛLÂ (PAWLE), and MÂRYÛ, and BĔTRÛS (PETER), and 'ASÔTÂRÊS [are commemorated].

Salutation to the great teachers of DABRA MÂRYÂM, 'ABSÂDÎ and 'ARÔN (AARON?) of Galilee. [This paragraph is wanting in the Bodleian MS.]

And on this day also died Abbâ SHÂLÛSÎ. This holy man was an athlete, and pretended to be mad, [fol. 31*a* 3] and his fasting and his praying were in secret, and before men he neither prayed nor fasted. Each morning he used to prepare for himself a small amount of food made of herbs of the desert, and at eventide he ate nothing with the brethren. Now the archimandrite was Abbâ ISAAC. And all the monks used to marvel at him, but Abbâ ISAAC did not wish him to continue this habit so that he might not cause himself to fall sick. One day there was about to be a festival in the monastery, and Abbâ ISAAC said unto the monks, "Watch him this day and see that he doth not eat before he receiveth the Offering." When the time for the meal arrived Abbâ SHÂLÛSÎ wished to separate himself from them, and the monks prevented him from doing so; and he cried out and said unto them, "Let me alone, that I may not die of hunger, and that my transgression may not be on your heads." And when they would not pay any heed to his cry, he brought out his skull-cap and beat the wall of the church with it, saying, "MARY, my Lady, deliver me from these monks." And the wall split asunder, and he passed out through the opening, and then the wall joined itself together again and became as it was before it split open. And when those who were assembled there saw this wonder they cried out, saying, "Kîryâlâysôn" (Kyrie eleëson) three hundred times. And they found the skull-cap that had been thrown out, and they placed it in the church with great honour, and it remained there and worked miracles and healed the sick. When the archbishop heard about it he wished to take away the skull-cap so that he might be blessed thereby, and each time he took it away it returned to the monastery. Now this happened three times. And this monk after many days like this day died in the desert.

THE SECOND MONTH—ṬĔḴĔMT (OCT. 8–NOV. 6)

I. ṬĔḴĔMT

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

[fol. 32*a* 1] On this day the holy woman ANASTASIA became a martyr. This woman was a fighter; she was a native of Rômê and her parents were Christians. They brought her up in all honour, and trained her in a manner befitting her noble rank, and they taught her everything which was beneficial for her soul and body, and also the doctrine of the Church. When she arrived at woman's estate her parents wanted to give her in marriage, but she did not desire this thing, for from her youth up she had craved for the garb of the ascetic life; and she chose the spiritual fight which is the garb of the holy ascetic life. And she entered one of the nunneries where virgins were received in the city of Rômê, and she put on the nun's garb, which is the garb of angels. And she made her body to toil with the labour of constant prayer, and with strenuous contending, and with hunger, and with thirst, and with cutting out from her heart and soul every thought concerning this world. In those days she used to fast the whole of every second day throughout the whole year. And during the great fast of the Forty Days she did not eat except on the first Sabbath (Saturday) and on the first day of the week (Sunday) after the mid-day prayer. In those days her food was dry bread and salt, and during all the days of her life as a nun she never ate any food which had been cooked by fire. Now there was another nunnery of virgins near her nunnery, and the day of the festival in the nunnery approached. On that day the abbess took certain virgins from the nunnery, and among them was this virgin ANASTASIA, and they went to [fol. 32*a* 2] celebrate the festival in the neighbouring nunnery. As they were going along the road this holy virgin saw some soldiers of the Emperor DECIUS, and with them were certain Christians whom they were dragging along. And her heart became inflamed with spiritual love, and she cursed them, saying, "O men of sluggish hearts, and infidels, why do ye act thus towards those whom God hath created in His own form and image, and for whom He hath given Himself?" Having said these words the soldiers were wroth with her, and they seized her, and brought her before the governor. And the governor asked her, saying, "Is it true that thou art a Christian, and that thou worshippest Him that was crucified?" And she confessed Christ before the governor and did not deny Him. Then the governor tortured her with severe tortures; he heaped fire on her body, and then he hung her up head downwards, and had a fire lighted under her; but although she was suffering great torture she did not turn from her faith. And after this the governor commanded his soldiers to cut off her head with the sword; and those who were there marvelled at the fortitude of her soul. And she prayed a long prayer, and she stretched out her head to the sword, and they cut off the head of Saint ANASTASIA, and she received a crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens.

[fol. 32*a* 3] And on this day also are commemorated Saint HARÎṬÂN (CHERITON), and SUSANNAH the virgin, and MARY the sister of LAZARUS.

II. Ṭĕḳĕmt

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day the great Saint Abbâ SEVERUS, Archbishop of Antioch, came to the country of Egypt; now this took place in the days of the Emperor EUSTATHIUS, who was a wicked emperor. And the empress was a woman holding the right Faith, and she loved Abbâ SEVERUS, and she placed in him very great confidence; but the emperor did not turn from his evil counsel and he wanted to kill Abbâ SEVERUS. When the God-loving empress knew that the king wished to kill Abbâ

SEVERUS secretly, she besought the holy man to save himself, but he did not want to go away, and he said unto her, "I am ready to die for the sake of my Lord Jesus Christ." And the empress urged him with many fervent entreaties, and certain God-loving brethren entreated him also, and he went forth from that city; and certain of the brethren who were with him fled to Lower Egypt. When the emperor had sought for him and had found him not, he sent soldiers to seek him out and to bring him to him. And God hid him [fol. 32*b* 1] from them, and they found him not, and yet he was nigh unto them, and he walked about in their midst and they did not see him when he was in that place wherein the soldiers of the emperor lived. When Abbâ SEVERUS came to Egypt he went about secretly from place to place and from monastery to monastery, and God wrought by him great signs and wonders. One day he arrived in the desert of SCETE, and he entered into the church of Saint Abbâ MACARIUS in the guise of a travelling monk, and at that moment the priest was offering the incense of sacrifice at the altar, and he was censing the people. Afterwards he read the Book of the Gospel, and then he lifted off the covering and looked for the Offering on the paten, but It was hidden from him and he could not find it. And he wept, and turned towards the congregation, and said unto them, "O my brethren, I know not whether this thing hath happened because of some sin of mine, or because of some sin of yours, but I cannot find the Offering on the paten, and It is hidden from me"; and the people wept because of this. And straightway the angel of the Lord appeared unto the priest, and said unto him, "This hath not happened because of thy sin, and this Offering hath not disappeared because of the sin of the people, but because thou hast acted stupidly, for thou hast dared to offer up incense and our Offering whilst the Archbishop Abbâ SEVERUS is standing outside [the sanctuary] in a corner of the church." And the priest said unto the angel, "Where is he?" And the angel pointed with his hand towards him, and he knew Abbâ SEVERUS by the grace of the Holy Spirit. When the priest came to him [fol. 32*b* 2] Abbâ SEVERUS commanded him to finish the service of the Offering. After this the priest brought Abbâ SEVERUS to the sanctuary with great honour. And when the priest had gone up to the altar he found the Offering on the paten as before, and the priests marvelled and praised God. After this Abbâ SEVERUS went forth from that place and came to the city of SEḤA, and he dwelt there with a certain rich man who was a lover of God, and whose name was DOROTHEUS; and he lived with him until he died on the twenty-fourth day of the month of YAKÂTÎT (Feb. 5–March 6).

And on this day are commemorated TAKLÂ SAMÂ'ET and HERIACUS (CYRIACUS ?).

III. Ṭĕḳĕmt

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died the holy father Abbâ SIMEON, the fifty-first archbishop of the city of Alexandria. This father was the son of one of the elders of the city of Alexandria, and his parents were Orthodox Christians. [fol. 32*b* 3] From his earliest childhood he sucked the milk of the Orthodox Faith, and he learned the doctrine of the Church. And he determined within himself to assume the monastic garb, and he went out from the city of Alexandria and departed to the desert of SCETE, and he became a monk in the monastery of Abbâ JACOB, who was archbishop before him. And he dwelt with him many days, and he made his body to be emaciated through the strenuousness of his ascetic exercises, and by his excessive contendings. And when Abbâ MACARIUS, the second of the name, was appointed archbishop, he received from Abbâ JACOB [the story of] his bold strife, and of the strenuousness of his ascetic practices, and he dwelt with him until Abbâ JACOB his father died. And he chose many priests, and the bishops and priests and deacons assembled together, and all the elders, and Divine Love moved them, and they made this holy father Abbâ SIMEON archbishop because they saw the excellences of his natural disposition and character. When they saw that he had dwelt with the two archbishops who preceded him, they seized him, and they made him archbishop on the throne of Saint MARK, apostle and evangelist. In administering his see he followed the Divine path, and he was well-pleasing unto God, and he protected his people in the keeping of the Law of the Right Faith. During the days of his rule the Church was quiet and at peace. And this father fell sick of a grievous disease in his foot, and he entreated God to give him rest from the pain thereof; he only remained in his office for five months and a half, and he died in peace.

And on this day the new Saint GEORGE became a martyr. And on this day also are commemorated NINEVEH and its people and its tribes, and MACARIUS, and THEOPHILUS, and EUMARÂ, and GREGORY, bishop of Armenia, and Saint THEODORA, the daughter of the Emperor ARCADIUS, the son of THEODOSIUS the Great.

IV. Ṭĕḳĕmt

[fol. 33*a* 1] IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day Saint BACCHUS and his companion Saint SERGIUS became martyrs by the hands of the wicked ANTIOCHUS [governor of Syria]. Now this took place when the Emperor MAXIMIANUS seized these saints, and tortured them with severe tortures after he had cast off their belts, for they were soldiers. After this he sent them to the country of Syria, to ANTIOCHUS the governor, who shut Saint BACCHUS and Saint SERGIUS up in prison. And he commanded his soldiers to hang him up and to hack him with knives, and to hang stones about his neck, and to cast him into the River Euphrates; and they did to him according as the king commanded. And God [fol. 33*a* 2] protected the body of Saint BACCHUS, and brought it [through] the sea to the coast. And there were near him two anchorites and ascetics, the name of the one being MÂMÂ, and that of the other BÂBÂ, and unto those brethren the angel of the Lord appeared and commanded them to go and carry away the body of Saint BACCHUS. And they went according as the angel of the Lord commanded them, and they found the body of Saint BACCHUS, and by the side of it were a lion and wolves protecting it. And [these animals] which were wont to eat only the flesh of men and animals had sat by it for one day and one night, and they had been commanded by God Most High to protect the body of Saint BACCHUS. And these holy men took up the body of the saint with great honour, and they sang hymns before it until they came to their cave where they buried it.

Salutation to BACCHUS, and BÂBÂ, and MÂMÂ.

And on this day Saint ANANIAS, the preacher, one of the two and seventy disciples, became [a martyr]. This holy man was Bishop of Damascus, and it was he who baptized the Apostle PAUL, our Lord having appeared to him on the road to Damascus, and it was he whom the Apostles appointed bishop, and who was sent by them to the city of Damascus. He had at first dwelt and preached [fol. 33*a* 3] in the house of GABRIEL. And he healed very many sick people, and converted many to the Faith of our Lord Jesus Christ. After he had baptized PAUL the apostle LUCIANUS the governor seized him and flogged him with leather whips until his blood flowed down to the ground. And they beat his temples with iron rods, and they burnt his breast with torches of fire. After this they took him outside the city, and the governor ordered his soldiers to stone him, and they stoned him, and he delivered up his soul into the hand of God.

And on this day also are commemorated the righteous saints ROMANUS, and GABRA KRĔSTÔS, and JOHN the eunuch, and the consecration of the church of SĔNḤÂR.

Salutation to GABRA KRĔSTÔS.

And on this day also is commemorated the death of the kings 'ABRĔHÂ and 'AṢBĔḤA who reigned together over 'AKSÛM in Ethiopia. [fol. 33*b* 1] Salutation to the same.

V. Ṭĕḳĕmt

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died the holy father Abbâ PAUL, Archbishop of Constantinople. This holy man was a disciple of Abbâ ALEXANDER, Archbishop of Constantinople, his predecessor, and when Abbâ ALEXANDER died this father was appointed in his stead. When he had taken his seat on the archiepiscopal throne, he excommunicated the Arians and expelled them from Constantinople and from the whole district. When the Emperor CONSTANTINE died, his son CONSTANTINE reigned over Constantinople, and his brother reigned over the city of Rome; now this CONSTANTINE loved ARIUS, and he believed his polluted belief. When the emperor heard that Saint Abbâ PAUL had excommunicated the Arians, and had exiled them from the city of Constantinople, he was exceedingly sorry, and he said unto Saint PAUL, "Henceforward let the Arians alone, and excommunicate them not." And the archbishop did not obey his words, and therefore CONSTANTINE was wroth with him, and he exiled him from the city of Alexandria (sic), just as he had exiled Abbâ ATHANASIUS from the city of Alexandria before him. And the two archbishops PAUL and ATHANASIUS foregathered in the city of Rômê with [fol. 33*b* 2] Saint Abbâ JULIUS, the Archbishop of the city of Rômê, who accorded them a splendid and a loving reception. And he wrote for them a letter to the Emperor CONSTANTINE, and he said concerning them, "They are learned, and righteous and orthodox men, and it is meet for thee to receive them and to honour them." When the Archbishops Abbâ PAUL and Abbâ ATHANASIUS had arrived in the city of Constantinople, and the emperor had read the letter of the Archbishop of the city of Rômê, he was afraid of them, and he received them and placed them in their offices, and waited to deal with them for a few days, and after this he exiled them. And they returned to the city of Rômê, to the Archbishop Abbâ JULIUS, and they told him how CONSTANTINE had treated them, and how he had exiled them a second time. And JULIUS took them and brought them to the Emperor ḲUĔNSĔṬÂ (CONSTANS), the brother of CONSTANTINE, and told him how his brother had treated them. And ḲUĔNSĔṬÂ (CONSTANS) wrote a letter to his brother, and commanded him to receive them, and he said unto him, "If thou dost not receive them there will be no peace betwixt thee and me, henceforward." And the archbishop also wrote unto him a second letter, and CONSTANTINE accepted the letter of his brother ḲUĔNSĔṬÂ (CONSTANS) and the letter of the archbishop, and he set the two archbishops in their offices. When certain men slew the Emperor ḲUĔNSĔṬÂ (CONSTANS) in the city of Rômê, his brother CONSTANTINE turned, and he exiled Saint PAUL to the country of Armenia, and shut him up in prison there for a few days. Then the Emperor CONSTANTINE sent a letter to one of the followers [fol. 33*b* 3] of ARIUS, and he said unto him, "Kill PAUL in the prison house." And that man who was an infidel came to the holy man by night, and strangled him, and he died in peace; and all the days of his life were forty years.

And on this day died Saint CYRIACUS the martyr and ḤANNAH his mother; now he was condemned to death by ELIANUS (the Emperor JULIAN according to the Bodleian MS.) because he was a bishop. When he confessed Christ ELIANUS commanded his soldiers to cut off his right hand, saying, "This is thy hand wherewith thou writest, and wherewith thou dost prevent men from worshipping idols"; and Saint CYRIACUS said, "Thou hast done well, O thou dog lacking understanding." When ELIANUS heard this he commanded his soldiers to boil some lead and to pour it into his mouth, and he made them lay him upon a red-hot iron bed. And they strewed over him red-hot burning coals, and they rubbed salted fat into him, and they beat his belly and his back with rods until his bones broke. And the righteous man endured these tortures patiently, and he prayed in the Hebrew tongue, saying. [Here follows a transcript into Ethiopic letters of fifteen words in which the saint beseeches ADÔNÂI, the God of Death, to keep death from him.] Then ELIANUS commanded them to release him, and he lay him down in the prison house. And ELIANUS made them bring [ḤANNAH] the mother of CYRIACUS, and he commanded them to suspend her by her hair, and to scrape her with shards for three hours. And he also commanded them to burn [fol. 34*a* 1] her body with fiery torches, and whilst praying she delivered up her soul. Then ELIANUS commanded them to bring Saint CYRIACUS, and to cast him into a large pit wherein were serpents and vipers, but none of them injured him. And when 'ADMÔN (ADMONIUS), whom ḤANNAH had saved for Christ, saw this he cursed the king and reviled his gods; and forthwith ELIANUS commanded them to cut off his head with the sword. And the holy man stretched out his neck, saying, "O God of CYRIACUS, receive my soul"; and he finished his martyrdom. And ELIANUS commanded his soldiers to cast Saint CYRIACUS into a vessel of boiling oil, and he also commanded them to drive a spear through his breast, and thus he ended his testimony and died in peace on the day of the Sabbath.

Salutation to CYRIACUS, who informed the Empress HELENA concerning the place where the Cross was to be found; the knowledge of this place he had obtained from his father.

Salutation to ḤANNAH the martyr, and salutation to 'ADMÔN (ADMONIUS).

And on this day are commemorated JAMES the apostle, the son of ALPHAEUS, and 'ADRÂWÔS, and 'AWÂRÂS, and 'ALDRÂKWÔS the martyrs, and 'ENDRÔNÔS ('ADRÔNÔS ?).

VI. ṬĔḴĔMT

[fol. 34*a* 2] IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died the holy and righteous woman ḤANNAH, the prophetess, the mother of SAMUEL the prophet. This holy woman was of the tribe of LEVI, and ELKANAH, the son of TARḤEM (JEROHAM) married her, now he had another wife whose name was PĔNÂNÂ (PENINNAH), but ḤANNAH could not bear children because she was barren. And PENINNAH was always reviling ḤANNAH because of her failure to have children, and because she was barren. And ḤANNAH wept and would neither eat nor drink, and ELKANAH her husband tried to comfort her, but she would not receive comfort from him. And she went up into the house of God in the days of ELI the priest, and prayed and wept before God, and vowed a vow to God, saying, "O God, if Thou wilt give me a son, I will dedicate him to Thee." And ELI the priest was watching her as she stood praying, and making supplication silently, for she was praying in her heart; and ELI the priest thought that she was drunk with wine, and he was wroth with her, and he rebuked her and said unto her, "Why dost thou drink wine, and come hither to the house of God?" And she said unto him, "I have not been drinking wine at all, I am suffering, but in my heart, because I have no son." And ELI the priest comforted her, and blessed her, saying, "Go in peace; the God of Israel shall grant thee thy petition"; and she believed his word, and she went to her husband, and she conceived and brought forth a son, and she called his name "SAMUEL," which is, being interpreted, [fol. 34*a* 3] "God hath heard me." And when she had taken him from the breasts, she took him up to the house of the Lord, even as she had vowed, and she brought him to ELI the priest, and made him to know that she was the woman who had prayed to God and entreated Him to give her a son. And she said, "Behold, God hath heard my petition and hath given me this son; and behold, I have brought him to God so that he may minister in His house all the days of his life." Then she praised God in that well-known hymn of praise, which is the third of the hymns that are written at the end of the Psalms of DAVID the prophet. And she lived after this and was well-pleasing unto God, and she died in peace.

Salutation to ḤANNAH.

And on this day died Saint Abbâ PANTALEON of the cell. This holy man was the son of noble folk, who were among the great ones of Rômê, and who sat on the right hand of the emperor. When his mother had weaned him she took him to a monastery where he grew up in wisdom and exhortation, and fasting and prayer. Then he travelled to the country of Ethiopia with Nine Saints in the days of 'AL'ÂMÊDÂ the king, the son of SAL'ÂDÂB the king, and they lived in BÊT ḴAṬÎN. Then they separated, and Abbâ PANTALEON went up to the top of a [fol. 34*b* 1] little mountain, and he made himself a cell which was five cubits long, and two cubits wide, and three cubits deep; its roof was a single stone, and it had no door, but only a small opening. And he stood on his feet for a period of five and forty years, without sitting down, and without lying down to sleep. He ate and drank so little that his skin cleaved to his bones, and his eyelashes were worn away by his tears. And he continued to work innumerable miracles in healing the sick and in opening the eyes of the blind. One day he planted a tree at dawn and by the time the evening came it had grown very tall, and had dried up, and his disciple had prepared (?) it and burned it, and tied up the charcoal in his garment and taken it for the censer. When KÂLÊB was going forth to wage war against another king, he came to Abbâ PANTALEON and embraced his cell, and told him his trouble. And Abbâ PANTALEON said, "Go in peace, for God is able to do all things, and He shall give thee victory over thy enemy"; and to return safely and in peace. When KÂLÊB the king had come to the country of SÂBÂ, he made war on the people thereof, and he slew them all and conquered them, and there were not left any who were not scattered like leaves. And all those who saw Saint Abbâ PANTALEON testified concerning him, saying, "We saw Abbâ PANTALEON standing with us in the battle, and he was overthrowing our enemies." When KÂLÊB the king returned, having conquered the King of Judah, he forsook his kingdom, and became a monk with PANTALEON. When Saint Abbâ PANTALEON had finished his strife, our Lord Jesus Christ came to him and made a covenant with him concerning him that should call upon his name, [fol. 34*b* 2] and celebrate his commemoration, and write an account of his contending; and He said unto him, "It is now sufficient for thee; go to thy rest." And straightway his bones broke and he died in peace and was buried in his cell.

Salutation to PANTALEON as the perfect man.

Salutation, twofold, to PANTALEON who caused the death of 5050 warriors in the battle.

Salutation to PANTALEON in his cell.

And on this day also the saints RĔWÂḲ and ANTONIUS, Bishop of BÂNÂ, became martyrs. Salutation to the same.

And on this day also is commemorated HABAKKUK the prophet, the interpretation of which name is "Teacher." This holy man was of the tribe of SIMEON. JOSEPH begat YÔSÂFEṬ. He saw [fol. 34*b* 3] and prophesied before the Captivity that the King of Babylon and his soldiers would surround Jerusalem and destroy the Temple; and he wept much and groaned greatly because thereof. When NEBUCHADNEZZAR the King of Babylon came to Jerusalem and besieged it, this righteous man fled to the country of MĔSṬÎRÂKÎNÂ, and he departed seeking for the land of ISHMAEL. And when the captives returned from the city of the Chaldeans, that is to say, those who had gone thither from the city of Jerusalem and from Egypt, this righteous man was living in his own habitation, and was ministering unto those who were gathering in the harvest from the fields. When he had taken food to carry to the reapers, he spake unto the men of his house, saying, "I am obliged to go to a city which is afar, but I will return speedily. If I tarry, take some food for the reapers and carry it to them." And as he was going along having with him the food which he was to carry to the reapers, straightway the angel of God seized him by the hair of his head, whilst the food was still with him, and brought him to the cave of the city of Babylon wherein DANIEL the prophet lived, now he was lying down before the lions, and HABAKKUK brought the food to him and he ate. Then the angel took him by his hand and brought him back to the land of Israel, and straightway he stood up by the side of the reapers who were still eating their meal. And he never told any man what had happened to him. He thought that the people would return speedily from the city of Babylon, but he died and was buried in the tomb of his fathers many years before the return of the people. This prophet prophesied to the men of the country of Judah, saying, "Ye will most certainly see the Gentiles despoiling the sanctuary," and it came to pass even as he said. And he also prophesied and said unto them, "Ye shall afterwards see the glory of God." And he also prophesied and said, "The sanctuary shall be rooted up, and shall be given unto an alien people." [fol. 35*a* 1] And he said, "The covenant of the altar shall be rent and shall be split up into small fragments, and the top of two pillars shall be carried away, and none shall know whither they have gone. And the angel must take them into the place wherein is planted the wood of the Cross of their Lord, so that God may be known in the desert, and He shall judge those who war against them, the Serpent of olden time." And everything has been fulfilled even as he prophesied. [See Habakkuk ii, iii.]

And on this day also Saint DIONYSIUS, Bishop of the city of Athens, became a martyr. This holy man was a native of Athens, and he excelled all the men thereof in honour (or glory), and in understanding, and in wisdom, and in learning; now he was one of the counsellors in the Council of learned judges in the city of Athens. PAUL the apostle taught him, and baptized him with Christian baptism, and made him Bishop of the city of Athens. And he composed many discourses, and among these was one for the eve of the Sabbath (Friday) which treated of the Crucifixion of our Lord Jesus Christ. One day this holy man [fol. 35*a* 2] was sitting in the House of Wisdom of the city of Athens (now it was the day whereon the learned were to hold a meeting therein), and he was sitting upon the throne of state, for he was the chief of all the wise men, and the other wise men were assembling, and at the moment of noon the sun became dark, and the earth quaked, and all the people were terrified and feared greatly. And they asked Saint DIONYSIUS and said unto him, "Master, make us to know what hath happened in the world." And he took up a book about the world of nature, and he looked at the balance in his mind and understanding, and he enquired concerning the rising of the sun, and the moon, and the stars, and he found that they were all in a settled state, and that they had not moved from their courses. Similarly he looked at the great sea and saw that it was surrounding all the ends of the world, and he found that it too was in a state of peace and quietness. Then he took up an astrolabe and looked into it, and behold God, 'EL-MAKNÛN, that is to say, the "Hidden," the Creator of the heavens and the earth, came down from the heavens upon earth. And His own people rose up against Him, and crucified Him. And straightway he rent his garments and sorrowed with a great sorrow. And the councillors and the wise and learned noblemen asked him to reveal unto them what had appeared unto him in respect of the darkness which had taken place at noon, and concerning the earthquake; and he told them everything which had taken place; and when they heard this they feared with a great fear. And he commanded his disciple JOSEPHUS to write down everything which had happened during that hour, and the name of that day, and the name of that month, and the name of that year; and JOSEPHUS wrote down everything which happened according to the command of DIONYSIUS. And he also wrote upon all the gates of their idols [fol. 35*a* 3] which were in their houses, "God 'EL-MAKNÛN, that is to say, the 'Hidden,' hath come down from heaven." After fourteen years the Apostle PAUL came to the city of Athens, and he preached therein, by the help of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of the Living God—blessed be His Name! [And he preached how He came down] from heaven, and His Incarnation by our Lady Saint MARY the Virgin, and His Passion, and His Crucifixion, and His Resurrection, and His Ascension into heaven, and His second coming to judge the living and the dead. When the men of Athens heard the preaching of Saint PAUL the apostle, they marvelled exceedingly and they ran and told Saint DIONYSIUS about it. And they said unto him, "A certain man came into our city this day, and preached unto us a new god whom we do not know, and whom our fathers before us did not know." And DIONYSIUS sent a messenger who brought the Apostle PAUL to him, and he said unto him, "Who is this new god whom thou hast preached in our city?" And the Apostle PAUL answered and said unto him, "Whilst I was passing through the open spaces of your city I found written upon the doors of the houses of your idols the words, 'God 'EL-MAKNÛN,' that is to say, the 'Hidden God,' hath come down from heaven; this is He of Whom I have preached unto you." And straightway Saint DIONYSIUS commanded his disciple [JOSEPHUS] to bring unto him that document which he had written fourteen years ago; and he brought it to him. And DIONYSIUS asked the Apostle PAUL, saying, "When was the sign of Him Whom thou preachest [made known]?" And Saint PAUL the apostle answered and said unto him, "On Friday, in the month of Adâr, which is the seventeenth [fol. 35*b* 1] day of the month Magâbît (Mar. 7–April 5), at noon, our Lord Jesus Christ was killed, and the sun became dark, and the earth quaked at that moment." When they heard this they all believed on our Lord Jesus Christ, and they bowed down at the feet of the Apostle PAUL, and he baptized them with Christian baptism, and he made Saint DIONYSIUS bishop over them. Now this Saint DIONYSIUS is he who translated the Ordinances of the Church. After this he went to the borders of the West (Morocco?) in the days of the Apostles, and he performed many signs and wonders. And the Emperor DOMITIAN, the infidel, seized him and inflicted severe tortures upon him, and then he cut off his holy head with the sword; and DIONYSIUS received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of heaven. After they had cut off his head he walked two stadia holding his head in his hands. And the emperor DOMITIAN also cut off the heads of JOSEPHUS and URIANUS, the disciples of Saint DIONYSIUS.

Salutation to DIONYSIUS, the friend of 'ĔNṬÔNÂ (ANTONIUS), Bishop of the city of BÂNÂ.

Salutation to JOSEPHUS and URIANUS.

[fol. 35*b* 2] On this day also 'ĔNṬÔNÂ (ANTONIUS), Bishop of the city of BÂNÂ, became a martyr. [This paragraph is wanting in the Bodleian MS.]

And on this day also is commemorated ENOS, the son of SETH, who was the first to call upon God. He lived 190 years and begat CAINAN; and all the days of his life were 620 years, and he died at the beginning of the Sabbath. [This paragraph is wanting in the Bodleian MS.]

Salutation to HERMOLAUS the priest, and to his brother HERACLETUS, and [to his brother] RÔMÊ (?) the bishop, and to PANTALEON who, when he prayed whilst the king was cutting off their heads, caused an earthquake.

Salutation to father BAṢALÔTÂ MÎKÂ'ÊL, the blood of whose body was found to be liquid when it was translated to a second tomb.

VII. Ṭĕḳĕmt

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died the holy father Abbâ BÂWLÂ (PAWLÎ) of the city of ṬAMAW. This holy man became a monk and a fighter in his early years, and he dwelt in DABRA 'ĔNṢĔNÂ [near ASNÂ] in Upper Egypt, and his disciple EZEKIEL was with him, and this man became a witness to the excellences of his master, and to his ascetic combats. This holy man Abbâ BÂWLÂ (PAWLÎ) contended strenuously [fol. 35*b* 3] because of his love for Christ, and he killed himself seven times. The first time he hung himself upon a tree head downwards, and he remained hanging there for forty days and forty nights until his blood flowed from his nose, and he yielded up his soul. And God raised him up from death by His power. [The second time] he cast himself into the waves of the sea, thinking that the large fish and the tiger-fish would assuredly devour him. Now the tiger-fish would not touch him at all, and he remained submerged in the water for many years and he died. And our Lord Jesus Christ raised him up from the dead a second time. The third time he cast himself into the sand and died, and our Lord raised him up. The fourth time he threw himself down from the top of a high hill and rolled down it, and the side of the hill was covered with stones as sharp as knives, and they pierced his temples and every part of his body, and he died straightway; and EZEKIEL his disciple wept over him, and our Lord Jesus Christ came and comforted him. The fifth time he threw himself from the top of a high tree on to a large stone which was as sharp as a sword, and he was split up into two pieces and died; and the Lord raised him up [again]. The sixth time he tied his head to his feet and he remained in this position for forty days and forty nights, and died; and the Lord sent unto him an angel who raised him up and comforted him. In this manner this holy man tortured himself six times and died six times, and each time he died our Lord raised him up. The seventh time he stretched out his legs over a [fol. 36*a* 1] deep well, and stood there for forty days and forty nights and died there. And our Lord Jesus Christ appeared unto him, and raised him up from the dead, and strengthened him, and said unto him, "O my beloved BÂWLÂ (PAWLÎ), hast thou not toiled enough and killed thyself often enough?" And BÂWLÂ (PAWLÎ) said unto Him, "Leave me, O my Lord, to toil for Thy holy name's sake, even as Thou Thyself hast toiled for the race of the children of men. Thou art God, and the Son of God, and Thou didst die for our sins; as for us we are not worthy that Thou shouldst toil for us"; and our Lord comforted him, and strengthened him, and went up into heaven. When the holy father Abbâ BĔSÔY went to DABRA 'ĔNṢĔNÂ, he met Abbâ BÂWLÂ (PAWLÎ). And our Lord Jesus Christ appeared unto BÂWLÎ (sic) (PAWLÎ) and said unto him, "Thy body shall be with the body of Abbâ BĔSÔY"; and when Saint Abbâ BÂWLÂ (PAWLÎ) died, they placed his body with that of Abbâ BĔSÔY, even as our Lord Jesus Christ had told him. When they wanted to carry the body of Saint Abbâ BĔSÔY to DABRA SCETE, that is to say DABRA ABBÂ MACARIUS, they took the body and laid it in a ship, and left behind the body of Abbâ BÂWLÎ (PAWLÎ). And the ship stood still and would not move, but when they took the body of Abbâ BÂWLÎ (PAWLÎ) and laid it with that of Abbâ BĔSÔY in the ship, straightway the ship moved and brought them to DABRA SCETE, where the body of Saint BÂWLÎ (PAWLÎ) and the body of Abbâ BĔSÔY remain until this day in the Church of Abbâ [fol. 36*a* 2] BĔSÔY.

And on this day also MÎNÂS, and ḤASÎNÂ [and CYPRIAN, and JUSTINA] became martyrs.

VIII. ṬĔḴĔMT

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day Saint METṚÂ the old man became a martyr, and many others were martyred with him. This saint was a native of Alexandria, and he was a believing Christian. When DECIUS the infidel reigned he established the worship of idols, and afflicted all Christian people, and his Edict came to the city of Alexandria, and he afflicted all the people thereof and poured out their blood. And Saint METṚÂ was accused of being a Christian before the governor, and the governor had Saint METṚÂ brought before him, and he held the matter to be serious. And Saint METṚÂ confessed our Lord Jesus Christ, and proclaimed that He was God, in truth, and that He proceeded from the True God. And the governor said unto him, "Worship [fol. 36*a* 3] the gods and the idols, and I will give thee much money"; and Saint METṚÂ did not trust his promise greatly, and he said unto him, "May thy promise and thy money go with thee into Sheol!" And the governor was wroth with him, and he said unto him, "I will punish thee with great severity"; but the saint was not afraid of his tortures, and he did not turn from his good counsel. On the contrary he said unto him, "I worship my Lord Jesus Christ, the Creator of the heavens and the earth, and how could it be right for me to forsake Him and to worship idols which are made of stones and woods? They see not, and hear not, and smell not, and walk not." And the governor was wroth with him, and he commanded his soldiers to beat him very severely. Then he hung him up by his arms, and the soldiers slit his face and his temples with dry reeds, but our Lord Jesus Christ healed his wounds, and raised him up whole and unharmed. When the governor was tired of torturing him he commanded his soldiers to cut off his head, and they cut off his head with a sword outside the city, and he received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of heaven; and many people suffered martyrdom at the same time. Salutation to METṚÂ.

And on this day Saint BACCHUS and Saint PELAGIA became martyrs.

[fol. 36*b* 1] And on this day also is commemorated Abbâ ḤÔR the martyr.

And on this day also are commemorated Abbâ BÛLÂ, and SUSANNAH, and her children the martyrs in the city of ṢĔMWÂḤ, and Saint AGATHON the anchorite. Salutation to the brothers of SUSANNAH, and to ḤÔR, and to AGATHON.

IX. ṬĔḴĔMT

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died the holy father Abbâ LÎWÂRYÔS (LIBERIUS), Archbishop of the city of Rômê. This holy man was righteous, and excellent, and pure, and a monk from his earliest years, and he grew old in the Ordinances of the Church, in which he was learned; and he fulfilled all the Law and Doctrines of the Church. And the people chose him and appointed him Archbishop of the city of Rômê, [and he sat] on the throne of PETER the apostle. And having sat on the throne of PETER the apostle, the chief of the Apostles, he followed a righteous course and was well-pleasing unto God, the Most High. And he taught the people at all times, and he admonished those who transgressed the commandments of God, and turned them into [fol. 36*b* 2] the way of God. When CONSTANTINE the Less was dead the wicked JULIAN reigned after him, and this wicked JULIAN denied Christ and afflicted the Christian people. And he promised (i.e. threatened) Saint BASIL, saying, "I am going to lay waste the churches of the Christians and destroy them," but God destroyed JULIAN the infidel through the prayer of Saint BASIL. It was then that God sent the honourable Saint MERCURIUS, the martyr, and he destroyed that serpent. Now Saint BASIL stood before a picture of Saint MERCURIUS, and he said unto him, "This infidel told me that he would destroy the churches, therefore I beseech thee to kill him in the war"; and Saint MERCURIUS in the picture nodded his head as if to say, "Yea, [I will]." This JULIAN the infidel was the son of the sister of his father CONSTANTINE, and he opened the temples of the idols and afflicted the Christian people, and tortured very many of them. And this Saint LÎWÂRYÔS (LIBERIUS) came from the city of Rômê to the city of Caesarea, and he visited Saint BASIL, and the two agreed together to go to the city of Antioch, and they visited JULIAN the infidel and turned him from his apostasy and error. Now these two men had known him from their youth, when they were fellow-learners in school with him; and they rose up and journeyed and arrived in the city of Antioch where the Emperor JULIAN was. And having stood up before him they wanted to speak to him [fol. 36*b* 3] and to turn him from his error. And he said unto them, in mockery of our Lord Jesus Christ, "Where did ye leave the son of the carpenter?" And Saint BASIL answered and said unto him, "We left Him making a coffin for thee, and when thou art dead they will bury thee therein in hell." And JULIAN was wroth with them, and he commanded his soldiers to shut them up in prison; and they shut Saint BASIL and Saint LÎWÂRYÔS (LIBERIUS) up in prison. And Saint LÎWÂRYÔS (LIBERIUS) saw a vision in his sleep, and in it he was in prison, and Saint MERCURIUS said unto him, "Verily I will not permit this infidel to utter blasphemies against my God." And Saint LÎWÂRYÔS (LIBERIUS) woke from his sleep and told Saint BASIL of the vision which he had seen; and Saint BASIL had also seen the same vision. Afterwards came the news of the killing of JULIAN the infidel, and after him WÔMÂNYÔS (JOVIANUS?) reigned, and he believed on our Lord Jesus Christ. And he brought the saints out of prison, and they departed, each of them, to his see. Now it was Saint MERCURIUS who killed JULIAN the infidel at the entreaty of Saint BASIL. And Saint LÎWÂRYÔS (LIBERIUS) departed to the city of Rômê, and he debated fiercely with the followers of ARIUS, and he excommunicated them and exiled them from his see. And he followed a righteous course, and was well-pleasing unto God, and he died in peace, after ruling his see for six years. Salutation to LÎWÂRYÔS (LIBERIUS).

[fol. 37*a* 1] And on this day died Abbâ ATHANASIUS, Archbishop of Antioch. This [holy man] was a monk, an anchorite, and one who served the Lord his God strenuously, and he was sincere and humble and perfect in all good works. And all the bishops came to him to make him archbishop, and they sent to the MAPHRIAN (i.e. the head of the Jacobite Church), the Bishop of the city of SELEUCIA, saying, "Behold, our father the archbishop, Abbâ MICHAEL, is dead, come quickly and speedily so that we may appoint an archbishop. We have chosen a righteous man who is suitable for this holy office, and we are all waiting for thee, for there is none save thee who can appoint him, according to the Ordinances of our Fathers." And having waited for the arrival of the MAPHRIAN, the bishop, now they had waited for a period of fifty days, they appointed Abbâ ATHANASIUS, and they departed each to his seat. And the MAPHRIAN came according as the bishops sent to him, and when he arrived at the city of 'ÂMID (DIARBAKR) on the frontiers of Syria, he met the bishops of Antioch, and they told him that having waited for his arrival [fifty days] they had appointed an archbishop. When the MAPHRIAN heard this he was exceedingly wroth and said, "Is it thus that ye violate the law which is between us and you?" Having thus said he anathematized everyone who should mention the name of Abbâ ATHANASIUS, whether at the service of the Offering or at the beginning of incense; having thus spoken he returned to his city. When ATHANASIUS heard this thing he was exceedingly sorry, and he said unto his disciple, "O my son, [fol. 37*a* 2] be obedient unto me, and do what I say unto thee so that my soul may be blessed, I am going afar off for one year, and if my people seek for me tell them, 'He is in his cell'; and do thou command them with my voice, bind and loose"; and his disciple said unto him, "I will." And Abbâ ATHANASIUS arrayed himself in poor raiment, and he travelled on foot until he came to the city of SELEUCIA, and he knocked at the gates of the bishop, and the gate-keeper said unto him, "What dost thou want?" And ATHANASIUS said unto him, "I wish to receive the blessing of my father the bishop." When the gate-keeper had told the bishop he brought in Abbâ ATHANASIUS, and the bishop said unto him, "Whence art thou?" And he said unto him, "I have come from the country of Syria, lacking daily bread and raiment, so that I may die under the shadow of thy prayer." And the bishop said unto him, "Art thou a priest or a deacon?" And he said, "Neither." Then the bishop called the steward and commanded him to place him with the monks. And Abbâ ATHANASIUS performed every kind of household work, even to the drawing of water, and the carrying away of the dung of the horses and the mules, and the lighting of the fire, and rising very early in the morning and baking the bread, and there was no kind of work for the brethren which he did not perform. When he had finished the work in the bishop's house he used to go to the houses of the monks, and draw water for them, and light fires, and clean the houses, and at length the brethren loved him dearly and regarded him as a heavenly angel, and then they entreated the bishop to make him a deacon. And on the first day of the week the bishop went into the church and called Abbâ ATHANASIUS in order that he might appoint him a deacon, but ATHANASIUS wept bitterly and said unto him, "Leave me, Father, I am a poor man, and I am not fit for this grade." When the bishop seized him with vigour, ATHANASIUS said unto him, "Forgive me, Father, for I am a deacon, but [fol. 37*a* 3] on account of my many sins I have abandoned ministration." When the bishop heard this he marvelled at his patient endurance; and for six months ATHANASIUS continued to perform the duties of a deacon. When the bishop saw his great intelligence (or knowledge) he wished to appoint him to the work of a priest. And the first day of the week the bishop came into the church, and he called ATHANASIUS and said unto him, "The Holy Ghost hath called thee this day; I am going to appoint thee a priest." When Abbâ ATHANASIUS heard him, he fell down at the feet of the Father in tears, and he entreated him to let him alone. When he knew that the bishop would not excuse him, he said unto him, "Have mercy upon me; I am a priest." When the father and the monks heard this they rejoiced in him and honoured him exceedingly. When the bishop saw the wisdom of his words and the zealousness of his ministration, he wished to make him bishop of a city the bishop whereof was dead. And he summoned the archbishops, and the bishops, and the priests, and the deacons, and the monks, in order that they might appoint him on the first day of the week. And he called Abbâ ATHANASIUS and said unto him, "This day God hath called thee to the grade of the episcopate of such and such a see." And when ATHANASIUS knew that he would not excuse him, he wept bitterly and told them that he was ATHANASIUS Archbishop of Antioch, and he related to them the history of his coming in secret. When the father heard these words from him he put off his crown and fell down upon the earth and became as one dead for a long time. Having raised himself up, he cried out to the bishops and the people, and said unto them, "O my brethren, tell me what I shall do, for at this moment I am afraid that fire will come down from heaven and consume me, and that the [fol. 37*b* 1] earth will open her mouth and swallow me up. Is it a desirable thing that ATHANASIUS Archbishop of Antioch should serve for a whole year in drawing water and in clearing away the dung of horses like a slave?" When the bishops and the people heard these words they bowed low before him and kissed his hands and his feet. Then the bishop commanded the bishops to bring fine apparel of the priesthood, and the cross and the staff of the priesthood, and they seated him upon the throne, and the bishops carried him and his throne upon their shoulders, and they brought him into the church, and they carried him round about it thrice, saying, "Aksĕyôs, Aksĕyôs, Aksĕyôs," that is to say, "He is worthy, He is worthy, He is worthy." Then he put on the vestments for the consecration of the Offering, and he consecrated the Offering, and administered it to them and he blessed their city. How great was the joy of the Persians! And on the following day the father brought a mule, and everything which was necessary for the journey, and he mounted Abbâ ATHANASIUS upon it, and he departed to the city of Antioch with archbishop and bishops who travelled on foot. And Abbâ ATHANASIUS said unto the MAPHRIAN, "Do thou mount and let us travel together." And the MAPHRIAN said unto him, "Far be it from me, O Lord! Inasmuch as thou didst come on thy feet to my city I will go on my feet to thy city." When the Bishops of Antioch heard that the Archbishop Abbâ ATHANASIUS had arrived, they welcomed him and the MAPHRIAN, the Bishop of SELEUCIA, and they restored ATHANASIUS to his throne and they rejoiced with great joy. Then they set on their way the metropolitans and bishops, and they returned to their city in peace. And this father lived a beautiful life, and he tended his flock with righteousness and integrity, and he died in peace. Amen. Salutation to ATHANASIUS, [fol. 37*b* 2] Archbishop of Antioch.

And on this day also died STEPHEN protomartyr (sic), the son of NIKOMION and brother of BASILIDES. This blessed man STEPHEN belonged to an honourable family, and his parents were among the nobles of Antioch; they were exceedingly rich in gold, and silver, and glorious apparel, and their slaves and handmaidens were innumerable. And NIKOMION loved Christ exceedingly, and he gave alms to the poor and needy, and he was beloved by all men. And having begotten this holy man, he had him brought up carefully, and he taught him the Psalms of DAVID, and the Books of the Old and New Testaments, and finally he was filled with the knowledge of the Holy Ghost. He learned to ride the horse, to hurl the spear, and to draw the bow with VICTOR and CLAUDIUS in the house of Saint BASILIDES, whose brother's son he was, and because of this he was called the son of BASILIDES. All his kinsfolk were fearers of God, and they walked in all His commandments and judgements, and among them was none whose heart was not warmed by the flame of the love of Christ, and there was none who turned from His way either to the right hand or to the left. When God saw the strength of their love for Him, He wished to make them to inherit His kingdom and His righteousness, which He hath prepared for them before the world was created. Then Satan brought a man, a certain swineherd from the land of Egypt, and he belonged to men who occupy themselves with devices for war, and his name was 'AGRÎPÂDÂ, [fol. 37*b* 3] and from his earliest youth the spirit of Satan dwelt in him. When he came to Antioch they made him master of the horse, and when the King of Antioch died the throne was empty. One day when the daughter of the king was walking about on the roof of her house, she saw him leaping about with his horse whilst the musicians played music on their instruments. Thereupon she lusted for him, and she married him, and finally she caused him to be made king, and she called him DIOCLETIAN. And O what violence, and O what wickednesses were committed in his days after he had denied Christ! He worshipped idols and killed everyone who believed on Christ. He was an eater of the flesh of men, and a drinker of [human] blood, like the wild animals. He seized and scattered all the chosen people of the kingdom like rams who have no shepherd. Some of them were killed by means of stakes driven through them, and some of them he drove into exile, even to districts in Egypt, and they were fettered with iron chains, and gags were in their mouths. At length the whole country of Antioch was filled with weeping and lamentation, a man mourning for his wife, and a wife for her husband, a father mourning for his son or a son for his father, or brother for brother and friend for friend. At length the whole earth was filled with the blood of the saints, and their bodies were cast out into the streets of the city, and there was none to bury them except the watchmen of the city, to whom bribes had to be given secretly to bury them. And this Saint STEPHEN continued in prayer to God by day and by night that He would give him a crown of martyrdom. Now as a beginning to his iniquity DIOCLETIAN wrote an Edict which he sent into every part of his dominions, saying, "I DIOCLETIAN the Emperor, [fol. 38*a* 1] Lord of the World, hereby command that in every country of my dominions they close the churches, and open the houses of idols (i.e. temples), and worship my gods, for it is they who have given me victory in battle. Whosoever shall not worship them and bow down before them, his house shall be plundered and laid waste, and he shall be punished with every kind of punishment; none shall be spared, neither rich nor poor, nor great nor small." Then the emperor assembled all his soldiers and all the nobles of his kingdom, and he commanded that this Edict should be proclaimed before the multitude. When Saint STEPHEN had heard the foul Edict his whole body burned with the fire of zeal, and he accounted DIOCLETIAN as nothing, and poured out blasphemies upon him, and he was greatly moved in his spirit and said, "What is this new act of violence which thou hast made manifest, O king, in this city, by writing this unclean and accursed Edict of APOLLO (?)? For our Lord Jesus Christ shall defend everyone who believeth on Him." Then Saint STEPHEN waxed strong and bold and he leaped upon the soldier who had the filthy Edict in his hand, and tore it out of it, now the emperor and all his nobles were looking on at him, and STEPHEN tore the Edict in pieces. And the emperor said unto him, "O STEPHEN, what hast thou done? Dost thou wish to bring destruction upon thyself?" Then the emperor drew the sword which he had in his hand, and he hacked him down the middle, and he became two parts. And the head of Saint STEPHEN remained for a long time before the emperor, and it reviled him and told [fol. 38*a* 2] him what would come upon him in the later time, and how he would receive alms in the gates of Antioch, and how his eyes would be made wholly blind, and how after this he would be destroyed. And the head cried out with a loud voice and repeated the names of all the saints of the city of Antioch who became martyrs. And the story of the head of Saint STEPHEN was heard in all the cities of Antioch, and many multitudes of people gathered together to see the head which reviled the emperor and told him of his ruin. When the emperor saw that the head of the saint spoke of his destruction before the assembled multitude he was greatly ashamed, and he commanded his soldiers to take it away, and whilst they were doing so it continued to talk and would not be silent; and when they buried it in the earth it still uttered many words. And this head remained buried in the earth for three days, and all the people heard it talking to the emperor and reviling him, even as the head of JOHN the Baptist reviled HEROD in days of old; for HEROD and DIOCLETIAN were alike in nature and disposition. HEROD was led astray through fornication, and the drinking of wine, and at length he killed the Prophet JOHN greater than whom there was none born of woman. Through the murder of the righteous man he acquired disgrace, and as for his wife, the earth swallowed her up; her daughter perished and he himself bred worms in his body, and he putrefied and he died in shame, wishing to hide his fornication. The head of Saint JOHN reviled HEROD boldly, and the head of Saint STEPHEN reviled DIOCLETIAN, who was wishing to prove boldly the greatness of his idols and their gods, and proclaimed boldly that there were devils in his gods. And the head prophesied to him that his kingdom should be broken and his eyes blinded, [fol. 38*a* 3] and that he should receive alms in the gates of the city, and that he should die in disgrace. When DIOCLETIAN saw that the head of Saint STEPHEN would not keep silent, he ordered them to cast it into a lead box and to seal the mouth thereof, and to throw it into the sea by night; and by this act the martyrdom of Saint STEPHEN was finished. Then the angel of God came down from heaven, and brought out the box of lead and laid it on the sea-shore. Whilst his mother was searching for his body by the Will of God she came to the place where the box of lead was, and she took it from there and laid it up in her house until the days of persecution were passed; and she lighted a lamp at his grave which burned by day and by night. After the days of persecution were passed she built a fine church for him, and innumerable signs and miracles were wrought therein. Salutation to STEPHEN, the son of BASILIDES.

And on this day also, in the nine hundred and eighty-fifth year of the holy martyrs [(A.D. 1269) the Bodleian MS. has A.M. 388], in the reign of ÎYÔB KHÊR, and in the days when Abbâ CYRIL held office, a stupendous and marvellous thing happened in the world, which terrified those who beheld it, and those who heard thereof on that day. The sun became dark, and it became darker and darker until the day was like night, and the stars [fol. 38*b* 1] appeared, and men lighted lamps. And they feared with a great fear, and they cried out to God, and praised Him with all their hearts, and they begged for His compassion and mercy, which He promised them, and He multiplied His mercy on them. And He removed fear from them, and the light re-appeared, and the sun came forth according to its custom, and it lighted up the whole world, and men extinguished their lamps. And the period of the darkness of the sun was one hour, that is to say, from the half of the eighth hour to the half of the ninth. And additional praise must be given to God because He did not hasten to harm men for their sins, but He made haste to shew His compassion and longsuffering towards them; and praise be also to our Lord Jesus Christ for ever and ever. Amen.

And on this day also is commemorated Abbâ SIMEON the archbishop [or bishop].

And on this day also THOMAS [the apostle began] to work [like an artisan], and to preach in the country of India whereunto he went with 'ABNÊS the merchant. And 'ABNÊS went to salute GUENDEFÔR the king, and he told him concerning THOMAS the carpenter whom he had brought with him. And the king rejoiced and said unto him, "What is thy trade?" And the apostle said, "I am a carpenter and an architect. And I can make walls of houses, and beds, and scales, and wheels (carts?), and ships, and oars, and royal palaces." And the king rejoiced, and he took THOMAS to a place where he was going to build a palace, and he said unto him, "When wilt thou have builded [the house]?" And the apostle said, "After two months, [I will begin on] the new moon of the month Khĕdâr (Nov. 7–Dec. 6), and I will finish [fol. 38*b* 2] in the month Mîyâzyâ" (April 6–May 5). And the king marvelled and said unto him, "Every house is builded in the summer, then how can this house be builded in the winter?" Then the king gave him much money both for himself and for those who were to work with him, and having taken it, he gave it to the poor and needy, saying, "I give what belongs to a king to [another] king." Then the king sent his minister to the apostle to learn if the palace was finished, and the apostle said unto him, "Thy palace is finished, but there remaineth the roof to put on." And the king sent him money a second time, and he said unto him, "Finish quickly." Then when the king came and asked for the palace which THOMAS had built, the apostle said unto him, "No palace hath been built; there are only the alms given to the poor of thy goods." And the king was wroth, and he shut the apostle and the merchant up in prison until he could think out in what way he should kill them. That night GÂDÔN the king's brother fell sick and died, and the angels shewed him the palace which THOMAS had built for GUENDEFÔR his brother. He said unto them, "Who is this palace for?" And the angels said unto him, "This is for the king, and the Apostle THOMAS who is in the prison house hath built it for him." When his soul returned to him GÂDÔN told his brother this, and then they all vied with each other, and they went to the prison house and brought out the apostle and the merchant. And they believed on our Lord Christ, and were all baptized, both men and women, in the Name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Ghost, and they received His Holy Body and His Honourable Blood. Then THOMAS laid his hands upon them, and gave them the benediction, and departed from them.

[fol. 38*b* 3] Salutation to India and salutation to the Merciful One.

[On this day is commemorated DAVID King of Ethiopia, who was called the "fan of the wicked and the wall of adamant."]

X. ṬĔḴĔMT

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died the pure and holy virgin EUNOMIUS (EUMENIUS), who was the seventh Archbishop of the city of Alexandria from MARK the apostle. Saint ABREMIUS appointed this holy man deacon and he served the office of deacon for ten years. When JUSTUS was appointed archbishop and he saw the virtues of this holy man, and the orthodoxy of his faith, and his knowledge, he appointed him priest, and he commanded him to teach the believers of the holy church of Alexandria the Ordinances of the Church. When JUSTUS died this father was appointed archbishop, and he handed over the work of the churches and the teaching of the believers to Father MARCIANUS. And he debated continually with the wicked men and pagans, and he turned sinners from their errors, and shewed them plainly the Divinity of our Lord Jesus Christ, and he said unto them, "He is equal with His Father and with the Holy Spirit, One God." He continued in his office for thirteen years, and he died on the twentieth day of the month Ṭĕḳĕmt, in the sixth year of the [fol. 39*a* 1] reign of the Emperor ANTONIUS.

And in his days Saint SOPHIA and her three children became martyrs. Salutation to EUNOMIUS (EUMENIUS).

And on this day also SERGIUS, the companion of BACCHUS, became a martyr. This holy man was from SĔRGÂTIÂ, [and] from the palace of the Emperor MAXIMIANUS. And after the emperor had punished them he sent them to ANTIOCHUS, a governor in the country of Syria, and he tortured Saint BACCHUS, and he beat him so severely that he yielded up his spirit. And he commanded his soldiers to cast his body into the River Euphrates, but God protected it and brought it to the river bank. And God sent to it a lion and a wolf, and they protected it until God commanded certain saints who lived there, and they went and fetched the body of Saint BACCHUS and brought and laid it by them. And Saint SERGIUS sorrowed and wept because of it, and he saw a vision by night in which he seemed to see his brother BACCHUS in a beautiful palace, and he himself was shining brightly; and the soul of SERGIUS was comforted by reason of the vision which he had seen. And after this the governor commanded his soldiers to drive long iron pegs into the feet of Saint SERGIUS, and he sent him to the city of RÛṢÂFÂ in charge of horsemen, and he had to run by their side, and when they galloped his blood flowed down upon the ground. [fol. 39*a* 2] And he met on the road a certain woman who was a virgin, and he drank water from her, and she felt compassion for him, and she pitied his youth and his fine form. And he said unto her, "Come thou, follow me to the city of RÛṢÂFÂ so that thou mayest take my body"; and the virgin followed him to the city of RÛṢÂFÂ. And the governor commanded, saying, "If SERGIUS will not obey my command and offer up sacrifice to my gods, the soldiers shall cut off his head with the sword." And they cut off his head with the sword which was in the governor's hand. Now the governor did not wish them to cut off the head of Saint SERGIUS, because he was a friend of the holy man, and it was through him that he had obtained his office. And that virgin drew nigh to Saint SERGIUS having some hair cloth with her, and she received in it the precious blood which flowed from the neck of the saint. And she took care of his body until the end of the days of the persecution, and then they built a fine church in the city of RÛṢÂFÂ, and fifteen bishops consecrated it and they laid his body therein. And very many miracles and great wonders took place through it, and that church subsisteth to this day. And the body of Saint SERGIUS resteth in it, and there distilleth from it in the marble sarcophagus a perfumed oil the odour of which is exceedingly sweet, and it healeth people who are sick with any kind of sickness. Salutation to SERGIUS.

[fol. 39*a* 3] And on this day also died JOHN the priest, and fighter. When his head was shaved, because of his excessive righteousness, they did not soak (i.e. soften) it with water. His father was Abbâ GABRA NÂZRÂWÎ of ḲAWÂT. Salutation to JOHN the priest.

XI. ṬĔḴĔMT

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died the holy father, Abbâ JAMES, Archbishop of the city of Antioch. Great tribulation fell upon this holy man, and [the emperor] exiled him because of the orthodoxy of his faith, and he remained in exile many days. Then the men of the city of Antioch sent and brought him back, and he lived there for a few days; and then the men of ARIUS drove him forth again, and he remained during the second period of exile seven years; and he died in peace. Salutation to JAMES, the Lamp of Antioch.

[fol. 39*b* 1] And on this day also died Saint PELAGIA. This holy woman was a native of the city of Antioch, and her parents were infidels, and together with a corrupt faith she acquired a corrupt manner of life; and this fell out thus. She used to live in a playhouse, and she played a tambourine and sang and danced, and laughed and joked, and amused the people. And a certain holy man, a bishop whose name was PAUL, found her, and he rebuked her, and reminded her of the fire of GAHÂNAM (GEHENNA) and everlasting punishment. And his reproof entered her heart and she believed on our Lord Christ through him, and she confessed to him everything which she had done, and he encouraged her, and taught her not to despair through repentance, and the mercy of God. Then he baptized her with Christian baptism in the Name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit, and she was illumined by the grace of the Holy Spirit by baptism. And she entered into penitence with a firm heart and a pure mind, and she made her body to endure toil and she brought it low; then she dressed herself in the garb of a man, and she went into Jerusalem, and worshipped in all the churches. And she returned to Abbâ ALEXANDER, Archbishop of the city of Jerusalem, and he sent her to one of the houses of virgins which are outside Jerusalem. And she dwelt therein, and she put on the garb of the nun, and she strove strenuously in the ascetic life for a period of forty years, and she was well-pleasing to God, and she died in peace.

Salutation to PELAGIA.

[fol. 39*b* 2] And on this day also took place the contending of 'ARMÂMÎ. [This paragraph is wanting in the Bodleian MS.]

XII. ṬĔḲĔMT

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day is celebrated the commemorative feast of the glorious angel, MICHAEL the archangel. On this day God sent MICHAEL to SAMUEL the prophet whilst he was in the sanctuary, and commanded him to go to the house of JESSE, the father of DAVID, in Bethlehem to anoint his son DAVID king over the children of Israel. And SAMUEL went to JESSE, and he said unto him, "Bring hither all thy sons"; and JESSE brought them [all] with the exception of DAVID, who was tending the sheep in the fields. When SAMUEL raised the horn of oil of kings over the heads of the sons of JESSE, [he saw that] God was not pleased with them. And SAMUEL said unto JESSE, "Doth there not remain unto thee some other son?" And JESSE said unto him, "There remaineth the youth, the youngest of them, who is herding the sheep in the fields." And SAMUEL said unto him, "Bring him hither"; and JESSE brought him. And straightway SAMUEL took up the horn of oil of kings, and anointed him, and God was pleased with him, and he reigned over the children of Israel. And on this day also God sent [fol. 39*b* 3] Saint MICHAEL the archangel to DAVID the prophet, and he helped him and gave him strength to slay GOLIATH, the giant of the Philistines, and deliver the children of Israel. For this reason the doctors of the Church have commanded and ordained that the people shall keep a festival in honour of Saint MICHAEL on the twenty-second day of this month. Salutation to Saint MICHAEL.

And on this day Saint MATTHEW the apostle and evangelist, one of the Twelve Apostles, became a martyr, after he had preached in the cities of the priests, and converted them to the knowledge of God. Now it happened that when he wished to go into the city of priests, he found a certain young man who said unto him, "Thou wilt not be able to go into this city unless thou shavest off the hair of thy head and thy beard, and carriest palm branches in thy hand." And he did even as the young man commanded him, and as he was sorrowing because of this, straightway our Lord Jesus Christ appeared unto him under a form which he knew, that is to say, the form of the young man who had spoken unto him; and He encouraged and consoled him and then disappeared from him. When Saint MATTHEW had entered into the city, he made himself unseen by the people, like one of the priests. And he went to the temple of APOLLO, and found the high priest, and talked with him [fol. 40*a* 1] concerning the gods, and Saint MATTHEW made him to know that they were not gods; and he wrought miracles and wonders before him, and light rose upon them, and a table came down to them from heaven. When HERMES the priest saw this wonderful thing he said unto Saint MATTHEW, "What is the name of your god?" And he said, "The Name of my God is Christ," and straightway HERMES the priest believed on our Lord Jesus Christ, and many people believed with him. When the king of this city heard this thing he commanded his soldiers to burn them in the fire. And at the moment the son of the king died, and Saint MATTHEW made supplication to our Lord Christ, and he raised the king's son from the dead; and straightway the king and all the men of the city believed. Then Saint MATTHEW appointed a bishop and priests over them, and he built a church for them, and he went forth from the city to the cities which were outside, and he converted them and brought them to the knowledge of God. Before this Saint THOMAS had been to the City of the Blessed, and he saw our Lord coming to them at all times, having with Him the souls of babes, which were in number eighteen thousand. And on the first day of every feast our Lord Christ cometh to them, and with Him are His angels. And these blessed ones are they to whom SÎMÂS the desert priest went, and he was witness of their strifes, and of their marvellous works. After this Saint [fol. 40*a* 2] MATTHEW the apostle and evangelist went to the city of Jerusalem, and the land of Judah, and he wrote his Gospel in the Hebrew language. Then he went to the city which is outside, and he found therein a certain man who was in prison; now Saint MATTHEW used to visit those who were shut up in prison. And the man had to pay back to his lord the money which he had given him to trade therewith, together with a profit thereon, but he dropped it into the sea and lost it. And Saint MATTHEW the apostle said unto that man, "Go thou to such and such a place, and what thou findest therein take, and give to thy lord." And the man went and he found a bag full of gold, and he took it and gave it to his master and was saved. And the story of Saint MATTHEW'S [act] was heard throughout the city, and many men believed on our Lord Jesus Christ. When JUSTUS the governor of that city heard that many men believed on our Lord Christ, he was exceedingly wroth, and he ordered his soldiers to cut off the head of Saint MATTHEW, and to cast his body to the fowls of the air. And they cut off his head with a sword, and certain believing men came and took his holy body and laid it in a holy place. Salutation to MATTHEW whose voice compelled the deep to restore from its depths to a certain man the gold which had sunk in it.

[fol. 40*a* 3] And on this day also died the holy father, the pure virgin, the fighter of lusts, the vanquisher of natural appetites, Abbâ DEMETRIUS the twelfth Archbishop of the city of Alexandria. This holy man was a man of the people (i.e. of lowly origin) and he knew not letters, and he used to work in a vineyard. His parents gave him a wife in his youth, and he lived with her until he was appointed archbishop—forty-eight years. Both husband and wife remained virgins, and no one knew about them except God, Who knoweth souls and hearts. When the time drew nigh for the death of Saint JULIAN the archbishop, the predecessor of DEMETRIUS, the angel of the Lord appeared unto this holy man and told him that DEMETRIUS was to be archbishop after him. And he gave him a sign concerning him, and said unto him, "To-morrow a man shall come unto thee having a cluster of grapes with him; seize him and pray over him, and appoint him archbishop." When Saint JULIAN woke up from his sleep, he told the bishops and the priests who lived with him what he had seen, and what the angel of the Lord had said unto him concerning DEMETRIUS the archbishop. When the morning had come this Saint DEMETRIUS, the archbishop, found in the vineyard a cluster of grapes which had ripened before their time, and he took it to Abbâ JULIAN the archbishop, so that he might be blessed by him. And Saint JULIAN took him by the hand, and said unto the [fol. 40*b* 1] bishops and priests, "This is he who shall be archbishop after me." And they prayed over him, and they took him and bound him until Abbâ JULIAN died, whereupon they finished the prayers over him and made him archbishop. And he was full of heavenly grace, and he was versed in many kinds of learning, and he knew by heart all the Books of the Church and the interpretations thereof, and he read many abstruse works. It was he who regulated the reckoning of the Epacts, for the Christians used to keep the festival of the Baptism, and on the following day [began] the fast of Forty Days. And at the octave of His Passion they celebrated the festival of the Passion of our Lord by itself, and this they did from the days of the Apostles until the days of this father. And this father proclaimed the reckoning of the Epact by the Holy Spirit, and he regulated the reckoning of the Holy Fast. And he sent out letters [concerning it] to the Archbishops of the city of Rômê, and of the city of Ephesus, and of the city of Antioch, and of the city of Jerusalem, and they rejoiced thereat, and they ordered [the Holy Fast] even as it is at this day. And God was with this Father DEMETRIUS because of his sincerity (or purity). He used always to look for our Lord Jesus Christ at the time of the consecration of the Offering as he was administering the Holy Mysteries to those who were meet for them; and he drove away sinners, and said unto them, "Go ye and repent, and afterwards come and ye shall receive the Holy Mysteries; ye shall not receive them whilst ye are in sin so that ye may not go into GAHÂNAM (GEHENNA)." And Saint DEMETRIUS [fol. 40*b* 2] used to reveal their sins to the people, those which they committed in secret, and he would rebuke each one of them for the sins which they committed. Because of this believers were afraid of him, and the members of his congregation did not commit sin because of their exceedingly great fear of him, and because they did not wish him to put them to shame before the congregation.

And some of the people whom he used to rebuke for their sins would say among themselves, "This man is married, and his wife is with him at this present, why should he rebuke us especially? None but a virgin should be appointed to the throne of MARK the evangelist." One night an angel of the Lord came to him and said unto him, "DEMETRIUS, permit not thyself only to do as thou pleasest, and permit not thy neighbour to be destroyed. Remember that our Lord Christ saith in the Holy Gospel, 'The good shepherd giveth his life for his flock.'" And DEMETRIUS said unto him, "What is it that thou wouldst say unto me, my lord?" And the angel said unto him, "Reveal the mystery which is between thyself and thy wife to the people." On the following day the festival of Pentecost was celebrated, and this holy Father DEMETRIUS consecrated the Offering, and he commanded the archdeacons to tell the priests and all the people who were there that they were not to leave the church, but to stay together therein; and the archdeacons did as the archbishop had commanded. When the priests and the people were assembled he commanded that much wood should be brought and that a fire should be made of it, and [when] [fol. 40*b* 3] they had done so, this abbâ archbishop rose and stood up in the midst of the burning fire whilst all the people were looking on. And he prayed for a long time, and then he spread out his garment and took some of the fire with his hand and placed it in it. Then he called his wife, and she came unto him, and he said unto her, "Spread out thy woollen head-cloth," and he cast some red-hot charcoal into it, and then he said unto her, "Stand up that we may pray." And the red-hot charcoal continued to burn in the woollen head-cloth, and the cloth was not burned; and they remained in this position and prayed for a long time. After this the priests and the people asked him, saying, "We require thy holiness, O our father, to make us know what this mystery is." And he said unto them, "I have not done this seeking for the vain praise of this world, but behold, I have lived with this woman for eight and forty years, until this day. Now this woman whom thou seest was the daughter of my father's brother. Her relatives died and they left her, then a little girl in my father's house, and I was brought up with her. When I was fifteen years of age my father gave her unto me in marriage. When we entered the marriage-chamber in our house, she said unto me, 'Why have they given me in marriage to thee, seeing that I am thy sister?' And I said unto her, 'Dost thou wish us to live together in one house, and never to separate from each other, and to preserve our virginity undefiled, and that there shall be nothing between us?' And she said, 'Yea.' And I have lived with her in one place for eight and forty years, and we have lain in the same bed on one bedstead. And the Lord God Who [fol. 41*a* 1] is judge between us, and Who knoweth what is hidden and the thoughts of hearts, He knoweth that I have never known her as a woman, and on her part she doth not know me as a man, but we have passed all these days just lying side by side. When we lift ourselves up we see as it were a face which resembleth that of an eagle in our bed, between me and between her. And he layeth his left wing over her and his right wing over me, and this he doeth from the time we lie down until the morning, and then he disappeareth. Now do not think, O Christian people, that I have revealed this matter unto you because I am seeking the praise which men desire in this world, but God hath commanded me to reveal unto you this mystery, for He wisheth what is good for all men—the Christ, the Redeemer of all the world." And in the days of this father certain evil men appeared whose names were ḲALÊMÔS, and 'AGÂNÔS, and others with them, and they wrote a lying book; and DEMETRIUS anathematized them and excommunicated them. And during the days of his office he taught and encouraged the Christian people, and all believers, every day regularly. When he was grown old and feeble they used to carry him on a litter, and set him down in the church, and he taught the people all day long from sunrise to sunset, and all the people pressed eagerly to hear his doctrine. And all the days of his life were one hundred and five (six?) years. Of these were fifteen during which he was unmarried, and eight and forty years passed before [fol. 41*a* 2] he was appointed archbishop, and he held the office of archbishop for three and forty years; and he died in peace. Salutation to DEMETRIUS.

And on this day also are commemorated the righteous men PETER, and DIONYMUS (or DÎYÔNÂS), and the strife of YÂʿEḴÔB, and ABÛ ṬEFÂ, and THEODORE, and ʾAMINUS (AMÂNUS).

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day Saint PTOLEMACHUS and his brethren became martyrs.

Salutation to PTOLEMACHUS and his brethren.

Salutation to PAUL, the new Tawrâsî.

And on this day also died the [fol. 41*a* 3] holy father Abbâ ZACHARIAS the monk. The name of the father of this holy man was ʾAḴÂRYÔS. And ʾAḴÂRYÔS wished for the garb of the monk, and when he told his wife this thought, she agreed with what he said unto her. And he had two children, one boy and one little girl. And ʾAḴÂRYÔS left the children with their mother, and he went to the desert of SCETE, and he became a monk there under the direction of a certain holy old man who was a monk. After a few days there was a great famine in the city, and his wife took the two children and came to the desert of SCETE to their father ʾAḴÂRYÔS, and she told him of the tribulation which had come upon her through the famine. And she said unto her two children, "Go to your father," and the two children wandered about for a little, and the girl returned to her mother. And ʾAḴÂRYÔS said unto her, "Behold, God hath done what is right, and hath divided the two children between us; take thou the girl and I will take the boy." And the woman took her daughter and departed, and ʾAḴÂRYÔS took his son, who was this father ZACHARIAS, and brought him to the holy old men, and they prayed over him, and they prophesied that he would become a perfect monk. And ZACHARIAS was brought up with every kind of good work in the desert of SCETE, and with every kind of virtue and righteous work. And his form was exceedingly handsome, and there were many murmurings in the desert because of him, and the monks said among themselves, "How is it possible for such an exceedingly handsome young man to dwell in the desert [fol. 41*b* 1] of SCETE among monks?" And when ZACHARIAS heard that the monks were murmuring because of him, he departed to the lake of DABRA NÂṬRÛN, which is like unto salt. And none of the people knew him, and he stripped off his apparel, and plunged his body into the lake, and he remained under the salt water for many hours. And his body swelled and became discoloured, and his flesh became full of sores like unto that of a man who is sick. Then he went forth from the lake and put on his apparel and came to his father 'AḲÂRYÔS; and when his father saw him he did not know him, but after a few days he recognized him and knew that he was his son. And he asked him and said unto him, "What is it that hath changed thy appearance?" And he told him everything that had happened and how he had submerged himself in the lake of NÂṬRÛN, which is ḥambô (salt). And when the First Day of the week came, he went to the church to receive the Holy Mysteries with the brethren. And God shewed to Abbâ ISIDORE, priest of SCETE, what Abbâ ZACHARIAS had done, and when Abbâ ZACHARIAS came to Abbâ ISIDORE to receive the Offering he looked at him and marvelled at him, and he said unto the monks, "ZACHARIAS received the Offering on the last First Day of the week like every other man, and now he hath become an angel of God." And when the other monks knew what ZACHARIAS had done they marvelled exceedingly, and they ascribed blessing and praise to him. And this Father ZACHARIAS possessed together with other excellences the virtue of humility, [fol. 41*b* 2] and his humility was so perfect that his father spake of it to the monks, and said unto them, "I have laboured greatly, but I have never attained to the rule of this my son ZACHARIAS." This ZACHARIAS lived a strenuous life and strove exceedingly for five and forty years; now when he came to the desert of SCETE he was seven years of age. And all the days of his life were two and fifty years, and he was well-pleasing unto God and he died in peace. Salutation to ZACHARIAS.

And on this day also are commemorated 'EULÂNÂ, and EULACIUS (EULOCHIUS?), and THEODORE, and 'ABLÂS and his brethren, and NITOLAUS, and 'ABÊLÂ.

XIV. ṬĔḴĔMT

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died the holy Apostle PHILIP who was one of the seventy-two disciples. This holy man was a native of the city of Caesarea of the Philistines, and when our Lord Jesus Christ passed through the city of Caesarea He taught therein. And when the holy man [fol. 41*b* 3] heard His doctrine, he believed in Him, and submitted to His commands, and followed Him straightway. And of those who followed Him our Lord chose seventy-two disciples, and sent them out to preach, and to heal the sick, and this man was among their number; and He chose [also] Twelve Apostles, [and] of their number were the seven deacons whom He appointed for them. And this holy man preached in the cities of Samaria and baptized [men therein] with Christian baptism. And he baptized SIMON the magician, who perished when he wished to buy with money the gift of the Holy Spirit. And the angel of the Lord appeared unto this disciple PHILIP, and he commanded him to go by the way of the country of GÂZÛ. And he rose up and went there, and he found the eunuch, the steward of HENDAKÊ (CANDACE), the Queen of Ethiopia, and he was reading in the Book of Isaiah the Prophet. And the words which he was reading said, "Like a sheep he came to his slaughter, and like a sheep that bleateth not before him that will shear him" (Isaiah liii. 7); and this disciple PHILIP explained to him the meaning of the words which he was reading. And he said unto him, "This is a prophecy concerning our Lord Jesus Christ, Who suffered of His own free will for the salvation of men." And the eunuch believed through PHILIP the disciple, and he asked him to baptize him, and PHILIP did so. After he had baptized him the angel of the Lord carried PHILIP the disciple to the city of 'AZDÂD (ASHDOD) and he preached therein.

And he departed to Asia, and there he preached the Gospel, and there were four [fol. 42*a* 1] sons who preached with him. And having converted many of the Jews and Samaritans, and other peoples, and brought them into the Faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, he died in peace.

Salutation to PHILIP and to his four sons who prophesied.

And on this day also died the holy Father MOSES, the man of God. This holy man was a native of the city of Rômê; his father's name was EUPHEMIANUS, and his mother's name was AGLAIAS. And they were exceedingly rich, and their possessions were very many, and their slaves were more numerous than those of any others of their family, and they were arrayed in rich apparel which was embroidered in gold, and they wore girdles of gold. And they feared God and performed His commandments, and they fasted every day until the ninth hour, and they only ate once in the day, and then it was with the poor and the needy. And they had no children, and they used to entreat God the Most High to give them a son, blessed and good, who should do God's good pleasure. And God heard their petition and gave them a son who was very handsome in person, and the grace of God was upon him. And they rejoiced in him with a great joy, and they made a great festival for the poor and needy, and they multiplied their well-doing. And they called that [fol. 42*a* 2] son MOSES, which being interpreted is "man of God"; for God heard their petition for him. And they brought him up very piously, and they taught him all kinds of learning and spiritual wisdom. When the child had grown up, his father EUPHEMIANUS said unto his wife AGLAIAS, "Behold our son MOSES hath arrived at man's estate, and it is meet that we should give him in marriage to a wife." And his mother rejoiced at these words, and they betrothed him to a daughter of one of the nobles of the city of RÔMÊ (BYZANTIUM), whose person was exceedingly beautiful. And they made a great feast to celebrate his marriage, and they decorated the church of God, that is to say HAGIA SOFIA in the city of RÔMÊ (BYZANTIUM). And they made MOSES to stand with his wife before the Tabernacle, and they crowned him with the holy crown of matrimony, and they received the Holy Mysteries and they came to their house in peace. And EUPHEMIANUS said unto his friend, "Tell the bridegroom to come into the marriage-chamber to his bride, and let him rejoice in her after the manner of all men." When MOSES the man of God heard this word, he came into the marriage-chamber, and he saw the maiden, and he marvelled at her person exceedingly, and he praised God, and blessed Him, and he thought within himself, saying, "Will not all this beauty of person pass away and decay and become dust?" And he entreated God to guide him into the path of the kingdom of the heavens. And he said unto the maiden, "Peace be unto thee, O my sister, thou noble maiden!" And he stripped himself of his glorious apparel and gave it unto her, and said unto her, "Have me in remembrance [fol. 42*a* 3], O my noble sister, until we meet again before our Lord Jesus Christ." And having said this unto her he went forth from her and he departed by road until he came to a city which is on the sea-shore. And he went into the city, and sold all his raiment, and gave the price thereof to the poor and needy, and he dressed himself in rags like the beggars and he went from one place to another begging bread and eating it, until he came to the city of RÔḤÂ (EDESSA). And he went into the church in the city wherein is the picture of our Lord Jesus Christ which our Lord sent unto EUGYÂNÔS, the King of RÔḤÂ (EDESSA), and he prayed before the picture of our Lady MARY and was blessed by her. And he gave thanks unto God, the Most High, and he went out of the church and sat down with the poor and needy, and he lived upon the bread of charity. He fasted always until the evening, and he prayed by day and by night, and wept without ceasing. When his father and his mother came into the marriage-chamber, and did not find their son MOSES, their joy was changed to sorrow. Then EUPHEMIANUS called his servants, and gave them much gold, and he said unto them, "Go ye into every city and country, two of you into each city, and give alms to the poor from that gold for the sake of my son MOSES." And two of his father's servants came to MOSES, and gave him alms with the [other] beggars. Now Saint

MOSES knew these servants, but they did not know him, and he said, [fol. 42*b* 1] "I give thanks unto Thee, O my Lord God, that Thou hast esteemed me fit for this great honour, that is for me to receive alms from the hands of my father's servants for the love of Thy Name." Now his father's servants continued to go round about through many cities for many days [seeking him]. After they had returned to EUPHEMIANUS their lord, the father of Saint MOSES, the man of God, they said unto him, "We have come into every city and we have not found thy son." And Saint MOSES, the man of God, was fasting two days at a time, and then three days at a time, until at length he did not eat at all except on the First Day of the week. After this our Lady MARY appeared unto one of the righteous elders among the priests of that church, and she said unto him, "Go outside the church, and say unto that man who is standing by the pillar, 'Come, O man of God,' and bring him into the sanctuary for his fasting, and his prayer, and his righteousness have ascended like the sweet-smelling incense into heaven." And on the following day that priest came to him at the moment when they were offering up the Offering upon the altar, and asked him to come into the sanctuary. And MOSES wept and entreated him, saying, "Forgive me, O my father! I am a sinner, and I am not worthy to stand in the holy place." And the priest said unto him, "O man of God, come into the sanctuary, for I am sent unto thee"; and he told him how our Holy Lady the Virgin MARY had appeared unto him, and how she had spoken unto him concerning him. And MOSES [fol. 42*b* 2] said unto him, "I am a sinful man, and the greatest sinner in all the world." After this he rose up to go to the city of TARSÊS (TARSHÎSH), which is the city of PAUL the apostle, and he said, "I will dwell herein until the day of my death." Then he thought in his heart and said, "Verily this is the Will of our Lord Jesus Christ; the Name of the Lord is living. I will not hide myself from any man, and I will not separate myself from the gates of my father's house, for who is there among the people here who will know me?" So he went to his father's house. And as he was going along he saw his father and very many men following him, and MOSES, the man of God, went and laid hold of the bridle of his father's horse as he was sitting on it, and he said unto him, "O good and blessed man, may God forgive thee thy sins, and grant thee the petition of thy heart. Know now that I am a [fol. 42*b* 3] pilgrim and a stranger, if thou wishest to feed me with the broken meats of thy table, God the Merciful will magnify thy reward, if thou wilt have mercy upon my poverty and my wandering." When EUPHEMIANUS heard these words he thought of the wandering of his son MOSES, the man of God, and tears burst from his eyes and he groaned within himself. And he took MOSES with him into the house, and he commanded his servants to give him a seat before the door of the house, and they did for him even as he had commanded, and he commanded one of his slaves to serve him. And MOSES, the man of God, said unto that slave, "I entreat thee, O my brother, to bring me food and drink only on the First Day of the week, and then only bring me a part of a loaf of bread and a cup of water, after I have received the Holy Mysteries." And he continued to lead this life of self-abnegation and strife for a period of twelve years, sitting at the door of his father's house. And God wished to remove him from the toil of this world, and our Lord Jesus Christ appeared unto him, and said unto him, "Blessed art thou, O MOSES, My chosen one, for thou hast done My good pleasure, and thou hast loved sorrow far more than joy, and thou hast forsaken riches and sought after poverty. I, even I, say unto thee, that everyone who hath called upon thy name, or hath celebrated thy commemoration, or hath fed the hungry on the day of thy commemoration, or hath given the thirsty to drink, or hath clothed the naked, or hath written the book of thy strife, I will reward them with a splendid reward in the [fol. 43*a* 1] kingdom of the heavens; and in this world I will protect them from all evil, and I will not permit them to lack any good thing. And now, O my beloved MOSES, thou man of God, after four days I will take thy soul from thy body, and I will set thee with the souls of the righteous, and of the prophets, and apostles, and martyrs." And having said these words He gave him "peace," and went up into heaven. When the holy man saw this vision he rejoiced and was exceedingly glad. And he said unto that slave who ministered unto him, "Bring hither to me paper and ink, and henceforward thou wilt have rest from labour for me"; and the slave marvelled at his words and brought him the paper and ink. And MOSES, the man of God, wrote the full history of his strife, from the beginning even unto the end thereof. On the fourth day he took the paper which he had written in his hand, and he died on the First Day of the week, and his soul went up into the heavens, and the angels and the righteous, and the martyrs, and the prophets, and the apostles welcomed it, saying, "Hallelujah! Redeemer our God"; and they came into the heavens. And all the people were gathered together in the church at the time of the consecration [of the Offering], and they heard a voice above the altar crying out, and saying, "Blessed are the good servants who have performed the commandments and the ordinances of their Lord, for they are in joy for ever." When the archbishops, and priests, and deacons, and bishops, and all the people heard this voice, great fear, and severe quaking fell upon them until the end of the consecration; [fol. 43*a* 2] and they received the Holy Mysteries. And afterwards the archbishops, and all the priests, and the people entreated our Lord Jesus Christ to reveal unto them this mystery. And straightway a voice was heard which said, "Rejoice with MOSES, the man of God, in the house of EUPHEMIANUS, for behold, he hath delivered up his soul into the hand of God." And when the archbishop heard this, he called EUPHEMIANUS and said unto him, "This great joy which dwelt in thy house; Why didst thou not inform me about him so that we might have visited him during his life and been blessed by him." And EUPHEMIANUS answered and said unto him, "Thy holy prayer is certain. Thou must know, O holy father, that I did not know that the like of this man existed in my house." And straightway the archbishops, and the priests, and all the people went to the house of EUPHEMIANUS, and they found MOSES, the man of God, where he died with the paper in his hand. And the archbishop took the paper out of his hand, and he read it before all the people until he came to his name which was MOSES, the man of God, the son of EUPHEMIANUS and his mother AGLAIAS. When his father and his mother heard this they wept bitterly. Then the archbishop wrapped him in silk cloths, and they took him and carried him into the church and laid him in the sanctuary until all the people and the priests had been blessed by him. And immediately very many sick people came, the deaf and the blind, and they all received a blessing [fol. 43*a* 3] from his holy body, and they were all healed of their sicknesses. When the people became very many his father was afraid that they would overturn the body of the saint from his bier, and he commanded his servants to scatter money among the people. And the servants scattered much gold in order that they might leave the body of the saint, but they would not go after the gold, and no man ever returned afterwards to the gold. After this they laid the body of the saint in the great church of the Apostles PETER and PAUL. And many miracles took place through his body, the blind were made to see, and the dumb became able to speak, and the sick were healed, and the lame walked, and the deaf heard, and the lepers were cleansed, and from those who were possessed of devils the devils went out.

[Salutation to] MOSES, whose name is written on a pillar of gold in the Jerusalem of the heavens.

And on this day also died Saint GABRA KRĔSTÔS, the son of THEODOSIUS, Emperor of Constantinia. Now THEODOSIUS was a God-loving man and one who feared God, and his wife was a good and God-fearing woman, and her name was MARKÎZÂ (MARCHESA); and they were sorrowful because they had no son. And they went to Jerusalem, and they made vows, and they made supplication to God, and He heard them and gave them a son, and they called his name ʿABD AL-MASÎḤ, that is to say, GABRA KRĔSTÔS. And they taught him every kind of learning on the earth, and there was nothing which he did not learn. [fol. 43*b* 1] Afterwards they married him to a princess of Rômê, and they brought to him the bride, and they performed for him all the ceremonies which are wont to be performed for the bridegroom and bride. And at midnight GABRA KRĔSTÔS took the bride by the hand, and they made a covenant together, and then they recited the prayer of belief—"We believe in one God"—to the end thereof. Then he stripped off himself the marriage-garments, and dressed himself in coarse apparel, and he went to the bride and kissed her head, and he bade her farewell, saying unto her, "God be with thee, and deliver thee from every evil work of Satan." And she wept and said unto him, "Whither goest thou? And to whom wilt thou leave me?" And he said unto her, "I leave thee to God, and I am going to follow Christ, for my father's kingdom is a transitory thing. Remember thou thine oath"; and straightway she was silent and remembered her oath. And he went forth by night whilst those who belonged to the marriage-chamber were sleeping, and he came to the sea-shore where he found certain men who were about to sail, and they took him with them. And when his father and his mother went into the marriage-chamber, and found only the bride and not the bridegroom, they said unto her, "Where is our son?" And she said unto them, "He came in to me in the night, and made me swear an oath, and made a covenant with me, and he kissed my head, and went away from me, and I have passed the night weeping." When they heard her words, they fell down upon the ground, on their faces, and they groaned, and uttered loud cries of grief and lamentation. And the Emperor THEODOSIUS sent out five hundred of his servants to seek his son, and he gave them much gold to distribute [fol. 43*b* 2] among the poor in alms. Now GABRA KRĔSTÔS arrived in the country of Armenia after a journey of one year. And there was a church built in the name of our Lady MARY, and he lived there for five years fasting and keeping vigil. And two envoys, servants of his father, arrived there, and they searched for him but were unable to hear any news of him; and they gave alms to the poor, and GABRA KRĔSTÔS himself received some of them. After he had dwelt there for five and twenty years, our holy Lady the Virgin MARY appeared unto a certain priest, and she said unto him, "Take the man of God with thee, and let his habitation be inside [the church]"; and he did as she had commanded him. And GABRA KRĔSTÔS said, "My Lady, why dost thou reveal my secret?" And he bade farewell to her picture (or image) and he departed by night and came to the sea-shore, where he found a ship in which he embarked. Now he wished to depart to another country, but by the Will of God he arrived at his father's city, and he dwelt there for fifteen years and no man recognized him. And his father's servants used to make sport of him; but Saint GABRA KRĔSTÔS said, "[O God] punish not my father's servants for their offence, but take me to Thyself"; and thus saying he died, and they buried him with honour. As they were burying him they found a paper grasped tightly in his hand and they were unable to remove it, and they prayed together to the God of heaven; and when they had prayed the paper was released from his hand, and they read it, and they knew that he was their son. Then they wept bitterly, and they buried him, and his tomb became a place where the sick [fol. 43*b* 3] were healed, and where the blind [were made to see], and where many miracles were wrought, and where countless acts of grace were performed. Salutation to GABRA KRĔSTÔS, whose sores the dogs licked in the courtyard of his father's house.

And on this day also is commemorated our holy Father 'ARAGÂWÎ, who is surnamed ZA-MÎKÂÊL. This holy man became a guide to the servants of God on the road. And he went up to the holy DABRA DÂMÔ holding the tail of a serpent, and there he fought countless noble fights. And God graciously made a covenant with him concerning the man who should call upon his name, and the man who should celebrate his commemoration, and then he was hidden from the face of death by the grace of God. He established among his children the Rules for the Monastic Life, which he had learned in the house of his father PACHOMIUS. Salutation to ZA-MÎKÂÊL who was surnamed "'ARAGÂWÎ."

And on this day also are commemorated TRÂKWÂ the martyr, and those who were with him, and DAMATIUS, and 'EMRÂYA the martyr, and the four hundred and thirty- [fol. 44*a* 1] one martyrs who were with her.

XV. Ṭĕḳĕmt

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day the holy and honourable BÎLÂMÔN became a martyr. This holy man was a native of Nicomedia; his father worshipped idols and his mother was a Christian. They taught him philosophy and he was well educated, and he passed under the care of a certain priest whose name was 'ARMALUS (HARMALUS ?), and he taught him the true Faith of our Lord Jesus Christ and he baptized him with Christian baptism. And he fought a strenuous fight, and God wrought by his hand great miracles and wonders. And there came unto him a certain blind man so that he might work by his skill some salvation for his eyes, and Saint BÎLÂMÔN made the sign of the Cross over the eyes of the blind man, saying, "In the Name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit," and his eyes were relieved straightway, and he could see with them as in former times, and he was healed. When the king heard the story of the blind man who was healed of his sickness, he had him brought into his presence, and he said unto him, "Who was it that healed thine eyes?" And he said unto the king, "Saint BÎLÂMÔN healed me by laying his hand upon my eyes, and making the sign of the Cross, and saying, 'In the Name of the Father and the Son and the [fol. 44*a* 2] Holy Spirit,' and straightway I saw the light." And the man who had been blind and had been healed cried out before the king and said boldly, "I am a Christian." And the king ordered his soldiers to cut off the head of the blind man who had been healed, and straightway they cut off his head with the sword, and he received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of heaven. Then the king sent and had Saint BÎLÂMÔN brought to him, and enquired of him concerning his Faith, and he confessed boldly before him and said unto him, "I am a Christian." And the king tried to seduce him by means of much persuasion, and he promised him very many things, but the saint had no desire for any of the things which he promised him. Then was the king wroth with him, and [he cried out] with a loud voice, saying, "If thou wilt not hearken unto my voice I will inflict upon thee severe torture." And Saint BÎLÂMÔN answered and said unto him, "I am not afraid of thy torture." And straightway the king tortured him with severe tortures for many days, by applying one torture at a time, by beating, by suspension (i.e. crucifixion), by casting him into the sea, and into the fire. Whilst he was suffering these great tortures our Lord Jesus Christ appeared unto him in the form of 'ARMALUS (HARMALUS ?) the priest who baptized him, and he heard His voice, which was full of joy, saying, "O My chosen one BÎLÂMÔN, I have made ready for thee and the heavenly joy which is for ever." When the king's soldiers heard this word of joy, they believed on our Lord Jesus Christ, to Whom be praise and blessing! And they drew nigh unto the king, and they cried out, saying, "We believe on our Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of the Living [fol. 44*a* 3] God." And straightway the king commanded his soldiers to cut off their heads with the sword, and they did so, and at the same time they cut off the head of Saint BÎLÂMÔN, and they all received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens.

Salutation to 'ASḴÎR, and CYRIACUS.
Salutation to SÎLÂS the disciple of PAUL.
Twofold salutation to the Apostles of the Father.

And on this day also five hundred and sixty people who formed the company of Saint PANTALEON became martyrs.

And on this day also died SALATION, and 'ATRAKIUS, and Abbâ YARPES (IPHRASIUS ?), and ANDRONICUS, and ARMOLIUS (HERMOLIUS ?), and HERMES, and HARMOKTIS, and the holy women ADMANIA and ṢAMATÂ, and Father ISAIAH, and SILAS the disciple of PAUL.

XVI. Ṭĕḳĕmt

[fol. 44*b* 1] IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died the holy father, Abbâ AGATHON, the thirty-ninth Archbishop of the city of Alexandria. And they chose this father to be archbishop, and they took him and bound him, and they appointed him Archbishop of the city of Alexandria, when Abbâ BENJAMIN, the archbishop who preceded him, died. And great tribulation came because of the Orthodox Faith. In his days there was a certain man whose name was THEODOSIUS, a Melchite, and he went and came to the city of Damascus, to King YAZÊD, and he gave him presents and much money, and YAZÊD appointed him governor of Alexandria, and the North, and Mareotis. When he came to the city of Alexandria he afflicted our father Archbishop AGATHON, and he levied tax upon him, and he took from [each of] his disciples thirty-six gold dînârs. And he compelled AGATHON to give him money for the service of the emperor's ships each year, and the archbishop gave seven hundred gold dînârs each year. Now because of the evil of this man THEODOSIUS, his fellow Melchite did not associate with him, for he hated him because of the evil which he did to the Archbishop Abbâ AGATHON. And our father the archbishop was not able to go out of his cell until God had destroyed that evil man. And in the days of this father the building of the holy church [fol. 44*b* 2] of the blessed Abbâ MACARIUS was completed. One night the angel of the Lord appeared unto this father, and he made known to him that in the country of the FAYYÛM there was a certain righteous monk whose name was JOHN, and he belonged to the church of Saint Abbâ MACARIUS. And the angel commanded him to send and bring him to him so that he might help him in admonishing the people and in teaching them; and the angel said also unto him, "He shall be archbishop after thee." And straightway Abbâ AGATHON sent and brought the monk, and he delivered to him the work of the churches, and the ordering and teaching and admonishing of the people. And this Father AGATHON died through overwork, and he held his office for fully nineteen years and he died in peace. Salutation to Abbâ AGATHON.

And on this day also are commemorated Saint Abbâ MACROBIUS, and Saint Abbâ 'ĔBLÔ (or APOLLO), and Saint Abbâ PETER the disciple of Abbâ ISAIAH the anchorite. Salutation to MACROBIUS, 'ĔBLÔ, and PETER.

[fol. 44*b* 3] And on this day also are commemorated PÂRĔBÛ, and the five and forty righteous men of EL-DĔRḴÊ, and ARÔN (AARON) the fighter, and ḲARBÛ, and 'ANÂLYÛ, and Abbâ PAWLÎ, and MARK, and GÂDĔL.

XVII. ṬĔḴĔMT

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died FILIAS (or FÎLYÂS) the martyr, bishop of the country of TAMIAS, in the days of ḲUĔLḲUĔLIANUS. They brought Saint FILIAS in before the company of the governors, and ḲUĔLḲUĔLIANUS said unto him, "Sacrifice to the gods"; and FILIAS said, "I will not offer up sacrifice except to God, and to Him alone." ḲUĔLḲUĔLIANUS said, "What kind of sacrifice doth God wish?" And FILIAS answered and said, "A pure heart and righteous judgement, and the word which is true; such are the sacrifices wherewith God is well pleased." ḲUĔLḲUĔLIANUS said, "Did not PAUL sacrifice?" and FILIAS said, "God forbid!" ḲUĔLḲUĔLIANUS said unto him, "Did not MOSES sacrifice?" And FILIAS said, "Unto the Jews only was the command given that they should sacrifice in Jerusalem." ḲUĔLḲUĔLIANUS said, "Dost thou strive on behalf of the soul or the body?" And FILIAS said, "On behalf of soul and body." ḲUĔLḲUĔLIANUS said, [fol. 45*a* 1] "Will this body rise?" and FILIAS said, "Yea." ḲUĔLḲUĔLIANUS said, "Hast thou no love for wife or brethren?" And FILIAS said, "The love of God is greater than every other love." ḲUĔLḲUĔLIANUS said, "Who is God?"

FILIAS raised his hand to heaven, and said, "God is He Who made the heavens and the earth and everything which is therein," and he told him the story of His Birth, and His Crucifixion, and His Death, and His Resurrection and Ascension. ḲUĔL-ḲUĔLIANUS said, "Can a god be crucified?" And FILIAS said, "Because of love for us He came into the world, and redeemed us by His Passion." ḲUĔLḲUĔLIANUS said, "Dost thou not know that I would honour thee, and that I do not wish to harm thee, for I know concerning the abundance of thy wealth, and the honour of thy family. Now, sacrifice thou to the gods so that thou mayest not die an evil death." And FILIAS said, "If thou dost wish to give me pleasure, give the order for my torturing and slaughter"; and ḲUĔLḲUĔLIANUS gave the order for him to be killed. As they were taking him away his brother came with the magnates of the city, and he besought him with many entreaties, grasping at his feet and kissing his hands as he did so, to submit to the governor and to offer up sacrifice. And FILIAS cursed them, saying, "Leave me, O ye who would lead me into error, I am going to bear the Cross of my God." And when he arrived at the place where he was to receive his doom, he stretched out his hands towards the East, and he prayed unto our Lord Jesus Christ for a long time. And he committed himself to his people, and bade them farewell in peace, and then he was crowned. Salutation to FILIAS, who feared not the governor.

[fol. 45*a* 2] And on this day also is commemorated Saint GREGORY, the brother of the blessed BASIL.

And on this day also died Saint DIOSCURUS, the thirty-first Archbishop of the city of Alexandria, who was appointed after Abbâ JOHN. This father was gentle in disposition, and his knowledge was glorious, and his work was good, and he was perfect in his days, but his family did not resemble him, and he was appointed archbishop by the Holy Ghost. And he wrote a General Epistle and sent it to the holy father and doctor of the Church, Abbâ SEVERUS, Archbishop of the city of Antioch; and he wrote in that Epistle the Orthodox Faith of the Holy Three Who are equal in Godhead. Then he went on to speak about the Incarnation of the Son of God, and he said, "The Word of God took a body, perfect in all its operations, with a rational and understanding soul from our holy Lady the Virgin MARY. And He became therein One Son, and One Person, in inseparable unity, and He did not become two, but One, for the Holy Three were One God, before the Incarnation of the Son, and after the Incarnation of the Son there came not upon Him any addition to His Incarnation." When his Epistle reached Saint Abbâ SEVERUS, and he had read it, he rejoiced and [fol. 45*a* 3] was glad therein with an exceedingly great gladness. And he preached about it before the people of the city of Antioch, and they all rejoiced therein. Then Saint Abbâ SEVERUS wrote to him, and accepted his Epistle, saying, in his letter, "I give thanks unto God Who hath chosen thee for this glorious and orthodox Christian office," and he commanded him not to turn aside from it neither to the right hand nor to the left, and that all his words and works should be performed according to the Orthodox Faith which our holy fathers had formulated, that is to say the Three Hundred and Eighteen bishops who assembled in Nicea, and according to what they had commanded in the Canon and the Law. And then he said in his letter, "Teach thy people continually, so that they may be strong in the Orthodox Faith, and let them discuss this matter very much." And when the letter of Abbâ SEVERUS reached DIOSCURUS, he rejoiced therein greatly, and he commanded that it should be read from the pulpit. And this father taught the people continually, and read to them the Holy Scriptures, and commanded all the priests in the cities to shepherd their flocks, and to protect the sheep which had been committed to their charge. Having ended his good course, and pleased God, he died in peace. Salutation to DIOSCURUS the writer.

[fol. 45*b* 1] And on this day also died STEPHEN, archdeacon and protomartyr. Salutation to STEPHEN.

XVIII. Ṭĕḳĕmt

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died the holy father, THEOPHILUS, the twenty-third Archbishop of the city of Alexandria. He was appointed in the sixth year of the reign of THEODOSIUS the Great. In his days lived JOHN of the Golden Mouth (CHRYSOSTOM), of the city of Antioch, who translated the Gospel of JOHN, the son of ZEBEDEE, and he also translated the Book of PAUL the apostle. He was appointed Archbishop of the city of Constantinia, when the days of this father were twenty-eight years, and he died in exile. And in the days of this father there lived also EPIPHANIUS, Bishop of Cyprus; and in his days also died Abbâ CYRIL, Bishop of Jerusalem; and in his days also rose up (i.e. awoke) the SEVEN CHILDREN after they had been asleep for three hundred and seventy-two years. And this [fol. 45*b* 2] holy father was a disciple of ATHANASIUS, the apostolic Archbishop of the city of Alexandria, and this Saint THEOPHILUS was brought up in the cell of Saint ATHANASIUS, and he learned from him all spiritual doctrine. When Abbâ TIMOTHY the archbishop died, this father was appointed in his place. And he was prudent, and observant, and he learned the Books of the Church by heart, and he understood the interpretation of the same. During the days of his office he wrote great discourses, and many works of exhortation concerning love (i.e. charity), and concerning mercy, and concerning the keeping back of a man from receiving the Divine Mysteries before he repenteth of his sins, and concerning the Resurrection and the punishment which is prepared for sinners, and other treatises which tend to edification. And Saint Abbâ CYRIL was the son of the sister of this father, and he brought him up most carefully and piously. And he sent him to Abbâ SERAPION so that he might instruct him carefully and thoroughly in spiritual matters, and father Abbâ SERAPION taught him every kind of spiritual learning, and he learned by heart all the Books of the Church. When his education was complete

Abbâ THEOPHILUS sent and brought him to his cell. And he used to make him read before him continually books concerning the people. When this father Abbâ THEOPHILUS was with Abbâ ATHANASIUS, he one day saw him lifting up his eyes to a hill, now he was [standing] before his cell, and he heard him say, "If I find good days I will clear away this hill, and I will build on the site thereof a church to Saint JOHN the Baptist and [fol. 45*b* 3] ELIAS the prophet." And when this Father Abbâ THEOPHILUS was appointed Archbishop of Alexandria he remembered that hill concerning which he heard Abbâ ATHANASIUS speak, and determined that he would do and carry out what he had heard Abbâ ATHANASIUS say he would do. And in those days there was in the city of Rômê a certain woman who was exceedingly rich; now her husband was dead, and he had left her much property, and she had two sons. And she took her two sons, and the money which she had with her, and a picture of the angel RÛFÂÊL (RAPHAEL), and she departed from the city of Rômê to the city of Alexandria. And when she heard Abbâ THEOPHILUS speaking about that hill, straightway she became moved by the zeal of the Spirit, and she spent much money and cleared away that hill, and there appeared underneath it a coffer which was covered over with a slab of stone whereon were written (or engraved) three characters which were ⊖ ⊖ ⊖. As soon as THEOPHILUS saw them he knew their mystery through the Holy Spirit, and he said, "Behold, the time hath arrived wherein this coffer should be brought to light, for the three characters upon it are ⊖ ⊖ ⊖, and behold, they were gathered together at the same time. One ⊖ standeth for THEOS, that is God; the second ⊖ standeth for the Emperor THEODOSIUS, and the third ⊖ standeth for THEOPHILUS the archbishop, that is to say a holy three (?)." And having said this he opened the coffer and found written inside it the date according to the Era of King ALEXANDER, the son of PHILIP, the Macedonian, and it was seven hundred years, [fol. 46*a* 1] from the time when they closed [the coffer]. And the Archbishop Abbâ THEOPHILUS sent to the Emperor THEODOSIUS the Less, the son of the Emperor ARCADIUS, the son of THEODOSIUS the Great, and he informed him about the coffer, and how he had opened it, and he said, "Come, that thou mayest see it." And the emperor came to the city of Alexandria, and he looked at the coffer, and he gave half of the treasure inside it to the blessed THEOPHILUS, and a half of it he placed in a ship and took to the city of Constantinia. And the blessed THEOPHILUS built churches with the gold which the emperor had given him. And he began to build first of all a church in the names of JOHN the Baptist and Saint ELIJAH, and he translated their bodies and laid them in it, and this church is well known to this day in DÊMÂS. And at that time he also built a church in the name of our holy Lady the Virgin MARY, by the hands of the Melchites in the east of the city. And thirdly, he built a church in the name of the angel RÛFÂÊL (RAPHAEL) in DASÊT, and he built seven other churches; and then he appointed the sons of that widow bishops. When the emperor saw the love of the archbishop for building churches, he gave him all the houses of idols which were in the whole country of Egypt, and THEOPHILUS pulled them down and built on their sites churches and lodging houses for strangers and pilgrims, and he endowed them with land and other property. And having followed in this good course of action, and pleased God, he departed to God [fol. 46*a* 2] and went to his rest from the toil of this world, after sitting upon the throne of MARK the evangelist eight and twenty years. When this father administered Christian baptism he used to see a rod of light before him making the sign of the Cross over the place of baptism. And this father and the Emperor THEODOSIUS were cutting wood, and each of the two saw a vision on the same night wherein it seemed that one of them was to become emperor and the other archbishop; and it came to pass to them even as they had seen in the vision. In the first year wherein this father was made archbishop, the Emperor THEODOSIUS commanded that each of them should write down their belief in books, and that they should bring them to the emperor, and they did as he had commanded and brought the books to the emperor. When they had drawn nigh unto him, the emperor rose up and prayed, and then he laid the books on the altar. And God revealed unto him that there was nothing in them about the Orthodox Faith except that they said and believed that "the Son with the Father and with the Holy Spirit is One God." And the emperor commanded [his servants] to cast forth all the books wherein evil belief and words of doubt (or hypocritical words) were written, and the emperor expelled all those who were in doubt about their belief from his kingdom. And JOHN of the Mouth of Gold multiplied his reading in the Books of 'AWGÂRYÔS (ABGARUS), and this father THEOPHILUS sent a message to EPIPHANIUS, Bishop of Cyprus, and to all his own bishops, ordering them to anathematize the Books of 'AWGÂRYÔS (ABGARUS), and they anathematized them [fol. 46*a* 3] even as did THEOPHILUS the archbishop. When JOHN of the Mouth of Gold heard that Abbâ THEOPHILUS the Archbishop of the city of Alexandria had anathematized the Books of 'AWGÂRYÔS (ABGARUS), he abandoned them and never read them again. And [he died] the seven hundred and twenty-first year of King Alexander, the Two-horned (A.D. 410). Salutation to THEOPHILUS who was worthy to sit upon the throne of MARK the evangelist.

And on this day also died ROMANUS the martyr in the days of ASCLEPIANUS, the governor who persecuted the Christians. This ROMANUS had been a monk from his earliest years, and he devoted himself strenuously to fasting and prayer. When he heard that the governor was persecuting the Christians, he came into the church, and he gathered together the priests and the deacons, and admonished them in the Faith of Christ, and strengthened them with his own confidence. When ASCLEPIANUS heard this he commanded that ROMANUS should be summoned, and when ROMANUS stood before him, he said unto him, "Is it true that thou art the son of FĔYÛM?" ROMANUS said unto him, "What doth glory of kin profit me? My glory is Jesus Christ." When ASCLEPIANUS heard this he commanded his soldiers to hand him up and to scrape his limbs piecemeal [and they did so], and when the governor saw his patient endurance, he commanded them to slit his cheeks so that he might not be able [fol. 46*b* 1] to talk. And ROMANUS said, "Behold, my God hath uncovered my mouth so that I may admonish thy madness. If thou wouldst know the truth of the matter, command thy servants to bring hither a child, and he will tell us whether it is right for us to worship God or the gods." And the governor commanded them to bring a little child, and he said unto him, "Tell me is it right for us to worship God or the gods." And the child said, "It is right for us to worship God Who created all the world with one word"; and having heard him the governor commanded them to hang up the child. When they had hung up the child his mother came to look at him, and the child said unto his mother, "Give me water, for I am thirsty." And his mother said unto him, "Nay, O my son, thou must not drink water [here], but go to the water of life." When the governor heard her words he commanded them to cut off the head of the child; [and they did so], and his mother came and took away his body. And the governor commanded them to cut out the tongue of ROMANUS at its roots so that he might not be able to argue with him. And ROMANUS having received by the grace of God a tongue of the Spirit, he wrote with his blood, saying, "Blessed are those who do not deny our Lord, for the Son will confess them before His Father." When ASCLEPIANUS heard this he imagined that the tongue of ROMANUS had not been cut out, and he called to the prefect, and said unto him, "Why didst thou not cut out his tongue at its roots?" And the soldier said, "Command them to bring the soldiers and I will cut out his tongue before thee, and thou shalt say if he speaketh." And straightway they brought the soldiers and they cut out his tongue, and he died forthwith. When the governor saw him he commanded the soldiers to bring him into the prison house, and there they hanged (or strangled) him; thus he finished his martyrdom. [fol. 46*b* 2] Salutation to ROMANUS the martyr.

And on this day also are commemorated JOHN the martyr, and 'ADRÂNÎ, and 'ARTÊMÂTÊWÔS, and HEPHAESTUS, and LUDERIUS, and 'ASMÂNÎT, and his seven children.

XIX. Ṭĕḳĕmt

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died Saint BARTHOLOMEW and his wife. These saints were natives of the country of FAYYÛM, to the west of Egypt, and they were accused before the governor of being Christians. And the governor sent and had them brought to him, and he questioned them about their belief and they confessed our Lord Christ before him. And he commanded his soldiers to dig a deep pit and to throw the two into it, and to cast stones in on them; and the soldiers did as the governor had commanded them, and BARTHOLOMEW and his wife finished their strife; and received crowns of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens. Salutation to BARTHOLOMEW and his wife who were buried alive [in the days of the Emperor DIOCLETIAN].

[fol. 46*b* 3] On this day also the holy General Council assembled in the church of the city of Antioch because of PAUL of SAMOSATA. This wretched man was a native of the city of SÂMÎDÂT, and was made Archbishop of Antioch. And Satan sowed bad seed in his heart, and he used to believe that Christ was a mere man whom God created, and that God chose Him so that by Him He might redeem the children of men, and that the source of Christ was MARY entirely, and that His Godhead was not one with His manhood, but that it descended upon Him, and that He dwelt therein by the Will of God, One Nature; and he would confess neither the Son nor the Holy Spirit. And this Council assembled in the city of Antioch because of him, and this assembling took place in the reign of the Emperor VALERIUS, when DIONYSIUS was Archbishop of the city of Alexandria, and DIONYSIUS was Archbishop of the city of Rômê; and this Council assembled before the Council of Nicea five and forty years. Now Abbâ DIONYSIUS, Archbishop of the city of Alexandria, was old, and he was not able to come with them into the Council, but he wrote a letter to the Council, saying,

"Christ is the Word of God, and is His Son, and is equal with Him in Godhead and Nature. And the Trinity [containeth] Three distinct Persons, and one God and one Lord. And One [Person] of the Trinity, that is [fol. 47*a* 1] to say, the Son, became incarnate in the substance of a complete man, and there was with Him One Nature." Then DIONYSIUS testified concerning these things and adduced many testimonies from the Old and New Testaments. And DIONYSIUS sent this letter with two priests, from the Council of the congregation, and those two priests and thirteen bishops assembled and they debated the matter with PAUL the infidel. And they read out before him the letter of DIONYSIUS, and they rebuked him with the words of PAUL the apostle, who said, "Christ is the Word of God, and He is His Son, and the splendour of His glory, and the likeness of His glory, and the Substance of Godhead." But he would not accept their words, and he would not turn from his infidelity, and they cut him off, and anathematized him and excommunicated him, and they excommunicated all those who believed his words, and drove them from their thrones. And the Council formulated Canons, and they are in the hands of the believers who perform their Laws and Precepts. Salutation to the two priests and thirteen bishops.

On this day also died Saint JOHN of DAILÂM. The parents of this holy man belonged to the nobles of the city; his father's name was ABRAHAM, and his mother's name was SÂRÂ, and they continued to pray fervently [fol. 47*a* 2] for many days because they had no children. One day two monks came to visit him, and they sojourned in his house, and they said unto him, "O ABRAHAM, hast thou no children?" And he said unto them with tears, "O my fathers, I have not gotten a son. And now I have grown old, and as for my wife her days are past"; when the monks heard this they prayed over them, and blessed them and departed. After a few days SÂRÂ, the wife of ABRAHAM, conceived and she brought forth a child of joy, and ABRAHAM called his name JOHN. When fourteen years had passed, and when the boy had finished all his instruction in the Books of the Church, those two same monks came into the school, and when JOHN saw them he asked them to take him away with them. And they said, "We are afraid of thy father and we cannot take thee." Whilst those monks were departing to their abode JOHN prayed to God that He would direct the path which he had chosen, and he went out of the school and followed the monks, and whilst wishing to overtake them he came to a great river which he was afraid [to try] to cross by himself. Whilst he was there certain Arabs came with their camels, and JOHN asked them to take him across the river, and they took him over with them; and by the Will of God he arrived in the monastery of these monks. Now the name of one of these monks was Abbâ SIMON, and when he saw JOHN he knew him, and he received him, and made him his disciple; and Abbâ SIMON had two other disciples besides JOHN, but he loved JOHN more than them. When [fol. 47*a* 3] Abbâ SIMON knew that his departure was nigh, he said unto his children, "O my children, I will tell you what God hath shewn me in respect of what shall happen unto you after my death. One of you a hyaena shall seize, another of you shall be scattered in the earth, and of my third disciple the report shall go forth into all the world." Then the old man looked in the face of JOHN, and he said unto him, "Be strong, O my son, for the love of Christ, for He hath chosen thee to be a father unto many"; and thus saying the old man died. After three days one disciple went out into the world and married a wife, and where the second went is not known. And Saint JOHN was sorrowful in his soul and he said, "I will go down and see what hath happened to my companion." As he was going down a company of soldiers of DAILÂM met him, and they made him prisoner, and fettered him with two beautiful women, one on his right hand and one on his left. Whilst they were journeying along the road the men of DAILÂM lacked water both for themselves and for their beasts. And Saint JOHN said unto them, "Masters, if I make water to spring forth for you will ye let me go?" And they said unto him, "Yea." Then Saint JOHN knelt upon the ground in the Name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Ghost, and water gushed out upon them and they drank. And Saint JOHN said unto them, "Perform to me what ye have covenanted," and they said, "We will not let thee go; who shall we find like unto thee?" So they brought him to their city. And in those days a heavy plague descended upon DAILÂM, and the master of Saint JOHN died, and his children, and all the men of his house, and there remained only his wife and her daughter. And the wife of Saint JOHN'S master thought [fol. 47*b* 1] that he was a magician, and she shut up Saint JOHN in his room, and set fire to the house so that she might burn him alive, but God delivered him. When the men of DAILÂM saw this they all believed through him, and they were baptized, men and women. Then JOHN departed thence by another road. When he found that the men there worshipped trees, he exhorted them to turn from iniquity, and when they refused to do so he came by night among their trees, and prayed to God, and taking an axe [in his hand], he said, "In the Name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Ghost I will cut you down"; and straightway one thousand trees fell down at one stroke of the axe. When the men of the city saw this they believed, and were baptized together with their women and children. And once again he went to another city, and he found that the people there were worshippers in fire-temples. When JOHN rebuked them, they were wroth, and they cast him into the fire three times, but he came forth unharmed. And he turned their water into blood, and they lacked water to drink, and they all believed in the God of Saint JOHN, and forty thousand men were baptized. Then he built a church and performed countless signs and wonders, and he died in the country of DĔR'ĔYÂN. Salutation to JOHN of DAILÂM.

Salutation to Abbâ SIMON, who was [fol. 47*b* 2] enveloped by the Holy Ghost.

And on this day also are commemorated the righteous men of AL-MAṬRÂ, who were slain with violence by the hands of evil men. [The Bodleian MS. says they were slain by King YEMRÂHA.]

Salutation to the Guide of the year.

XX. Ṭĕḳĕmt

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died the great father of light, Abbâ JOHN the Short (Kolobos). This holy man was a native of the city which is called TÂNSÂ and is in Upper Egypt, and he had one brother. His parents were righteous people, and they feared God; they were not rich in the goods and possessions of this world, but they were rich in good works. When this holy man was eighteen years of age, the grace of God moved him to go to the desert of SCETE, which [name] being interpreted means, "Balance of hearts." And he wished to put on the garb of the beings of the spirit and of angels, that is to say, the garb of the monk. And he found a certain tried and strong old man, whose name was Abbâ BÂMÔY, [fol. 47*b* 3] of the city of SĔHÂ, dwelling in SCETE, and Saint JOHN bowed low before him and entreated him that he might dwell with him in SCETE. And Saint Abbâ BÂMÔY wished to try him, and he said unto him, "O my son, it is not right for thee to live here, for this is a very hard desert, and those who dwell therein have to work with their hands, and they can only feed themselves by hard toil. And also over and above this there are very many fasts to be kept, and many prayers, both by day and by night, to be said, and a man must sleep on the bare ground naked without a bed (or cushion), and there is very great hardship in this desert. Nay, my son, go back into the world and live a life of comfort and ease like unto that of all other men." And Abbâ JOHN said unto him, "O my father, for God's sake do not turn me back for I have come to be under thy authority and under the shadow of thy prayer. And if thou wilt accept me I believe that God will make thy heart well-disposed towards me." Now Saint Abbâ BÂMÔY was wont never to do anything hastily, and he entreated God concerning Abbâ JOHN so that He might reveal to him His works. And the angel of the Lord appeared and said unto him, "God saith unto thee; accept this brother, for he shall become a chosen vessel." And when

Abbâ BÂMÔY heard these words from the angel of God, he brought Abbâ JOHN into the church, and he shaved off the hair of his head. Then he laid out the garb of the monk, and he stood and prayed over it for three days and three nights. Then the angel of the Lord appeared, and made the sign of the Cross [fol. 48*a* 1] over the raiment of monkhood, and Abbâ BÂMÔY put it upon Abbâ JOHN. And Abbâ JOHN devoted himself with the greatest zeal and diligence to the splendid works of the ascetic life. One day Abbâ BÂMÔY wished to try him, and he sent Abbâ JOHN away from him, saying, "I cannot live with thee"; and Abbâ JOHN stood for seven days outside the gates of the monastery, and every day Abbâ BÂMÔY went out to Abbâ JOHN, and smote him with a stick, and Abbâ JOHN bowed down before him and said, "Forgive me, O my father." On the seventh day the old man Abbâ BÂMÔY went forth to go to the church, and he saw seven angels, and they had with them seven crowns which they were placing on the head of Abbâ JOHN. And straightway Abbâ BÂMÔY took Abbâ JOHN and brought him into his cell, and from that day onward he was held by him in honour and reverence. One day Abbâ BÂMÔY found a piece of dry wood and he gave it to Abbâ JOHN and he said unto him, "Take this wood and plant it in the ground, and water it until it sprouteth and bringeth forth fruit." And Abbâ JOHN obeyed Abbâ BÂMÔY, and he took that piece of wood, and planted it, and watered it each day twice; now the water was far off, a distance of twelve stadia. And after three years that piece of wood sprouted, and grew into a large tree, and bore fruit, and the old man Abbâ BÂMÔY took some of the fruit thereof and carried it to all the aged monks, and he said unto them, "Take ye and eat of the fruit of obedience and humility." When the monks saw this miracle they marvelled exceedingly, and they praised God Who giveth [fol. 48*a* 2] this virtue unto those who make themselves subject to His teachers. And Abbâ BÂMÔY fell sick of a very severe sickness, and he continued to suffer from this sickness for eighteen years, and though Abbâ JOHN ministered unto him [all this time] he never once said unto him, "Thou hast done well," for the old man Abbâ BÂMÔY had grown very old, and he used to try him exceedingly. And God tried him with such a severe sickness until at length he became like a piece of dry wood, so that he might become a chosen offering unto God. When Abbâ BÂMÔY was about to die, he gathered together the aged monks, and he seized the hand of Abbâ JOHN and gave it unto them, saying, "Take him, and take care of this man, for he is an angel and not a man." Then he said unto Abbâ JOHN, "After I am dead I will live in the place wherein thou didst plant the tree which sprouted and bore fruit, for thou in that place didst become a holy and acceptable sacrifice before God. And many men shall be saved by thy hand, and thy memorial shall be there in that place before God for ever." When Abbâ BÂMÔY had said this unto him, he opened his mouth and delivered up his soul into the hand of God. After this Abbâ JOHN departed to that place [where the tree was] according as the old man Abbâ BÂMÔY had told him. And he strove boldly in the working of righteousness, for his name was exalted exceedingly; and after this he was appointed abbot over his church. And whilst the archbishop was laying his hand upon him at the time of his appointment, a voice came from heaven, and all the people heard it, saying, "Axios, Axios, [Axios]," [fol. 48*a* 3] that is to say, "He is worthy, He is worthy, He is worthy." And every time when Saint Abbâ JOHN consecrated the Offering, he would watch for those who were worthy to partake and those who were not worthy. Now Abbâ THEOPHILUS, the archbishop, built a church to the Three Holy Children in the city of Alexandria, and he wished to bring thereto the bodies of the Three Children from the city of Babylon. And he asked Saint Abbâ JOHN to go to the city of Babylon, and to bring the bodies of the Three Children from the city of Babylon, and after many requests Abbâ JOHN went forth on behalf of the archbishop. And a cloud straightway carried him away and brought him to the city of Babylon, and he saw that city, and the rivers and the palaces thereof, and he saw the bodies of the saints, the Three Children, and the body of King NEBUCHADNEZZAR lying in their tombs. And Saint Abbâ JOHN bowed low, and embraced the bodies of the saints with tears, and he cried out, saying, "O my holy fathers, bless me!" And straightway he heard a voice from their bodies, saying, "The God of Israel hath blessed thee." When Abbâ JOHN had heard this voice he was filled with the Holy Spirit, and rejoiced in the spiritual blessing. And he said unto them (i.e. the bodies), "O my fathers, ye martyrs of Christ God, I tell you that our father the archbishop, Abbâ THEOPHILUS, has built a church in your names in the city of Alexandria, and he hath sent me unto you and he beseecheth you and your holy bodies to come and dwell in your church, so that there may be healing and salvation unto all those who believe in Christ [fol. 48*b* 1] in all the country of Egypt." And the saints answered with one voice and said unto him, "God shall give thee the reward of thy labour in the life everlasting! But tell the archbishops that God hath commanded [us] not to remove our bodies from this place until the day of the Resurrection. Nevertheless because of his contendings, and his labour, and his perfect faith, let them suspend lamps in the church [which he hath built], and let the servants put oil and wicks of flax therein, only do not let them light the lamps, on the night of the day of the consecration of the church, whilst all the people and the priests are assembled therein, and we ourselves will come and we will make manifest the power of God and their blessing." And Saint Abbâ JOHN bowed low, and went forth from their presence rejoicing in God. When he had departed a short distance from them, a cloud took him up and brought him to the outskirts of the city of Alexandria, and he came in to the archbishop and told him what the saints had said; and the archbishop did even as the saints had told him. And when midnight had come on the night of the day of the consecration of the church, the Three Holy Children appeared in the church surrounded by brilliant light, and they lighted all the lamps, and they sent forth from themselves an exceedingly sweet odour. After this Abbâ JOHN returned to SCETE, and he contended in the working of righteousness by night and by day. One day a certain monk came into the cave of Abbâ JOHN, and he found him lying down, and the angels of God were waving their wings over him, and each of them was saying to the other, "Let me lay my wing upon him." After this the [fol. 48*b* 2] pagan Barbarians came to the desert of SCETE to plunder the houses of the monks, and to slay the monks. After this Saint Abbâ JOHN went to the monastery of Saint Abbâ ANTHONY in the desert of ḲUELZEM [by the Red Sea], not that he was afraid of death, but he said, "I go that a pagan may not come and kill me, and go to Sheol because of me; I do not wish to be in a state of ease and for that pagan to suffer punishment on my account. For he might testify against me before the Lord God, though he is my brother in nature, and form, and likeness." And Abbâ JOHN dwelt by the side of a village, and God brought him from it a certain man who was a believer, and he ministered unto him until the time of his death. When God wished to give him rest from the labour of this world, He sent unto him His righteous saints, Abbâ ANTHONY, and Abbâ MACARIUS, and Abbâ PACHOMIUS, to comfort him and to inform him concerning his departure, and there was with them Abbâ BÂMÔY, his spiritual father. And they comforted him and said unto him, "Be strong in the Lord, and rejoice in the everlasting joy which God hath prepared. Be thou ready, for we will come to thee at dawn on the First Day of the week, and we will take thee with us into everlasting life, even as God hath commanded"; and they blessed him and disappeared. On the day of the Eve of the Sabbath Saint Abbâ JOHN sent his attendant to the village, for he was sick with a little sickness. And when it was the time of cock-crow on the night of the holy First Day of the week, behold there came unto him many hosts of angels, and all [fol. 48*b* 3] the company of the saints, and when he saw them he rejoiced and bowed low and delivered up his soul into the hand of God. And the holy angels received the soul of the blessed Abbâ JOHN, and they took it up with them into heaven. And at that moment his attendant came, and he saw his soul as they were carrying it up into heaven, and the holy angels were surrounding it, and were singing before it. And before all these, as it was shining brightly like the sun, one sang and praised the blessed man Abbâ JOHN. And he stood still for the space of an hour as he marvelled at what he saw. And straightway the angel of the Lord came unto him and told him the names of each one of the saints, and pointing with his finger at the saints he said unto [the attendant of] Abbâ JOHN, "This is Abbâ PACHOMIUS, this is Abbâ MACARIUS, this is Abbâ BÂMÔY, and this is Abbâ So-and-so." And the attendant said unto the angel, "Who is this in front of them who is shining like the sun?" And the angel said unto him, "This is Abbâ ANTHONY, the father of all the monks." When the attendant came to the cell he found Abbâ JOHN on his knees, and he wept over him with a great weeping. And he made haste and went to the village, and told the men how that the saint was dead. Then the brethren came and made him ready for burial, and they bore away his body with great honour, and when they had brought him into the village, great wonders and miracles happened through his body. And then his sons, the monks, came and took up his body and they carried it to the desert of SCETE and laid it in the church thereof, and it became a haven for everyone who took refuge therein. [fol. 49*a* 1] Salutation to Abbâ JOHN.

And on this day also died Saint ELISHA the prophet, whose name being interpreted is "Saviour, protector and king." This holy man was a native of a village the name of which was BE'ÊLÂMÔN, of the tribe of ISSACHAR, and he prophesied many prophecies concerning the children of Israel. And he also prophesied, saying, "God shall come down upon the earth and shall walk with men." And he gave a sign of this, saying, "The sun shall set in SÊLÔM (SILO), and one of its two halves shall be separated from the other, and twelve oak trees shall be useful to the Lord, and submissive to the holy God, Who shall come down upon the earth, and by it the whole earth shall be saved." When he finished his prophecy he died in peace and was buried in his own land. Salutation to ELISHA the prophet who made the bitter water sweet and raised the axe out of the water by means of a splinter of wood.

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

[fol. 49*a* 2] On this day is celebrated a festival of commemoration of our holy Lady the Virgin MARY. Salutation to thee, O MARY, on whom the Sun of righteousness rose. Salutation unto thee, O garden of stacte and cassia.

And on this day also is commemorated the translation of the body of Saint LAZARUS, whom our Lord raised from the dead. And one of the Christian emperors, having heard the history of the saint whilst he was in the island of Cyprus, translated his body to the city of Constantinia. When they wanted to translate it [the workmen] found the saint's body buried under the earth and laid in a stone sarcophagus. And there was cut upon it in [letters of] gold the following: "This is the body of Saint LAZARUS, the friend of our Lord Jesus Christ, whom He raised from the dead, after [he had lain] in the grave four days." When they found the body they rejoiced with great joy, and they carried it to Constantinia, and the priests went out and received it with great honour, and with psalms, and hymns, and prayers, and incense; and they laid it in the sanctuary until they could build a church for it, [fol. 49*a* 3] and translated the body thither. And they made a great festival in honour thereof on this day. Salutation to the emperor who translated the body of LAZARUS to Antioch (sic) from Cyprus.

And on this day also died the holy father Abbâ JOHN, Archbishop of the holy city of Jerusalem in the days of the God-loving King DAVID, (A.D. 1411–1413) the [grand]son of the King SAYF 'AR'ÂD. Now this father was the son of Christian parents who feared God, and they belonged to the city of MĔSR (CAIRO); and they reared the holy man [piously] and called him JOHN. When he grew up they taught him Christian doctrine, and when he was fit to serve in the grade of deacon he was appointed a deacon. And having performed the duties of a deacon well and carefully, and was fit for the grade of priest, he was appointed priest. And he devoted himself strenuously to fasting and to prayer, and above all he gave himself to the fear of God and to the love of pilgrims; thereupon he became fit for the grade of apostleship. By the Will of God he was appointed bishop in the holy city of Jerusalem, and he fought a good fight therein, and he taught the people in humility and in the fear of God. And they loved him exceedingly because of his holiness, and his goodly figure, and his open countenance which was as that of an angel of God. After he had been seated on his throne [fol. 49*b* 1] for a few years, Satan brought a trial upon him and removed him from his people and from his city. And this was in the days when Abbâ MARK was archbishop of Alexandria. And the King of MĔSR (CAIRO), a Ḥanafite, forced him to send an embassy to the King of Ethiopia, who was in submission to him, concerning the Muslims who dwelt under his rule. Now there was in his days a king whose name was SAYF 'AR'ÂD, and he was also named CONSTANTINUS, and he slew many of the Muslims who rebelled against him, and some of them he drove out of his country and they went to the King of MĔSR (CAIRO) and took refuge with him. And they said, "The King of Ethiopia hath made an end of the Muslims; some of them he hath slain, and some of them he hath made Christians." When the King of MĔSR (CAIRO) heard these words, his zeal for his religion rose up, and he compelled the archbishop to despatch elders to [Ethiopia], and he told him that he held him as hostage for the obedience of the King of Ethiopia and the safety of the other Muslims who were in his kingdom. And our father the archbishop and his bishops agreed with the Government of MĔSR (CAIRO) concerning those who were to be sent to the King of Ethiopia, and they chose those fathers, those shining stars, because of their holiness, and learning, and wisdom, that is to say the honourable father Abbâ JOHN, and the learned and prudent father Abbâ CYRIL, Bishop of 'AKHNÂS, and he forced them to go to the King of Ethiopia against their will. When they came to the frontier of Ethiopia, the God-loving King SAYF 'AR'ÂD, [fol. 49*b* 2] may God rest his soul! Amen, heard concerning them, and he rejoiced with exceeding great joy; and he sent his soldiers to them with presents and mules to receive them, and when they had come to the king he paid them exceedingly great honour. And after they had read to him the letter of our father the archbishop, they wished to return to their thrones, and to their peoples, and to their churches, but the lord king prevented them from departing because he loved their holiness, and because he loved their persons, and their priestly service, and their faces which were full of grace, for they were like unto [those of] the angels of God, and they shone like the sun; and the lord king loved them with a great love because of their holiness and their prayers. After a short time God wished, in His mercy, to remove this father Abbâ JOHN from the labour of this transitory world, and He brought upon him a slight illness, and he died at a good old age, now his work was well-pleasing unto God, in the eleven hundred and sixth year of the Era of the Righteous Martyrs (A.D. 1390).

And on this day died the great [prophet] JOEL. This righteous man prophesied in the days of 'ABYÂ (ABIJAH) the son of JEROBOAM, the son of SOLOMON the king. He taught the people, and admonished them, and prophesied concerning the dwelling of God in Zion, and concerning His Passion, and concerning the descent of the Holy Spirit, the Paraclete, upon the holy Apostles on the day [fol. 49*b* 3] of the festival of Pentecost. And he revealed that they would prophesy, their daughters, and their sons, and their old men, and their young men, and the women who dwelt with them. "And if there be a prophet who prophesieth, I will pour out My Spirit upon all men" (Joel ii. 28); and I will not pour except [on] the Apostles. Now of this passage there are two interpretations: I, Because the holy Apostles were perfect in working righteousness he called them "men," for he who is not perfect among men in doing the good pleasure of God is not called a "man"; II, From the Apostles the Holy Spirit was poured out upon all the believing saints from the time of their preaching to the day of the Resurrection. And this prophet prophesied also concerning the going forth of the Law of the Gospel from Zion, when he said, "A stream of water shall flow forth from the house of God, and it shall water the valley of Shittim" (Joel iii. 18). And he made known that after the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ war should break out on the earth, and he spake also concerning the day of the Resurrection. And he said, "The sun shall become dark, and the moon shall become like blood, and the light of the stars shall be hidden" (Joel ii. 31). Now this prophet prophesied more than a thousand years before the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. This righteous man belonged to the tribe of REUBEN, and he arrived at a good old age, and he pleased God and died in peace, and was buried in the fields. [fol. 50*a* 1] Salutation to JOEL the prophet, the son of BÂTÛÊL, whose tongue was sharper than a razor.

And on this day our Lady MARY wrought a miracle and delivered MATTHIAS from the prison house.

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day Saint LUKE the evangelist, the physician, became a martyr. This holy man was one of the number of the seventy-two disciples whom the Holy Gospel mentioneth; he ministered to the Apostles PETER and PAUL and he wrote the histories of them. After the death of PETER and PAUL, LUKE preached in the country of Rômê. And those who worshipped idols came to an agreement with the Jews, and they stood up before the Emperor NERO and they cried out concerning LUKE the disciple, and they made accusations against him; and said, "He bringeth very many men under his teaching by means of his sorcery"; and the Emperor NERO commanded that they should bring LUKE before him. And when the apostle knew that he was about to depart from this world, he found an old man who was a fisherman, and he gave him the books and the volumes which were with him, and he said unto him, "Take good care of these books, for they will be of benefit to thee, [fol. 50*a* 2] and will make thee to arrive on the road of God." And when he had come to NERO, Emperor of Rômê, he stood up before him. And the emperor said unto him, "How much longer wilt thou lead men into error by thy sorcery?" And Saint LUKE answered and said unto him, "I am not a magician, but an Apostle of our Lord Christ, the Son of the Living God." And the emperor commanded [his soldiers] to cut off his right hand, saying, "I cut off this hand which wrote books"; and straightway they cut off his hand. And Saint LUKE said unto him, "Verily we do not fear the death of this world, but behold thou shalt at this moment see the power of my God Jesus Christ, to Whom be praise!" And the saint reached out his left hand, and took up in it the right hand which had been cut off, and made it to cleave to its proper place, and it remained there firmly and became like unto the other; then he separated it from the wrist and it remained thus. And those who were there marvelled, and the chief officer, and his wife and very many men believed in our Lord Christ; and they were in number two hundred and seven and seventy souls. And the emperor commanded his soldiers to cut off their heads, and the head of Saint LUKE the apostle, and the soldiers cut them off and the saints received crowns of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens. And they placed the body of Saint LUKE the apostle in a hair sack, and they cast it into the sea, and by the Will of God the waves of the sea brought it to an island, and a certain man who was a believer found it, and he gave it honourable burial. This holy man wrote his Gospel [fol. 50*a* 3] for THEOPHILUS, who was a Gentile, and he also wrote for him the "Acts of the Apostles." Salutation to LUKE whose tongue was true, and who wrote the Divine Gospel.

Salutation to the company of martyrs who died with Saint LUKE.

Salutation to the old man SILAS, who received Saint LUKE'S books and preserved them in purity.

XXIII. Ṭĕḳĕmt

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died Saint Abbâ JOSEPH, the fifty-second Archbishop of Alexandria. This man was the son of one of the elders of the city of MANÛF, and he had very many possessions. When his parents died and left him an orphan a certain God-fearing man brought him up, and when he arrived at man's estate he took his goods and gave them to the poor and the beggars. Then he went up into the desert of SCETE, to the monastery of Saint Abbâ MACARIUS, and he became a monk under the direction of a certain holy old man. When Abbâ MARK the second was appointed archbishop, and he heard that the natural disposition and intelligence of this Saint Abbâ JOSEPH [fol. 50*b* 1] were good, he sent and had him brought unto him, and established him in his house. After many days Abbâ JOSEPH asked Abbâ MARK the archbishop, saying, "Let me depart to the desert of SCETE," and straightway Abbâ MARK made him a priest and sent him away to the desert of SCETE. And he remained there many years, until the holy father Abbâ SIMON the archbishop died, and the country of Egypt remained without an archbishop for many years. After the death of Abbâ JACOB, the bishops made an agreement with a certain scribe in the king's house, who had married and whose wife had died, now he had never been a monk, and the bishops took bribes from him, and they made an agreement with one-half of the men of the city of Alexandria, to appoint that scribe archbishop. And all the bishops rose up against him, and they said unto him, "This scheme which thou hast planned is not good, but bad, for the holy Canon saith that all those who shall either take or receive bribes in respect of appointments to the priesthood, are to be excommunicated. And more especially shall it be so in this case, for this man hath married twice, and he is wholly unsuited for the office of archbishop; and besides, up to the present none but a virgin hath been appointed to sit on the throne of MARK the evangelist."

And these men then joined with them in this good counsel, and they rose up and came into the church, and prayed to God and entreated Him to make clear unto them who was the best man for this office. And straightway God heard their petition, and He made them to remember this Abbâ JOSEPH, and they sent a letter ordering the monks to bring him from the desert of SCETE. And those [fol. 50*b* 2] who had been sent prayed unto God and said, "We beseech Thee to reveal the matter unto us clearly; if Thou hast chosen this father Abbâ JOSEPH to be the archbishop, give us the following sign, that is to say, let us find the door of his cell open." And when they came to his cell they found the door open, and they found Abbâ JOHN (JOSEPH?) bidding farewell to a certain monk, and he was wishing to go into his cell and to shut his door. When he saw them he embraced them with a holy embrace, and received them with joy, and brought them into his house. When they came into his house they seized him and bound him, saying, "He is worthy, He is worthy, Abbâ JOSEPH is worthy of the archiepiscopate." And he cried out and wept, and he said unto them, "I have committed very many sins, far more than any other man"; but they would not accept this excuse from him, but they took him to the city of Alexandria and appointed him archbishop. Having taken his seat upon the throne of MARK the apostle, he thought about the Church exceedingly, and with what remained of his own stipend he bought plots of ground which had been dedicated to pious works, and endowed the churches with them. And he taught the people at all times, and he never neglected any one of them. Now, Satan was jealous of him, and he schemed schemes and brought sorrow upon him, and the immediate cause was that the Bishop of the city of TÊNÊS (TANIS), and the Bishop of the city of MĔSR (CAIRO), behaved wrongly towards the people and oppressed them in the matter of dues and afflicted them, and Abbâ JOSEPH said unto them, "Forbear and do not afflict them." And on several occasions he had entreated them to look upon their flocks with the eye of mercy, but they would not accept his behests, and they set them aside. And these [fol. 50*b* 3] holy bishops having afflicted their people [to excess], all the people came to the Archbishop

Abbâ JOSEPH, and they all cried out before him, and said unto him, "If thou wilt not remove these bishops from over us we shall embrace another Faith." And Abbâ JOSEPH fought very, very hard to make peace between them, but he was not able to do so. Then he brought all the bishops from all the land of Egypt, and when they were assembled, he told them how these two bishops had afflicted their people. And the archbishop sent and had those two bishops brought before him, and he wished to make peace between them and their people; but they would listen neither to his commands nor to those of his brother bishops. And straightway the archbishop said unto them before all the bishops, "I am innocent of your sins," and the bishops were witnesses against the two bishops that they had transgressed the command of the Archbishop Abbâ JOSEPH. And they all wrote with their own hands to this effect; "It is meet for these two bishops to be cut off from their sees"; and straightway the archbishop cut them off from their sees. And when he had cut them off from their sees, these two bishops went to the King of Egypt, and made false accusations against this father Abbâ JOHN (JOSEPH?) before him, and the king sent his brother and a company of soldiers to bring the archbishop to him. When he had come to him the king's brother drew his sword and wanted to kill him, and when he was about to smite the archbishop with the sword, God thrust aside the hand of that nobleman, [fol. 51*a* 1] and his sword struck a pillar, and broke, and he was furiously angry. And another man drew his dagger and drove it into the side of the archbishop with all his might, and his apparel and his girdle were cut through, but the dagger did not enter the flesh of the archbishop. Then that nobleman knew that the archbishop was a righteous man, and that there was in him divine grace which would preserve him from every evil, and from murder. And he brought him to the king his brother with great honour, and he told him what he had done to the archbishop, and how he had been smitten twice with the sword and had escaped unhurt. When the king heard this he marvelled, and he was afraid of the archbishop and paid him honour, and then he asked him questions about the two bishops who had made accusations against him before him. And the archbishop told him what had happened in the matter of the bishops, and he proved to him that the accusations which they had made against him were falsehoods. And the king knew that those bishops were liars, and evil men, and accursed oppressors, and straightway he commanded [his soldiers] to slay them. And the archbishop said unto him, "Our Lord Christ in the Holy Gospel commanded us to do good in return for evil. These bishops made false accusations against me, but behold, God hath established it in thy heart that I am innocent of the false charges which they laid against me to thee; I therefore beseech thee to have mercy upon them, and to forgive them for God's sake." When the king saw the pity of the archbishop, he marvelled exceedingly, and he paid him honour, and he had mercy upon those two bishops for his sake. And he wrote for him an authorization [fol. 51*a* 2] and gave it to him, and in it he ordered: "Neither officials nor bishops shall resist the archbishop, and they shall not disobey his command, and whatsoever he is pleased to do in his see he shall do, whether it be to remove a man from his office or to appoint a new one." And in the days of this father the King of Ethiopia sent him a letter, saying, "I do homage to the throne of MARK the evangelist, whereon to sit thou art worthy, and by his grace my kingdom hath waxed strong. I beseech thee to have compassion upon me and to send unto us as bishop Abbâ JOHN. There are certain men of our city who have gone astray from the light of the throne of Saint MARK the evangelist, and who have set their feet on the road which is full of thorns, and they have driven out Abbâ JOHN our bishop. Because of this great tribulation hath come upon our land and all our men are dying of the plague, and our beasts and cattle have perished, and God hath restrained the heavens so that they cannot rain upon our land, and our enemies have risen up against us and have conquered us, because we have not obeyed the commandments of God. And now, O holy ABÛNA, have mercy upon us and upon our folly. Send us our Bishop JOHN so that he may entreat God, and pray for us, and deliver us from this tribulation through thy prayer and his own. And I will inform thee, O my father, what hath been the cause of this. I thy son was blessed by my father Abbâ JOHN the bishop, and he bade me farewell as he set me on my way with my soldiers, and he blessed me and then returned and dwelt in his diocese. And we departed to the war, and we continued to fight for very many days, [fol. 51*a* 3] and our enemies conquered us, and they destroyed our soldiers, and we took to flight and returned to our own country, and we missed Abbâ JOHN our bishop. And I enquired for him, and they told me that my wife, the queen, had driven him into exile because certain evil men had counselled her to do so, even as Queen EUDOXIA had in days of old driven JOHN of the Golden Mouth (CHRYSOSTOM) into exile, and that they had appointed another bishop who was their choice; they have transgressed the command of the holy Canon, and therefore our country is destroyed. And now have pity upon us and send Abbâ JOHN to pray for us." Now when they drove that bishop out of Ethiopia he went and dwelt in the monastery wherein he had become a monk, and that was the monastery of Saint Abbâ MOSES of the desert of SCETE. When Abbâ JOSEPH the archbishop had read the letter of the King of Ethiopia, he rejoiced exceedingly because of his confidence, and he sent quickly to the desert of SCETE and brought back Abbâ JOHN, and he comforted him, and encouraged him, and sent brave men with him to the country of Ethiopia. As soon as he arrived, the plague ceased, and rain fell from heaven, and the king rejoiced with very great joy at his arrival; and this father rebuked the wicked sinners and converted them to the Orthodox Faith. And he likewise encouraged all Christian people in the right and good Faith which they had received from their fathers. And he used to interpret for them obscure passages in the Holy Scriptures, and declare their meaning unto them, and he preserved them by his teachings and prayers. And God made manifest through [fol. 51*b* 1] this holy father JOSEPH great signs and wonders, and having finished his good and divine fight, and pleased God, he died in peace, having sat upon the throne of MARK the evangelist nineteen years. He lived the life of a monk for nine and thirty years, and he had lived ten years before he adopted the life of a monk; and all the days of his life were eight and sixty years.

And on this day also Saint DIONYSIUS, Bishop of the city of Corinth, became a martyr in the days of DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIANUS, the wicked emperors. They condemned this holy man to be tortured very severely, and when they were tired of torturing him they cut off his head with a sword, and he received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens.

Salutation to Archbishop JOSEPH of the city of MANÛF, unto whom was given the knowledge of Letters. Salutation to DIONYSIUS the Bishop of Corinth whose head was cut off.

And on this day also [are commemorated] the deaths of ṬENḴĔYÂḴÊ (or TAYÂNḴÊ), and THEODOSIUS, and LAOS (TALÂWÔS), and TAXIS, and JÔSÂB (or JOSEPH), and the strife of ANDREW, the martyrs.

XXIV. ṬĔḴĔMT

[fol. 51*b* 2] IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died the fighter Abbâ ABLARIUS (HILARIUS ?) the monk and anchorite. This holy man was a native of the city of GÂZÂ, and his parents were pagans, and they taught him all the various kinds of learning of the Greeks, and their philosophy, and he was very far superior in knowledge to many of his companions, and wisdom had a dwelling place in his soul. And he wished to make himself very strong in the learning of foreign peoples, but there was no one in his city who could teach him that learning, and who could fulfil for him all that he desired. And he rose up and went to the city of Alexandria, and he went into the place where all the doctors sat, and he learned from them many kinds of learning. And a divine zeal moved within him to learn the doctrine of the Church, and he enquired for the Books of the Church, and certain men gave them to him, and he read them and understood them. And Abbâ ISKANDER, Archbishop of the city of Alexandria, revealed and explained to him the meaning of what was obscure in the Books, and he made him to understand the belief on our Lord Jesus Christ. And ISKANDER baptized him with Christian baptism, and he fought a great fight, and he became a monk and devoted himself diligently to the path of the monastic life. Then he went to Saint Abbâ ANTHONY, and he dwelt with him for many days, learning from him the path of righteousness. When he heard that his parents according to the flesh were dead, he went to his city, and took the goods which his parents had left him, and gave them to the poor and needy, and to the women who were with child. Then he entered one [fol. 51*b* 3] of the monasteries in the country of Syria, and he fought a great fight, and he devoted himself strenuously to fasting, and prayer, and bowings, and vigils, and he used to fast for six days and six nights at a time, and he used to feed himself on the grass of the desert. And his heart shone brightly, and God gave him the gift of prophecy and of working signs and wonders. After this he dwelt in that same monastery for many years, and it was in that monastery that EPIPHANIUS became a monk. And the abbot received this Saint ABLARIUS (HILARIUS ?) and he taught him the rule of the ascetic life and the Law of the Church, and he prophesied of him that he would become the Bishop of Cyprus, which came to pass even as he had prophesied. Now the days of this father were eighty years; ten years he lived in the house of his father, and seven years in the city of Alexandria, and for three and sixty years he led the life of a monk and fought a great fight. And he pleased God and died at a good old age. And Saint JOHN of the Golden Mouth praised this holy man, and Saint BASIL in his writings also praised him. Salutation to ABLARIUS (HILARIUS ?) who drank sea water and ate grass.

Salutation to ṢABLA MÂRYÂM, who was famed for her fasting and self-abnegation.

[fol. 52*a* 1] And on this day also Saint PAUL and his companion [LONGINUS], and the holy woman ZAINÂ became martyrs. Salutation to PAUL, LONGINUS, and ZAINÂ.

And on this day also are commemorated EUSIA (AUSIA), and CONSTANTINE.

XXV. Ṭĕḳĕmt

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died Abbâ BÛLÂ, who was surnamed 'ABÎB. The name of the father of this holy man was ABRAHAM, and that of his mother was ḤARÎK, and they were natives of the country of Rôm, and came from the borders of LÛPÎ; and since there was a persecution in the days of the Emperor MAXIMIANUS they continued to fly from city to city. As they lacked a son they entreated God, with fasting and prayer, to give them a son. And the angel of the Lord appeared unto them in a dream, and gave them a vine cluster which was full of grapes, and when the blessed woman conceived, a large tree which was near their house blossomed, and on the leaves thereof were written in the language of Rôm the following words: "BÛLÂ, servant of God, and the saint of the God of JACOB, [fol. 52*a* 2] Who dwelleth in Zion." And when the child was born they left him for some time without making him a Christian. Then our Lady MARY appeared unto the Archbishop of Rômê, and commanded him to go to the house of ABRAHAM and baptize the child; and when he arrived there he made him a Christian and called his name "BÛLÂ." When the father and the mother of the child heard [this] they marvelled because he had called the child by that name without their having told him the name. When the archbishop had prayed, bread for the Offering and a cup of wine came down from heaven, and he consecrated them and administered unto them the Holy Mysteries. When the boy was one year old he spoke plainly and said, "One is the Holy Father, One is the Holy Son, One is the Holy Ghost." After a little [time] his father and his mother died, on the sixteenth day of the month of Khĕdâr (Nov.–Dec.). When the boy was ten years of age there arrived a wicked governor who ordered [the people] to worship idols, and when Abbâ BÛLÂ heard about it, he went to the governor and cursed his filthy idols. When the governor saw the small stature of the boy he marvelled greatly. And he commanded [his soldiers] to drive nails into him, and to scrape his body, and to strip off his skin, and to saw off his hands and his feet, and to beat his back with whips, and to cast him on the wheel among the sharp knives and spikes, and to drag him along the road of the city; [and they did so]. And Saint MICHAEL came and saved him, and healed him. Then BÛLÂ went to another wicked governor and reviled him, [fol. 52*a* 3] and the governor was wroth with him and cut off his head with the sword, and he was crowned on the eighteenth day of the month Mîyâzyâ (April–May). And Saint MICHAEL came down from heaven and raised him up unharmed, and he took him into the desert, and he arrayed him in the garb of the monk, and put upon him a mark in appearance like the sign of the Cross, and he said unto him, "God hath commanded thee to be a companion of the Saints." And Abbâ BÛLÂ went up into a dry (i.e. withered) tree, and he dwelt therein fighting incessantly, and whensoever he remembered the Crucifixion of our Lord Jesus Christ and His Passion, he always cast himself down from the top of the tree. One day having cast himself down Satan was strong to kill him, and he died, but our Redeemer came straightway and raised him up, and he said unto him, "Thy name shall not be 'BÛLÂ' only, but ''ABÎBHÂ,' for thou shalt become many fathers." And BÛLÂ loved Christ more and more, and he was always beating his face, and cutting his flesh with knives, every member of him, and he beat his back with seven hundred stripes; through these acts he died three times and our Redeemer raised him up again. And on each occasion He shewed him how he had been born of a virgin, and on other days He shewed him how he was seized by the Jews and His Passion. And for this reason BÛLÂ lived without eating and without drinking for two and forty years, and he never lay on his side for six and sixty years. And he also kept his head fixed for twelve years and six months, until his brains perished. One day when he saw the Passion of our Lord, he placed a sword upright before him [fol. 52*b* 1] and then fell upon it and died. And our Lady MARY came with angels to the place where his body was, and she said unto him, "Peace be unto thee, O my beloved"; and his body spake and said unto her, "Peace be unto thee, O Queen of the world." And she laid her hands upon his body and healed him. And when his days were ended, and it was time for him to depart from this world, our Lord Jesus Christ appeared unto him having in His hands shining crowns set with gems of various kinds, and shining raiment. And He said unto him, "Come unto Me, O My beloved 'ABÎB, so that thou mayest enjoy never-ending pleasure. I swear unto thee by Myself that whosoever calleth upon thy name I will forgive him his sins. And whosoever commemorateth thee, or sheweth mercy on the poor, or clotheth the naked, or feedeth the hungry, or giveth drink to the thirsty man, or buildeth a shrine for thee, or writeth the story of thy strife, or readeth it or heareth it, I will forgive his sins even to the tenth generation." Having said this He kissed his mouth, and bearing him upon His breast carried him up into the air. And when he heard the praise of the angels, his soul tore itself away from his body, and entered the heavenly Jerusalem. Salutation to 'ABÎB.

Salutation to the twelve [fol. 52*b* 2] handmaidens, and to the three and forty men, and to the three hundred and sixty women, who under the influence of 'ABÎB became martyrs.

And on this day also died Abbâ 'EBLÔY (APOLLO ?), who was like the angels. The name of the father of this holy man Abbâ 'EBLÔY (APOLLO ?) was 'AMÔNÊ, and he was a native of the city of AKHMÎM; the name of his mother was MÛSYÂ. And both of them were righteous before God, and they walked in His way; and they were very charitable towards pilgrims and strangers. Now they had no son at all. And his mother MÛSYÂ saw a vision one night, and she saw in it a shining man who had with him a tree, and he planted the tree in her house, and it took root and blossomed and bore fruit. And the shining being said unto her, "Whosoever shall eat of this tree shall live for ever." And the mother of the holy man took some of the fruit thereof and ate it, and it was sweet in her mouth, and she said in her heart, "Shall I, I wonder, have fruit." When she awoke from her sleep she told her husband what she had seen. And he told her that he had seen in his vision what his wife had seen in her vision, and they praised God many times. And they added to their works of righteousness and to their strivings, and they fasted for two days at a time and their food was bread and salt. When the mother of the holy man Abbâ 'EBLÔY (APOLLO ?) conceived, she prayed many prayers and vanquished enemies. And every night she prostrated herself to the ground one thousand times, and every day five hundred times for a period of nine months, until she brought forth her son; and she called him "'EBLÔY (APOLLO ?)." After this she added to her works of goodness and righteousness. When [fol. 52*b* 3] Abbâ 'EBLÔY (APOLLO ?) arrived at man's estate he wished to assume the garb of the monk, and he continued to feel this wish until he found the means of gratifying it. Now he had a friend whose name was 'ABÎB, and taking him with him they went forth by night, and they departed and became monks in one of the monasteries of Upper Egypt; and they devoted themselves to the ascetic life and fought strenuously. After a few days 'ABÎB died, on the twenty-fifth day of the month Ṭĕḳĕmt (Oct.–Nov.). Thereupon Saint Abbâ 'EBLÔY (APOLLO ?) departed to the monastery of 'ABLÛG, and many men were gathered together [there], and he taught them the fear of God and right worship. And on the day of the death of Abbâ 'ABÎB, whilst they were performing the service of commemoration, Abbâ 'EBLÔY (APOLLO ?) said unto them, "O brethren, whosoever shall pray this day in the name of Abbâ 'ABÎB God will forgive him his sin, even as Christ promised him with this promise, in the following words: 'O My chosen one 'ABÎB, whosoever shall pray one prayer on the day of thy commemoration (now Saint 'ABÎB, had said to God, Forgive me all my sin), I will forgive him his sin for Thy Name's sake.'" And it came to pass in that hour that one of the monks died, and whilst they were standing and were burying him, one of the brethren who were monks felt doubts about what Abbâ 'EBLÔY (APOLLO ?) said. And straightway that dead man rose up, and he began to speak and to say unto them, "Why do ye doubt the words of Abbâ 'EBLÔY (APOLLO ?)? God did covenant this covenant with our father Abbâ 'ABÎB on the day of his commemoration"; when the dead man had said these words he turned and lay down again. And the brethren, the monks, marvelled and praised God. Now Abbâ 'EBLÔY (APOLLO ?) lived very many years, [fol. 53*a* 1] and he built many monasteries, and had many children; and in his days lived Abbâ MACARIUS the Great. When Abbâ MACARIUS heard the report of him he rejoiced therein exceedingly, and he wrote to him letters comforting him and his sons, the monks, and encouraging him to continue in the work which was well-pleasing to God. Now whilst Abbâ MACARIUS was writing those letters in the desert of SCETE, Abbâ 'EBLÔY (APOLLO ?), being in Upper Egypt, knew by the Holy Spirit that he was doing so. And he said unto the monks who were round about him, speaking unto them with the voice of God, "Be silent, O my brethren, for behold Abbâ MACARIUS is writing to us a letter of encouragement." Having spoken these words in this manner, behold, straightway a certain monk came having with him the letter of Abbâ MACARIUS. And the monks went out and they received him with joy, and he read the letter before all the monks with joy and they rejoiced with a great joy. This holy man Abbâ 'EBLÔY (APOLLO ?) went to the holy father Abbâ AMMONIUS, and he saw that holy woman, whose name was YAWÂHÎT, dwelling with him. And Christ having wished to give him rest from the labour of this world, he died straightway in peace on the fifth day of the month of Yakâtît (Feb.–March). Now we have written the history of Abbâ 'EBLÔY (APOLLO ?) side by side with that of his friend Abbâ 'ABÎB.

And on this day also took place the consecration of the church of Saint JULIUS the martyr, of the city of 'AKPÂṢÔS (ACFAHA). Now the saint became a martyr in the city [fol. 53*a* 2] of ṬĔWÂ, according to what is written in the account of his strife. And this took place after the destruction of DIOCLETIAN the infidel, when CONSTANTINE was reigning, and a few days before he was baptized with Christian baptism. And when he had been baptized the horn of the Christian kingdom was exalted, and churches were built in the names of the holy martyrs whom the infidel emperors had slain. When the Emperor CONSTANTINE heard the report of this holy man JULIUS, and how God had raised him up and preserved him so that he might care for the bodies of the holy martyrs, both him and his servants, and carry their bodies and bury them, and write the history of their strifes, and how he became a martyr afterwards, he praised [God] for this holy man, for his fight was good. And the emperor sent very much money to Egypt, and he commanded [the people] to build a fine church in his honour, and to carry his body thither and to lay it therein; and they built a fine church in his honour even as the emperor commanded, and they translated the body of Saint JULIUS and laid it therein. And the Archbishop of Alexandria and his bishops consecrated it, and celebrated a festival even as do we this day. And many great signs and wonders were wrought by the body of Saint JULIUS. Salutation to the consecration of thy church, O JULIUS.

[fol. 53*a* 3] And on this day also are commemorated Abbâ 'ABEL and DALÎLÂ (DELILAH), the virgin.

XXVI. Ṭĕḳĕmt

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died Saint TIMON, apostle and martyr. Our Lord chose this disciple and he was of the number of the Seventy-two disciples whom He chose and made known and sent forth; and He gave them power to heal the sick and to cast out Satans. And this holy man received the heavenly gift and the divine grace, and with it he healed the sick, and the Satans submitted unto him; and he ministered unto our Lord Jesus Christ as long as He dwelt in the body upon earth. After our Lord had ascended into heaven this holy man ministered unto the apostles continually, and until the gift of the Holy Spirit descended upon him and upon them on the day of the feast of Pentecost. After this the apostles elected him into the number of the seventy deacons whom they appointed; and the Book is a witness concerning them that they were filled with the Holy Spirit and wisdom. After he had served the office of deacon for a few days, the apostles appointed him a priest, and then they laid hands upon him and appointed him Bishop in the city of BĔSRÂ of the West, of the country of BĔLKÂ. And he preached the Faith of our Lord [fol. 53*b* 1] Jesus Christ therein, and he baptized very many Greeks and Jews. When the governor of the city heard this he seized Saint TIMON, and tortured him severely and burnt him in the fire, and he received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens. Salutation to TIMON.

And on this day also are commemorated Saint JAMES, the brother of our Lord, and ḤÛRÂS the martyr.

And on this day also died PHILIP and SAWGENÂS.

XXVII. ṬĔḴĔMT

On this day died the holy and blessed father Abbâ MACARIUS, Bishop of the city of ḴÂW. In this holy man were fulfilled the words of DAVID the prophet, saying, "Blessed is the man who hath not walked in the counsel of the ungodly, who hath not stood in the way of sinners, and who hath not sat in the seat of the scoffers, but whose pleasure is in the Law of God, and in that Law he doth meditate (or speak) day and night" (Psalm i). This holy man kept the commandment of God, [fol. 53*b* 2] and he traded with [his] talent and gained profit thereby. How many were the signs and great wonders which God wrought by the hands of this holy man! Concerning him it is said that when he was in the city of ḴÂW, every time he took his seat upon the throne to teach the people he would weep continuously. And one of his disciples whom he loved exceedingly adjured him, saying, "Why dost thou weep continuously, my father?" And because of his disciple's adjuration he answered and said, "I weep when I see the sins of the people and the evil of their works; even as oil is seen upon glass." And on another occasion he saw our Lord Christ sitting upon the altar, and the angels bringing unto Him the works of each and every man. And he heard a voice which said, "Bishop, why dost thou keep thyself invisible to the people? Why dost thou not rebuke them and teach them?" And the bishop said, "My Lord, they will not accept my words." And He said unto him, "It is meet for a bishop to admonish the people and to teach them; and if they will not receive his words then their blood be upon their own heads." For this reason the holy man was always weeping. Then [this father] was summoned to go with Saint Abbâ DIOSCURUS to the Council which had been assembled by the Emperor MARCIANUS. And when he arrived at the royal palace the guard would not allow him to enter because of his mean attire, and the soldiers told Abbâ DIOSCURUS, who said unto them, "Bring him in, for he is a bishop." When he had gone in and had heard their words concerning our Lord [fol. 53*b* 3] in their evil faith, how they separated His Godhead and assigned to Him Two Natures, this holy man became wroth with them, and he cursed the Emperor MARCIANUS in the Council. And he spake to the emperor fearlessly, for he had delivered himself over to death for the True Faith; and [the emperor] exiled him and DIOSCURUS to the island of GÂGRÂ. And from this place DIOSCURUS sent him with a certain believing man to the city of Alexandria, and he prophesied to him, saying, "Needs must that thou shalt receive the crown of martyrdom." When Saint Abbâ MACARIUS had arrived in the city of Alexandria, there reached him at this time a letter from the infidel Emperor MARCIANUS, and with it was a roll containing a copy of the wicked creed, which assigned to Christ Two Natures. Now MARCIANUS, the infidel emperor, had commanded his envoy and said unto him, "He who shall first write [his name] on this roll, and doth believe our belief, make him Archbishop of the city of Alexandria." And there was in the city of Alexandria a certain man, an infidel, a high priest, whose name was 'ABRÔTÂRÎ, and he took that filthy roll and wished to write [his name] first on it. And Saint Abbâ MACARIUS said unto 'ABRÔTÂRÎ, "Remember the word which Abbâ DIOSCURUS spake unto thee when he went from the city of Alexandria, saying, 'Thou shalt have dominion over the Church after me'"; and 'ABRÔTÂRÎ remembered that word and did not wish to write [his name] on that filthy roll. And the envoy of the emperor made known to him that Bishop [fol. 54*a* 1] Abbâ MACARIUS did not believe in the faith of the Emperor MARCIANUS, and that he would not write [his name] on that filthy roll. When the emperor heard this, he rose up in wrath, and he sent and had Saint Abbâ MACARIUS beaten on his members secretly, and straightway Abbâ MACARIUS died, and received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of heaven. And believers carried away the saint's body, and they placed it with the bodies of Saint JOHN the Baptist and ELISHA the prophet. Now Saint Abbâ MACARIUS had seen a vision wherein these saints, JOHN and ELISHA, had said unto him, "Thy body shall be with ours." And the body of Saint Abbâ MACARIUS was with the bodies of Abbâ MACARIUS the Great, and Abbâ MACARIUS the Alexandrian in the monastery of SCETE. And this father MACARIUS went to Christ Whom he loved, and crowned himself with the crown of endurance. Many salutations to MACARIUS, who hated false belief. When the wife of the governor laid her hand on the face of this holy man she was cleansed of her leprosy and made whole.

On this day also are commemorated PAUL of the Cell, and JULIANUS and his companions who became martyrs.

XXVIII. ṬĔḴĔMT

[fol. 54*a* 2] IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day the great saints MARCIANUS and MERCURIUS became martyrs. These holy men were disciples of Saint PAUL the martyr, Archbishop of the city of Constantinia. When the Emperor CONSTANTINE, the son of CONSTANTINE the Great, reigned, the belief of the infidel ARIUS waxed strong and he made himself the enemy of Abbâ PAUL, Archbishop of the city of Constantinia, and he banished him to the country of Armenia, and strangled him and killed him there. And saints MARCIANUS and MERCURIUS wrote jointly on the day of the death of Saint PAUL, and cursed the emperor, and they said of him that he believed the faith of ARIUS the infidel, and they anathematized ARIUS and the emperor. And a certain wicked man went and made accusations against them to the emperor, and said unto him, "They have cursed thee and they have cursed ARIUS." Now the emperor was dwelling in a certain village, and he sent and had the saints brought to him, and he commanded [his soldiers] to slay them with the sword, and they slew them and buried them where they had been slain, and their bodies remained in that place until the days of JOHN of the Golden Mouth. And when JOHN heard the history of them he sent and brought their honourable bodies into the city of Constantinia; and he built a beautiful church for them, and he translated their bodies and laid them in it, and the people made a great feast as at this day. Salutation to MARCIANUS and MERCURIUS, [fol. 54*a* 3] disciples of PAUL the archbishop.

And on this day also are commemorated Abbâ MAḲṢÛ (or MAḲDÛ), and MACARIUS, and the death of JAPHET the son of NOAH, whom his father blessed, saying, "God shall make broad the land of JAPHET."

And on this day also died Saint Abbâ YAM'ATÂ, who was one of the Nine Saints. Salutation to YAM'ATÂ, whose body was buried in a rock on the top of a mountain.

Salutation to ABRAHAM, who separated himself from the Gentiles, and to JACOB, and to ISAAC. [This paragraph is not in the Bodleian MS.]

XXIX. ṬĔḲĔMT

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day is celebrated the festival of the BIRTH of our Lord and Redeemer Jesus Christ, by the Lady of us all, the holy two-fold virgin MARY, the [fol. 54*b* 1] God-bearer, for ever and ever, Amen. Salutation to thy birth O Flower who blossomed without water.

And on this day also the great Saint DEMETRIUS became a martyr. This holy man lived in the days of MAXIMIANUS the infidel, and he was a native of the city of Thessalonica; he was a Christian, and he learned various kinds of learning, but he held in more esteem than all of them the doctrine of the Church, the holy Orthodox Faith. And he taught and preached continually in the Name of our Lord Jesus Christ, and he converted many pagans, and brought them into the Faith of our Lord Jesus Christ. And certain men made accusations against Saint DEMETRIUS to the infidel emperor, who commanded [his soldiers] to bring him to him. And there came to the place where the emperor was a man who was strong in his body, and thick in his bones, and who vanquished every man by his strength, and he was a skilled fighting man and no one was able to vanquish him. And the emperor loved this man exceedingly, and boasted of his superiority over every other man, and said, "I will give much money to the man who shall vanquish him"; but there was no man who was able to do so. At that moment there rose up from among those who were there a certain man, a Christian, whose name was BASTIUS, and he came to Saint DEMETRIUS and asked him to pray for him, and to make the sign of the Cross with his hand on his body. And Saint DEMETRIUS prayed over him, [fol. 54*b* 2] and he made upon the body of that man the sign of the Cross, which maketh invincible him that believed thereon. And that man went to the emperor and asked him to let him fight with that fighter of whom the emperor boasted. And the emperor commanded that BASTIUS should fight with him, and he thought that the mighty man would vanquish him just as he had vanquished every other man. When BASTIUS joined in fight with that mighty man, he vanquished him and threw him on the ground, and the emperor was very sorry for this and was ashamed, and he marvelled, and said, "By what means did BASTIUS vanquish that mighty man?" And the emperor asked his soldiers concerning this, and they told him that the holy man DEMETRIUS had prayed over him and had made the sign of the Cross upon his body. When the emperor heard this he was exceedingly wroth with Saint DEMETRIUS, and he commanded his soldiers to beat him until he offered incense to the gods, and worshipped them, and they did as he commanded. And when DEMETRIUS would not obey his command the emperor commanded the soldiers to thrust at him with spears until he died. And the soldiers told DEMETRIUS about this command, and they thought that he would deny and abandon the Faith of Christ, and worship idols. And Saint DEMETRIUS said unto them, "Do whatsoever ye please, for I will neither offer incense to nor worship the filthy gods; I will worship only our Lord [Jesus Christ], the Son of the Living God, Who is God in truth." And straightway the soldiers drove spears into him until he died, and he delivered up his pure soul into the hands of Christ. And when they threw out the body of the saint certain believing Christians took it and laid it in a sarcophagus in their house, [fol. 54*b* 3] and it remained hidden among them until the end of the days of persecution. And God revealed it to the Christians, who brought out his body, which was with them, and they built a great church for him in the city of Thessalonica, and they laid the body of the saint therein, and to this day it worketh great signs and miracles. And each day there distilleth from it oil and unguent having an exceedingly sweet odour, and when those who are sick anoint themselves therewith in firm faith they become healed, especially on the day of his commemoration. On that day he distilleth the unguent in a larger quantity than on any other day, and it drippeth from the walls of the church and the pillars thereof, and the people collect it and pour it into their scent bottles. And this sign shall continue, and shall be found to exist until the end of the world; now the priests and the righteous men who have seen this wonderful thing testify concerning [the truth thereof]. Salutation to DEMETRIUS who was stabbed to death with spears.

Salutation to SAḲṬĔR the martyr, the friend of Mâr DEMETRIUS (?), and salutation to his servant who was cut to pieces after him.

XXX. Ṭĕḳĕmt

[fol. 55*a* 1] IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died the holy father, the fighter who prayed always, ABRAHAM the anchorite. This holy man was a native of the city of MANÛF, and his parents feared God, and served Christ, and they were exceedingly rich in the possessions of this world. When he had grown to man's estate, this holy man wished to put on the garb of the ascetic life. And he departed to the city of AKHMÎM in Upper Egypt, and he came to the saint and great man Abbâ PACHOMIUS, who arrayed him in the garb of the monk, and he subjected his body to strenuous work and continuous ascetic practices, and he fought incessantly and served God. And he dwelt with Abbâ PACHOMIUS in his own company for three and twenty years, and then Saint ABRAHAM asked Abbâ PACHOMIUS to allow him to dwell by himself in a cell (or cave); and Abbâ PACHOMIUS having commanded, ABRAHAM departed and went into a cell, and he made with his own hands curved hooks wherewith men caught fish. And our Lord Jesus Christ brought unto him a certain layman who used to take what his hands made and go and buy for him dried beans, which he would carry to him, and what was left of the payment for his handiwork he gave to the poor and needy. The food of this holy man ABRAHAM each day in the evening was a handful of beans soaked in water with a little salt thrown upon them; and he dwelt in this cell and lived this life of self-abnegation for thirteen years. And the apparel which he used to put on was that in which he went forth from the monastery, and it was worn out in these days, [fol. 55*a* 2] for he had had it a very long time, and he covered his body with rags. After [each] two or three years he used to go up to the brethren the monks, and partake of the Holy Mysteries and then return to his cell. At the beginning of his dwelling in the cell the Satans used to come to him and terrify him, and make him hear voices, and they made themselves like [beings of] the underworld; and ABRAHAM used to drive them away just as a man driveth away dogs. When his death drew nigh he sent that layman to the monastery of Saint Abbâ PACHOMIUS, and he summoned Saint THEODORE his disciple, and when he came to him [he bowed down] at his feet, and he embraced him and asked him to remember him and to pray over him. Then Saint ABRAHAM rose up and prayed with Saint THEODORE and he lay down with his face to the east, and he delivered up his soul into the hand of God. And Saint THEODORE sent to the monastery, and the monks came and carried his body thereto, and they all prayed over him and were blessed by him, and they laid him with the bodies of the saints. Salutation to ABRAHAM who dressed in rags and ate beans soaked in water.

And on this day also are commemorated FÂLÎBÛN, and KAYNÂ, and the appearance [fol. 55*a* 3] of the head of JOHN the Baptist, and MARTÊS (MARTHA), and Mârs (MARY ?), and ISAAC [the king]. Salutation to ISAAC the king.

Here endeth the blessed month of Ṭĕḳĕmt by the good pleasure of God Most High, and by the Will of His Son Jesus Christ, and by the help of our holy Lady, the two-fold Virgin, MARY, the God-bearer. May the blessing of her prayers and the gift of her help, and the mercy of her beloved Son be with our King JOHN, and with the Queen SABLA WANGÊL, and with his scribe WALDA HÂYMÂNÔT, and may God have mercy upon us in the kingdom of the heavens, with all the martyrs, for ever and ever! Amen and Amen.

THE THIRD MONTH—KHĔDÂR (ḤĔDÂR)
(NOV. 7–DEC. 6)

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

[fol. 56*a* 1] Month of KHĔDÂR the blessed. In this month the length of the [first] day is ten hours, and then it diminisheth.

I. KHĔDÂR

On this day the fighters and saints MAXIMUS, and MANFIUS, and VICTORIUS, and PHILIP [of Africa, became martyrs]. These holy fighters were natives of the country of PHRYGIA, and they were brethren in the Holy Spirit though not according to the flesh, and they gathered together and became companions for the sake of the love of Christ. And in the days of DECIUS, the infidel emperor, the SEVEN CHILDREN fled and hid themselves in a cave in the top of a mountain. And when these fighters [and] martyrs MAXIMUS and his companions saw the infidel emperor denying Christ, and torturing the Christians, they rose up and gathered themselves together, and they agreed together with one consent that they would declare publicly their faith. And they drew nigh unto that infidel emperor, and they cried out, saying, "We are Christians openly, and we believe on Christ, the Son of the Living God, and we bow down before Him and we serve Him." When that infidel heard these words he was wroth with them, and he commanded [the soldiers] to beat them; and they beat them very severely for a long time with whips made of leather. And they beat them again with iron rods which had been made red-hot in the fire, and then they rubbed their wounds with bits of rag made of hair which had been soaked in vinegar and salt. When they would not obey his commands, and were not afraid of his tortures, and would not turn from their good counsel, the emperor waxed exceedingly wroth, and he commanded the soldiers to torture them very severely, and [the soldiers] did unto them even as [fol. 56*a* 2] he commanded. And when those who were there saw the patient endurance of the holy martyrs, many of them believed on our Lord Jesus Christ. Then straightway the emperor commanded the soldiers to cut off their heads, and to hack each of them in twain with a single blow of their swords, and thereupon they all received crowns of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens. Salutation to MAXIMUS and his brethren.

II. KHĔDÂR

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died Abbâ SANITIUS, the sixty-third Archbishop of the city of Alexandria. This father used to teach the people, and he sat for fifteen years and died in peace.

And on this day also died the holy father Abbâ PETER, the twenty-seventh Archbishop of the city of Alexandria, who was appointed after Saint TIMOTHY. After God had chosen this holy father for the office of archbishop, and he had taken his seat upon the [fol. 56*a* 3] Apostolic Throne, AKKAEUS (AKAKIOS), Archbishop of the city of Constantinia (471–489), wrote to him a letter wherein he spake and confessed the Holy Trinity, One God, according to the Faith of Saints CYRIL and DIOSCURUS, and he also spake clearly in it, saying, "It is not right to separate His Divine Nature from His Incarnation, and after their union the benefit of the union must not be cut off." And Abbâ PETER wrote an answer to his letter wherein he accepted [what he had said] concerning the True Faith, and he sent the letter to him with three learned bishops. When they came to the Archbishop of the city of Constantinia he accepted those bishops and the letter which they had with them, and he associated them with him in the consecration of the Offering, and in the Offering; and he read the letter before the people who believed his word. Then AKKAEUS (AKAKIOS) wrote a second letter and sent it to Abbâ PETER wherein were explanations of many passages from the Holy Scriptures; and Abbâ PETER assembled the bishops who were under his authority, and he read that letter before them, and rejoiced exceedingly, and they admired the words and the explanations therein, and they believed in their participation with him in the True Faith. And there came upon this father great tribulation which was caused by the Jews, and evil men, and pagans, because of the Faith, and they drove him from his archiepiscopal throne; but after a few days he returned to the throne of his office. And he used to teach his flock continually, and strengthen them [fol. 56*b* 1] in the True Faith. When he was far away from them in exile he used to teach them to be strong by his letters, and when he was with them he used to teach them by his words; and he sat upon his throne for ten years, and died in peace. Salutation to the blessed SANITIUS and to his great companion.

And on this day also are commemorated SATÊNWÂ (SETENNA), the prophetess of Alexandria, and Saint 'ANESGESYÂ (ANASTASIA), and Abbâ LÎBÂNÔS.

III. KHĔDÂR

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died the great Saint CYRIACUS. This holy man was born in the city of Corinth, and his parents were Orthodox Christians, and they taught him the doctrine of the Orthodox Church. They brought him to Abbâ PETER, Bishop of the city of Corinth, and he prayed over him and appointed him a reader; now he was the son of this father's brother. And he used to read the Scriptures continually, and enquire into the meaning of phrases, and ordinances of the Law of the Church, and he was superior [fol. 56*b* 2] to many in his learning and wisdom. And the bishop commanded him not to abandon the reading of the Scriptures, and CYRIACUS used to read continually to the people in church and in the bishop's house; and the bishop rejoiced in his reading of the Scriptures. When the days of CYRIACUS were eighteen years, his parents asked him to take unto himself a wife, but he did not want to do this. After this he begged his parents to allow him to depart to a monastery, and they permitted him, and he was always going to the monasteries and returning to his parents. And having visited the monasteries very often [at length he wished] to assume the holy garb of the monk. And he departed to holy Jerusalem, and he visited Saint Abbâ CYRIL, Bishop of Jerusalem, and he told him his mind in respect of the life of the monk. And CYRIL said unto him, "Thou hast wrought a good work, and thou hast loved [it]"; and he prophesied of him that he would become a great father, and that he would fight a great fight, and that the souls of many would shine through him. And Abbâ CYRIL the bishop blessed him and sent him away to the honourable father Abbâ ROMANUS, father of the monks of Palestine. And this father accepted him, and rejoiced in him, and he arrayed him in the garb of the monk, and he gave him one of the old men of that monastery to admonish him, and to teach him the Rule of the monks, and to make him to know the artifices and crafts of Satan. And this saint gave himself wholly to fasting, and prayer, and bowings to the ground, and vigils, and severe labours both by night and by day, in patient endurance, and the deepest abasement, and humility. And God bestowed upon him the gift of healing, [fol. 56*b* 3] and he used to heal all the sick people who came unto him; and the report of him, and of his virtues and of his holiness was noised everywhere. When the holy father Abbâ CYRIL, Bishop of Jerusalem, went to the holy Council of One Hundred and Fifty Bishops who were gathered together in the city of Constantinia because of MACEDONIUS, the enemy of the Holy Ghost, he took this holy man with him. And CYRIACUS opposed the arguments of MACEDONIUS, the infidel, and he vanquished him by the word (or voice) of the Holy Spirit which dwelt in him. And having grown old and attained to a good age, and pleased God, he died in peace; and after his death God made manifest great signs and miracles through his body, one of which was the following. Now his body hath remained in one of the monasteries of the city of Jerusalem from the time of his death until the present day, and it hath not suffered any corruption. All those who go to the city of Jerusalem and look upon his body, think that he died only a few days ago, whereas he has been dead for a period of six hundred years. Now, he lived in the days of THEODOSIUS the Great, the father of ARCADIUS and HONORIUS. Salutation to CYRIACUS.

Salutation to HABAKKUK the prophet. [Omitted in the Bodleian MS.]

[fol. 57*a* 1] And on this day also died Saint ATHANASIUS and his sister IRENE after MAXIMIANUS had tortured them with very severe tortures. And having wearied in torturing them he cast them into a pit naked, and the soldiers shut the door of the pit on them and they died therein. Salutation to ATHANASIUS and IRENE.

IV. KHĔDÂR

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day Saints EPIMACHUS and AZARIANUS became martyrs. These men were from Rômê, and certain men accused them before a governor who had been appointed by MAXIMIANUS of being believers in Christ. When they had come before him he questioned them about their Faith, and they confessed that they were Christians, and then they abused the governor because he had forsaken the God Who created the heavens and the earth and all that therein is, and because he worshipped idols which were the work of men's hands, and which could neither see nor hear, and wherein dwelt Satan [fol. 57*a* 2] and led men astray. And the governor marvelled at their audacity and commanded the soldiers to cut off their heads, and [the saints] received crowns of martyrdom in the kingdom of heaven. Salutation to EPIMACHUS and to AZARIANUS.

And on this day also JAMES and JOHN, Bishops of the country of Persia, became martyrs by the hand of SAPOR, the son of ḤĔRMAZ (HORMIZD) the King of Persia. The king ordered them to worship the sun and the moon and the fire, and to offer sacrifice to them, and when they would not obey his order, he commanded the soldiers to torture them severely, and they did so. And whilst [the saints] were undergoing the torture, they were teaching the multitude, and strengthening them in the Faith of our Lord Jesus Christ. When the king saw the boldness of their hearts, and their patience under the torture, and that they would not turn from their Faith, and would not cease from the teaching of the people, he commanded the soldiers to cast them into the fire, and they did so. And having delivered up their souls into the hand of our Lord Jesus Christ they received crowns of martyrdom with all the saints. Salutation to JAMES and JOHN, [fol. 57*a* 3] Bishops of the country of Persia.

And on this day also Saint THOMAS, Bishop of the city of Damascus, became a martyr by the hand of an Arab king who was a Muslim. When the Muslims were reigning in the country of Syria and in the country of Egypt, this holy man held a debate with one of their learned men, and he vanquished him, and forced him and compelled him [to admit] that our Lord Christ was God, the Creator of the heavens and the earth, and of all that therein is. The Muslim having been worsted in argument went to the governor, his fellow-countryman, and made an accusation to him against THOMAS, saying, "This Christian hath cursed our religion." And the governor had this holy man brought, and he asked him, saying, "Is it true that thou hast cursed our religion even as this man saith of thee?" And the holy man said unto him, "No curse hath ever gone forth from my mouth, but I have forced him [to admit] that Christ is God in truth, and that after the Law of Christ there cometh no other Law." And the governor said unto him, "The Law which I myself hold, is it from God or not?" And the saint said unto him, "It is not from God." When he had said these words the governor was wroth with him, and he commanded the soldiers to cut off the head of the holy man with the sword; and they cut off his holy head, and he received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens.

[fol. 57*b* 1] Salutation to THOMAS, the companion of ZACHARIAS the teacher, Bishop of Damascus.

And on this day also is commemorated the great father ZACHARIAS.

And on this day also are commemorated Abbâ 'ABAYDÔ (ABAIDUS) the perfect monk, who rejected the life of this world, and Abbâ JOHN his disciple, and a company of martyrs, and PETER, Archbishop of Alexandria. Salutation to 'ABAYDÔ (ABAIDUS) and to JOHN.

V. Khĕdâr

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day appeared the head of Saint LONGINUS, master of the spear, who pierced the side of our Lord Jesus Christ, when He was hanging on the wood of the Cross. Now the Emperor TIBERIUS CAESAR sent [soldiers] to the country of Cappadocia, [fol. 57*b* 2] and they cut off the head of Saint LONGINUS on the twenty-third day of the month Ḥamlê (July–Aug.). And the head of the holy man and his body were cast out on the ground, and the soldier who had come from the emperor to cut off his head took it and carried the head away with him to Jerusalem and gave it to PILATE the Pontinian. And PILATE the governor shewed the head to the Jews, who rejoiced and were glad at his death. And PILATE commanded his soldiers to bury the head of the holy man in a certain hill which was outside the city of Jerusalem, and they went and buried the head there. And after many days there [came] a certain woman from the country of Cappadocia, and she had become a believer through Saint LONGINUS when he preached in the country of Cappadocia; and when they cut off his head with a sword she was standing by looking on and weeping. Now by the Will of God the eyes of the woman became blind, and she took her son and departed to Jerusalem so that she might be blessed [through visiting] the holy places, and to pray and prostrate herself to the ground in them and at the tomb of our Lord Jesus Christ, that peradventure her eyes might be opened. When she came to Jerusalem her son died, and her sorrow was increased by the death of her son, and by her blindness, and by the impossibility of her returning to her native country. And she wept bitterly, and as she was weeping she fell asleep in her sorrow, and in her sleep she saw Saint LONGINUS, and with him was her son who was dead, and he said unto her, "Go to such and such a place and take my head from there." When she awoke from her sleep she enquired concerning that place, and certain men brought her to it, and when [fol. 57*b* 3] she dug there a sweet odour which was exceedingly fragrant rose up to her. When she came to the place where the head of the saint was a great light was revealed to her, and straightway her eyes were opened and she saw clearly, and she praised God. And she removed the head of the saint, and laid scented unguent upon it, and she placed it by the body of her son. And she departed to her own country glorifying God and praising Saint LONGINUS. Salutation to LONGINUS who was crowned in Rôm.

And on this day also are commemorated TIMOTHY the martyr; and the translation of the body of Saint THEODORE the martyr, a captain of soldiers of the city of SĔṬB, in the province of ASYÛṬ in Upper Egypt; and the dedication of a church to him wherein great signs and wonders took place through his body; and Abbâ YÔḤANNÎ. Salutation to TIMOTHY the martyr. Salutation to YÔḤANNÎ, who was a companion of those who travelled to the country of the healthy ones. Salutation to the translation of thy body, O THEODORE, who when God wished to destroy the earth with a flood, didst command the sea, and its waters withdrew.

VI. KHĔDÂR

[fol. 58*a* 1] IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died the holy father FELIX, Archbishop of the city of Rôm. The parents of this holy man were Christians, and they taught him all the doctrine of the Church, and ANASTASIUS, Archbishop of the city of Rôm, made him a deacon. When JUSTUS was appointed Archbishop of the city of Rôm, he perceived the intelligence and good disposition of this man, and his fair righteousness, and he made him a priest. When DIONYSIUS, Archbishop of the city of Rôm, died, now he lived in the days of THEONASIUS, Archbishop of the city of Alexandria, they chose Saint FELIX to be Archbishop of the city of Rôm, and by the Will of God he was appointed, and he guarded and protected the flock of Christ well. After the death of TÛRES (sic) CAESAR, THEODORE CAESAR reigned, and he made those who believed in Christ to suffer great tribulation, and he tortured them with exceedingly cruel tortures, and very many of them suffered martyrdom at his hands. Through him very great tribulation and sorrow came upon this father, and he [fol. 58*a* 2] entreated God concerning it, and God destroyed the emperor in the second year of his reign. When DIOCLETIAN the infidel reigned he afflicted the Christians and tortured them, and this father Abbâ FELIX prayed to God that he might not live to see the tortures of the Christians, and he died in the early days of the year in which DIOCLETIAN ascended the throne. All the days which this father sat upon the Apostolic throne were five years and a half. He composed discourses and admonitions and exhortations, and in some of these he discussed excommunication and the Orthodox Faith; these are exceedingly good works and are profitable to Christians. Salutation to FELIX who was chosen for the archiepiscopate, the interpreter of the New and the Old Testaments.

And on this day also our Lord and Redeemer Jesus Christ and His disciples were gathered together on MOUNT ḲUĔSḲUÂM, and He consecrated His Tabernacle and Church, and performed the consecration of the Offering with His disciples on that day. This was the first consecration [of the Offering] on MOUNT ḲUĔSḲUÂM, according to what [fol. 58*a* 3] Saint THEOPHILUS and Saint CYRIL, Archbishop of the city of Alexandria, testify concerning this matter. Salutation to those who have taken refuge at thy feet, O MOUNT ḲUĔSḲUÂM, namely to MARY and her Child CHRIST.

Salutation, salutation to JÔSÂ, son of JOSEPH.

And on this day also are commemorated AFRÔS, and ADINIUS (?), and JUSTUS, and MARTERUS, and LUCIRIUS (LUCINIUS), and SUNÎNUS, and BANDICORUS (LABANDICORUS), and EULASIUS, and CORNELIUS, and eight thousand (or seventeen thousand) martyrs of the congregation of ISIDORE.

VII. KHĔDÂR

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day Saint GEORGE the Great, the Alexandrian, became a martyr. The father of this holy man was a foreigner, and he was of the men of Alexandria, and he had no son. And the festival of the dedication of the church of Saint GEORGE the Martyr in the city of Lydda arrived, now it was celebrated on the seventh day of Khĕdâr, and he entreated Saint GEORGE to intercede on his behalf with God so that He might give him a son; and God accepted his intercession, and gave him a son, and he called his name GEORGE. And the mother of this holy man was the sister of ARMENIUS, governor of the city of Alexandria, and when his parents died, he lived with [fol. 58*b* 1] his mother's brother; and his days were fifteen years. And GEORGE loved the poor exceedingly, and he was merciful and kindly and he loved the Church. Now ARMENIUS had an only daughter, and [one day] she went out with her friends to divert herself, and she found a monastery outside the city of Alexandria wherein the monks were gathered together, and they were singing sweet hymns. And the sound of their hymns and their praises came and penetrated the heart of the maiden, and she began to ask GEORGE, the son of her father's sister, to tell her the meaning of the words of the hymns which the monks were singing. And as he was explaining to her the meaning of the hymns and making her to understand them, he told her of the punishment which would come upon sinners, and of the peace and joy which would come upon the righteous and the virtuous. When she returned to her father ARMENIUS she confessed our Lord Jesus Christ before him. And ARMENIUS began to persuade her, and he said unto her, "O my daughter, do not this thing"; but she would neither listen to his words nor obey him; and he commanded the soldiers to cut off her head, and they cut it off with the sword, and she received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens. And certain men told the governor, saying, "It is GEORGE, thy sister's son, who hath led astray thy daughter." And the governor seized Saint GEORGE, and after he had tortured him very severely he sent him to the city of 'ĔNṢĔNÂ, where they tortured him very severely, and afterwards cut off his holy head with a sword; and GEORGE received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens. Now there was there a certain deacon whose name was SAMUEL, and he took his holy body [fol. 58*b* 2] and carried it to the city of MANÛF. And when the wife of ARMENIUS, the brother of the mother of Saint GEORGE, knew that GEORGE had become a martyr, she sent and took his body and placed it with the body of her daughter in the city of Alexandria. Salutation to GEORGE.

On this day also the holy man Abbâ NÂHRĔW became a martyr. This holy man [came] from the district of the Fayyûm in the country of Egypt, and he feared God exceedingly. And when he heard the stories about the martyrs, he went to the city of Alexandria, and wished to die for the sake of the Name of our Lord Jesus Christ. And [our Lord] said unto him in a vision, "Needs must that thou go and die in the city of Antioch." And he pondered in his heart and said, "How can I possibly get there?" And he sought out a ship in which he could embark. And God sent unto him the angel MICHAEL who carried him on his wings from the city of Alexandria, and brought him to the city of Antioch, and set him down near DIOCLETIAN; and NÂHRĔW confessed the Living God. And the emperor asked him his name, and the name of his city, and NÂHRĔW told him that he was from the country of Egypt, and the emperor wondered about [the manner of] his coming. And the emperor tried to persuade him [to deny Christ], and he promised him that he would give him much money, and costly raiment, if he would submit to him [fol. 58*b* 3] and offer sacrifice to his idols, but he would not hearken to what he said unto him. And the emperor spake a second time, saying, "I will torture thee with very severe tortures," but NÂHRĔW was neither afraid of him nor did he obey his command. And the emperor commanded his soldiers to torture him with many different kinds of tortures. On the first occasion he drove savage lions to attack him, on the second he burnt him in the fire, on the third he tortured him on the wheel, and on the fourth he boiled him in a large cauldron. When the emperor was tired of torturing him he commanded his soldiers to cut off his head, and they cut it off and he received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens. And it came to pass that instead of being martyred in Antioch, all the martyrs who ought to have been martyred in the city of Antioch, were martyred in the land of Egypt; and similarly this holy man Abbâ NÂHRĔW, who was from the country of Egypt, and should have been martyred in Egypt, received the crown of martyrdom in the city of Antioch. At that time Saint JULIAN dwelt in Antioch, and he took the body of NÂHRĔW the martyr and sent it away in charge of two of his servants to his country with great honour. Salutation to the man who was borne on the wings of MICHAEL.

And on this day also died Abbâ MÎNÂS, Bishop of the city of TAMAI. This holy man was from the city of GAMNÛDÎ and he was the only child of his father. His parents were God-fearing folk, and they laboured in the works [fol. 59*a* 1] of the monks in respect of their fasts, and prayers, and their devotion to the ascetic life, and their fightings, and at length the report of them was heard by all men, and by all the fathers. And they made their son to marry a wife against his will. And when the bridegroom came into his marriage-chamber with the maiden who called herself his wife, he made an agreement with her that they were to keep their bodies pure and that they were not to pollute them and their virginity; and they fought a great fight. Then Saint MÎNÂS wanted to assume the garb of the monk, and he said unto his wife, "It is undesirable for us to do the works of the ascetic life whilst we are still living in the world." Now they used to wear sackcloth made of hair beneath their apparel, and they used to stand up all night long keeping vigil, and praying, and reading the Books of God. After this she embraced him and bade him farewell, and he departed to the monastery of Abbâ ANTHONY, wishing, by so doing, to be far away from his parents, for they were seeking him everywhere, and they had with them an order from the emperor bidding him to return to his wife; but God protected him and they did not find him at all. And Saint MÎNÂS dwelt in the monastery of ANTHONY for many days, and he devoted himself to ascetic labours and fought strenuously. Now there was there with him living like a monk Abbâ MICHAEL, Archbishop of the city of Alexandria. After this he left the monastery of Saint Abbâ ANTHONY, and he departed to the monastery of Saint Abbâ MACARIUS of SCETE. In their days lived the two bright stars, Abbâ ABRAHAM and Abbâ GA'ÂRGÎ, and Saint [fol. 59*a* 2] Abbâ MÎNÂS was a beloved son unto them, and he dwelt with them in their cell. And he multiplied his labours in the angelic toil of the ascetic life, and he learned their doctrine, and the way in which they fought, and in his fightings and piety he excelled many of the fathers, and Abbâ ABRAHAM and Abbâ GA'ÂRGÎ, and other fathers marvelled at him. And Satan was jealous of him, and he beat him with a great beating internally, and he lay prostrate on the ground for two months; but after this our Lord Jesus Christ raised him up whole and unharmed, and he roared like a lion against Satan. After this our Lord Jesus Christ summoned him to become a bishop, and the envoys of the archbishop came to him; and he was exceedingly sorrowful and he wept because of his separation from the desert of SCETE. And the holy fathers said unto him, "Be not sorrowful, for this is from God"; and he bowed to the Will of God, and he departed with the envoys of the archbishop, and the archbishop made him Bishop of the city of TAMAI. Now God gave him the gift of healing the sick, and all those who were sick used to come to him, and he would pray to God for them and they were healed straightway. And God also gave him the gift of the knowledge of hidden things, and he knew what was in the minds of men. All the bishops whose sees were in the districts near him used to come to him from all parts, and take counsel with him, and accept his advice, and bow to his decisions; and the laity also used to come [fol. 59*a* 3] to him from all parts of the country to hear his wise doctrine. He was the father of four archbishops, and he laid his hand upon them when they were enthroned; now these were, ISKANDER, and COSMAS, and THEODORE, and MICHAEL, Archbishop of the city of Alexandria. When our Lord Christ wished him to depart from this transitory world this father knew by the Holy Spirit the day of his departure. And he sent messengers and they brought all the people who were in his diocese, and he commanded them to be strong in the Orthodox Faith, and to keep the precepts of the Holy Gospel. Then he committed them to their True Shepherd, our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and he departed from this transitory world, and came to Christ Whom he loved. And all the people wept and mourned the departure from them of their good shepherd and father who protected them upon earth in the place of God, and they buried him in a fitting manner, and laid him in the place where he had directed he should be laid. Salutation to MÎNÂS, Bishop of the city of TAMAI.

And on this day also was consecrated the church of the holy and honourable, the great one among martyrs, GEORGE of the city of Lydda. And God wrought therein [fol. 59*b* 1] signs and great wonders which made the hearts of men to rejoice, and at length the history [of the holy man] and his wonderful acts were heard on sea and on land. When the Emperor DIOCLE-

TIAN, the infidel, heard the report of the church of Saint GEORGE, and the signs and great wonders which took place therein, he sent a captain whose name was EUKHEIUS together with a large company of soldiers to destroy the church. And that captain came there with arrogance, and he went up into the tower wherein was the image (or picture) of Saint GEORGE, and he began to scoff at the church, and at Saint GEORGE. And he had a staff in his hand, and he struck with it the lamp which was burning before the picture (or image) of Saint GEORGE, and he broke it, and straightway a fragment of the glass fell from it and dropped on the head of the infidel without his knowledge. And fear and great trembling fell upon him, and his head became filled with fever, and he fell and lay prostrate on the ground. And his companions took him up to carry him to their own country, for they knew well that all this which had come upon him was caused by Saint GEORGE the mighty and victorious martyr; and whilst they were carrying him on the road that captain died in disgrace and misery, and the soldiers took him up and cast him into the sea. When DIOCLETIAN, the infidel emperor, heard this thing he was furiously angry, and he determined in his heart to go himself and destroy the church of Mâr Saint GEORGE; but God bore no longer with him, and He smote him swiftly and made his eyes blind. And the men in the palace rose up against him, [fol. 59*b* 2] and God removed him from his kingdom, and made the righteous man CONSTANTINE emperor; and he opened the churches and closed the houses of idols, and all the ends of the world rejoiced. And the churches rejoiced, and the church of the holy and honourable star of the morning, GEORGE, rejoiced and was exceedingly glad. Salutation to GEORGE the martyr.

And on this day also Saints ZENOBIUS and his mother ZENOBIA became martyrs. These saints were from the city of TABÂIS, and they were elders therein, and certain men accused them of being Christians before the emperor. And the emperor commanded his soldiers to bring them to him, and [when they had done so] he said unto them, "What is the object of your worship, and where is your country?" And they said unto him, "We believe in Christ, and our city is TABÂIS." And the emperor said unto them, "Sacrifice ye to the gods"; and the saints said unto him, "We sacrifice to our God Jesus Christ and not to devils." And the emperor was wroth with them, and he commanded his soldiers to strip off their apparel, and to hang them up by the hair of their heads, and to beat them with rods; and the saints prayed to God, and straightway their fetters were unloosed. And the people saw the saints putting on garments of light, and the governor carrying [fol. 59*b* 3] his throne and following them, and when they saw this they cried out, saying, "Holy, Holy, Holy, God of Hosts, our Lord Jesus Christ." And the governor marvelled and said, "The God of the Christians is great." Then the governor was wroth and he commanded his soldiers to hang them up on two crosses, so that each could see the other, [and they did so,] and straightway a cloud came from heaven, and enveloped them, and gave them mannâ. On the following day the governor found them teaching the word of God, and when the people saw them they cried out with one voice, saying, "We believe that the God of the Christians is great." And the governor also commanded his soldiers to make two seats and to fasten in them in an upright position two iron stakes, and to cast them into a red-hot oven; but God delivered them, and the governor found them teaching the people as they were sitting upon those seats. When the governor saw this he was filled with fury, and he commanded his servants to dig a pit twenty cubits deep, and twenty cubits broad, and to light a fire therein and to cast them into it; but when the saints prayed to God the fire was extinguished, and every part of the pit became like a place swept and garnished. And the governor called the keeper of the bath, who was carrying a vessel full of water. When the people saw this sign they gave thanks unto God, saying, "A miracle [worked by] God for His saints." When the governor failed to make them submit, he commanded his soldiers to slay them, and to take care of their bodies until the following day so that they might burn them with fire [fol. 60*a* 1] and scatter their ashes to the winds. And when they killed them there were crashes of thunder, and lightnings, and torrents of rain, and there died through that thunderstorm fifty-four men. During the night the believers stole the bodies of the saints and buried them, and on the following day when the governor searched for their bodies, everyone told him that a miracle had taken place; and the governor believed and became a Christian. Salutation to ZENOBIA and to her first-born son ZENOBIUS.

Salutation to the multitude of martyrs who suffered with ZENOBIUS and ZENOBIA whilst the heavens thundered and lightened.

And on this day also died Saint MERCURIUS and his brother JOHN. These saints were the children of Christian and God-fearing men, and the name of the elder of them was SHANÂY, but when he adopted the garb of the monk they called him "MERCURIUS." The name of the younger was ABÛ FÂRZ, and him, when he adopted the garb of a monk, they called "JOHN." When these saints arrived at man's estate they departed to the monastery of Saint THEODORE the general, and they dwelt [there] under the direction of a righteous old man who served God. [fol. 60*a* 2] And they obeyed him and did work of every kind, and they ministered to the work of the brethren, and they did whatsoever was required in the monastery, and they endured the cold of winter and the days of summer, and they used to gather in very many of the fruits of the earth, and take them to the monastery. They acquired no possessions whatsoever in the world, and they were remote from all the appetites of the world for meat, and drink, and riches; and they used to fast two and three days at a time. And they also learned to read and to write Coptic and Arabic without a teacher, and they fulfilled all the demands of the Rule of the ascetic life. Whilst they were living thus one day the angel of the Lord came and told them that they would attain to the fight of martyrdom; and then they became strong by the Holy Spirit, and they rose up in glad haste and rejoiced. Then they came into their own city, where accusations against them were made to the governor of the city, and he had them taken to the governor of BEHNESÂ. And that governor asked them questions and said unto them, "Is it true that ye are idolators?" And the saints said unto him, "We confess openly that we are Christians, and we have no other God except Jesus Christ." When the governor heard this he was filled with wrath, and he ordered his soldiers to throw chains about their necks and to march them round about the whole city; [and they did so,] and then they shut them up in the prison house. Whilst they were there the angel of the Lord visited them many times, and when they had been in prison five months the governor had them brought out and set before him, and he said unto them, "Abandon your Faith"; and they refused. And the governor [tried to] [fol. 60*a* 3] frighten them and said unto them, "I will burn your bodies," but they were not frightened by his words, and when the governor saw the firmness of their minds, he sent them back into prison. After many days there came another governor, and he wished to save them and to set them at liberty, and straightway certain men reviled him and said unto him, "If thou dost not kill them we will accuse thee to the emperor." So against his will he commanded his soldiers to light a fire, and they were summoned to come, but he only did this to frighten them for he wanted to imprison them, and then he cast them into the prison house. And he commanded his soldiers to bring them out again, and to frighten them with fierce swords, but the hearts of the holy men did not quail, and they were unable to alter their words. Then, fearing the people, the governor commanded his soldiers to cut off their heads. They cut off the head of JOHN first, and his head leaped up from his body, and there went forth from it a voice like unto a shout of joy, and it was so loud that all the people who heard it wondered; then they cut off the head of Saint MERCURIUS, and thus they finished their holy martyrdom. And they cast their bodies into the fire, and straightway the fire was extinguished, and it did not touch their bodies, and their raiment was not scorched. When the governor saw this he commanded them to keep guard over their bodies so that the Christians might not steal them. And on the following day when they looked they found a fountain of water under the place where they had cast their bodies, and afterwards many signs and miracles were made manifest through it. Salutation to MERCURIUS, whose body the fire would not burn. [fol. 60*b* 1] Salutation to JOHN, from whose head after it had been cut off a voice was heard.

VIII. KHĔDÂR

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day is celebrated the festival of the FOUR BEASTS, who have no bodies, and which are the Wheels of God that bear His Divine Throne according to the testimony concerning them by JOHN the evangelist in his Vision, who saith, "I saw a throne in heaven, and He Who sat thereon was brighter than the sun, and more brilliant than the lightning. And I saw in the midst four beasts, full of eyes; the first had the likeness of the face of a lion, the second had the likeness of the face of a bull, the third had the likeness of the face of a man, and the fourth had the likeness of the face of an eagle; and each of them had six wings. And they cried out by day and by night, saying, Holy, Holy, Holy, God of Hosts. All the heavens and the earth are filled with the holiness of Thy glory" (Rev. iv, 6). And ISAIAH the prophet also saith, "I saw the Lord of Hosts sitting upon a high throne, and the whole place was filled with His glory. [fol. 60*b* 2] Seraphim and Cherubim surrounded Him, and His awe and majesty were exceedingly great. Each of these had six wings; with two of their wings they covered their faces, with two of their wings they covered their feet, and with two of their wings they did fly in the greatest glory by day and by night, saying, Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God of Hosts. All the heavens and the earth are filled with the holiness of Thy glory" (Isaiah vi, 2). And DAVID the prophet saith, "He rode upon the Cherubim and did fly" (Psalm xviii, 10), and he also saith, "He Who sitteth upon the Cherubim maketh the earth to quake." And EZEKIEL saith concerning these wheels, "I saw a wind blow from heaven, and in it there was a cloud surrounded by fire, and brightness, and lightning, and four beasts supported Him. Each face (or person) had six wings, and they went before them. And the first beast had the likeness of the face of a man, and they ceased not to praise God by day and by night, and they said, Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God of Hosts, all the heavens and the earth are filled with the holiness of Thy glory" (Ezekiel i). And JOHN the evangelist saith, "I heard a voice saying, Hallelujah! Salvation and power and blessing to our God. And the four beasts and the four and twenty elders of heaven worshipped God, saying, Hallelujah! God the sustainer of the universe is king (Rev. xix, 4). After this I heard a voice saying, Praise our God with harp and psalms; Hallelujah! And I heard the voice of a multitude of peoples like unto the thunder, saying, God, [fol. 60*b* 3] the sustainer of the universe, is king." And many of the Books of the Old and the New Testaments testify concerning the honour of these FOUR BEASTS which God hath set near Him to make supplication on behalf of all creation. He with the man's form maketh supplication on behalf of the children of men, he with the lion's form maketh supplication on behalf of the beasts, he with the bull's form maketh supplication on behalf of the cattle, and he with the eagle's form maketh supplication on behalf of the birds. Now these beasts are very much nearer God than all the other powers of heaven. For this reason the doctors of the Church have confirmed the commemoration of them, and have built churches to them in every place, even as at this day, because they make supplication for the race of man. Salutation to the FOUR BEASTS and to the horses of the Cherubim.

And on this day also is commemorated the festival of ÂFNÎN the archangel, one of the nine and ninety archangels, who together with SÛRÂFÊL guard the throne of glory. Of him ENOCH saith that he goeth round that house; and [fol. 61*a* 1] SÛRÂFÊL, and KÎRÛBÊL, and ÂFNÎN, "These are the [angels] who never sleep, and who guard the throne of His glory." Salutation to this Trinity of Angels who guard the throne of God.

And on this day also is commemorated JOHN the high priest, and on this day the CROSS appeared unto CONSTANTINE.

And on this day also died Saint ḲEFRENYÂ (COPRONIUS). This holy man was a pagan, and the son of a nobleman. One day there arrived in his city a monk from the monastery of Abbâ PACHOMIUS, whose name was MERCURIUS, and he foretold that ḲEFRENYÂ (COPRONIUS) would become a Christian. And after a few days ḲEFRENYÂ (COPRONIUS) assembled his soldiers, and set out for the land of Egypt, to take prisoners and to destroy monasteries and religious houses. When he arrived at the monastery of Abbâ PACHOMIUS the abbot went forth to him, and said unto him, "What dost thou want?" And ḲEFRENYÂ (COPRONIUS) said unto him, "I want the abbot," and the abbot said, "I am he." When ḲEFRENYÂ (COPRONIUS) heard this he took the abbot aside privately, and asked him [fol. 61*a* 2] if he would array him in the garb of the monk. When the abbot heard him he said, "I will." And when the soldiers had returned to their city and ḲEFRENYÂ (COPRONIUS) was left by himself, he arrayed him in the garb of the monk, and ḲEFRENYÂ (COPRONIUS) devoted himself to fasting and prayer. And Satan was envious of him, and he stirred up against him the rulers of the city until they wished to attack the monastery, saying, "There is a royal son (i.e. prince) here who hath destroyed our city; if we take him by the help of God we will kill the calumniator." And this holy man continued to fast for a week at a time, and he ate nothing except bitter lupins. In those days a wild beast of the desert ravaged the [lands of the] monastery and killed all the cattle of the monks. And Abbâ ḲEFRENYÂ (COPRONIUS) went to him, and laid hold of him by his ear like a sheep, and tied him up with a cord, and he lived [there] twelve years and died. And Saint ḲEFRENYÂ (COPRONIUS) went to Jerusalem, led by an angel of God, and he arrived there in one night; and he saw there great mysteries and was blessed by the holy places, and he returned to his habitation and died in peace. Salutation to ḲEFRENYÂ (COPRONIUS), the son of a pagan, who bound in fetters a wild beast that slew the cattle.

And on this day also four hundred and eighty-four souls who belonged to the company of ISIDORE became martyrs.

IX. KHĔDÂR

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

[fol. 61*a* 3] On this day died the holy father Abbâ ISAAC, the forty-first Archbishop of Alexandria. This father was one of the men of the city of BÛRLĔS (BORLOS), and his parents were exceedingly rich, and they feared God. After very many days they begot this holy man, and they rejoiced over him with very great joy. And having brought him to the bishop that he might lay his hand upon him, and baptize him with Christian baptism, the bishop saw upon his head at the time of baptism a cross of light. And the bishop took his hand and laid it upon his head, and he prophesied concerning him, saying, "This boy shall be set over the Church of God"; and the bishop said unto his father, "Take care of this boy, for he shall be a chosen vessel of God." And when the boy had grown a little he taught him to read and to write, and he learned spiritual doctrine, and he used to read the histories of the saints. And he left his parents and departed to the monastery of Abbâ MACARIUS, and he became a monk under the direction of father Abbâ ZACHARIAS the abbot. Now the angel of the Lord had informed the abbot of the coming of this holy man, and the abbot received him and rejoiced in him. One day the righteous man saw him in the church, and he prophesied concerning him, saying, "Needs must that this ISAAC shall be set [fol. 61*b* 1] over the Church of Christ." And in those days Abbâ JOHN the archbishop was seeking for a learned man to be his disciple and his scribe, and the honourable father Abbâ ISAAC was recommended to him; and the archbishop sent for him and had him brought to him, and he gave him a roll whereon to write. And Abbâ ISAAC made mistakes in his writing wittingly and wrote badly in order that the archbishop might send him away and that he might be free to go to the desert of SCETE, for he hated the pomp of this world of men. And when the Archbishop Abbâ JOHN knew that ISAAC had made mistakes and written badly purposely so that he might dismiss him, Saint Abbâ JOHN said unto him, "Thou hast written well, and I shall not let thee go from here." When Abbâ ISAAC knew that the archbishop would not let him go, he displayed to him all his learning and all his wisdom, and he wrote as beautifully as he could, and the archbishop rejoiced in him exceedingly; and after a few days he returned to the desert of SCETE. When the death of the Archbishop Abbâ JOHN drew nigh, he asked our Lord Jesus Christ to tell him whom he should appoint to be archbishop in his stead after him. And He said unto him in a vision, "Thy disciple ISAAC shall protect this office after thee"; and Saint Abbâ JOHN commanded the people, and told them that his disciple ISAAC was to be appointed archbishop after him. When Abbâ JOHN was dead they seized this Saint Abbâ ISAAC, and enthroned him Archbishop over the city of Alexandria. And he made the Church to shine in his days, and he restored many churches, and especially [fol. 61*b* 2] the church of MARK the evangelist and apostle, and the archbishop's house. And great tribulation and many trials came upon this holy father, and he sat upon the throne of MARK the evangelist three years and a half. And it is written in the history of the fight of this holy father that he commanded that he was not to be enthroned archbishop except on the First Day of the week. Salutation to ISAAC on whom the bishop saw a cross of light when he dipped his hand in the water to baptize him.

And on this day also the Three Hundred and Eighteen fathers and bishops assembled in the city of Nicea in the days of CONSTANTINE the righteous man, among them being four archbishops, namely, Abbâ ALEXANDER, Archbishop of the city of Alexandria, and YÛNÂKENDÎNÔS (INNOCENT), Archbishop of the city of Rômê, SÔL PETER (sic), Archbishop of the city of Constantinia, and the Archbishop of the city of Antioch. And the cause of their assembling was ARIUS, who was priest of the men of Alexandria and had fallen into error. He said: "The Son is a created being in all His Person." These saints were honourable fathers and fighters, and some of them had, like the apostles, raised the dead, and healed the sick, and worked great signs and wonders. Some of them had suffered tortures for the sake of [fol. 61*b* 3] the Orthodox Faith of Christ, some of them had suffered torture and had their eyes dug out, of some of them the torturers had cut off their hands and their feet, of some the torturers had smashed their teeth, and of some they had torn out the nails and scraped their bodies. Among those who had suffered tortures there was a certain bishop of the city of MAR'ÂSH whose name was THOMAS. Him certain vile and evil men cast into prison for two (?) years, where they tortured him mercilessly. Each year they had cut off from him one of his limbs, and they had cut off his hands and his feet, and smashed his teeth, both those in front and those in the sides of his jaws, and his nose and lips had been cut off, and his body was as black as the ashes of a fire. Many people thought that he was dead, and had performed memorial services for him as for the martyrs and apostles. When these fathers and bishops arrived in the city of Nicea, CONSTANTINE the emperor prepared for them a large and spacious hall, and he placed therein thrones whereon the holy fathers and bishops could sit, and he set therein his own throne which was smaller than [any one] of theirs. And he began with THOMAS, Bishop of the city of MAR'ÂSH, and he bowed low before him, and embraced every part of him, including the [places of] the members which had been cut off his body. Then he gave to the fathers and bishops his royal sceptre, and his sword, and his ring, and he said unto them, "Behold, I have this day given you power over the priesthood and over the kingdom. According to what ye wish let [every man] remain, provided that he is orthodox; he who is not orthodox separate from your flock; and ye shall formulate the Canon and [fol. 62*a* 1] the Law." And our Lord Jesus Christ tarried among them, and there were many [of them] whose hearts were illumined by the Holy Spirit. And certain men counted the thrones whereon sitters were seated and they found them to be in number three hundred and nineteen, and they counted the fathers and bishops and found them to be in number three hundred and eighteen. And they formulated a Canon for the priests, and for the laity, and for the emperors, and for the countries, and for pilgrims, and for those who sold, and for those who bought, and they made ordinances for every matter. Then they proclaimed the Orthodox Faith, and they made known that the Son was the equal of the Father in Godhead, and they excommunicated ARIUS and him that believed in his filthy belief. This is the Orthodox Faith which they formulated, saying, "We believe in One God, the Lord, the Father, the Sustainer of Creation, Maker of heaven and of earth, and of all things visible and invisible. And we believe in One Lord Jesus Christ, the Only Son of the Father, Whose being was with Him before the world was created, Light Who proceedeth from Light, God Who proceedeth from God in truth, Who was begotten and not made, Who is equal with the Father in Godhead, in Whom is everything that is, and without Whom there would be nothing whatsoever which is in heaven and upon earth, Who for the sake of us men and for our salvation came down from heaven, and was made man by the Holy Ghost of MARY, the holy Virgin. He became man, and was crucified for our sakes in the days of PONTIUS PÊNTÊNÂWÎ (i.e. the Pontinian). He suffered and died and was buried and rose [fol. 62*a* 2] from the dead on the third day, as it is written in the Holy Scriptures. He ascended in glory into heaven, and sat down at the right hand of His Father. He shall come again in glory. He shall judge the living and the dead, and there shall be no end to His kingdom." After this, when one hundred and fifty bishops were assembled in the city of Constantinia, they formulated the remainder of the Orthodox Faith, saying, "And we believe in the Holy Spirit, the Lord the Vivifier, Who sprang from the Father. We worship Him and we praise Him, with the Father and the Son, Who spake by the prophets"—to the end of the [words of] the Faith. And they excommunicated anyone who should add anything to it or take anything away from it. And they commanded that every priest should recite it, and all the laity, both old and young, men and women, slaves and handmaidens. And they were to recite it at the time of the night prayer, and at the time of the day prayer, and at the time of the consecration of the Offering, and they were to teach it to all the people. And the fathers and bishops made ordinances of every kind for the Church and the Orthodox Faith.

They established the light of the Faith and then they departed to their own countries.

X. Khĕdâr

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day fifty nuns, who were pure and holy virgins, together [fol. 62*a* 3] with their mother SOFIA, became martyrs. These pure and holy women came from widely separated cities and districts, and they were gathered together by divine and spiritual love, and the desire to assume the garb of the ascetic life, which is the garb of the angels. They dwelt in one of the houses for virgins which were in the city of RÔḤÂ (EDESSA), and they had as superior the holy Abbess SOFIA who was filled with every kind of grace and with wisdom. And she trained them so perfectly in the duties and exercises of the spiritual life that they became like angels upon earth, and they fasted and prayed continually, and read the histories of the spiritual fightings of the monks. Among them were some who had dwelt in the nunnery for seven years, and some of them were novices. The infidel Emperor JULIAN passed by their house in the city of RÔḤÂ (EDESSA) on his way to make war on SAPOR, the son of SAPOR, the King of Persia, for he had heard that SAPOR was coming to make war upon him. And JULIAN having gone against him and come back, he went to that nunnery wherein the virgins lived, and he asked [an officer] what the building was. And [the officer] said unto him, "This is a nunnery," and JULIAN commanded his soldiers to go into that nunnery, and to kill everyone in it, and to carry off all the goods which were therein. And the soldiers of the infidel emperor went into the nunnery, and they beat the virgins with whips and cut off their heads with swords, and they plundered everything which was there. And because of this thing the Lord took vengeance upon him with the vengeance of His wrath, that is to say, Saint MERCURIUS the martyr speared him with his spear whilst he was engaged in fighting, [fol. 62*b* 1] and he cast him down from his horse, and killed him.

And JULIAN died an evil death, and he departed to the Sheol which is for ever. And these holy virgins went into everlasting joy, and inherited the kingdom of heaven. Salutation to the virgins whose blood MERCURIUS avenged.

And on this day also a General Council of the Saints took place in the days of VICTOR, Archbishop of the city of Rômê, and in the days of DEMETRIUS, Archbishop of the city of Alexandria. Now the cause for the assembling of this Council was this: Christian people were baptized on the festival of baptism, on the twenty-first day of the month Ṭĕr (Jan.–Feb.), and from the following day they fasted until the twenty-second day of the month Yakâtît (Feb.–March), that is to say, for forty days, and then they ate. And after thirty days they began, on the twenty-third day of Magâbît (March–April), and kept the Octave of the Passion of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the festival of His Resurrection, for the Crucifixion of our Lord took place on the twenty-ninth day of Magâbît. After DEMETRIUS, Archbishop of the city of Alexandria, had been enthroned, God illumined the heart of a certain artisan, who knew not how to read or to write, with Divine grace, and he learned all the Laws of the Church, and he knew them by heart, and [fol. 62*b* 2] he interpreted them. Then by the Holy Spirit he compiled a table for reckoning the Epact, wherefrom men might know [the days of] the Fast, and the Resurrection; and he wrote in the Coptic and Greek (Rôm) tongues. Then he made a copy of this table of Epacts and sent it to VICTOR, Archbishop of the city of Rômê, who read it and found it good. And he also sent a copy to MAXIMUS, Archbishop of Antioch, and he sent a copy to father Abbâ AGAPIUS, Archbishop of the city of Jerusalem. When the circulation of the Epacts reached Abbâ VICTOR, Archbishop of the city of Rômê, he read it and found it good and rejoiced therein exceedingly. And he sent and gathered together a large assembly containing fourteen bishops of his diocese, and many learned priests, and he read to them the calculation of the Epacts, and they found it very good, and they rejoiced in it, and accepted it, and they wrote many copies of it and sent them into all countries. And the Holy Fast and the Festival of Easter have been regulated by that calculation from that day to this. And they departed to their countries praising the Father and the Son and the Holy Ghost, to Whom be glory and honour. Salutation to DEMETRIUS and to the priests who made haste to assemble in order to make rules for times for keeping Lent and Easter.

[On this day PAUL and his three companions became martyrs.]

Salutation to GABRA MARYÂM. [Omitted in the Bodleian MS.]

XI. KHĔDÂR

On this day died the pure and righteous woman ḤANNAH, the mother of our Lady, the holy Virgin MARY, the God-bearer. This holy woman was a native of the city of Jerusalem, and she was the daughter of MÂṬÂT, the son of LEVI, the son of MÊLKÎ, of the sons of AARON the priest, and of the tribe of LEVI. MÂṬÂT had three children, and the name of the eldest was MARY; the name of the second was SOFIA, and the name of the third was ḤANNAH. And MARY married and brought forth SALÔMÊ, the midwife who received our Lady MARY when she brought forth Christ our God. And SOFIA married and brought forth ELISABETH, the mother of JOHN the Baptist, and this holy woman ḤANNAH married the righteous man JOACHIM, who was of the tribe of JUDAH, and she brought forth our Lady MARY. Our Lady MARY and SALÔMÊ and ELISABETH were sisters. Now the history of the strife of this holy woman ḤANNAH we know of nothing whatsoever which we can record, but we know and we are convinced that she was [fol. 63*a* 1] the most honoured of women because she was held to be worthy to become the mother of the mother of God in the flesh. And had she not possessed many virtues, and great righteousness, which was superior to the righteousness of every other woman, she would never have been worthy of this act of grace. Now this righteous woman was barren, and she used to pray and to entreat God continually to give her children, and God gave her a beautiful daughter, one to be revered, and she and all her people rejoiced, that is to say our Lady MARY. Therefore it is meet for us to honour her, and to celebrate a festival to her, because of the exalted gift which God gave her. Salutation to thee O ḤANNAH, thou ladder of the prayers of the righteous.

And on this day also are commemorated Saint ARCHELAUS the martyr, and ELISHA the abbot, and Saint PACHOMIUS, and MÎNÂS the martyr, and his mother URANIA. Salutation to ARCHELAUS, ELISHA, and PACHOMIUS. [fol. 63*a* 2] Salutation to MÎNÂS a saint of the Church. Salutation to URANIA whose apparel they stripped off and then they beat her on her back and belly.

XII. KHĔDÂR

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day is celebrated the festival of the honoured angel, MICHAEL the archangel, the head of the hosts of heaven, the angel who is merciful to the children of men, who standeth at all times before the great throne of God speaking on behalf of the children of men. JOSHUA the son of NUN saw him in great glory like unto that of a general of the king's army, and he was frightened at him and fell down and made obeisance unto him, and said unto him, "O my lord, art thou on our side or on the side of the enemy?" And MICHAEL said unto him, "I am the tenth of the Chiefs of the mighty armies of heaven, and this day I will give AMALEK into thy hand, and I will make thee king in the city of Jericho." This angel it was who was with all the saints and martyrs, and he made them strong and enabled them to endure patiently until they finished their strife, [and it is meet] that festivals of commemoration should be held, and gifts offered in his name on the twelfth day of each month, for he beseecheth God for the fruits of the earth, and the descent of the rains, and the [flooding of the] rivers, and for good souls so that God may make perfect all of them in integrity. Now, there was a certain God-fearing man whose name was DOROTHEUS, and [he had a] wife whose name was THEOPISTÂ, and they [fol. 63*a* 3] were wont to make festivals of commemoration for the honoured angel MICHAEL. And all the money of these righteous folk came to an end, and they had nothing wherewith to celebrate the commemoration of the honoured MICHAEL. And because they were exceedingly sorrowful about this they took their apparel to sell so that they might make a feast. And MICHAEL the archangel appeared unto DOROTHEUS and commanded him to go to a sheep-master and to take from him a sheep worth one-third of a dînâr. And he was also to go to a fisherman and to take from him a fish worth one-third of a dînâr, and he was not to slit the belly thereof except inside the house. And he was also to go to a flour merchant, and to take from him as much flour as he wanted. And the angel said, "Do this, and do not sell thy raiment"; and DOROTHEUS did as the angel commanded him. And he summoned all the people according to his custom, and he made a feast in honour of the angel MICHAEL. When he had gone into his store-chamber to see if, peradventure, he could find a jar of wine for the Offering, he found the interior of his chamber filled with wine, and much flour; and DOROTHEUS was frightened and he marvelled exceedingly. When he had ministered unto all the company, and they had finished the feast, and all the people had departed to their houses, the honoured angel appeared unto the blessed DOROTHEUS in the garb wherein he had appeared unto him before, and commanded him to cut open the belly of the fish. When he had cut open the belly of the fish he found therein three hundred dînârs of gold, and three third parts of a dînâr. And the archangel MICHAEL said unto DOROTHEUS and his wife, "Set aside these three third parts of a dînâr for the sheep, the fish, and the flour, and these three hundred dînârs [fol. 63*b* 1] shall be for your own needs. God hath remembered you and the alms and oblations which ye have been wont to make, and hath rewarded you for the same here in this world, and at the last day He will make you to inherit the kingdom of heaven." And as they were frightened at this matter he said unto them, "I am MICHAEL the archangel who hath delivered you from all your tribulation, and it is I who have loved your alms and oblations, and have taken them up to God. Henceforward ye shall lack no good thing whatsoever in this world." And they prostrated themselves before him, and he disappeared and went up into heaven. And the angel MICHAEL worked so many miracles that they are innumerable. Salutation to thee, O merciful angel MICHAEL whom I have feared from my youth up; hide me under thy prayers at dawn and at eve.

And on this day also died the holy father PHILOTHEUS, the sixty-third Archbishop of the city of Alexandria. In the days of his archiepiscopate the King of Ethiopia sent a letter to GEORGE, King of NÔBÂ, and he said unto him: "God is wroth with us because of what the kings who were before us have done. For they transgressed the commandment of God, concerning Abbâ PETER, the bishop, whom they drove out of his diocese, and they appointed in his stead MÎNÂS the liar, in the [fol. 63*b* 2] days of COSMAS the archbishop; and, behold, six archbishops have [not] appointed a bishop to our country. And because of this our country is destroyed, and all our men and beasts have perished through famine and plague. Our enemies have risen up against us and have carried away captive many men from our country and have plundered our cities. The rain hath been withheld and it falleth not, and the earth will not give her fruit, and our enemies have burnt our cities, and plundered the churches, and driven us from place to place. I beseech thee to shew friendship to me in this trouble, for God's sake, and for the sake of the Orthodox Faith. And do thou write a letter to our father the Archbishop Abbâ PHILOTHEUS of Egypt, and entreat him for God's sake to absolve us, and to open up our country, and to pray for us so that God may remove from us and from our country the tribulation and trial which have come upon us, and may have compassion upon us and may appoint us a bishop, and may send him to us according to what was always done for our fathers, so that the bishop may pray to God on our behalf to remove His wrath from us. And this which I am saying unto thee I say, O my brother king, because I fear [that if a bishop be not sent] the Christian Faith will perish from among us. And behold, from that time unto this day six archbishops have been enthroned, and they have neither remembered our country nor appointed us a bishop. And we have become like unto sheep which have been turned out, and have no shepherd. Our bishops, and priests, and kings have died, and our churches have been pulled down; but we acknowledge that this tribulation hath come upon us rightly in return for what we did to our Bishop Abbâ PETER." And when the letter of the King of Ethiopia came to King GEORGE [fol. 63*b* 3] in NÔBÂ, and he had read it, he was exceedingly sorry that trials and tribulation had come upon the country of Ethiopia. And straightway GEORGE, King of NÔBÂ, wrote a letter and sent it to Archbishop Abbâ PHILOTHEUS, and in it described to him all the trials and tribulation which had come upon the country of Ethiopia, and he besought him to have compassion upon the Christian people of the country of Ethiopia and to appoint them a bishop. When the archbishop heard this he sent straightway to the desert of SCETE, to a certain righteous monk, and that monk, whose name was Abbâ DANIEL, came forthwith to him from the monastery of Abbâ MACARIUS, and he appointed him bishop of the Ethiopians and sent him to them. And when Abbâ DANIEL arrived in Ethiopia the people received him with great honour, and he removed the wrath [of God] from them, and he made them to conquer their enemies who had rebelled against them in times past. And all his work was right during the days of this Archbishop, Abbâ PHILOTHEUS, and he made manifest many signs and wonders. Salutation to PHILOTHEUS the apostle.

Salutation to 'ADMÂS. [Omitted in the Bodleian MS.]

[On this day died BA'EDA MÂRYÂM I, King of Ethiopia, who died on Nov. 8, A.D. 1478.]

XIII. KHĔDÂR

[fol. 64*a* 1] IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

The doctors of the Law command us on this day to make a feast in honour of the thousands of thousands of spirit beings who have no bodies, and who make intercession for all the world, and of whom ENOCH speaketh, saying, "I was in the waters, and the winds and the clouds carried me up and brought me into a house which was built with a tongue of fire, and I saw there thousands of thousands." And he also saith, "I saw the children of the angels standing upon flames of fire and their apparel was as white as snow." And JACOB saith, "I saw in the mount of Bethel a ladder on the earth which reached even to the heavens, and the angels of God were ascending and descending on it." And JACOB also saith, when he returned from Syria, "I saw hosts of angels." And MOSES saith, "Arrange the people each [tribe] on its own border, and the number of each was as the angels of God." And MOSES also saith, "God came from Sinai, He appeared unto me in Seir, and with Him were His angels." And DAVID saith, "Who maketh His angels spirits, and those who minister unto Him a flame of fire." And he also saith, "The chariots of God are thousands, and the tens of thousands who rejoice." ELIJAH also saw the chariots of fire and the horses of fire surrounding him like a wall. And DANIEL saith, "And the Ancient of Days sat, and His apparel was as white as snow, and the hair of His head was as wool. His throne was a blazing fire, and the wheels thereof were red-hot coals, and a river [fol. 64*a* 2] of fire flowed out therefrom. Thousands of thousands ministered unto Him, and tens of thousands stood before Him." And LUKE saith, "Suddenly there came with that angel multitudes of the hosts of heaven, and they praised God, saying, Glory [be] to God in the heavens, and peace upon earth, [and] His goodwill to the children of men. Then the angels passed from them, and went up into the heavens." And MATTHEW saith, "And behold, angels came and ministered unto Him." And he also saith, "Then shall the Son of man come in His glory, and all His angels with Him." And JOHN saith in the words of Jesus Christ, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, ye would see the heavens opening, and the angels of God ascending and descending to the Son of man." And JUDAH saith, "Behold, God shall come with His thousands of saints." And the heads of the Church have enumerated the various kinds of angels thus: Angels, Archangels, Lords, Dominions, Powers, Thrones and Principalities. Salutation to the tens of thousands of tens of thousands of angels and to the Cherubim and to the Seraphim.

And on this day also died Saint 'ASKANÂFER, the chief of the thirteen [fol. 64*a* 3] thieves who became Christians of his Faith. This 'ASKANÂFER was one of the nobles of Rômê, and he gave alms to the poor and needy. Now, in those days there was a gang of thirteen robbers who destroyed the travellers whom they found on the road. When they heard the story of 'ASKANÂFER, and that he succoured the monks, they went to him to kill him by an ambush, and to take his money. Then they dressed themselves in the garb of monks, and stood by the gate of his courtyard, and when 'ASKANÂFER saw them he thought that they were the Twelve Apostles, and that one of them was Christ. And he bowed low before them, and took them into his house, and he brought a table of food to them, and then he washed their feet, and he sprinkled the water on his son who was paralysed, and had been ill for five and thirty years, and he was healed immediately. When the thieves saw this they were greatly frightened. And 'ASKANÂFER said unto them, "Tell me, O my fathers, which of you is Christ? Shew Him to me that I may worship Him." And when the men of the city heard that the son of the nobleman was healed, they came to him, and they bowed low before [the thieves], and they said unto them, "O saints of God, bless us and heal our sick folk." Then the thieves took our their daggers and gave them to the nobleman, [and their chief] said unto him, "Take these knives so that thou mayest kill us even as we wished to kill thee." And 'ASKANÂFER said unto them, "Ye say this that ye may abase yourselves." And they said unto him, "God would have trodden us in the dust if we could not have boasted ourselves of thy prayer"; and after they had spoken thus they embraced him. And each of them [fol. 64*b* 1] took a few lentils in a bag, and they departed [on a journey] of twenty-five days, and they sowed the lentils in the sand, and at the time of sunset they ate three (sic) lentils. And they lived thus for thirty years, and then the ARAMÎ (i.e. desert robbers) came and killed them. Salutation to 'ASKANÂFER who raised a paralytic from his couch and healed him. Salutation also to the thieves who fought a fight for thirty years as the result of seeing this miracle.

And on this day also died the holy father Abbâ TIMOTHY, Bishop of the city of ĔNṢENÂ. This holy man was righteous and chaste from his youth, and he fought a great fight in working righteousness. And the governor of the city seized him because of his faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, and because he taught his own True Faith to men, and he tortured him with severe tortures for many days, and he shut him up in the prison house, and he tortured him continually during a period of three years. And there were with him in the prison house many saints who were bound in fetters for the Faith. And that infidel governor had them brought out of the prison house, and he tortured them, and he poured out their holy blood until at length only a very few prisoners remained in the prison house, and among these was this holy man TIMOTHY. At that time God blotted out the Emperor DIOCLETIAN, the infidel, and the God-loving Emperor [fol. 64*b* 2] CONSTANTINE reigned. And an Edict came from him into every country ordering that those who were believers on Christ should be brought out of the prisons, and they brought out from the prison house this holy man among those who were released. And this holy man departed to his house, and he gathered together the monks and the priests who were in his diocese, and he made a long prayer [which lasted] from evening to daybreak wherein he entreated God for the salvation of the soul of that governor who had tortured him, and he prayed thus: "O Lord, have mercy upon that governor, for it is he who hath brought me great good, and who hath been the means of bringing me nigh unto Thee, O my Lord. In the same manner, O Lord, do Thou work upon him so that he may believe in Thee, and may come to Thee." And the people marvelled at the simplicity (or innocency) of heart of this father, and they told the governor, saying, "Abbâ TIMOTHY is praying to God for thee that He may have mercy upon thee, and may deliver thy soul." When the governor heard this thing he marvelled exceedingly, and he said, "I should have thought that he would curse me rather because of the punishments which I have inflicted upon him, but instead of that he prayeth for mercy for me. In the Faith of these men there is some divine mystery." Then the governor sent and had this holy man Abbâ TIMOTHY brought to him, and he obtained from him knowledge of the Law of the Christians, and this father revealed to him the causes of the Incarnation of the Son of God, and how the prophets spake concerning Him in the beginning, many years ago, and how their prophecies were fulfilled, and how the matter concerning Him is written in the Holy Gospel. And the governor believed on our Lord and Redeemer [fol. 64*b* 3] Jesus Christ through this holy man, and he baptized him with holy Christian baptism. And the governor forsook his office, and became a monk, and was numbered among the folk of this father. And during the remainder of his days this father continued to teach his flock at all times, and to confirm them in the Orthodox Faith, and he died in the peace of God. Salutation to TIMOTHY.

And on this day died the holy father ZACHARIAS, the sixty-fourth Archbishop of the city of Alexandria. He was a native of the city of Alexandria, and was a priest therein, and he was steward of all the property of the Church. And he was chaste in his striving, and a virgin in body, and gentle in disposition, and an old man in his days. When Archbishop PHILOTHEUS died, the bishops assembled in order to elect with the counsel of God the man who was fit for this office. And as they were all gathered together in the church of Saint MARK, the evangelist and apostle, and discussing together who was the most suitable man for this office, behold, they heard that a certain man had obtained from the emperor a letter by bribery, and that he had with him slaves and soldiers from the emperor who were going to appoint him archbishop against the [fol. 65*a* 1] wishes of the bishops. And the bishops were sorry that an archbishop should be appointed by bribery, and by the transgression of the Canon and commandment of the Apostles, and they prayed continually and entreated God, the Glorious and Most High, to appoint him whom they had chosen. And as they were praying to God behold this father came down the stairs of the roof of the church, and he had in his hand a vessel of acid (vinegar ?), and as he was coming down his foot slipped, and he fell from the top of the roof-stairs to the bottom. And he lifted himself up still holding in his hand the vessel which was unbroken, and the acid was unspilled. When the bishops and the priests saw this they marvelled exceedingly. And the people of the city of Alexandria enquired concerning this holy man Abbâ ZACHARIAS, and they talked about his virtues and his righteousness, and all the men of the city of Alexandria agreed with the bishops about the appointment of this holy man as archbishop, and they enthroned him. And during the days of his rule great tribulation came upon him, and he sorrowed greatly through the King of Egypt, ḤAKAM, that is to say the governor. In those days there came unto him a certain monk from the monastery of Abbâ MACARIUS, and he said unto him, "Make me a bishop." And Abbâ ZACHARIAS said unto him, "Have patience, O my son, and do not transgress the command of the Canon of the Apostles, but return to thy monastery, and fight for the salvation of thy soul, and God's Will shall be done." When the monk heard these words he became full of rage, and Satan entered into his heart, and he went [fol. 65*a* 2] to the King of Egypt, that is to say the governor, and made to him false accusations against Saint Abbâ ZACHARIAS. And the king seized the holy man and shut him up in prison, and then he cast him to the lions so that they might rend him, but the lions would not go near him at all. And the king was wroth with the keeper of the lions, and he thought that he had taken a bribe from the archbishop. Then the king starved the lions, and took some of the blood of an ox and smeared the archbishop therewith, and threw him to the lions to eat; but they would not go near him at all; and the king marvelled at this thing, and he took the archbishop from among the lions. Then he shut him up in prison for three months, and he was always saying unto him, "If thou dost not forsake the Christian Faith, and if thou dost not enter my own Faith, I will punish thee, and will kill thee with the sword, and will cast thee again to the lions, and if I do not that I will cast thee into the fire." But Saint Abbâ ZACHARIAS was strong in the True Faith, and he was not in any way afraid of him. Then the king made him many promises, and said unto him, "If thou wilt hearken unto my command, and wilt enter my Faith, I will give thee much money, and I will appoint thee judge over every judge." But he did not listen to him in the least degree, and he did not turn aside from the least of the good works which he was wont to do, and he answered and said unto him, "If thou wert to give me all the kingdom of this world, I would not forsake the True Faith." After this the king shut him up in prison for a few days, and then he released him from the prison house. And when Saint ZACHARIAS came forth from the prison house he departed to the desert of SCETE, and very many bishops went with him through [fol. 65*a* 3] fear of the governor. And in those days the king commanded [his people] to destroy all the churches in the countries under his dominion. And he made very many Christians to forsake their Faith after he had tortured them with very severe tortures; and the Christian peoples lived in this state of tribulation for nine years, and during this period of nine years [the Muslims] destroyed the churches. At the end of nine years Christ had compassion on his people, and He turned away his wrath from them, and He removed from them all this tribulation. And the king, that is to say, governor, commanded [the Christians] to build churches everywhere in the countries under his dominion, and he gave back to them all the goods and money which he had taken from them, and the lands which were endowments of the Church; and all the churches were built, or rebuilt and restored with more than their former splendour. And this father Abbâ ZACHARIAS built many churches, and the king, that is to say, governor, commanded the Christians to blow a trumpet in the churches, and to rejoice at their times of prayer and when they celebrated the Holy Eucharist. And the Christians lived in great happiness under the right observance of the Law of the Church and of believers, and this father continued to build and to endow churches for twelve years. One day a bishop whose name was MERCURIUS came to him, and his body was leprous. And Abbâ ZACHARIAS said unto him gently and with kindliness of heart, "O my brother, Abbâ MERCURIUS, I will help thee because of this disease [fol. 65*b* 1] which hath come upon thee. And thou knowest that God said unto MOSES, "Thou shalt accept the person of no man in respect of right judgement. The priesthood is not fitting for thee whilst this disease is upon thee, unless God shall remove this disease from thee, for the Book calleth it unclean." And MERCURIUS the bishop wept and said unto him, "O my father, help me by thy prayer"; and he went away from him, and departed and went into the church of our Lady, the holy Virgin MARY, which was in his diocese, and he stood up before the picture of our Lady MARY, and he wept, and prayed and entreated and made supplication to her to cleanse him from this disease. And he did this from the morning of the Second Day until the ninth hour of the Fourth Day of the week; he invoked [the Virgin] and he prayed by day and by night. And at the ninth hour, being aweary, he rested his head against the wall whereon was the image of our Lady MARY, and he saw the hand of the image rubbing his body. And he awoke straightway, and he found that his body was cleansed of the leprosy, and he rejoiced with a great joy; and he praised our Lord Jesus Christ, and gave thanks to our Lady, the holy Virgin MARY. And straightway his disciple came to him, and he said unto him, "Come, O my son, and look at my body, for behold our Lady MARY hath healed me of my disease by her prayers, and it befitteth me to stay in this place for three days in order to thank my Lord Christ for the gracious gift which He hath bestowed upon me." Then he ate a little bread, and [fol. 65*b* 2] drank a little water, and he remained in that church until the beginning of the Sabbath. Then he rose up and went to the Archbishop Ábbâ ZACHARIAS when he was in the church on the First Day of the week and informed him of what had happened to him, and he said unto him, "It hath all happened through thy prayer." And Saint Abbâ ZACHARIAS answered and said unto him, "God hath looked upon thy pure heart and thy humility, and hath cleansed thee from thy disease, and hath received thy prayer, and thy tears. And now it is meet for thee to consecrate the Holy Mysteries, and to administer them to us so that we may be blessed by the grace which thou hast received." And when the Holy Eucharist had been administered, all those who were in the church were blessed thereby, and they marvelled exceedingly at this miracle, and they glorified God the Worker of wonders. On another occasion a certain deacon came to Saint Abbâ ZACHARIAS the archbishop, and he bowed down before him weeping abundantly, and he kissed his feet and said unto him, "Have compassion upon me, O my lord, for I have gone astray and have fallen into sin, and straightway all my body hath become leprous." And Abbâ ZACHARIAS said unto him, "O my son, art thou able to persevere in fasting before our Lord Jesus Christ?" And the deacon said unto him, "Yea, O my father, command me to do whatsoever thou wishest, and I will do (it)." And straightway the archbishop brought him into a dark chamber, by him, and he stood there and turned his face to the east, and he said unto the deacon, "O my son, pray to God, and entreat Him with tears by day and by night without ceasing, and repent, and return not to [thy] sins." And after three [fol. 65*b* 3] days and three nights Abbâ ZACHARIAS gave him a little bread by measure and a little water, and Abbâ ZACHARIAS ate and drank in the same manner. And after fifteen days Abbâ ZACHARIAS visited him and said unto him, "Be not afraid." And after one month was ended Abbâ ZACHARIAS visited him, and uncovered his body, and he saw that the leprosy was diminishing on his body; and he said unto him, "Be not afraid." And after four days he visited him again, and he found that his body was free from leprosy, and he washed him with water and anointed him with oil. And he prayed over him and said unto him, "O my son, know thyself. Behold, thou art healed of thy disease; commit sin no more." And the archbishop sent him away to his house rejoicing and praising God. And God wrought very many signs and wonders by the hand of this Saint, Archbishop Abbâ ZACHARIAS. Now he [lived] in the sixth hundred and ninety-first year of the Holy Martyrs (i.e. A.D. 975). He sat as archbishop eight and twenty years; of that period he passed seven years in rest and peace, nine years in tribulation, and twelve years in joy and in building churches. And he departed to God and died in peace, and entered into the kingdom of heaven. Salutation to Abbâ ZACHARIAS who succeeded PHILOTHEUS, and whom the lions refused to eat.

[fol. 66*a* 1] And on this day also are commemorated LESṬELIA, and MEKRÔNÂ, and MARIANA, and PHILOPATOR, and 'ABRÂNÎ, and the Emperor HONORIUS.

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died the holy father CANITUS, that is to say MARCIUS (MARTIANUS), Bishop of the country of Thrace. This holy man was a native of the city of SÔRPEIA, and his parents were Christians; he was an ascetic, and a fighter, and he was gentle and good. He persecuted the followers of ARIUS continually, and he rebuked them, and cursed them, and called them "infidels"; because of this and through them a very great tribulation came upon him. And they used to lie in wait for him in the market-places, and when he passed they seized him on many occasions, and punished him and beat him, and very often they dragged him about through the city by his feet. And he fled from them to a city which was afar off, and he came to the shore of the Red Sea and he dwelt there in a cave for many years, and he lived upon what grew out of the ground. And when the history of him was noised abroad, and his spiritual contendings and his excellence, God chose him to be a bishop. When he had been made Bishop of the country of Thrace, he adopted in his diocese the course of life which was followed by the Apostles, and he was superior to many men in love (or charity) and mercy, and God made manifest through him many miracles. Once when he was passing by he saw a dead man whom a wicked man [fol. 66*a* 2] had seized [for debt]; he was an obstinate and a stupid man by nature, and he would not allow the kinsfolk of the dead to bury the body, saying, "He oweth me four hundred dînârs of gold, and they shall not bury him unless they give me this [sum of money]." And this holy man entreated him, and rebuked him seriously, and said unto him, "Release this dead body so that [his kinsfolk] may bury him"; and the man would not hearken unto him. And the holy man prayed and entreated God, and he raised up the dead man, and rebuked the man who had seized him, before the people, saying, "Why dost thou utter lies over him and hast no fear of God?" Then he prayed to God and that avaricious man died, and he who had been dead went alive to his house, and he lived for many years after this. And this holy man finished his good course, and he pleased God, and he died in peace. Salutation to MARCIUS (MARTIANUS), who was full of grace and goodness, and who raised a man from the dead.

And on this day also died Abbâ DANIEL, who worked miracles for the King of Persia, and made him to believe on the Name of Jesus Christ. Now the cause of his believing was this: The King of Persia was sick of a grievous sickness in his belly, and the physicians who dealt in magic could not heal him; and the King of Persia had a very wise magician, but he was unable to heal him. And [fol. 66*a* 3] when the king wished to kill the magician because of his failure to heal him, the magician spake unto him with cunning words, saying, "O king, seek out a child, and let his mother bind him with fetters, and let his father cut his throat and bring to thee his heart, and when thou hast eaten it thou wilt recover." Now the magician said this because he believed that the king would be afraid to do this thing, but the king gave one thousand dînârs in gold to the captain of his guard and told him to go and search in the city for such a child and to buy him. Now there were in the city two poor people, a man and his wife, and they had a little son, and when they heard the voice of the herald, the love of money led them astray, and weeping they took their son to the king; and the child said, "I have confidence in God Who created me, and He will save me." Then his mother bound him with fetters, and his father drew his knife to cut the throat of his son before the king and his nobles, and the child lifted up his eyes to heaven and he spake with his lips but uttered no sound. And God put compassion into the heart of the king, and he commanded [the father] to release the boy and to bring him to him. And the king said, "What didst thou say when thou didst lift thine eyes up to heaven?" And the boy said, "O my lord, if a man is oppressed his father and his mother ought to deliver him, and if the mother is serious the king and his nobles ought to deliver him. As for me, seeing that there was no salvation for me from all of you, I prayed to God Who created me." When the king heard his words of instruction he gave him one thousand dînârs of gold. And because of this God wished to have compassion on the king, and He sent unto him DANIEL to heal him, [fol. 66*b* 1] and when DANIEL came to him he worked many miracles, and the king believed on the Name of Jesus Christ. And DANIEL baptized him and all his men with Christian baptism, and the king was cured of his disease. Then Abbâ DANIEL departed to his own city, and he continued to strive strenuously, and he died in peace. Salutation to DANIEL the monk who healed the King of Persia.

And on this day also died Abbâ JOHN of the monastery of BÎZAN. And on this day are commemorated GÂRSES and BĂLĂṬĔN. Salutation to him that rebuked the foolish peoples by withholding the rain and dew for a period of three years, that is to say, to JOHN the priest.

And on this day also are commemorated LAURESTUS, and ANDREAS, and the consecration of the church of the monastery of ḲALMÔN, and MABRANUS, and TRÂTÎNÂ, and JUSTINA (?).

XV. KHĔDÂR

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

[fol. 66*b* 2] On this day Saint MÎNÂS became a martyr; now the interpretation of his name is "believing" and "faithful." The father of this holy man was a native of the city of NÂKÎYÔS and his name was EUDOXIUS, and he was a governor and a nobleman. And his brother was envious of him, and he made accusations against his brother EUDOXIUS to the king; and the king sent him to 'AFRÂḲYÂ (PHRYGIA ?) and made him governor over that country; and the men of that country rejoiced in him, for he was a merciful man, and he feared God. Now the mother of Saint MÎNÂS had no son. One day she went into the church on the festival of our Lady, the holy Virgin MARY, and she saw the children of the church wearing beautiful apparel and going into the church. And she moaned and wept before the image (or picture) of our Lady, the holy Virgin MARY, and she entreated her to pray on her behalf to God so that He might give her a son; and a voice came forth from the image of our Lady, the holy Virgin MARY, saying, "Amen." And straightway that woman went to her house and she told her husband about the voice which she had heard from the image of our Lady MARY, and her husband said unto her, "God's Will be done!" And after a certain number of days God gave unto her this holy son, and she called his name "MÎNÂS," according to the word which she had heard from the image of the Virgin MARY. And when the child had grown up a little, [his father] taught him the Scriptures and the doctrine of the spirit. And when he was eleven years old his father died at a good old age, [fol. 66*b* 3] and three years later his mother died. And Saint MÎNÂS remained by himself, fasting and praying, and because of the greatness of the affection which the governors of the city had for his father and for himself, he did abandon the worship of Christ. And when DIOCLETIAN had denied Christ, he commanded all men to worship idols, and very many suffered martyrdom for the sake of our Lord Jesus Christ. Then MÎNÂS abandoned the place where he lived and departed to the desert, and he dwelt there very many days and fought a great fight there. One day he saw the heavens open and the martyrs crowned with beautiful crowns, and he heard a voice which said, "He who toileth for the Name of our Lord Jesus Christ shall receive this crown." And he returned to the city and believed on the Name of Jesus Christ. And many men knowing that he belonged to a noble and honourable family tried to dissuade him from this, and the governor also promised him honours and many other things, but he would neither obey his behest nor turn from his own good counsel. Then straightway the governor commanded his soldiers to torture him with severe tortures, and when he was tired of torturing him he commanded them to cut off his head with the sword; and they cut off his head straightway, and he received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens; and very many men heard of his martyrdom for the sake of the Name of our Lord Jesus Christ. And the governor commanded his soldiers to cast the body of the holy man into the fire, [and they did so,] but certain believing men took his body out of the fire; now the flames had neither scorched it nor burnt it and no harm whatsoever had befallen it. And they swathed it in beautiful grave clothes and laid it in a certain place [fol. 67*a* 1] until the days of persecution were ended. In those days the men of the district of MAREOTIS wished to collect an army from PENTAPOLIS, and they took the body of Saint MÎNÂS with them so that it might be a help unto them, and might protect them on the way. And when they were in the ship, and the body of Saint MÎNÂS was with them, beasts came up out of the sea with faces like the faces of serpents and necks like the necks of camels, and they stretched out their necks towards the body of the saint and licked it; and the crew of the ship were afraid with a great fear. And fire went forth from the body of the saint, and burned the faces of the beasts. And having arrived at the city of Alexandria and the men having finished their work, they wished to return to their country, and they sought to take the body of Saint MÎNÂS with them. Having lifted it upon a camel, the camel would not get up from his place; and when they had lifted it on to a second camel, that camel also would not get up, and although they beat it with many stripes it would not move at all. Then they knew that this was the Will of God, and they built a shrine over him, and buried him therein and departed. And God wished to reveal the body of Saint MÎNÂS. Now there was in that desert a certain shepherd, and one day a sheep that was sick of a disease and had running sores went into the shrine, and slipped down into the water of the well which was by the side of the shrine, and having rolled about in it the sheep was healed straightway. When the shepherd saw this thing and this miracle, he marvelled exceedingly and was frightened. And he used to take some dust from the shrine, and wet it with water, and smear it over the sheep when they were sick, and straightway they were healed thereby. And [fol. 67*a* 2] he used to do this always, and he healed all the sick persons who came to him by this thing. And the Emperor CONSTANTINE heard of the report of this—now he had an only daughter who was sick through running sores—and he sent her to this place, but she could not strip herself naked because there were men there. And the princess asked the shepherd what he did when he healed the sick sheep, and the shepherd told her what he did. And she took dust from that place, and moistened it with water from that well, and she smeared her whole body therewith, and she slept that night in the shrine. And Saint MÎNÂS appeared and said unto her, "When thou risest up in the morning, dig, and thou shalt find my body"; and straightway she was healed of her disease. And when she rose up [and found that] she was healed of her disease, she commanded [her servants] to dig in that place, and straightway she found the body of Saint MÎNÂS. And she rejoiced with an exceeding great joy, and she sent [a letter] to her father, and told him of this matter, and the emperor built a church over his body. And a beautiful church was built in his honour in the days of ARCADIUS and HONORIUS, the righteous emperors, and they commanded the people to build a great city there. And a great city was built there, as the righteous emperors commanded, and they laid the body of Saint MÎNÂS in the church, and miracles and great wonders took place through his body. And sick people of all nations used to come into that church, and they were healed, and signs and wonders used to appear in that church. And Satan was envious, and he stirred up certain wicked men and they pulled down [fol. 67*a* 3] the church, and the city was plundered, and they removed the body of Saint MÎNÂS. And they built another church for him there, and laid his body therein, and signs and wonders took place therein which were far greater than those which had taken place in the former church. Salutation to thee, O MÎNÂS, officer and nobleman, for whom thy mother prayed to the image of the Virgin MARY.

And on this day also died the holy father Abbâ MÎNÂS the Second, the sixty-first Archbishop of the city of Alexandria. The parents of this holy man made him marry a wife when he was young, against his will, but he did not wish to transgress the command of his parents, and he fulfilled all the duty of marriage according to the Law of the Church, and the whole of this matter was to him as a dream. When they brought him with his wife into the marriage-chamber, he sat down and talked to her, saying, "O my sister, what shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul? The world passeth away and the lust thereof passeth away, but, as it is written, 'He who doeth the Will of God shall endure for ever.' Come now, let us make a covenant of God, and let us preserve our bodies and our virginity in purity." And his wife accepted his words and she agreed with him that they should keep their bodies in purity. Then he left her and went to the desert of SCETE, and he became a monk in the monastery of Abbâ MACARIUS, and he dwelt there for many years as [fol. 67*b* 1] an ascetic and fighter. When the archbishop his predecessor died, they took Abbâ MÎNÂS against his will, and made him archbishop; and he sat on the throne of MARK the evangelist for eighteen years, and he protected his flock rightly and justly and he died in peace. Salutation to MÎNÂS the Second who renounced the world and regarded it as a shadow and as a thirst during which a man drinketh as in a dream.

Salutation to thee, VICTOR, in whose admonitions the children rejoiced. [Wanting in the Bodleian MS.]

And on this day beginneth the preaching of the fasting service of ṢOMA GÊNÂ, for the birth of our Lord Jesus Christ, which the Jacobite Christians established.

Salutation to the House of PACHOMIUS which was consecrated by the holy father TIMOTHY. [Wanting in the Bodleian MS.]

And on this day also died the holy MACCABAEUS of ḲÂSBAR, who fought until he fed with his body the birds [fol. 67*b* 2] of heaven.

XVI. KHĔDÂR

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day was consecrated the church of the blessed Saint 'ABÛNÂFER, the dweller in the desert, [which is built] outside the city of MĔSR (CAIRO). Salutation to the consecration of thy house outside the city of MĔSR (CAIRO), which thou protectest from heat and from cold by the hair of thy head and thy flowing beard.

And on this day also died the holy father, Abbâ JOHN, the forty-eighth Archbishop of the city of Alexandria. This father was from the country of CYPRUS, and he was exceedingly rich, and he lived in the city of Alexandria; and his father was governor of the city and he had married a wife and begotten children. After this his wife died and his children, and forthwith he gave all his possessions to the poor and needy. And he became a monk and he fought strenuously and became an ascetic, and he multiplied greatly his ascetic labours. And he pleased God by his works, and his faith, and the beauty of his singing, and his righteousness, and his excellence. And all the bishops of the country of Egypt agreed together, and they took him against his will [fol. 67*b* 3] and they made him Archbishop of the city of Alexandria, and he took his seat upon the throne of MARK the evangelist. And he read the Holy Gospel and his light appeared in the manner wherein he fulfilled the duties of his position and his office, and he worked many miracles and wonders. And he used to give to the poor and needy each day regularly whatsoever they lacked, and because of this Abbâ JOHN, Archbishop of the city of Alexandria, used to be called "the merciful." And the Jews and pagans held him in great reverence, and they feared him and honoured him, even as it is written in the history of his strife; and he shepherded his flock wisely and well, and he pleased God, and he died in peace. Salutation to Archbishop KÎRÎ, who was called "JOHN, the merciful."

And on this day also Saint XYSTUS the bishop became a martyr by the hand of MAXIMUS the governor, who tortured the holy man with severe tortures and then cut off his head with the sword. And XYSTUS received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens. Salutation to XYSTUS the martyr.

And on this day also Saint ṬÂṬÛS (TATIA) became a martyr [fol. 68*a* 1] in the city of Rômê, under ALEXANDER the governor. Having had her brought before him he said unto her, "Sacrifice to my gods"; and she said, "I will only sacrifice to Jesus Christ, my God." And the governor commanded [his soldiers] to strip off the veil of her face, and when he saw her he marvelled at her beauty. Her eyes were like the stars of the heavens, her figure was like the palm, and her beauty was like that of the rose; and there was none who could be compared with her at that time. When the emperor saw her his heart was carried away by love for her, and he said unto her, "Obey me. Offer sacrifice to the great god APOLLO, and I will make thee mistress of the palace." And Saint ṬÂṬÛS (TATIA) said unto him, "I am the bride of Jesus Christ, and I will worship none but He. Permit me to go into the shrines of thy gods for I would see their power"; and the governor took her into the house of his gods. And when Saint ṬÂṬÛS (TATIA) had gone in she prayed and entreated God to destroy the idols, and straightway there was an earthquake, and the idols fell down from their thrones, and APOLLO, their greatest idol, fell down and was broken in pieces, and many of the priests of the temple died. And the foul spirit who was in APOLLO cried out, saying, "What hast thou to do with me, O holy woman of God? Behold thou hast broken in pieces my abode, and thou hast cast me out from it." When the emperor saw this he commanded his soldiers to throw her down on her face and to beat her with whips until the blood flowed from her body, now her blood was as white as milk, and they beat her until their muscles were tired. And the angels of God inflicted pains on those who were beating her, [fol. 68*a* 2] but their torturing affected Saint ṬÂṬÛS (TATIA) in no way. And the emperor also commanded the soldiers to give her to a famished lion, but when the lion came to her he crouched at her feet and licked them; and a voice came from heaven, saying, "Rejoice, O pure one, for I am with thee." And when the emperor saw that there was no way of touching her he commanded the soldiers to cut off her head with the sword, and the soldiers did so, and she finished her fight. And the Bishop of Rômê came by night, and he wrapped her body up in costly cloths, and laid it in a chest inlaid with gold and silver, and innumerable miracles took place through her body. Salutation to ṬÂṬÛS (TATIA), perfect within and without, the dust at whose feet the lion licked.

And on this day also are commemorated DANIEL the monk, and the Emperor HONORIUS. This Abbâ DANIEL was a fighter in the desert of SCETE, in the monastery of Abbâ MACARIUS, and he lived for forty years and a half without tasting bread, or fish, or honey, or oil, for he ate nothing except herbs and water. And after he had done this for [many] days, a boastful idea came to him, and he said in his heart, "Who is there among the dwellers in the desert of SCETE that can fast as long as I do?" When God saw the pride of his heart He sent unto him a shining angel who said unto him, "Why, O DANIEL, dost thou boast thyself thus arrogantly, which is not good? Our Lord [fol. 68*a* 3] Jesus Christ desireth not pride but lowli-ness, and fear, and trembling." And DANIEL said unto the angel, "Tell me, my lord, if there is anyone better than myself so that I may go and see him and I will confess to my God that I have sinned." And the angel said unto him, "HONORIUS, Emperor of Rômê (Constantinia), is a pure and holy man, and a fearer of God, he shall be thy companion in the kingdom of the heavens." When Abbâ DANIEL heard this he bowed and knelt down on the ground, and threw dust on his head, and he asked God to bring him to the city of Rômê in His wisdom and power and to shew him the emperor. And whilst he was praying thus a cloud came by the command of God and brought him to the gates of Constantinia, and he found there a servant of the Emperor HONORIUS. When the servant saw Abbâ DANIEL, he was blessed by him, and he said unto him, "O my father, what is thy wish? For what hast thou come hither?" And Abbâ DANIEL said unto him, "If thou art able to lead me to one of the nobles of the city so that he may take me to the emperor, [do so]." And the servant said unto him, "If I myself could take thee to the emperor wouldst thou come?" And Abbâ DANIEL said unto him, "If thou hast power to bring me to him God be blessed." And the servant said unto him, "O my father, what wouldst thou do with the sight of an earthly and mortal emperor? Would it not be better for thee to see the kingdom of the heavens?" And Abbâ DANIEL said unto him, "If my God had not commanded me I should not have come hither." And the servant said unto him, "Wait, O my father, until I buy what my master requireth"; and straightway he bought bread, and salt, and vegetables, and vinegar. And the servant took him to the place where HONORIUS was with a fellow monk, whose name was EULOGIUS, [fol. 68*b* 1] according to his custom. After HONORIUS returned from the place of [giving] judgement, he put on sackcloth and clean raiment and sat down. And the servant leaving Abbâ DANIEL outside the door went in, and when HONORIUS saw him he said unto him, "Art thou mad that thou makest Abbâ DANIEL to stand outside the door?" And HONORIUS went out with his companion, and he received Abbâ DANIEL, and bowed down at his feet, and they saluted each other with greetings of peace, and they went into the chamber and sat down; and at the ninth hour the servant brought them food to eat, and they rose up and prayed. Now Abbâ DANIEL was afraid to eat bread lest he should fall ill, and he said unto HONORIUS and his companion, "O my lords, murmur not against me because I do not eat bread; it is not through pride that I refrain but through fear of sickness." Then they gave him a few herbs and he ate according to his wont. When they had finished the prayer of the table HONORIUS enquired of Abbâ DANIEL about his coming. And Abbâ DANIEL said unto him, "If thou art able I wish thee to bring me to the Emperor, for I have come [to see him] at the command of Christ." And on the following day HONORIUS put on royal apparel which bewitched the sight, and he sat upon his throne, and he made [his servant] bring in Abbâ DANIEL. And when DANIEL saw the emperor he was afraid and trembled, and the servant seeing his fear took him from there and brought him to his abode. When the judging was ended HONORIUS threw off his [royal] apparel, and put on the garb of the monk, and went back to his dwelling. And when Abbâ DANIEL saw him, he said, "Why didst thou not take me to the king, so that I might tell him what is in my heart and return to my place?" And HONORIUS said unto him, "Why didst thou come?" And Abbâ DANIEL said unto him, "Thy servant brought me"; and when HONORIUS heard this he marvelled and said unto him, "I am HONORIUS whom men call [fol. 68*b* 2] 'Emperor of the Earth,' and thou hast seen me sitting on my transitory throne." When Abbâ DANIEL heard this he bowed down at his feet, and adjured him to tell him the story of all his life. And the Emperor HONORIUS told him that for forty years he had neither eaten food nor worn raiment which he had not earned by the labour of his hands, that is to say the weaving of palm fibre, that what was left of his daily food he gave to the poor, that his food was bread, and herbs, and vinegar and salt, that he never cursed any man, that he never craved for the goods of any man, and that he had kept himself a virgin. When Abbâ DANIEL heard this he said unto him, "Forgive me for boasting myself over thee"; and Abbâ DANIEL departed to his place sorrowfully, and in tears. After two months had passed HONORIUS and his teacher EULOGIUS agreed together, and he departed from the palace, and God sent an angel who carried him to Abbâ DANIEL, and they finished their strife and they both died on the same day; and EULOGIUS and his disciple also died on that day. Salutation to HONORIUS and to Abbâ DANIEL his companion. Salutation to EULOGIUS and to his servant who dwell together in heaven.

XVII. KHĔDÂR

On this day is commemorated the translation of the body of the saint who is honoured in all the ends of the world, JOHN the Mouth of Gold, Archbishop of the city of Constantinia. Now Saint JOHN excommunicated the Empress EUDOXIA because of the property of a widow which she had taken from her by violence. And the empress made an excuse for herself, saying, "Kings have always been in the habit, if when they have been going about among estates they have seen any property which they wanted, of taking it, and giving the owner the value thereof, and I will give this widow the value of her estate"; now the widow did not wish to part with her estate. For this reason Saint JOHN excommunicated the Empress EUDOXIA, and he forbade her to enter the church, because she had not obeyed his command and let the property of the widow alone. And Satan came upon her, and she swelled with pride, and became furiously angry, and she gathered together to her the bishops whom Saint JOHN had excommunicated because of their evil works and wicked faith. And they conspired together against him, and the empress drove him into exile to the island of the mountains 'ADRÂKES. After a few years (days?) he returned to his office, and then the bishops gathered together and drove him into exile in the country of Armenia; and from there [he went] to a far city in the desert where he died. When THEODOSIUS the Less, the son of ARCADIUS, reigned, he sent messengers and had the body of Saint JOHN the Mouth of Gold brought to the city of Constantinia with great honour, and much singing, [fol. 69*a* 1] and music, five and thirty years after he was exiled, and it arrived on the twenty-second day of the month Genbôt (May–June), according to what is said in the second volume of the Coptic Synopsis, and on the twenty-second day of the month Yakâtît (Feb.–March), according to the Greek books. And it is said that they laid the body in a coffer of afrâṣ stone, that is to say, marble, in the sanctuary, and great signs and wonders were made manifest through his body. Salutation to the translation of thy body, O JOHN the Mouth of Gold.

Now the Book of the Exposition of Alexandria, and the Exposition which Abbâ JOHN, Bishop of the city of ḲEFṬ, wrote, and the Exposition of the Melchites agree together in stating that the death of JOHN the Mouth of Gold took place on the seventeenth day of the month Khĕdâr. The Exposition of the Jacobites saith that he died on the fourteenth day of the month Elûl, that is to say, the seventeenth day of the month of Maskaram, and that, because of the festival of the Cross they changed it to the seventeenth day of Khĕdâr. The old books record that his death took place on the twelfth day of the month Genbôt, but I think that it was the carrying of his body up to the city of Constantinia which took place on that day, and behold it is [here] written on the seventeenth day of the month of Khĕdâr.

[fol. 69*a* 2] And on this day also are commemorated the blessed ABRAHAM and his wife ḤÂRÎK, and the righteous men [who suffered martyrdom in the desert of] WÂṢÎF, and Abbâ SÎNÔDÂ (SHENUTI) the abbot. Salutation to ABRAHAM, and his wife ḤÂRÎK, and their child ḲĔDÛS 'AMLÂK. Salutation to the martyr of the desert of WÂṢÎF. Salutation to Abbâ SÎNÔDÂ the abbot. [And on this day is commemorated WALATTA PETROS the Ethiopian woman.]

XVIII. KHĔDÂR

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day the holy virgins AṬRÂSÎS and YÔNÂ became martyrs. This Saint AṬRÂSÎS was the daughter of King ISKANDRIANUS who worshipped idols; and he made her a palace, and he established her therein by herself so that she might never see a man. And she used to think about the end of [fol. 69*a* 3] this world, and she asked God by day and by night to teach her the path of righteousness and integrity. And she saw a vision one night and it was as if one said unto her, "Send to the virgin YÔNÂ, the daughter of PHILASPHERON and she shall teach thee the way of God." When she awoke from her dream her soul rejoiced and she sent a message to the virgin YÔNÂ who made haste to come unto her; and AṬRÂSÎS embraced her, and bowed down at her feet, and she entreated her to teach her and make manifest to her the path of God. And YÔNÂ the virgin told her the reason why the Son of God became a man, and she began to tell her [the history of the world] from the time when God created our father ADAM, and how He expelled him from the Garden; and she told her about the days of NOAH, and how the water of the Flood came and destroyed all mankind, and how only eight men were left [alive], and how the earth was renewed once more, and how men worshipped idols, and how God appeared to our father ABRAHAM, and how the Israelites went out from Egypt, and how the prophets proclaimed the coming of the Son of God, and how Satan was master of the world through the worship of idols, and how the Son of God came down from heaven, and took flesh of MARY so that He might save the children of men from the dominion of Satan. And YÔNÂ the virgin told her and made her to know about heavenly grace, and the kingdom which is for ever, which God giveth unto those who labour for His holy Name's sake. When AṬRÂSÎS the virgin heard the words of YÔNÂ she rejoiced exceedingly; and the words of YÔNÂ the virgin were [fol. 69*b* 1] unto her sweeter than honey and sugar, and straightway she believed on God. And the two virgins lived together and they fasted and they prayed by day and by night; and the king, the father of AṬRÂSÎS, knew nothing of this matter. One day they saw our Lord Jesus Christ, and His mother MARY the pure and holy Virgin, and she took the two virgins and brought them to her Son as an offering, and He blessed them. And the king, the father of AṬRÂSÎS, departed to fight a battle, and when he came back he came to his daughter and said unto her, "Come, my daughter, cast incense to the god APOLLO before thou comest to thy marriage (?)." And AṬRÂSÎS the virgin said unto her father, "Why dost thou forsake the God of heaven and worship foul idols? Turn, O my father, to the God Who created thee and in Whose hand is thy soul and body." When the king her father heard these words, the like of which he had never heard from her before, he marvelled, and asked what had come to his daughter and what had changed her mind. And [his servants] told him, "It is YÔNÂ the virgin, the daughter of PHILASPHERON, who hath corrupted thy daughter's heart." And the king commanded [his soldiers] to burn them in the fire, and they dragged them out arrayed as they were in costly raiment wherein gold and silver were woven in cunning devices, and they did not strip them naked because they were daughters of kings. And there were many of their slaves, and their handmaidens, both small and great, who wept for them, and the men of the city also wept and were sorry for those virgins, and they begged them to submit to the king so that he might not kill them; but they would not turn from their good counsel, and their divine love. And straightway [fol. 69*b* 2] the soldiers dug pits in the ground and they lighted fires therein and the flames thereof rose to a great height. And the two virgins took each other's hand and they cast themselves into the fire, and the people saw them standing up in the fire with their faces turned towards the east, and they were praying, and after that they died. Now the fire was unto them as cool water. And certain believing men took away their bodies, and their countenances were unchanged, and their apparel was unscorched, and the fire had not touched the hair of their head; and they laid them in a good place with great honour until the end of the days of persecution. And they built a fine church and laid their bodies therein, and great signs and wonders were wrought there through them. Salutation to the virgins AṬRÂSÎS and YÔNÂ who died in the fire holding each other's hand.

And on this day also died PHILIP the apostle, one of the Twelve Apostles. Now the lot fell upon this apostle to go to the country of 'AFRÂḲYÂ (PHRYGIA), and all the region round about, and he preached to the people thereof the Name of our Lord Jesus Christ, our God and Redeemer; and he worked miracles there which astonished the hearts [of men]. And when PETER and PHILIP drew nigh to the city a certain man in whom was an evil spirit received them, and he cried out, saying, "O Apostles of Christ, I will not let you go into the city." And PETER knew that [he was possessed of] a spirit of devils, [fol. 69*b* 3] and then and there he rebuked him, and Satan went out of him, and the man was healed and he followed the apostles into the city. Now there was above the gate of the city an exceedingly high pillar, and when they came to that gate PETER entreated God, saying, "I beseech Thee, O my Lord Jesus Christ, that this gate, and this high pillar and the things which are on it may fall down upon the earth in such a manner that the hand of a man may touch them." And at that moment the gate, and the pillar, and the things which were on it fell down upon the earth, and they appeared to be like the face of the earth. And PETER said unto the man from whom the foul spirit had gone forth, "Go up and cry out," and he cried out, saying, "Apostle of Christ, I will cry out as thou commandest me." And similarly he commanded him to speak with his mouth so that awe might fall upon the men of that city. And that man went up from the ground upon the pillar which had stood over the gate, and PETER said unto him, "In the Name of my Lord Jesus Christ let it be raised up," and at that very moment the gate raised itself up, and the pillar which was upon it, and the doors resumed the place which they had formerly. And the man cried out with a loud voice, saying, "O men who live in this city, assemble ye in the place where are the Apostles of Christ, our Lord, that they may bless you and may entreat Him to forgive you your sins." And whilst the man was standing upon the top of the pillar and saying these words, there was an earthquake and lightning, and the men of the city were frightened, and they feared exceedingly, and they went into the houses, and caverns, and islands (sic), and [fol. 70*a* 1] the lightning pursued them wherever they went; and many men, and women also, died of fright at the noise of the thunder and the lightnings. And because of this groups of people came to the apostles, and they looked at them, their hands being stretched out, and they made supplication to God, and they fell on the ground and bowed low before them, saying, "O servants of God, we beseech thee to have mercy upon us." And the apostles made entreaty to God on their behalf, and the thunder ceased and there was no more lightning; and they all believed on our Lord Jesus Christ, and the apostles brought them to the knowledge of God, and after this they made them to enter the True Faith. And [PHILIP] went outside the city and turned the people to the knowledge of God, but those who did not believe on the Lord Jesus Christ took counsel together against PHILIP so that they might seize him and kill him. Now they enjoyed the favour of the king, and he would not allow them to enter into their alien city. When PHILIP came to them they rose up against him, and seized him, and shut him up in prison. And he used to laugh before them, and say unto them, "Why do ye go away from everlasting life, and why do ye not think about the salvation of your souls?" And they rose up against him, and seized him, and shut him up in prison; and they tortured him with severe tortures, and they suspended him head downwards, and he delivered up his soul whilst still under torture. And when they wanted to burn his body in the fire, an angel of God snatched it out of their hands whilst they stood looking at him, and he carried it to a place outside the city of Jerusalem. And when they saw this great miracle they all cried out [fol. 70*a* 2] with a loud voice, saying, "One is the Lord God of Saint PHILIP the apostle." And they were sorry and repented that they had tortured him, and they entreated God by day and by night until the body of Saint PHILIP returned. And when they saw it they rejoiced exceedingly, and they came back to the Faith of our Lord Christ, and through the body of PHILIP God made manifest signs and miracles. Salutation to PHILIP and ELEUTHERUS.

See DC B Eleutherus

And on this day also ELEUTHERUS, and his mother ENTIA, who belonged to a noble family of the city of Rômê, became martyrs. This holy man was brought up by a God-fearing bishop whose name was ANICETUS. When he was sixteen years of age he was made a deacon, when he was eighteen he was made a priest, and at the age of twenty years he was made bishop of the country of 'ÊLÊRÎḲÔS. In those days ANDRIANUS the emperor came to the city of Rômê, and when he heard about ELEUTHERUS he commanded PÎLḲĔS to bring him to him; and PÎLḲĔS found him in the church teaching the Word of God. When PÎLḲĔS heard the Faith of ELEUTHERUS, he believed and was baptized in the Name of Jesus Christ. When he had brought ELEUTHERUS to ANDRIANUS the emperor, he said unto him, "Offer sacrifice [fol. 70*a* 3] to the gods. Thou art a free man, why dost thou worship a man who was crucified?" And ELEUTHERUS said, "My freedom is the Cross of Jesus Christ, Who is the Creator of the heavens and of the earth." When the emperor heard this he commanded [his soldiers] to throw him into a red-hot oven and to shut him in; and they did so, and straightway the fiery oven was cooled; and [they threw him on the wheel, and] the wheel was broken. When the emperor saw this he marvelled greatly, and not knowing what to do he commanded the soldiers to throw him into prison. And a raven brought him food from the Garden (i.e. Paradise) and he ate and was satisfied. And when ILLYRICUS (?) the governor saw him, he believed in the God of Saint ELEUTHERUS, and they cut off his head with a sword. And ANDRIANUS commanded his soldiers to bring small horses, and to harness them to a chariot, and they tied ELEUTHERUS to the middle of the chariot, and they dragged him about until his limbs were cut to pieces. And straightway an angel of God came down and released him from his fetters, and he took him into a high place, and he sat down with the wild beasts glorifying God. And straightway ANDRIANUS ordered his soldiers to hunt down the wild beasts that were in the mountain in which they had found ELEUTHERUS, and they took ELEUTHERUS to ANDRIANUS the emperor. When they had brought him to him the emperor commanded them to give him to the lions, and when the lions came they licked the moisture from his face and feet; and all the men of Rômê wondered. Now the lions had slain fifty hundred pagans. When the emperor saw this he was filled with wrath, and he commanded two soldiers to spear him [and they did so]. And his mother ENTIA also—after they had tortured her greatly, they speared her with him, and whilst she was embracing the neck of her son they delivered up their souls to God. [fol. 70*b* 1] Salutation to ELEUTHERUS.

XIX. KHĔDÂR

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day took place the consecration of the church of Saint SERGIUS and Saint BACCHUS in the city of RÛṢÂFÂ. Now, Saint SERGIUS having been martyred in the city of RÛṢÂFÂ certain believing men took his body and prepared it for burial [and kept it] with them, and they lighted lamps before it; and it remained hidden with them until the end of the days of persecution when they brought it out and built a fine church for it. And there gathered together about him in the church fifteen bishops, and they consecrated it on this day, and many signs and wonders took place through it. And when they removed his body and laid it in the church there flowed forth from it scented unguent, the perfume whereof was exceedingly sweet, and it healed all the sick folk who received some of it in faith and in True Faith; and to this day a sweet odour floweth forth from his body. Salutation to the bishops who consecrated the shrine of SERGIUS.

[fol. 70*b* 2] And on this day also is the beginning of the fasting service of the birth of our Lord and Redeemer Jesus Christ for all the Christians of Rômâ and 'AFRANGÎ (EUROPE ?), and Syria and Armenia, with the exception of the men of Egypt and Ethiopia and NÔBÂ.

And on this day also is commemorated Saint BARTHOLOMEW the apostle, one of the Twelve Apostles. And his preaching took place in the country of AL-KHÂRGAH (the GREAT OASIS), and at length he turned many to the knowledge of God. His martyrdom took place on the first day of Maskaram. Salutation to the fighting apostle who was tied up in a hair sack and cast into the sea.

And on this day also became martyrs Saints THEOPHILUS, and his wife PATRICIA, and their son DAMÂLÎS. This holy man was brought up in the fear of God and in the service of Christ. And certain men went and told 'ANTÎHÎPÔṬÔS, the governor, that he was a Christian, and the governor, who was in the temple of JUPITER, ordered his soldiers to bring him to him. When they had brought him the governor said unto him, "Whence art thou? What is thy faith?" And THEOPHILUS said unto him, "I am a Christian and I believe on my Lord Jesus Christ." And the governor said unto him, "Offer sacrifice [fol. 70*b* 3] to the gods so that thou mayest not die an evil death"; and THEOPHILUS said unto him, "I will only sacrifice to my Lord Jesus Christ." And the governor commanded his soldiers to hang him up and to scrape his body until his bowels appeared, [and they did so,] but he was protected and did not suffer. Then the governor ordered them to light a fire and to cast him into it, [and they did so,] but when the saint had prayed in the midst of the fire, the fire was scattered and the saint came forth from it untouched thereby. And the governor seeing this ordered them to cast him into prison and to keep him under very strict restraint so that he might die of hunger, [and they did so.] Eight days after this his wife PATRICIA came to him carrying her boy, and she encouraged him to become a martyr and to die for the Name of Christ. And the governor went into the prison house to enquire if anyone had given any food to Saint THEOPHILUS. When he opened the door of the prison house the sweet smell of incense met him, and he found Saint THEOPHILUS sitting upon a cushion which had been spread out, and three angels were with him, and they were eating milk and honey. When the governor saw this he was terrified and withdrew. On the following day the governor commanded the soldiers to bring THEOPHILUS to him, and he went, his wife accompanying him. And the governor said unto him, "Sacrifice to the god JUPITER." And THEOPHILUS said unto him, "I will only sacrifice to my Lord Jesus Christ." And the governor commanded the soldiers to throw him to the lions, [and they did so,] and the lions rushed at him and kissed his feet, but in doing this by the Will of God they wounded him slightly, and he delivered up his soul to God. And Saint PATRICIA took his body and put it into a chest, and the governor ordered his soldiers to take her into the amphitheatre [fol. 71*a* 1] and to give her to the lions, [and they did so.] When the boy DAMÂLÎS saw this he laughed, and said, "I believe in the Father and the Son and the Holy Ghost"; now the child spake being only five months old, and he was crowned by the lion. Salutation to THEOPHILUS and his wife PATRICIA, and Salutation to their son DAMÂLÎS, who though ignorant of the names of his father and mother shed his blood for Christ.

On this day died the holy father ANIANUS, Archbishop of the city of Alexandria, the second from MARK the evangelist. This holy man was a native of Alexandria and his parents were infidel pagans, and his trade was that of a sandalmaker. When Saint MARK the evangelist and apostle came into the city of Alexandria, by the Will and wisdom of God he struck his foot against a stone and broke the latchet of his sandals, and he gave the sandal to this Saint ANIANUS to sew for him. And when he took the sandal to sew it, he thrust his awl into it, and it passed right through it and pierced his finger; and he said in the Greek tongue, "Îstâôs (Eis Theos)," which being interpreted is "One God." When Saint MARK the evangelist heard him mention the Name of God, he took up some dust from the ground and spat spittle upon it, and laid it [fol. 71*a* 2] upon the finger of ANIANUS and healed it immediately; and ANIANUS marvelled at this, and he took Saint MARK and brought him into his house, and he asked him about his name and Faith, and from what place he had come. Then Saint MARK began to tell him from the Old and the New Testaments concerning the Godhead of our Lord Christ, and His wisdom, and His being made man, and His Death and Resurrection, and the working of miracles in His holy Name. And he illumined the heart of Saint ANIANUS, and he believed in the Lord Christ, and the men of his house also, and they were baptized in the Name of our Lord Jesus Christ; and the Divine Grace of the Holy Spirit came down upon them. And they became devoted hearers of the doctrine of Saint MARK the apostle, and ANIANUS learned all the doctrine of the Church, and her ordinances and her Law. When Saint MARK the apostle wished to go to PENTAPOLIS to preach, he laid his hand upon the head of Saint ANIANUS and made him Archbishop of the city of Alexandria. And he used to preach to the men thereof, and baptize them secretly, and help the believers and strengthen them in the True Faith. And he set apart his own house for a church, and it is said, that this church, which is outside the city of Alexandria on the west, was known to Saint GEORGE the martyr. And this Saint ANIANUS sat upon the throne of MARK the evangelist twelve years, and he died in peace. Salutation to ANIANUS who protected his [fol. 71*a* 3] flock against the jaws of the ravening wolf, and received the reward of the shepherd in heaven.

And on this day also took place the consecration of the church of Saint THEODORE the general. Salutation to the consecration of thy church, O Saint THEODORE the martyr! Save me even as thou didst save the son of the Hebrew (?) woman.

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day is commemorated the festival of our Lady, the holy Virgin MARY. Salutation to thee, O our Lady MARY.

And on this day also died Saint GREGORY, the worker of signs and wonders. This holy man came from the country of Rômê, and from his earliest years he was taught philosophy and the True Faith. He was a true Christian, and he remembered the end of this world, and the never-ending abidingness of the kingdom of the heavens, and he devoted all his mind to the salvation of his soul. And the bishop of that city asked him to help him in the work of his episcopate, but he did not wish for this for he used to flee from the praises of men; after this he fled to the desert where he fought a good fight. [fol. 71*b* 1] When the bishop of that city died [the priests] tried to make him bishop, but they could not find him; and when the people were gathered together, and GREGORY, the preacher of Divinity, was with them, a voice came unto them, saying, "Seek for GREGORY, the dweller in the desert, and set him over you." And they sought for him but found him not, and they continued [to seek for him] for many days. And whilst they were seeking for him in the desert and mountains, he was nigh unto them though they knew it not. And when they found him not they all with one accord agreed and took a Book of the Gospels and set it over them, and this Book which they set over them they named "GREGORY, the preacher of Godhead." And the angel of the Lord appeared unto this Saint GREGORY, and said unto him, "Rise up and get thee gone, for they have made thee bishop over them; and refuse not this thing, for it is from God." And he was unable to resist the Divine command, and he descended from the mountain, and went to them, and they went forth to meet him with great honour, and they carried out his enthronement. And God made manifest through him signs and wonders innumerable, and because of this he was called "GREGORY, the worker of signs and miracles," because of the multitude of his signs and wonders. Now there was a certain small lake wherein two brethren used to catch many fish, which they sold for much money, and they disputed between themselves about the lake, each one [fol. 71*b* 2] saying, "This lake belongeth to me only." When they were unable to agree about it they came to Bishop GREGORY to make a decision about that lake for them, and he decided that they should divide the lake between them. And when they refused to agree together as he commanded them, and they would not do as the saint told them, but each continued to say, "I will take it for myself," straightway Saint GEORGE asked God concerning that lake. And the earth swallowed up the lake, and the water became dry land, and it remaineth so to this day. And the report of the signs and wonders which he used to work was heard in all the earth; and having finished his good fight he died in peace [and departed] from this fleeting world and entered into everlasting joy. Salutation to GREGORY whose odour is sweeter than cinnamon, and who dried up a lake about which two brethren quarrelled.

And on this day also died the holy father Abbâ COSMAS, the fifty-first Archbishop of the city of Alexandria. On this holy man came tribulation and much sorrow, and in his days great tribulation came upon the Christians. And about that time also the King of the Muslims put them to shame, for he commanded that the Christians [fol. 71*b* 3] and the Jews should not wear white apparel, and that they should distinguish themselves by wearing apparel the colour of indigo. And in the days of this holy father many signs and wonders appeared, and among them was the wonder of the figure of our holy Lady the Virgin MARY which was in the church of Saint SEVERUS in the desert of SCETE; this figure opened itself down on one side, and from it much blood flowed. And there were many figures [of the Virgin] in the country of Egypt from the eyes of which tears flowed in abundance, and those who have understanding and wisdom will know that this took place because of the tribulation, and trials and sorrow which came upon the bishops and the believers. And after this God gave good days in the place of those days which were bad. And this father taught the believers continually, and he strengthened them in the True Faith; and he sat upon the throne of MARK for seven years and five months. He died on the twenty-first day of the month of Khĕdâr in the five hundred and seventy-fifth year of the martyrs (A.D. 859), and he was buried in a cave near DÔNÔSÔR. Salutation to thy upright episcopacy, thou on account of whose sorrow the figure of the Virgin shed tears.

And on this day also are commemorated the holy martyrs ALPHAEUS, and ZACCHAEUS, and ROMANUS, and JOHN, and THOMAS, and VICTOR, and ISAAC from the city of ESHMÛNÊN. [fol. 72*a* 1] Salutation to you, O ye bright stars of ESHMÛNÊN.

And on this day also died Abbâ JOHN of the city of ASYÛṬ. The parents of this holy man were glassmakers, and when this saint was born they brought him up under good admonitions and teaching; after he grew up they taught him the craft of the carpenter, and after a few days, when his father and his mother were dead, he departed to the saints Abbâ ISIDORE and Abbâ BAYMAN and adopted the garb of the monk; and he devoted himself so strenuously to fasting and prayer that his name was heard of in remote monasteries. Then the angel of the Lord appeared unto him and commanded him to go to his own country and to teach the people thereof the way of righteousness. Now he never left his cell except to receive the Offering. And one day two holy old men came to him, Abbâ ABZEL and Abbâ BĔSÔY, and before they had come near him he cried out from a distance, saying, "Peace to your visit, O my fathers," and he addressed them by their names though he knew them not. And they marvelled greatly. And Saint SÎNÔDÂ (SHENUTI), the pillar of Egypt, used to visit him often and embrace him. When the wicked pagans attacked the land of Egypt and war broke out, the Emperor THEODOSIUS sent the governor of Egypt who marched against them. And he sent to Saint JOHN and took his cross, and [fol. 72*a* 2] the saint said unto the governor, "Fear not. Thou shalt conquer," and so it came to pass according to his word. And war broke out a second time against THEODOSIUS, and he sent [to enquire of] Saint JOHN [how it would end, and the saint said unto him], "Be not sad. Thou shalt conquer," and the Emperor MAXIMIANUS conquered them (i.e. the enemy). One day the Emperor THEODOSIUS commanded [his soldiers] to kill the men of ASYÛṬ and to plunder their city because of the great work of foulness which they had done. Now the angel of God made Abbâ JOHN to know this before the governor arrived. When the men of the city heard of the emperor's command they went up the mountain to Abbâ JOHN [and he said unto them], "Be not sad, for God will save you." When the governor arrived, he came into the cell of this holy man JOHN in order to be blessed by him, and Abbâ JOHN told the governor everything which the emperor had commanded; and when the governor heard this he was amazed and he prostrated himself before his holiness. And the governor had a son who was eighteen years old and who was possessed by the spirit of a devil, and he asked the holy man to heal him. And the holy man prayed over some oil and water, and having anointed him therewith he was healed straightway. Then the saint asked the governor to write to the emperor, and to abandon the slaughter of the men of ASYÛṬ, and the governor wrote a letter to him and gave it to Abbâ JOHN. And having taken the letter and gone into his cell, he prayed, and a cloud of light came and it took up Abbâ JOHN and brought him to the emperor, and when the emperor had a table prepared Saint JOHN threw the letter upon it. And the emperor took it and read it, and he found that it was the letter which the governor had written for Father JOHN. And having lifted up his eyes he saw a cloud of light above him, and he was terrified. [fol. 72*a* 3] Then he wrote a letter to the governor in his own handwriting and under his own secret sign, [telling him] to abandon the destruction of the city through the prayer of Abbâ JOHN. And the emperor threw his letter on the cloud, and those who were assembled there saw a hand receive it, and it went inside the cloud; and during that night the saint returned to the mountain; and on the following day he gave the letter with the emperor's seal upon it to the governor. When the governor saw it he was amazed, and he praised God for the saving of the city, and he departed to his own country. And the fame of Saint JOHN being noised abroad a certain noble lady, a kinswoman of the emperor, went to him to be healed of her disease, and by his prayer she was healed. Then the Emperor THEODOSIUS died and the wicked MARCIAN reigned, and he brought tribulation upon our father DIOSCURUS. And Abbâ JOHN sent him a letter abusing him and cursing him because he had changed the Faith, and after a few days God killed him. When Abbâ JOHN was one hundred and twenty-five years old he knew that his [time of] rest had come, and as he was praying to God he fell forward on his face on the ground, and delivered up his soul into the hand of his Creator. And innumerable signs and wonders appeared at his grave. Salutation to JOHN who was arrayed in holiness.

[fol. 72*b* 1] And on this day took place the translation of the body of Saint DEBORAH, who is also called "TCHEBARÊ," of the city of DALBAT; her story is written in the book of her strife.

XXII. KHĔDÂR

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day became martyrs COSMAS, and DAMIANUS, and their brethren 'ANTÎMÔS (ARITHIMUS), and LONDIUS (LEONTIUS ?), and ABRANIUS, and their mother THEODATA. These saints were natives of the city of DEYÔMÂ, in the country of Arabia, and came from the temple (?) which was built in the Name of the Son of God. Their mother was a woman who feared God, and she was compassionate and gave large gifts to the pilgrims. After the death of their father this widow brought them up and taught them the fear of God. Now COSMAS and DAMIANUS having learned practical philosophy (i.e. medicine) used to heal all those who were sick without fees and without gifts, and especially those who were poor; and their three brothers departed to the desert and became monks. Now DIOCLETIAN denied Christ because of [the son of] the King of ḲUEZ (KHUZISTÂN ?), whom he had committed for safe keeping to a bishop whose name was GÂGYÔS. Abbâ GÂGYÔS took an oath to the Emperor DIOCLETIAN that the son of the King of ḲUEZ (KHUZISTÂN ?) had died in his house, and that he had buried him with his own hands, [whereas the bishop had connived at the prince's escape.] For this reason DIOCLETIAN worshipped foul and brutish idols, and commanded all the people [fol. 72*b* 2] who were in his kingdom to worship idols. And certain men accused COSMAS and DAMIANUS of preaching in the Name of Christ in every city, and of ordering the people not to worship idols. And DIOCLETIAN sent letters commanding his soldiers to bring them to him, and they did so, and they handed them over to LÂSIUS the governor of the city, who tortured them severely with fire, and beat them cruelly with whips. Then he asked them questions about their three brothers, and when he knew the place where they were he sent men and they brought them and their mother also with them. Then he commanded the soldiers to torture the five of them on the wheel, and they did as he commanded. And after this they cast them into a red-hot fiery furnace, and they remained therein for three days and three nights and were unharmed. And they also cast them into the blazing furnace of the baths, and burned them upon [a red-hot] iron bed, but in spite of all these tortures they were not able to overcome them, and God raised them up whole and unharmed. When the governor was weary of torturing them, he handed them over to the emperor who also tortured them cruelly. And their mother encouraged them to endure, and she comforted them and she cursed the emperor to his face and his filthy idols. And straightway the emperor commanded the soldiers to cut off her head with the sword, and they cut off her head, and she received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens. And her body was cast out on the earth and no man dared to bury it. Then COSMAS cried out, saying, "O men of this city, [fol. 72*b* 3] is there not among you one man who hath in him sufficient mercy to hide the body of this poor old widow and bury it?" And straightway VICTOR, the son of ROMANUS, came, and he was bold enough to take her body and prepare it for the grave and bury it. When the emperor heard that VICTOR had buried her body he was wroth and he commanded his soldiers to drive him into exile in the land of Egypt where he received the crown of martyrdom. And as concerning COSMAS and DAMIANUS and their brethren the emperor commanded his soldiers to cut off their heads with the sword, [and they did so,] and they received crowns of martyrdom and life everlasting in the kingdom of the heavens. After the days of persecution were ended a church was built for them, and God made manifest many signs and wonders [through their bodies]. Salutation to the children of THEODATA, who are to be praised.

And on this day also became martyrs two hundred and ninety-two men, and nine and forty women who were companions of Saint COSMAS. Salutation to these martyrs.

XXIII. KHĔDÂR

[fol. 73*a* 1] IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died the great Saint CORNELIUS. This holy man was the captain of one hundred men in Caesarea of Palestine and he worshipped the stars. And when he heard the preaching of the apostles and saw the signs and wonders which God wrought by their hands, not one of which other men could do, and not one of which the gods whom they worshipped could do, his heart fell into despair and doubt concerning the gods whom he worshipped. And straightway he abandoned the worship of idols, and he fasted and he prayed by day and by night. And when he prayed he said also, "O God, since I am terrified at Thy knowledge, have mercy upon me, and guide me into Thy way." And he gave alms to the poor continually, and love towards all men was in his heart, and God had compassion upon him, and sent to him an angel who comforted him and told him that his prayers and his alms had ascended before God and had been accepted by Him. And the angel of the Lord commanded him to send to the city of JOPPA, and to summon PETER the apostle from the house of SIMON the sewer, so that he might have mercy upon him and shew him the way of God; and he sent and brought him. And when PETER the apostle came to him CORNELIUS bowed down before him at his feet, and PETER the apostle raised him up, [fol. 73*a* 2] and said unto him, "I am a man even as thou art." And PETER found with him many of the people, and he instructed them and said unto them, "The Law of the Tôrâh (Pentateuch) prohibiteth us from mingling with the uncircumcised, but God hath shewn me in a vision and hath made me to know that it is not desirable for me to say who I am among men and that any man is unclean. For this reason I came to you when ye called me; what do ye want?" And CORNELIUS answered and said unto him, "Three days ago I was praying at the time of the ninth hour, and behold a man stood before me in white apparel, and he shone brightly. And he commanded me to call thee and behold thou hast come and we are all before thee to listen to whatsoever thou commandest, and what thou shalt command us to do from God." And PETER the apostle opened his mouth, and told him about Christ, and he informed him concerning the mystery of the working of His wisdom, and His being made man, and His Crucifixion and His Resurrection, and His Ascension into heaven, and the working of miracles in His Name. And CORNELIUS believed on our Lord Jesus Christ, and all his men, and his slaves, and many of the people who were with him, and they were baptized in the Name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Ghost. And straightway the Holy Spirit descended upon them, according to the testimony concerning this matter in the Book of the Acts of the Apostles. Then CORNELIUS abandoned his business and rank in this world, and PETER gave him the position of a servant of Christ, and appointed him Bishop of the city of Alexandria. And CORNELIUS went there and preached in the Name of our Lord [fol. 73*a* 3] Jesus Christ, and he shewed their error to those who worshipped idols, and he illumined their hearts with the knowledge of God, and he strengthened their hearts by working signs and miracles before them. And having baptized DEMETRIUS, the governor, he baptized all the men of the city; and he died in peace and received a crown like the apostles who preached. Salutation to CORNELIUS, one of the Seventy-[two] disciples.

And on this day also died OBADIAH the prophet, whose name being interpreted is "servant of God," and "he giveth thanks to God." This righteous man was a native of the city of SÛSEM (SHECHEM ?) in the district of BÊT-KHĔRÛM (BÊTH-EPHRAIM ?). He was the disciple of ELIJAH the prophet, and he endured many trials which came upon him, and he was saved from them (?) by patient endurance. He was the captain of the third fifty whom ELIJAH the prophet spared, and he went down and departed with him to AHAZ the king. After this he forsook the service of the king in the country and prophesied; and when he died he was buried with his fathers in peace. Salutation to OBADIAH who was clothed with the spirit of knowledge.

And on this day also was consecrated the church of MARÎNÂ. [This paragraph is wanting in the Bodleian MS.]

XXIV. KHĔDÂR

[fol. 73*b* 1] IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day is commemorated the festival of the FOUR AND TWENTY PRIESTS of heaven, who are round about the throne of God, who are priests indeed, and who are beings of the spirit and have no bodies. They are exalted above all the saints and the spiritual hosts. They are saints with God and they make intercession on behalf of the race of men, and they bring unto Him the prayers of the saints like incense in the censers which they have in their hands. And alms and oblations cannot ascend to God except through them even as Saint JOHN the evangelist saith in the Vision of the Apocalypse, "I saw the place of Four and Twenty Elders round about Him, and they were sitting on four and twenty thrones; and on their heads were four and twenty crowns, and in their hands were four and twenty censers containing sweet-smelling incense, which is the prayers of the saints who dwell upon earth, and which they make to rise up before God, the Sustainer of the Universe." And he also saith, "And I heard Four Beasts praising and saying, Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord [God] of Hosts, the heavens and the [fol. 73*b* 2] earth are filled full of the holiness of Thy glory. And straightway the four and twenty priests of heaven fell down with their faces to the ground, and they took off their crowns, and they said unto Him, Glory, and honour, and thanks are fitting for Thee. And when a command went forth from God they fell down again with their faces to the ground, saying, Glory, and power, and judgement, and righteousness belong to our God" (Rev. iv and v). And because the doctors of the Church have found statements about these Four and Twenty Priests of heaven in the Holy Scriptures, and have seen stories told of them by the Apostles and in their Canon, saying that they are nigh unto God, they have ordered and ruled, saying, "The name of him that celebrateth their commemoration shall be revealed upon earth. And they shall entreat God on his behalf to forgive him all his sins." Therefore the doctors of the Church tell the people to honour the festival of the commemoration of the Four and Twenty Priests of heaven. Salutation to you, O priests of the Law.

And on this day 'AZḲÎR, the priest of NÂGRÂN, and eight and thirty men who were with him became martyrs in the days of the kingdom of SARÂBḤÊL, the King of ḤÂMÎR. And he commanded his soldiers to bring 'AZḲÎR to him, and they brought him into the prison house [fol. 73*b* 3] and shut the door on him, and he commanded the keepers of the prison that no man was to be taken in to him. And when Saint 'AZḲÎR had prayed, the doors of the prison house were opened, and fifty men came in, and he made a cistern of water there, and he baptized them therein in the Name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Ghost. When SARÂBḤÊL the king heard this he commanded his soldiers to bring 'AZḲÎR out of the prison house and to take him to another place; and the holy man met a man whose name was CYRIACUS, who said unto him, "Good news for thee, O 'AZḲÎR; they are taking thee to martyrdom." When the king's guards heard this they bound CYRIACUS with 'AZḲÎR in fetters. And on the road they met two men, and they said unto him, "Baptize us for Christ's sake"; and 'AZḲÎR prayed to God, and water sprang up in the desert, and he baptized the two men and CYRIACUS. When they reached the desert the guards and their beasts lacked water, and they besought Saint 'AZḲÎR to entreat God on their behalf because they were short of water. And 'AZḲÎR prayed to God and straightway a cloud came and poured down rain into the water-holes to the depth of the hand, and seven hundred men and their beasts drank of that water and were satisfied. And they brought 'AZḲÎR to the King of ḤÂMÎR, and he said unto him, "What is this new doctrine which thou hast brought into my country?" And Saint 'AZḲÎR said unto him, "It is not a new doctrine, but one which the prophets have preached in the Book of the Law, and it hath been heard that the King of the Jews was crucified in the Christian Faith." And one of the Rabbânât rose up and said unto the king, "O my lord, command [thy soldiers] to take him into the city, and let them hang him upon [fol. 74*a* 1] a tree, and burn him alive"; and the king commanded according to his words. And when they had brought 'AZḲÎR to the city of NÂGRÂN they hung him upon a tree and lighted a fire [under him]. And when Saint 'AZḲÎR had prayed, his fetters were loosed and he went forth alive from the fire. And the Jews said also, "Come, let us stone him"; and the greater number of the Jews killed him by stoning, and the rest took swords and cut off his head. Thus Saint 'AZḲÎR finished his martyrdom and departed to everlasting life. Salutation to 'AZḲÎR.

And on this day also are commemorated ḲÂLTEW (CLAUDIUS ?), and GÂYYÔS, and 'ARTYÔ ('ASTARYÔS), and DIOSCURUS the martyr, who died on this day.

And on this day also died Abbâ YÔSÊF (JOSEPH) of the city of ṢÂNÂ. The parents of this holy man were rich in faith, and they had no son except YÔSÊF (JOSEPH); and they brought him up very carefully and piously, and they taught him the Books of the Church. Now his form and appearance resembled those of JOSEPH, the son of [fol. 74*a* 2] JACOB. When he had grown up there entered into his heart the remembrance of death and the transitoriness of the world, and he went into a monastery and became a monk, and a fighter in the spirit; he devoted himself to fasting and to prayer, and he shut himself in his cell, and never went out except on the day of the Sabbath, at the time of the Offering. And the report of him was noised abroad, and the men of 'ADYÂM came to him to receive his blessing. And his father and his mother had no news of him, and they continued to make supplication to God that He would enable them to find him; and when they heard the report of him they went to him so that he might pray for the discovery of their son. When they came to him he knew them, but they did not know him, and after the men had removed themselves he made himself known unto them, and commanded them to tell no man; and he comforted them and sent them away in peace. And God bestowed upon him the power to work signs and wonders, and at length Satan was envious of him. And he went to the governor of the city and told him that this holy man had much money, and the governor sent soldiers who bound the holy man in fetters and brought him to the prison house. On the following day when they looked for him they found the fetters thrown about on the ground; and the governor was terrified and bowed down at his feet and did reverence to him and sent him into his own house. After much strenuous fighting he died in peace, and signs and wonders which were innumerable appeared at his grave.

XXV. KHĔDÂR

On this day became a martyr PHILOPATOR (which is being interpreted "lover of the Father") MERCURIUS, and this name also being interpreted is "servant of Jesus Christ." This holy man was a native of the city of 'ASLÊṬĔS, which was also the city of his father, and of his grandfather who were born therein, and he was brought up in the city of Rômê. Now the occupation of his father, and grandfather, and his kinsmen was that of hunters of wild beasts. One day they went out hunting, according to their custom, and they found two men with the faces of dogs, and they ate his grandfather, and they also wanted to eat his father, but the angel of the Lord prevented them from doing so. And the angel said unto them, "Touch him not, for from him shall go forth good fruit." Then the angel of the Lord surrounded them with fire, and being in tribulation, the two Dog-faces came to the father of Saint MERCURIUS, and they bowed low before him. And straightway God changed their [savage] nature to one of gentleness, and they became like sheep and went with him to the city. And after he had begotten the holy man MERCURIUS, and called his name "PHILOPATOR," the Dog-faces lived with them for many days, and then they became Christians; now the ancestors of the holy man had been in days of old pagans. And when they received the gift of Christian baptism, they called the father of the holy man "NOAH," and his mother "TÂBÔT," and PHILOPATOR "MERCURIUS." And the Dog-faces, according to what the angel of the Lord said unto them when he appeared unto them, were in subjection to the holy man MERCURIUS, and his father. And when the king heard the story of the Dog-faces [fol. 74*b* 1] and how God had changed their savage natures, [he ordered his soldiers to bring in wild beasts] before the king, and the Dog-faces destroyed all the wild beasts which the king brought before them. When the king saw this he was afraid of them exceedingly, and he asked the father of Saint MERCURIUS to entreat God to remove from them their savage nature, and to make them to possess the nature of men; and he asked God, and God changed their nature and they became like men. Then the king took the holy father MERCURIUS and appointed him governor and captain of the army, and these Dog-faces were subject unto him, and all the people were afraid of them. After this a certain wicked king rose up and he wished to make war upon another king, and the king sent his soldiers to entice those Dog-faces and to bring them to him. And that wicked king who wished to make war on the king of the city wherein the father of Saint MERCURIUS lived, enticed them. And straightway he was angry with the Dog-faces, and he punished one of them, who became a martyr thereby, and the other fled. When the father of Saint MERCURIUS returned to the city he sought for his son and his mother and found them not. Now the king having heard that the father of Saint MERCURIUS was killed in battle, decided to take the mother of Saint MERCURIUS and marry her. And one of the soldiers of the king knowing what the king intended to do, went and told the mother of Saint MERCURIUS what the king had decided concerning her. When she heard this she asked him to take [her] out secretly, and she [fol. 74*b* 2] went out with her son the blessed MERCURIUS. And his father having sought for his wife and his son, and found them not, knew not in the least what had become of them. And the king was afraid because he thought that the Dog-faces lived with him, and that he would become angry and would turn them loose, and they would destroy all the city. And the king commanded his servants not to tell him that he intended to marry his wife. After this war broke out against the king, and the father of Saint MERCURIUS went out to fight, and the king took him prisoner. Now by the Will of God the King of Rômê was a Christian. And when he knew that the father of Saint MERCURIUS was a Christian, he spared him and did not kill him, and he made him governor of all the city of the MARDÔSÂWĔYÂN. And by the Will of God Saint MERCURIUS and his mother were in the city of Rômê, and when his father came into the church the mother of Saint MERCURIUS saw him and knew that he was her husband. One day when they were sitting in the guest house the father of MERCURIUS and his soldiers rode out, and the mother of the blessed MERCURIUS dressed her son in the fine raiment which he used to wear in the royal city, and commanded him to go and mount the horse of the governor, that is to say of his father. And having mounted the governor's horse, the soldiers seized him and brought him before the governor, that is to say his father, who did not know that he was his son, and he was angry with him. And the mother of MERCURIUS came to her husband, now he did not know that she was his wife, and she said unto him, "We are strangers, [fol. 74*b* 3] and when I knew that thou wast a stranger I thought that my son might be with thee"; and when he asked her questions and enquired concerning her journey she told him that she was his wife. And straightway he knew her and he knew his son MERCURIUS, and he placed [him] in the church, and they lived there together. When the father and mother of Saint MERCURIUS died, the king took him and made him governor of the city of the MARDÔSÂWĔYÂN in his father's stead; and the one Dog-face that had remained with him up to the time he was appointed governor, used to go forth with MERCURIUS in battle. When they wanted to fight God used to restore to the Dog-face his original savage nature, and there was none who could stand before him. And there were given to this Saint MERCURIUS power, and great strength, and he was more renowned and more exalted than all the other officers of the kingdom. Now the Emperor of Rômê in those days was called DECIUS and he worshipped idols. And his enemies the Barbarians rose up against him, and he assembled his armies and went forth to fight against them; and they were as many as the sand of the sea, and the emperor was dismayed and was afraid. And Saint MERCURIUS said unto him, "Fear not, for God shall assuredly destroy our enemies and bring them into our hand." Now MERCURIUS saw before him in the battle the angel of the Lord, and he had a drawn sword in his hand, and he said unto him, "Conquer and fear not, O MERCURIUS." And after this a shining man in white apparel appeared unto him, and he had in his hand a drawn sword which he gave to MERCURIUS, saying, "When thou hast overcome thine enemies remember the Lord [fol. 75*a* 1] thy God." And straightway MERCURIUS conquered his enemies and returned in great joy. Then the angel of the Lord appeared, and said unto him, "Why hast thou forgotten and hast not remembered the Name of the Lord thy God?" And the period of the war being ended the Emperor DECIUS wanted to offer up incense to the gods on behalf of himself and his army. And Saint MERCURIUS tarried behind, and did not go forth with the emperor to the festival in the temple. And a certain man informed the Emperor DECIUS and said unto him, "Saint MERCURIUS hath not come with thy army, and he hath not associated himself with the offering of incense to the gods." And the emperor sent straightway and had MERCURIUS brought to him, and he marvelled at him, the love for him having forsaken his heart. And the emperor said unto him, "Why hast thou forgotten thy love for me and hast not come with me to offer incense to the gods?" And straightway Saint MERCURIUS cast his girdle and his military attire down before the Emperor DECIUS, and he said unto him, "I will not deny my Lord Jesus Christ, and I will not bow down to filthy idols." And when the Emperor DECIUS heard this he was exceedingly wroth, and he commanded his soldiers to beat him with rods made of green palm wood, and with ox-hide whips; and they did as the emperor commanded. And straightway the emperor was afraid lest the people of the city should rise up against him, and he bound him in irons and sent him to Caesarea in Cappadocia, and he commanded the soldiers there to torture him severely and to cut off his head with the sword. And they tortured him there, even as the emperor commanded, and they cut off his head with the sword, and he finished his fight and received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of heaven. [fol. 75*a* 2] And after he had received an incorruptible and heavenly crown, and had entered into life everlasting, churches were built to him in all the ends of the earth, and God made manifest in them signs and great wonders. And some of his miracles took place when JULIAN, who denied our Lord Jesus Christ, was reigning, and in the days of Saint BASIL, Bishop of the country of Caesarea and Cappadocia, even as it is written in one of the works of Saint BASIL. Now JULIAN the infidel had inflicted very great tribulation upon those who believed in our Lord Jesus Christ, and he was wroth with Saint BASIL and shut him up in prison, and he multiplied his works against the believers. And Saint BASIL gathered together the believers and he prayed and made entreaty unto God concerning JULIAN the infidel, and he made intercession with Saint MERCURIUS. And God heard his prayer and sent His great and holy martyr MERCURIUS, and he came riding upon a horse and he speared JULIAN the infidel with his spear in his head, and the emperor died an evil death during the war in the land of Persia. And when Saint BASIL had seen this vision in the picture of Saint MERCURIUS he rejoiced with very great joy. And he came into the place wherein was the body of the great martyr Saint MERCURIUS, and whilst he was sitting down there and thinking about what he had seen, straightway the sword and the spear of Saint MERCURIUS returned to their places, and from them there dropped so much blood [fol. 75*a* 3] that the whole space beneath the picture of Saint MERCURIUS was full of it. And straightway Saint BASIL cried out and said, "O martyr of Christ, to Whom be glory! hast thou indeed killed JULIAN the enemy of righteousness?" And Saint MERCURIUS in the picture bowed his head before the face of Saint BASIL as much as to say, "Yea, I have killed him." And Saint BASIL multiplied his praises of God, and he paid Him honour and gave thanks unto Him. And Saint MERCURIUS wrought very many signs and wonders. And there was a certain young Muslim who was a son of one of the officers of the city of MĔSR (CAIRO), and he was learned in the Law of the Muslims and in their books. And one day he passed along the river bank and met a certain man who had been originally a Muslim but had since been baptized with Christian baptism. Then one of the king's guards seized him, and he made ready a deep pit and lighted a great fire therein in order that he might burn him in it; and many men gathered together to see him [burnt]. And that young Muslim drew nigh unto the martyr whom the royal guard had seized, and he said unto him, "O infidel, why dost thou run to enter into Sheol? At thine end thou wilt sit in the fire of Gahannam, because thou dost attribute a Son to God, and dost confess Three Persons. Hearken unto me and abandon thy blasphemy and thine abominable words." And the Christian answered and said unto him, "We Christians are not infidels, but we worship One God, and He is Father, and Son, and Holy Ghost. The Son is not alien to God His Father, [fol. 75*b* 1] for He is His Word. Likewise the Holy Spirit, the mystery of our Faith, is wonderful, and is hidden from you, because your heart is not able to bear Him, and thy heart at this moment is dark and the light of the Faith illumineth it not. But I can see that after a few days the light shall draw nigh unto thee, and that the light of Christ shall shine in thine heart. And thou shalt fight spiritually even as do I for His Name, and thou shalt feel the same pain which I am now suffering." When the Muslim heard his words he was exceedingly wroth with him, and he put off his sandals from his feet and buffeted the face and mouth and head of the Christian and punished him severely, and he said unto him, "What thou sayest shall never happen to me, O thou infidel." And the blessed man answered and said unto him, "Needs must that thou remember what I say unto thee." And straightway they cut off his head with the sword, and they threw his body into the pit of fire, and the flames of that fire mounted upwards and became like a great wall. And the body of the Christian remained in that fire three days and three nights, and the royal guard watched him by day and by night, and afterwards they found the body and it was tried like gold and the fire had not touched it at all; and they told this to the king, and he commanded the soldiers to bury the body. And the young Muslim went into his house being sorrowful, and he neither ate nor drank. And his father, and mother, and brethren gathered about him, and they said unto him, "What hath happened to thee? Why dost thou neither eat nor drink?" And he told them what the martyr of our Lord Jesus Christ had said unto him, and they comforted him, and they said unto him, "Put aside the word which this erring man [fol. 75*b* 2] spake unto thee, and dismiss his prediction from thy heart"; but he was in no wise comforted. And in those days that young Muslim saw many Muslims, and they were wishing to go to the tomb of their lying prophet, and he said unto his father, "I should like to go with them"; and his father rejoiced exceedingly at these words, and he gave him one hundred dînârs, and committed him to the care of his friend, and the young man departed. And as the young man was journeying with his friend, he saw a vision one night, and it seemed that an aged monk, shining with light, stood up by his side, and that he said unto him, "Come, follow me that thou mayest be saved"; and the monk appeared again on the second night, and again on the third night, and each time he spake unto him as above. When they had finished their business, having arrived at their destination, they turned back, and journeyed for a period of six days in the desert. And as they were travelling by night the young man got down from his camel because of a bodily need, and his companions left him and departed; and he remained by himself lost in the desert, and he wept, being afraid lest the wild beasts should eat him. Then he remembered the church of Saint MERCURIUS the martyr in the city of MĔSR (CAIRO), which was near his father's house, and he said in his heart, "Every man makes vows to him, and he fulfils for them everything which they ask him." And straightway the young man said, as he wept, "O MERCURIUS, martyr of Christ, if thou wilt deliver me from the wild beasts of the desert, and wilt bring me out safe from the desert, I will become a Christian." And having said this, behold there came unto him a young man riding upon a horse, and his appearance was exceedingly goodly, and he was wearing glorious apparel, and his loins were girt with a girdle [fol. 75*b* 3] of gold, and he stood before him and said unto him, "Whence comest thou? Why art thou alone and lost in this desert?" And he said unto him, "I got down [from my camel] because of a bodily need, and they left me and departed." And the man on the horse said unto him, "Come, get up behind me on this horse," and he mounted the horse with him, and the horse flew through the air, and brought them quickly to the church of MERCURIUS the martyr in the city of MĔSR (CAIRO). And the doors of the church flew open to him, and he went in with him on the horse, and he brought him to the martyrium of the sanctuary, and then disappeared from him and was no more seen. And the young Muslim stood up in the church frightened, and he said in his heart, "Is this one of the churches of the Christians?" And he saw the lamps burning before the picture [of the saint], and this seemed to him to be a dream, and he said, "Am I not still sitting down in the desert?" And he remained in the sanctuary until the dawn. And the steward of the church came and found him standing in the sanctuary, and he thought that he was a thief, and the steward wanted to cry out, but the young Muslim made a sign to him with his hand, and he said unto him, "Come to me"; and the steward went to him. And the young man said unto him, "What is this place?" And the steward said unto him, "This is the church of Saint MERCURIUS of MĔSR (CAIRO)." And the young man said unto him, "Is this the city of MĔSR (CAIRO)?" And the steward said unto him, "Yea," and he added, "It seemeth that thou art too stupefied to talk to me; but now, O my brother, make me to know what hath happened to thee." Then straightway courage returned to the young man, and he said unto him, "How can I help being stupefied? seeing that during the past night I was in such and such a desert. And I have no knowledge whatsoever of how I came here; only God [fol. 76*a* 1] knoweth." When the steward heard the name of that desert he marvelled, and said unto the young man, "Did I not say rightly that thou art stupefied, and that thou dost not know what thou art saying? The journey from that desert to this place occupieth twelve days. Verily thou art a thief, and it is the might of the blessed martyr MERCURIUS which hath seized thee and bound thee here without ropes and fettering irons. This MERCURIUS the blessed martyr forsook the glory of this world and thrust it away, and the infidels tortured him with severe tortures for the Name of Christ, and the martyr died and God received him into His kingdom, and churches are built in his name everywhere; and in them the saint praiseth God, and maketh intercession for all men. And for all those who commit themselves to him in prayer he maketh intercession, and he maketh manifest miracles." And the young man said unto the steward, "What are his form and features like?" and the steward said unto him, "He resembleth thee in stature"; and then he shewed him the picture of the saint. When the young man saw the picture of Saint MERCURIUS the martyr, he said unto the steward, "Verily this is the holy man who appeared unto me in the desert, and who bore me on his horse, and brought me hither. And behold, this is the girdle of gold wherewith I saw his loins girt." And he said unto the steward, "Behold, I tell thee that I am a Muslim, I belong to this city, and the name of my father is RAGÂ, the judge; this miracle is sufficient to make me become a Christian. And now hide me, and do not reveal my business to any man. And also bring me an aged [fol. 76*a* 2] priest that he may teach me the way of God, and may strengthen me in the True Faith, and may bring me...." And the steward put him in a place by himself, and brought to him a priest, even as he said, and the priest baptized him with Christian baptism, and brought to him the Books of the Church and the Gospel; and he remained thus. And about one month after this those men who had journeyed to MECCA arrived, and all the Muslims who were their kinsmen went out to meet them. And the judge, the father of the young man, met the friend, who wept bitterly, and he told the judge how his son had stayed behind in the desert, and how they had left him and come on. When his father heard this he rent his garments, and his brethren and the young men also rent their garments, and they sat down and mourned for three days. After this a certain Muslim woman saw the young man who had become a Christian coming out of the church of Saint MERCURIUS. And a Muslim (sic) went and told his father and his brethren [this], and said unto them, "If it were not that your son died in the desert on the MECCA road, I should be inclined to say that the young man whom I saw this day by the church of Saint MERCURIUS the martyr was he; he was wearing the white apparel which the monks wear, and in truth he was like your son." When the father and mother and brethren of the young man heard this they rose up, and went [there] and found him, and they seized him, and said unto him, "What hast thou done? And why hast thou put me to shame among the Muslim nobles?" And he said unto them, "I am [fol. 76*a* 3] a Christian, and I believe in our Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of the Living God, the Most High; blessed be His Name!" Immediately he had said this they punished him very severely, and they cast him into a dark pit, and he remained there for seven days and seven nights without food and drink, and they poured urine upon him and cast the filth from their houses on him. And his mother wept over him day and night, and by reason of her excessive weeping they drove away the young man, and he departed to the desert of SCETE, and he dwelt in the desert of Abbâ MACARIUS for a period of two years, and he fought a strenuous fight, and devoted himself to the ascetic life. After this a certain monk said unto him, "Would it not be profitable to thee without [delay] to go to the city of MĔSR (CAIRO) and proclaim thy Faith openly?" And he rose up and went to MĔSR (CAIRO), and his father seized him and took him to King ḤAKEM, who is called "Governor" (i.e. Khalîfah), and he said unto him, "Our son hath forsaken the Muslim faith, and hath entered the Christian Faith." And the Khalîfah said unto the young man, "Is this true what they say about thee?" And he told the Khalîfah what had happened to him in MECCA, and how Saint MERCURIUS had appeared unto him, and how he had seated him with himself on his horse, and how he had brought him into his shrine in the twinkling of an eye and had taken him into the church of MĔSR (CAIRO), and how he had seen the picture of the saint in the church, and how he knew that it was he who had appeared unto him in the desert. And when ḤAKEM the Khalîfah, the infidel, heard this he spake many words and he feared with a great fear. And he said unto the young man, [fol. 76*b* 1] "What dost thou want?" And he said unto him, "I ask thee to give me authority to build a church in the name of Saint MERCURIUS the martyr"; and the Khalîfah gave him authority to build a church there in the name of MICHAEL the archangel, and he built a second church —in the name of MERCURIUS the martyr, and great signs and wonders took place therein. And he composed two books, one on the Grace of God and the gift of the Holy Spirit, and the other on the True Faith. And he vanquished in debate the wicked, and the pagans, and the Muslims, and he pleased God and died in peace. Now the name of this young man was "JOHN," which was given to him when they baptized him. All this took place through the prayer of Saint MERCURIUS the martyr, and the multitude of his miracles. Salutation to MERCURIUS of Rômê, who rode a black horse.

And on this day also are commemorated ACARIUS and ROMANUS.

[And on this day died SABLA WANGÊL, Queen of Ethiopia.]

XXVI. KHĔDÂR

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day Saint PELARIANUS (or BALARYÂNÔS, i.e. VALERIANUS) and his sister TÂTBÛSYÂ became martyrs. This [fol. 76*b* 2] holy man PELARIANUS was a native of Rômê, and his parents were infidels. They married him to a maiden who was the daughter of one of the rich nobles of Rômê, and the name of that maiden was KÎLḲĔYÂ, and she was a Christian and worshipped the Lord Christ. And when he went to her in the marriage-chamber he loved her dearly, and as soon as she saw that he loved her dearly she began to reveal to him the Faith of Christ, and he believed through her, and was baptized with Christian baptism. And when he shone brightly and became strong in the Divine Grace he taught his sister TÂTBÛSYÂ, and she was baptized with Christian baptism. And Saint PELARIANUS fought a great spiritual fight, and at length the angels would come and visit him always, and they would reveal unto him everything which he wanted [to know], and they would teach him concerning hidden things before they came to pass. When DIOCLETIAN the infidel reigned he inflicted persecution upon the Christians, and tortured them, and he slew many of them and they became martyrs. Now this holy man and his sister used to go round and take up the bodies of the martyrs and prepare them for burial, and bury them. And a certain evil man having learned concerning them went and accused them to MASIUS, the emperor's friend, and the emperor commanded his soldiers to bring them to him. When they arrived they stood up and he questioned them concerning their Faith, and they confessed that they were Christians and did not deny it. And he promised them very many things if they would deny our Lord [fol. 76*b* 3] Jesus Christ, and worship idols, but they would not listen to his commands, and they did not want his promised gifts. And the emperor loved them and he said unto them, "If ye will not hearken unto me, and will not sacrifice to my gods, I will torture you with very many kinds of torture"; and they were not afraid of his tortures. When the governor saw their endurance and fortitude, he delivered them over to the headsman to cut off their heads. And when they had cut off their heads, those who were standing there saw shining angels meeting their souls with great joy. When the governor saw this he believed in our Lord Christ. And the emperor shut the governor up in prison for three days, and on the fourth day he had him brought out from the prison house and ordered the headsman to cut off his head; and [he did so] and the saint received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens with PELARIANUS, and his wife KÎLḲĔYÂ, and his sister TÂTBÛSYÂ. Salutation to PELARIANUS who buried the bodies of the martyrs, and to his wife KÎLḲĔYÂ and his sister TÂTBÛSYÂ.

And on this day also is commemorated GREGORY, Bishop of the island of NÛSÎS (NYSSA). Salutation to GREGORY, Bishop of the city (sic) of NÛSÎS (NYSSA).

[fol. 77*a* 1] And on this day also the men of NÂGRÂN and Saint KHÎRÛT their father were martyred in the fifth year of the reign of the Emperor JUSTINUS, when Abbâ JOHN was Archbishop of Jerusalem, and Abbâ TIMOTHY was Archbishop of Alexandria, and Abbâ TIMOTHY was Archbishop of Constantinia, and EUPHRASIUS was Archbishop of Antioch, and KÂLÊB the righteous was King of Ethiopia. And in those days there reigned in SÂBÂ a Jew whose name was PHINEHAS, and he was an infidel and a man of iniquity, and one who shed the blood of men. In ancient times the country of SÂBÂ was under the rule of the Kings of Ethiopia, and the Roman Emperors VESPASIAN and TITUS having driven out the Jews subsequently inherited it. And by the side of the country of SÂBÂ was a very great city wherein lived very many believers and men who confessed Jesus Christ. And there came that Jewish king to destroy the holy and Christ-loving city, and to plunder the houses of the Christians. When he came to the city he saw the sign of the Cross all round on the walls thereof, and upon the gates and ramparts thereof were standing large numbers of mighty men of war, and the heart of the Jewish king was filled with rage. And he wished to go into the city but was unable to find any means of so doing, because God had strengthened it, but he slew the slaves who were working the ground, and whom he found outside the city, and he carried off their children into captivity, and gave them over to forced labours. And that Jew who was as foul as Diabolus, the Adversary, sent a message to the men [in the city] saying, "I swear unto you by the Name of the Lord God, and by the Tôrâh, and by the prophets, that I do not wish to do [fol. 77a 2] you any harm, and I do not wish to ill-treat any man of this city, and I do not wish to shed one drop of blood. But I want to see the buildings of the city, and the broad spaces thereof, and the market-places"; and the people of the city believed his word. Then KHÎRÛT, the son of KÂ'AB, said, "Do not believe the word of this infidel Jew, for he is a man of iniquity, and do not open the gates"; and the people refused to listen to him and they opened the gates. As soon as the Jew had entered the city he commanded [his men] first of all to plunder the goods of the men of the city, and to light a fire so large that its flame reached unto heaven. Then he commanded them to bring to him Abbâ PAUL, Bishop of the city, and when they told him that he was dead, he made them bring the bishop's bones out of the grave and had them burned in the fire. Then he assembled the priests, and the deacons, and the monks, and the widows and those who were being taught, who passed day and night in reading the Holy Scriptures. [All] these he cast into the fire, and they were in number four hundred and twenty-six souls. Now he wanted to frighten the Christians by this act. Then he commanded his men to put a collar round the neck of Saint KHÎRÛT, and to load his hands and feet with fetters; and he fettered also all the nobles and chief men of the city. And he commanded a crier to go through all the city, crying, "Whosoever will not deny Christ shall die an evil death." When the holy Christians heard this they cried out, saying, "Far be it from us! We will not do this thing. We will not deny Christ our God; in Whom we have believed, and in Whose Name we have been baptized." When that filthy Jew heard this he killed men and women, young men and maidens, [fol. 77*a* 3] and babes and old men, in all four thousand four hundred and fifty-two souls. And as for the remaining women he commanded his soldiers to cut off their heads with the sword; now they were in number two hundred and twenty-seven souls. And then he seized Saint DEMÂḤÂ, the daughter of RÂBE'A, the wife of Saint KHÎRÛT. Now this woman was very beautiful, as were her two daughters, and the sun had never touched them except when they sat in the verandah of their house. And they stood before the [Jew] king, and he was unable to persuade them by means of his crafty promises to deny their Faith; and when they refused he commanded his soldiers to strip off their veils, and the women of the city wept for them. And one of her two daughters, the younger, a maiden of twelve winters, spat in the face of the king; and a soldier who saw her drew his sword and cut off her head and the head of her sister. Then the filthy Jew commanded his soldiers to make Saint DEMÂḤÂ to drink the blood of her daughters, and as she tasted it she said, "I thank Thee, O my Lord Jesus Christ, Son of the Living God, that Thou hast made Thine handmaiden taste the blood of the Offering of her daughters." And the king commanded them to cut off her head with the sword, and she finished her martyrdom there. Then the king commanded them to bring to him Saint KHÎRÛT, and those who were with him in the prison house; and they were in number three hundred and forty men. And the Jew tried to force Saint KHÎRÛT to abandon his Faith, but the saint answered and said, "Eight and seventy years have I served my Lord Jesus Christ, and I have come to the fourth generation. And this day I shall rejoice if I become a martyr [fol. 77*b* 1] and if I die for His holy Name. I did tell the people not to put any confidence in thine oath, and that thou wast a liar, but they would not believe my words. Moreover, it is the good pleasure of Christ that hath brought me into this fight." When the Jew king heard this he was furiously angry, and he commanded his soldiers to take him into the valley and to cut off his head there. When Saint KHÎRÛT heard this he prayed to God to strengthen the empire of Rôm and the kingdom of Ethiopia so that they might destroy the kingdom of the filthy Jew. And he blessed the people and embraced them, and then the soldiers cut off the heads of the saints. And there was there a certain woman who was a Christian, and she had a child of five winters, and she took some of the blood of the saints and smeared herself and her son therewith. And when the soldiers saw this they carried them bound to the king, and he threw the woman into the fire, but the Jew took the boy and he said unto him, "Dost thou love me or Him that is called Christ?" And the boy said, "I love Christ, and I am the slave of Him only; let me go that I may depart to my mother." And when the Jew held him fast the child bit his foot, and the king snatched him up and cast him into the fire and he became a martyr. And they also brought a woman who was carrying a child ten months old, and his mother said unto him, "I cannot give thee to this fire"; and the child said unto her, "O my mother, let us depart quickly into everlasting life; we shall only see this fire to-day," and they cast the woman into the fire with her son. And [the king] saw his soldiers fighting against the Christians and destroying them, some by means of fire, and others with the edge of the sword until at length all [fol. 77*b* 2] companions of the Jews were exhausted. Then there appeared in the heavens a fire which filled the whole sky for forty days and forty nights. And when the Jew king had entered into his city he sent messengers unto the [neighbouring] kings boasting of his valour. When JUSTINUS, Emperor of Rômê, heard this, he sent a letter to TIMOTHY, Archbishop of Alexandria, calling upon him to send instructions to KÂLÊB, King of Ethiopia, to make war on that Jew, and to avenge the blood of the people of NÂGRÂN. When KÂLÊB, the King of Ethiopia, heard this, he departed into the country of the Jew king with many soldiers, and many ships, having received the blessing of Abbâ PANTALEON of the Cell. Having arrived in the country he destroyed all the city of the King of SÂBÂ, and he left nothing therein, neither man nor beast. And he rebuilt the city of NÂGRÂN, and established the commemoration of the martyrs thereof. And he sent glad tidings to JUSTINUS, Emperor of Rômê, and to TIMOTHY, the Archbishop, and there was great joy, and they gave thanks unto Christ. Salutation to the bright STARS OF NÂGRÂN who have illumined all the world.

And on this day also died Saint ÎYASÛS MÔ'A, and on it GÊLYÔS, and MÂYEN, and MEKWÂS, and MÂRYÂLES are commemorated. [fol. 77*b* 3] Salutation to ÎYASÛS MÔ'A, who for forty years never slept on his side.

XXVII. KHĔDÂR

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day Saint JAMES the "chopped" became a martyr. This holy man was one of the soldiers of SAKRÂD, the son of SÂPÔR (SAPOR), King of Persia, and he was a friend of the prince, who loved him exceedingly, and took counsel with him about all his affairs; and for this reason his heart inclined towards Saint JAMES, and he made him worship the sun and fire. When his mother and his wife and his sister heard that he had become one with the king in his acts and in his faith, they wrote to him a letter, saying, "Why hast thou forsaken the Faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, and dost worship natural objects which have been created, that is to say, the sun, and the moon, and fire? Know that if thou dost continue to hold the faith of the King of Persia, we shall become strangers to thee." When he had read their letter he wept bitterly, and he said, "If I continue to be of this opinion I shall become a stranger to my mother, and to my household and kinsfolk. But, however, how can I approach my Lord Jesus Christ?" And he began to read Christian books, and he wept and forsook the service of the king. And certain men told the king and spake unto him, saying, "Behold thy friend JAMES hath forsaken thy service, and thy love, and the [fol. 78*a* 1] worship of the gods." And the king sent a messenger to bring him to him, and when he had come he set him before the king, and the king said unto him, "Why hast thou forsaken my service?" And Saint JAMES said unto him, "Our Lord Christ saith in the Gospel, 'Whosoever confesseth Me before men, him will I confess before my Father Who is in heaven. Whosoever denieth Me before the face of men, him will I deny before the angels of God' (Matthew x, 32). Therefore have I left thy service, and thy love, and the worship of thy gods, and I worship my Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of the Living God, the Creator of the heavens, and the earth, and the sun, and the moon, and the stars, and the seas." When the king heard this he was exceedingly wroth, and he commanded his guards to beat him very severely, and they did so until his blood ran down on the ground like water; but he could not turn from his good counsel. And the king commanded them to cut off his members with knives, and they cut off the ten fingers of his hands and the ten toes of his feet, and his arms. And they cut him up into thirty-two separate pieces, and as each piece was chopped off, he sang and glorified God, saying, "O God of the Christians, my Lord and King Jesus Christ, receive Thou the branches of the tree according to the greatness of Thy compassion. When the master of the vineyard pruneth the vines he leaveth slips behind him, and these sprout in the month of Nêsân, that is to say Mîyâzyâ (April–May), and the vine putteth forth [new] roots and spreadeth abroad." When only the head, and breast, and loins of the holy man were left, and he knew he was nigh to the giving up of his soul, at that moment he prayed to God for the world, [fol. 78*a* 2] and for the people therein, and that He would teach them and have compassion upon them. And he said, "There is left to me neither limb nor hand which I can lift up to Thee, O Lord; behold my limbs have been cast away before me, O Lord receive my soul." And straightway our Lord Jesus Christ appeared unto him and comforted him, and strengthened him, and immediately his soul rejoiced and was glad. And before he delivered up his soul one of the guards made haste, and cut off his head with a sharp sword, and Saint JAMES received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens, and he departed to the habitation of light, to Christ Who loved him. And certain God-fearing men took his body and made it ready for burial and wrapped it in costly cloths, and they laid it in a pure place. When his mother and his wife and his sister heard that he had become a martyr they rejoiced with great joy, and they came to the place where his body was, and they embraced it and wept over it, and laid splendid cloths over it and sweet scents and unguents. When the days of Saints HONORIUS and ARCADIUS and other kings arrived, they built in his honour churches, and monasteries and nunneries. When the King of Persia heard the report of those monasteries, and the stories of the martyrs and their bodies, and what great signs and wonders had appeared through them in every place, he commanded his soldiers to burn the martyrs' bodies in every place with fire, and not to allow anything of them to remain in the country of his dominion. And certain believing men came and carried away the body of the saint, and they carried it and brought it to Jerusalem, and deposited it there. And then they brought it to PETER, Bishop of the city of [fol. 78*a* 3] RÔḤÂ (EDESSA), and it remained with him until MARCIANUS reigned, and then Saint PETER took it and brought it to the country of Egypt, and deposited it in the city of BEHENSÂ, where it remained for a few days with certain brethren. And whilst these men were praying at mid-day, and the body of Saint JAMES was in their midst, straightway Saint JAMES appeared with many of the martyrs of Persia, arrayed in Persian apparel; and they sang with them, and they blessed them, and then they disappeared. And before they disappeared from their sight Saint JAMES said unto them, "My body shall stay here even as God commandeth." After this Saint PETER the bishop wished to return to his own country, and he took the body of Saint JAMES with him, and he carried it to the sea and laid it in a ship, but the voice of Saint JAMES went round about, saying, "My body shall stay here." And straightway the body of Saint JAMES was snatched out of their hands, and returned to the place wherein it had been, even as God commanded; and great signs and wonders took place through the body of Saint JAMES. Salutation to Saint JAMES who was cut up into thirty-two pieces.

And on this day also Saint TIMOTHY, a native of BANḤÔR, became a martyr. [fol. 78*b* 1] This holy man was a fearer of God from his youth, and he devoted himself to fasting and prayer. He had a wife whose name was MÔRÂ, the daughter of his father's brother, and she was very beautiful, and she gave him pleasure by all her works and they lived together for many days in love and happiness. Whilst they were living in this state of quietness the Imperial Edict of the wicked DIOCLETIAN went forth into all the countries of his Empire ordering the heathen temples to be opened and the churches to be closed. When Saint TIMOTHY heard this he rejoiced exceedingly, for he had been waiting for this time, and he told his wife what he was going to do; and she said, "God's Will be done." Then he rose up and prayed to God to prosper his way, and as he was sleeping that night our Lord Jesus Christ appeared unto him, and He said, "Peace be unto thee, O My beloved TIMOTHY, behold I have numbered thee among the number of the righteous. Rise up now, and take thy wife, and go to the city of BEHENSÂ, and confess the Name of Christ before all the people who worship idols." When he awoke he told his wife what he had seen, and she told him that she had dreamed even so. Then they rose up together and came to QUILQUILIANUS, the governor, and they found him celebrating a festival with singers and dancers who were performing before him. Then the soldiers seized TIMOTHY and set him before him, and his wife was following him. And the governor spake unto him with gentle and persuasive words and tried to make him worship idols, but the saint reviled him and his foul faith; therefore [fol. 78*b* 2] was the governor angry and he commanded them to cast him into prison. After a few days the governor had him and his wife brought out and beaten with whips until their blood ran down on the ground like water; and his wife finished her strife under this torture. And Saint TIMOTHY he treated with gentleness because he wished to make him agree to worship idols. And when he refused to do so the governor had the saint's body smeared with oil and grease, and cast him into a red-hot fiery furnace. And whilst the holy man was in the fire GABRIEL, an angel of God, came down to him from heaven, and delivered him from this torture. Then the governor cast the saint into the prison house a second time, where he wrought many signs and wonders. One day whilst he was praying there our Lord Jesus Christ came to him, and made a covenant with him and gave him peace. And on the following day the governor had him brought out of the prison house, and they took him to the city of ZANḤÛS, and they cut off his holy head. Thereupon an earthquake took place, and the air was filled with angels, and the men of the city came and prepared him for burial in a splendid manner and buried him. When the time of persecution had passed they built a church for him, and consecrated it on the seven and twentieth day of the month Sanê (June–July), and they laid his holy body in it. Salutation to TIMOTHY and to his wife MÔRÂ.

[fol. 78*b* 3] And on this day also is commemorated Saint PHILEMON the apostle, who was one of the Seventy-two disciples. Salutation to thy tongue with its eloquent words and pleasant speech, thou father of the city (or country) of LYDIA.

And on this day also are commemorated 'AL'ÂRÊ, and Abbâ TAKLA ḤAWÂRYÂT of GABRĔMÂ, and CLEMENT the martyr of 'ENDABERGÔY of REBÔTCH (or ZARBATCH). Salutation to TAKLA ḤAWÂRYÂT.

XXVIII. KHĔDÂR

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day Saint SARAPÂMÔN (or SARABÂMÔN), Bishop of the city of NAKÎYÔS (or LÛḲYÔS), became a martyr. This holy man was a kinsman of STEPHEN, of the tribe of LEVI, from the city of Jerusalem. His father's name was ABRAHAM, and he was the son of LEVI, the son of JOSEPH, brother of SIMON, and brother of the mother of STEPHEN, and at the time of his birth he called his name SIMON. When his father died he wished to become a Christian. And the angel of the Lord appeared unto him and commanded him go to Abbâ JOHN, bishop of the city, and he went to him and the bishop revealed to him [fol. 79*a* 1] the mystery of Christ our God becoming man. And it is not said that he baptized him with Christian baptism in the city of Jerusalem, because of the fear of the Jews, his kinsmen. Now the bishop of the city was pondering what he should do about him, and our Lady MARY appeared unto him and told him to depart to the city of Alexandria, to the Archbishop Abbâ THEONAS. And as he was going thither, the angel of the Lord in the form of a man drew nigh unto him, and he journeyed with him to the city of Alexandria; now the angel of the Lord was in the form of a prince, and he informed the archbishop about SARAPÂMÔN. When he had come to him the archbishop taught him the path of God, and he baptized him with holy Christian baptism. Then SARAPÂMÔN became a monk in the monastery of Abbâ SEVERUS, which is outside the city of Alexandria. When the Archbishop THEONAS died, and Abbâ PETER was appointed to succeed him, he sent and brought this holy man SARAPÂMÔN to him, to help him in the work of the archiepiscopate. After this he appointed him Bishop of the city of NÂḲYÂNÔS (sic), and the churches rejoiced in him greatly, and God wrought very many signs and wonders by his hands. And nigh unto his city there were idols which certain of the people therein used to worship, and he used to ask God to destroy them. And God accepted his petition, for the earth swallowed them up and the waters of the sea rose up over them and covered them; and through his prayer God destroyed the idols that were in his diocese, and He crushed the blasphemy of SIBELLIUS who made the Father and the Son, and [fol. 79*a* 2] the Holy Spirit one Person (or Substance). And when DIOCLETIAN denied Christ certain people told him, saying, "SARAPÂMÔN is destroying the worship of the idols which are the king's gods"; and having heard very many complaints he commanded his soldiers to bring SARAPÂMÔN to him, and they did so. When Saint SARAPÂMÔN arrived in the city of Alexandria with the messengers of the emperor, Abbâ PETER the archbishop came to him, and there were many clergy with him, and embraced him, and he saw his face as it were the face of an angel of God. And when he came to the Emperor DIOCLETIAN had him tortured with various tortures, and our Lord Jesus Christ raised him up sound and whole, and uninjured and without suffering; and many people believed because of him. Now the emperor was afraid to add to his tortures lest the multitudes should believe through him. And he sent him away into Upper Egypt, to ARIANUS, the governor of ANTINOË, so that he might torture him there and cut off his head with the sword. Now at that time ARIANUS was governor of the city of Alexandria. And ARIANUS took Saint SARAPÂMÔN with him in a ship to go to Upper Egypt, and when the ship reached NÂḲYÔS (sic) his city, it ran aground and it was impossible to remove it from where it stood. And ARIANUS had Saint SARAPÂMÔN brought up from inside the ship, and carried him to the north of the city, and they cut off his head with the sword, and he received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens. And the people took his body with great honour, and carried it to the church and laid it therein, and through it very many signs and miracles were wrought there. [fol. 79*a* 3] Salutation to SARAPÂMÔN before whom the lions bowed when they saw thy face which was the image of that of the Creator.

And on this day is commemorated Abbâ LÎḲÂNÔS the priest, who fought a spiritual fight in the monastery of ḲUŎ-NÂṢĚL, in the country of Ethiopia. Salutation to Abbâ LÎḲÂNÔS, from whose fingers burning lamps shot forth.

Salutation to ABRAHAM the faithful man, and to ISAAC the offering, and to JACOB who anointed the stone with oil, in whose bosoms live the righteous, like dates on the palm tree and clusters of grapes on the vine. [This paragraph is omitted in the Bodleian MS.]

XXIX. KHĚDÂR

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER, AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day became a martyr Saint PETER, the seventeenth Archbishop of the city of Alexandria; and he was the last of the martyrs. [fol. 79*b* 1] The father of this holy man was the high priest of the city of Alexandria, and his name was THEODORE; the name of his mother was SOPHIA. And they were fearers of God and they had no children at all. And on the fifth day of the month Ḥamlê (July–Aug.), the day of the festival of PETER and PAUL the apostles, the mother of the holy man saw many Christians with their children, and they wore festal apparel with decorations, and they were going to church; and she was exceedingly sorrowful. And she went into the church and stood up before the altar of the saint, and she besought our Lord Christ with many tears to give her a son. And that night PETER and PAUL the apostles appeared unto her, and they said unto her, "Behold God hath accepted thy petition, and He will assuredly give thee a son, and thou shalt call his name 'PETER'"; and they commanded her to go to the Archbishop THEONAS that the people might pray for her. And after certain days she brought forth this holy man, and she called his name "PETER." When his days were seven years she gave him to the archbishop even as [HANNAH gave] SAMUEL the prophet to ELI, and he became to him like a beloved son; and the archbishop made him a reader, and after that he made him a deacon, and after that he made him a priest. And he used to help the archbishop in all his divers good works and in his administration of the churches. When Abbâ THEONAS was dying he commanded the bishops and priests to appoint Abbâ PETER archbishop in his place, and they appointed him Archbishop of the city of Alexandria; and when he was appointed all the people and all the churches rejoiced. [fol. 79*b* 2] And it came to pass in the days of DIOCLETIAN, the infidel emperor, that there lived in the city of Alexandria a certain judge who was of the same opinion as the emperor, and who worshipped idols with him, and he had two sons. And his wife was a Christian, but she was unable to have her sons baptized with Christian baptism in the city of ANTIOCH, and she therefore took them and embarked on a ship in order to come to Alexandria. As they were journeying over the sea, a violent storm rose up against them, and she was afraid that her two sons would die without baptism. And she cut her breasts, and made the sign of the Cross with her blood which she smeared over the foreheads of her sons and she dipped them in the sea three times in the Name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Ghost. Then a great calm came, and they were saved from drowning and arrived in the city of Alexandria. And she brought her sons to the Archbishop Abbâ PETER so that he might baptize them with Christian baptism, together with the sons of the men of Alexandria. And when the archbishop wished to immerse her boys, the water congealed and became as hard as a stone; and he tried to immerse them three times, and each time the water became like a stone. And the archbishop marvelled and asked her what had happened, and she related to him how a wind storm had risen up at sea, and how she had cut her breasts, and how she had signed the foreheads of her sons with the sign of the Cross with her blood, and how she had immersed them in the sea three times in the Name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Ghost. When the archbishop heard this he marvelled exceedingly and praised God, saying, [fol. 79*b* 3] "Thus saith the Church; as one is baptism even so one is the Church." And in the days of this father Archbishop Abbâ PETER one ARIUS, a heretic, rose up, and the saint rebuked him but he would not hearken to his words; and having rebuked him many times and ARIUS having refused to turn from his wicked opinion, Abbâ PETER anathematized him and excommunicated him. And when the Emperor DIOCLETIAN heard the report of this Saint PETER, and that he was teaching the multitudes everywhere not to worship the gods, he sent messengers to him to seize Saint PETER and to shut him up in prison. And when the men of the city knew this straightway they took their weapons of war with them and they came to the prison house to fight the messengers of the emperor. And when Saint PETER saw that there was going to be a great tumult on his account, he wished to yield up his soul to death for his people, and he wanted to be released from this world and to be with Christ. And he made all the people come to him, and he comforted them and commended them to be strong in the True Faith. When ARIUS knew that the blessed PETER was departing to God and leaving him under the ban of excommunication, he went to the great high priests, and told them to beseech the blessed PETER on his behalf, so that he might release him from the ban of excommunication; but when the chief priests entreated the blessed PETER on behalf of ARIUS, he added to the ban of excommunication which he had laid upon him. And he said unto them, "I have seen a vision this night, and behold our Lord Jesus Christ was standing with His rent raiment in His hand, and He was covering His Body with His raiment. And I said unto Him, My Lord, [fol. 80*a* 1] 'Who hath rent Thy raiment?' And He said unto me, 'ARIUS hath rent My raiment; he separated Me from My Father. Beware of him.'" Then Saint PETER commanded 'ARKÎLÂS (ARCHELAUS) and ALEXANDER, and said unto them, "Ye will have to appoint an archbishop after me; beware of ARIUS, and have no fellowship with him in the work of the priesthood, and release him not from the ban of excommunication, for he is the enemy of Christ. And thou 'ARKÎLÂS (ARCHELAUS) shalt be archbishop after me and before ALEXANDER, and thou shalt meet ARIUS and shalt die speedily." After this the blessed PETER took counsel with the messengers of the emperor (sic) in secret that they might bring him out from the inside of the prison house, and they dug opposite to it and took him out and finished the emperor's command. And they did as he commanded them, and they took him and brought him outside the city, [to the place] where was the grave of the blessed MARK the evangelist. [The text of this passage is corrupt.] And Saint PETER prayed and committed his people to the care of God, and he prayed again, saying, "O my Lord Christ, let the shedding of my blood be the end of the worship of idols, and may they be brought to nought and perish throughout the world." And a voice came from heaven, saying, "Amen! It shall be according as thou sayest"; and a certain virgin who was near that place heard these words. And Saint PETER said unto the soldiers of the emperor, "Finish what ye have been commanded to do"; and straightway they cut off his holy head with the sword and he received the crown of martyrdom in the kingdom of the heavens. And his body stood upright for a space of two hours. And the people made haste [fol. 80*a* 2] and went out from the city, for they were by the prison house and they did not know what had become of the saint until one told them what had happened. And they took the body of their shepherd and their chief and made it ready for burial, and they brought it to the city and took it into the church, and laid it upon his seat on which no one had ever once seen him sit, even as he told them. And when they asked him, saying, "Why dost thou not sit upon thy throne?" he answered and said unto them, "I see the power of God sitting upon it, and therefore I do not dare to sit upon it." Then they finished making him ready for the grave, and they laid his body with the bodies of the chosen saints, the archbishops. And he sat upon the throne of MARK the evangelist fourteen years, and he was appointed archbishop in the tenth year of the reign of DIOCLETIAN. And many signs and mighty wonders took place through his body. Salutation to PETER, the preacher of the Faith, the counterpart of PAUL.

And on this day also is commemorated the Birth of our Lord and God and Redeemer, Jesus Christ, of the holy two-fold Virgin MARY, our Lady. [fol. 80*a* 3] Salutation to Thy Birth, O Thou Who didst shew to PETER Thy raiment which ARIUS had rent.

And on this day also are commemorated the forty-seven thousand martyrs who suffered in the time of the Emperor DIOCLETIAN. Salutation to the righteous men who fought against DIOCLETIAN. [This paragraph is wanting in the Bodleian MS.]

And on this day also became a martyr the great Saint CLEMENT, Archbishop of the city of Rômê. This holy man was a royal kinsman, and was the son of CAUSTUS, the captain of the army of the Emperor of Rômê; his excellent and honourable parents taught him all the various kinds of learning and the philosophy of the Greeks. And when PETER the apostle preached in Rômê the preaching of the Gospel, CAUSTUS the father of CLEMENT believed through this holy man that our Lord Jesus Christ was truly [God], and he gave all his goods to the poor and needy. And when his father went to the emperor he remained many days, and the brother of the holy man CAUSTUS thought that he would marry his wife. When the mother of the holy man knew this, she took CLEMENT and his younger brother and embarked on a ship, to go to ATHENS, and to have her sons taught philosophy and learning [fol. 80*b* 1] until their father returned from the emperor. And straightway a violent storm rose up against them, and the ship was smashed, and one after another clung to one of the timbers, and the waves of the sea washed this holy CLEMENT to the city of Alexandria, where he remained a few days. And God called PETER the apostle and said unto him, "Get thee to the city of Alexandria so that thou mayest find the servants who are fit for mercy." And when PETER the apostle came to the city of Alexandria, and preached the preaching of the Gospel therein, no man in the city of Alexandria believed except this holy man CLEMENT. When, however, he heard the preaching of PETER the apostle he believed on our Lord Jesus Christ, and PETER baptized him with Christian baptism, and explained to him the Godhead of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the riches and glory of those who worship Him, and how signs and wonders are wrought [in His Name]. And from that day CLEMENT followed PETER the apostle, and he became his disciple, and he wrote the "Contendings of the Apostles," and what happened to them with infidel kings. Then he preached in many cities, and the apostles gave unto him the Books of the Canon to proclaim, and then he was appointed Archbishop of the city of Rômê. And he preached therein, and converted very many of the people thereof to the knowledge of God. And the Emperor TRAJAN, the infidel, heard of him, and he sent his guards to seize him and bring him before him, and the emperor said unto him, "Worship the idols and deny Christ." And when CLEMENT would not hearken unto his command he sent him away to a certain city [fol. 80*b* 2] to be tortured, for he was afraid of the men of the city of his kinsfolk, and he did not want to torture him where he was lest the people should rise up against him. So he sent him away to the governor of that city and ordered him to torture him with many tortures. And that governor hung round the neck of the holy man CLEMENT a heavy iron implement with four feet (anchor ?) which is placed in ships, and he cast him into the sea. And he delivered up his soul into the hand of God, and he received the crown of martyrdom like the apostles who preached. And it came to pass that when a full year had passed he was seen in the sea, and the body of Saint CLEMENT appeared, and he was preaching in the depths of the sea just as if he were alive. And the people came and were blessed by him, and they wished to carry him off, and they brought a splendid stone coffer, and laid him in it, and they wished to take him up and bring him out of the sea, but they were unable to move him from his place. And they knew that he was unwilling to come out of the sea and they left him there, and departed. And each year, on the day of his festival, an opening appeareth in the box above his body, and the people come and are blessed by him. And many believing men who have seen this have described and written down accounts of some of his miracles, such as the following. One year certain men came to be blessed by him, and when they went forth from him they forgot a little child who was behind the coffer of Saint CLEMENT. This happened by the Will of our Lord Jesus Christ, so that He might reveal their work to His saints and friends, and the grace which they receive from Him. And when they had gathered together above the sea, they sought for the father [of the child] and found him not. And they thought that he was dead and that the beasts which are in the sea had devoured him, [fol. 80*b* 3] and they wept for him, and they celebrated his commemoration, and they consecrated the Offering and offered up incense according to their custom. And when the second year had arrived and the time had come for the sea to open itself again, certain men who came according to their custom, found the child alive and standing up by the side of the coffer of CLEMENT. And they asked him, saying, "How didst thou exist and on what didst thou live?" And he said unto them, "Saint CLEMENT gave me food to eat and drink, and God preserved me from the wild beasts of the sea." And when they heard this they marvelled exceedingly and they praised God Who is to be praised and glorified above all His saints and martyrs who have contended for His holy Name's sake. Salutation to CLEMENT the author of the "Contendings of the Apostles."

XXX. KHĔDÂR

IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER AND THE SON AND THE HOLY GHOST, ONE GOD

On this day died ACACIUS, Archbishop of the city of Constantinia. This holy man was learned, and excellent, and good, and he translated books of theology, and he was appointed priest in the church of the city of Constantinia. Now a General Council was held in the city of CHALCEDON, [fol. 81*a* 1] and this father was not pleased with all that took place thereat. When they searched for him to come because of his knowledge, he made a pretence to them that he was sick. When he heard of the tribulation which they had inflicted upon Saint DIOSCURUS, Archbishop of the city of Alexandria, he was exceedingly sorry, and he began to curse their Council before his companions, and friends, and the principal military officers of the Government whom he knew to be orthodox, and whose works he knew to be good. And he said, "I thank God that I did not mix myself up with these evil members of the Council." When ANATOLIUS, Archbishop of the city of Constantinia, died, the members of the Government, and the military officers and the believers chose this father ACACIUS to be Archbishop of Constantinia, because they knew that he was orthodox. And they appointed him archbishop because they had hope in him and thought that he would be able to remove from the Church division and enmity. When he was appointed he found the disease of division and enmity therein, and he strove diligently and in every way possible to remove it, but could not do so in the least degree; only God Himself could do it. And he thought in his heart and said, "It will be best for me to save myself." First of all he sent a letter to Abbâ PETER, Archbishop of the city of Alexandria, confessing therein to him the True Faith of the Holy Trinity, which he had learned and received from the divine fathers Abbâ CYRIL and Abbâ DIOSCURUS; and then he continued to write very many letters asking him to support him in priestly fellowship. [fol. 81*a* 2] When Peter received his letters he wrote a letter of acceptance and [another] letter dealing with general matters, and sent them off in charge of three bishops. And the bishops came to the city of Constantinia secretly, and they gathered together to this father ACACIUS, and they gave him the letter of Abbâ PETER; and ACACIUS treated them with great honour, and received the letters from them with great joy. And he read the letter before his friends, and the orthodox nobles of the city, and they all confessed with him the True Faith as it was written in the letter of Saint Abbâ PETER. Then he wrote a letter with his own hand before them accepting [the Faith] of Abbâ DIOSCURUS and Abbâ TIMOTHY, and Abbâ PETER, and he confessed that they were of the True Faith, and he excommunicated all those who were opposed to them. Then he took the three bishops and carried them away with him to a certain monastery which was outside the city of Constantinia, and he prepared the Eucharist and they took part with him in the Liturgy and in the Offering, and they took from him the letter which he had written and they were blessed by him and he by them, and then he set them on their way and bade them farewell in peace. When they came to Abbâ PETER they told him everything which had happened, and also how they had taken part together with Abbâ ACACIUS in the Liturgy and the Offering, and how he had accepted his letter; and he preached in his name at the time of the Offering and the consecrations and the prayers. And the report of him was heard by the Bishop of Rômê, and he drove Abbâ ACACIUS from the throne of Constantinia, and he died in exile, being strong in the [fol. 81*a* 3] True Faith. Salutation to ACACIUS, the successor of ANATOLIUS.

And on this day also are commemorated MERCURIUS the martyr, and the consecration of the church of COSMAS and DAMIANUS, and their brethren, and the death of GABRA MASḲAL, King of Ethiopia, the Orthodox [died A.D. 1344]. Salutation to GABRA MASḲAL, who hath passed to the city of light. Salutation to GABRA MASḲAL who rejoiced in the power of God.

And on this day also ANIANUS of ÂMID [the Stylite], and PETER became [martyrs].

[fol. 81*b* 1] Here endeth what shall be read during the blessed month of Khĕdâr. [Here follows in the Bodleian MS. the following:...God, the Most High. Who is to be praised. Blessed be His Name. Praise to Him [is due] from us. May there be to us mercy from Him. For every eye awaiteth Him. It is He Who beginneth, it is He Who finisheth. Everything is ruled by Him. Let us worship Him. And He is our help for ever and ever, Amen and Amen; so be it, so be it!]

The charter is the foundational document that describes the rationale, goals, plan of work, resources needed, terms and conditions, and outcomes of a Center for Digital Humanities at Princeton (hereafter CDH) project. Charters are written by core members of a project team in a series of planning meetings taking place over the course of a month. The planning process is intensive, collaborative and requires substantial input from everyone on a team. Charters serve as formalized agreements among all team members on such crucial questions as scope, technical design, infrastructural needs, and success criteria.

A draft of each project charter is peer-reviewed by all CDH staff, and optionally by additional partners or stakeholders, at a "design review" before the start of project work. It is circulated at least one week before the review takes place in an open comment period. Questions and concerns from this period may be raised at the design review. Project teams have two weeks after the design review to address any issues raised and make any requested changes. Project work only begins (and funds are released) once the charter has been finalized and signed by the Project Director (PI) and the CDH Faculty Director. Charters are amended as necessary throughout the project lifecycle to document major changes and note when "Built by CDH" Software Warranty and "Built by CDH" Long Term Service Agreement take effect, and serve as part of the CDH project archive.

CDH charters and their planning documents exist in several forms as we have refined them over the years and tailored them to the several types of projects we have supported. PEMM Charter (2019-20)

Part I: Project Overview

Stories have been told for almost two millennia about the Virgin Mary, the mother of Christ, and the miracles she has performed for the faithful who call upon her name.

One of the most important collections of such folktales is the body of over 700 Ethiopian Marian miracles, written from the 1300s through the 1900s, in the ancient African language of Gəʿəz (also known as classical Ethiopic).

These story collections, called the Täʾammərä Maryam (The Miracles of Mary), are central not only to the ancient church liturgy of Ethiopia, but to the daily felt and religious life of 50 million Ethiopians and Eritreans. Princeton University has in its Firestone Library one of the largest and finest collections of Marian miracle manuscripts anywhere in the world outside of Ethiopia, with over 130 codices and hundreds of textual amulets. Worldwide, at least 100,000 Täʾammərä Maryam manuscripts exist, some with just a handful of stories, some with hundreds, and many with different versions of the same stories.

While the Täʾammərä Maryam is one of the most important African archives of texts, basic information about it and its stories are lacking; as a result, scholars can authoritatively state almost nothing about them. How many are there? When was each written? What themes do they have? Have these African stories grown and changed across regions, languages, and periods? Princeton Ethiopian Miracles of Mary (PEMM) project will collect and collate information about these hundreds of stories across hundreds of manuscripts as the basis for an open access resource that will enable researchers and Ethiopian community members around the world to conduct in-depth research on this vital corpus. Wendy Laura Belcher, professor of African literature in the departments of Comparative Literature and African American Studies will serve as the project's Principal Investigator (PI). PEMM was begun with a Center for Digital Humanities at Princeton (CDH) Dataset Curation grant.

Description and Objectives

With the guidance of the CDH, the PEMM project team will collect and collate data about hundreds of Marian miracle stories in hundreds of Ethiopian manuscripts. Our aim is to enable computational analysis of this vital corpus of African folktales and to generate answers about their number, dating, origin, provenance, themes, recensions, translations, sources, placement, and diachronic change. The CDH and PEMM will design a robust data structure to migrate, store, connect, validate, and query the data. We will discuss a preliminary web interface with sample data visualizations that will make that data available to scholars in the United States, Europe, and Ethiopia; this interface may not be possible in AY20.

Relevant Resources and Projects

PEMM builds on the work of previous scholars, using resources created by others: the most important for PEMM is the Macomber Handlist, and the finding aids of the Princeton University Rare Books and Special Collections. We hope to reference the manuscripts in the British Library. We will also make use of and share data with both the Oxford Cantigas de Santa Maria (CSM) database and the University of Hamburg Beta Maṣāḥəft (Hamburg BM) Database with the intention of avoiding overlap as much as possible. For complete information about what has been collected and catalogued thus far about the Tä'ammərä Maryam, please see Appendix A.

Research Questions

We are collecting and collating data in AY20 in order to answer three main research questions.

- How many Ethiopian Marian miracle tales are there? Scholars have not been able to arrive at an accurate number of how many Ethiopian Marian tales there are despite a century of labor on the issue. One scholar says 540, another says 643; a current database project (the Hamburg BM) has likely identified over 700. Meanwhile, Princeton has some stories in its manuscripts that appear on none of those lists. PEMM has access to what those scholars did not have: thousands of digitized manuscripts (instead of dozens) and sophisticated ways of curating and analyzing the data in those manuscripts (see below).
- What are the themes of the Ethiopian Marian miracle tales? Macomber's 1980s catalog provided keywords for some of the tales, but many of the terms were dated, insufficient, and inconsistently applied. By enhancing dataset with better keywords, by refining and standardizing keywords from a controlled vocabulary and consistently applying them, PEMM will give scholars access to an accurate dataset of tale themes and ways of studying how tales correlate with those keywords. We will build a controlled vocabulary from combining and refining Macomber's handlist, the Hamburg BM, the Oxford CSM, and consulting the Index on Medieval Art.
- What is the origin of each Ethiopian Marian miracle tale? No one has clearly established which of the tales were originally from Europe or the Middle East. Some say only 33 of them, others say 75 of them, but no one has done the work to be certain. This matters not only to Ethiopianists, but to scholars working on the European Marian tales. Our work correlating the Ethiopian Marian tales with the tales in the Oxford CSM database may enable scholars to discern patterns across and analyze indigenous, European, and Middle Eastern Marian tales.

Project Significance

Significance for African and Literary Studies

PEMM is a historic project with a range of scholarly contributions:

- Makes a disciplinary contribution: These folktales about the Virgin Mary are rich repositories of cultural knowledge and literary practice, providing a matchless comparative literature site to study tales across continents, languages, and periods. Comparative literature remains a largely Eurocentric discipline and the Marian miracle tales have seldom been studied outside of their European iterations. PEMM provides a useful corrective to such limited approaches and does so through pairing two innovative comparative literature methodologies: distance reading and world literature.
- Fills a scholarly gap: African literature in general, and eight centuries of Ethiopian written literature in particular, are criminally understudied. PEMM will enable more scholars to do more research on African literature. It will also bring greater global visibility to this vital corpus through a web interface.
- Serves an underserved community: The number of digital humanities projects that focus on African literature is miniscule. Indeed, perhaps the only other initiative is the Programme in African Digital Humanities, 2018–2023, at the South African universities of Cape Town, Pretoria, Stellenbosch, Western Cape and the Witwatersrand, which "aims to examine the current forms and practices of reading and digital publishing in order to encourage and support self-directed, digital literary enquiries in the South African humanities environments." PEMM is part of increasing the number of digital humanities projects that focus on Africa.
    - For instance, the annual Digital Humanities conference in Utrecht for 2019 decided to have an Africa focus, working to give funding for Africans to attend and noting that African DH projects "cover the spectrum of DH topics in a somewhat different way than elsewhere." However, only one panel was about Africa: "African Languages And Digital Humanities: Challenges And Solutions," (which has a linguistics focus). Only one of the paper presentations seemed to be about Africa. Isabelle Alice Zaugg's "Global Language Justice in the Digital Sphere: The Ethiopic Case" is "an instrumental case study of Unicode inclusion and the development of supports for the Ethiopic script and its languages." Thus, the DH focus seems to be on methods, underscoring the need for a project like PEMM that focuses on literature.
- Collects scattered information in one place. Ethiopian literature has been the subject of study for some centuries. There are large repositories of Ethiopian manuscripts inside and outside of Ethiopia, and massive cataloging and digitizing projects have been underway for the past sixty years. But, little of this information is available online, in one place, in English, for computational analysis.

- Focuses on literature. Most projects that focus on Ethiopian manuscripts do not attend to literature. They are linguistic or philological in nature, focusing on manuscripts as material objects, and tend to prioritize biblical books. PEMM is focused on African stories and their themes, providing a useful corrective to the overemphasis on influence and apparatus and underemphasis on African thought and creativity in Ethiopian studies.
- Increases information about and access to stories. Of the tens of thousands of Täʾammərä Maryam in existence, only a few hundred have been catalogued, and only a few dozen of those have been cataloged with any detail; that is, naming the exact tales in that manuscript. PEMM will increase the number of cataloged Täʾammərä Maryam manuscripts.
- Provides foundation for Belcher's book. Belcher works on Ethiopian literature in general and has a book in progress on Täʾammərä Maryam, titled Ladder of Heaven: The Miracles of the Virgin Mary in Ethiopian Literature and Art. It is a book of literary analysis, which will appear with many gorgeous illuminations of the tales from Princeton's manuscripts. Given the dearth of information about these stories, PEMM will provide a necessary basis for the writing of this book.

Significance for Digital Humanities

The CDH's approach to this particular project will also serve to make existing tools and approaches more robust and more useful to Digital Humanities researchers who do not have the support of a development team.

- Google Sheets as a simplified relational database. We will develop and document a model for working with Google Sheets as a simplified relational database, and exploring the possibilities offered by an exportable static site based on relational data exported from Google Sheets. Working with spreadsheets and Google Sheets is obviously not new for data work or for Digital Humanities.[1] However, it seems clear that there is a need for a data curation and management solution that sits somewhere between a spreadsheet and a relational database.[2] By applying CDH Development & Design Team skills and expertise, we will push these technologies forward in a way that will benefit others, including those doing data curation and graduate students working on their own Digital Humanities projects. Our approach will include structuring the data across multiple sheets as a simplified relational database, considering the spreadsheet as a user interface, providing enhanced functionality via scripting, and documenting the data structure and the implementation. We will also write scripts to automate data export, data validation and reporting--tools which have the potential to be generalized for wider use.

[1] For example, see Matthew Lincoln's post on using Google Sheets as part of a Getty data migration project.
https://matthewlincoln.net/2018/03/26/best-practices-for-using-google-sheets-in-your-data-project.html

[2] See for instance the popularity of products like Airtable or the existence of projects like NodeGoat.

- Furthers DH work with static website technologies. Using static website technologies, as championed by the Minimal Computing working group, is also not new for Digital Humanities, although it is new for a CDH sponsored project supported by the Development & Design Team. Our commitment to development best practices and documentation will help further work being done by others to make static sites more accessible to scholars. In addition, for this project the possibility of sharing the results of our work through alternate means is particularly appealing.
- Takes advantage of new initiatives. Scholars have access to only a fraction of Ethiopian manuscripts, as most are in remote monasteries. Only a few have been digitized; some estimates put the number as low as 10 percent of all Ethiopian manuscripts. Fortunately, over the last decade, we have seen a huge push to digitize, as Ethiopian manuscripts are globally recognized as an important endangered archive. PEMM takes advantage of this newly available archive.
- Strengthens partnerships with scholarly communities in Oxford and Hamburg by establishing a model for sharing data across different projects using different technologies.

Audiences

The audiences for this project are multiple and overlapping.

- Scholarly audiences for the data: Scholars of Ethiopian literature (mostly scholars in Europe and North American, Ethiopian and non-Ethiopian) will find this information useful for doing their own research, in particular, the three existing comparative projects will be interested in the data we produce: the Hamburg BM project, the Oxford CSM Database, and the Miracula Mariae project.
- Scholarly audiences for a public interface: Clerical scholars (including Ethiopian clerics); non-clerical scholars (scholars of Marian miracles); and students (undergraduate and graduate)
- Non-scholarly audiences for a public interface: Ethiopian priests interested in sources and themes for writing sermons.

Part II: Grant Year 2019-2020 Plans - Data

Data Status

Types of Data and Storage Format

The data are currently in structured text files, pdfs, Google Docs and Sheets, XML, and MS Word.

Past FY19 Data Work

Macomber Handlist cleanup. In 2018-2019, Belcher and Lambrinaki converted the handlist from a PDF (a scan of a hand typed manuscript with many hand emendations in pen) into a structured text file. They cleaned up the file in Sublime Text, but there are still some errors, since it was incredibly garbled. This file will be converted into a Google Sheet titled "Macomber Canonical Stories." Here is the structure of the text file:

- MAC###: Macomber Marian Miracle Canonical Story identifier (some of these stories are various parts of the same story, so the identifier for a story may be something like MAC034A)
- Title: English Title from Macomber
- Text: Secondary source that discusses this particular Canonical Story
- English Translation: Translation of that story as it appears in one or two manuscripts (unfortunately, this is not currently a standard category in the structured file because most entries don't have English translations; not sure if this needs to be made standard in all entries before transferring to Google Sheets)
- PEth: Shelf number, beginning folio, and ending folio for where this particular Canonical Story appears in Princeton's RBSC Täʾammərä Maryam manuscripts (shelfmark and folios needs splitting out). This field is often empty.
- EMIP: Shelf number, beginning folio, and ending folio for where this particular Canonical Story appears in the EMIP digital repository. This field is often empty.
- MSS: Shelf number and beginning folio only for where this particular Canonical Story appears in other repositories. Macober uses abbreviations for these (see list)
- EMML: Shelf number and beginning folio only for where this particular Canonical Story appears in the HMML digital library.
- Keywords: keywords from Macomber handlist with a few additional ones that Belcher and Lambrinaki came up with (problematic and needs to be updated, or categories missing)
- Incipit: Current text in this field is garbage and will be deleted. It will be globally replaced with Brown's list of incipits, matching up using the Macomber identifiers.

Earlier data work. Some earlier work was done correlating tales and manuscripts and themes in Excel (such as matching Princeton manuscripts to Macomber based on data from the Princeton finding aid), but those files are now out of date.
Create a data structure. We designed a preliminary data structure for Canonical Stories, Story Instances,, as well as for manuscripts and incipits.

Planned FY20 Data Work

Over the next year, we will:

- Migrate data. Project data (namely, Macomber's handlist) currently managed as a structured text file will be migrated to Google Sheets by the CDH team, structured in multiple sheets based on planned data architecture (see Technical Design Plan section on Preliminary Data Structure, below) with data validation to share information across sheets.
- Enhance data. Project data will be enhanced by the CDH team by importing data provided from other teams (e.g., those from the Hamburg BM project and Oxford CSM database).
- Match data. Use Oxford CSM story data to identify Canonical Stories that came out of Europe and the Middle East, not Ethiopia (to distinguish between foreign and indigenous).
- Configure data validation. Connect different sets of data without duplicating information (i.e., Gəʿəz Marian miracle manuscripts and Gəʿəz Marian miracle tales)
- Develop a controlled vocabulary. Wendy and Evgeniia work with Macomber, Oxford CSM, Hamburg BM, and Index on Medieval Art's controlled vocabularies to develop a controlled vocabulary for PEMM Canonical Stories.
- Develop a simple incipit tool (or outsource). Create a tool for searching Macomber's standardized incipits so that research assistants can catalog manuscripts, preferably a dialog box in Google Sheets. Two challenges are homophones and recensions. The tool for searching must account for homophones, treating certain fidal letters as exchangeable (say ሀ and ሐ) because scribes easily substitute one for the other. Also, when searching incipits, research assistants must be careful about using proper noun searches. That is, a Canonical Story may give a name for the main character (e.g., Barok from Finqe [Phoenicia]), but a Story Instance in a particular manuscript may refer to him only as a "deacon" or as a "sinner."

Data Standards and Capture Procedures

- Controlled vocabulary. We are developing and using controlled vocabulary lists (see above).
- Abbreviations. We are developing and will use abbreviations for repositories (e.g., BN not Bibliotheque Nationale). The data currently in the structured text file uses codes for repositories holding Ethiopic manuscripts. The repository abbreviations will be used to generate brief repository records in the new Google Sheets data structure, which will be used to document current locations of materials.

- Organize data. We use Google Drive and Google Docs and Sheets to organize the project. After migration to Google Sheets, data will be stored in multiple sheets of a single document in order to allow data validation and autocomplete-style lookups for related data. A regular, automated export will be set up to export Google Sheets data to a GitHub repository. We use Slack to communicate about it.
- Validate data. In some instances, we have multiple researchers typing the same data, or cataloging the same manuscripts, to check accuracy.

Grant Year Objectives – Data

Main Outcomes/Deliverables:

- Dataset of Canonical Stories (publishable and citable)
- Dataset of 100+ MSS cataloged using list of Canonical Stories (publishable and citable)
- Import relevant data from Princeton Ethiopian manuscripts to Google Sheets
- Documentation of the new data structure
- Documentation of data entry workflow & processes[3]
- Cataloging of the MSS to provide to Hamburg BM project
- Linking to Hamburg BM IDs
- Export data from Google Sheets (possibly as XML) to share with Hamburg BM

Possibly in Scope – Data:

- Linking PEMM Canonical Stories to other project by cross-linking identifiers from Hamburg BM, Oxford CSM database project (European stories)
- Linking to Index of Medieval Art
- Linking MSS records to Princeton University Libraries (PUL) digital editions in DPUL (Treasures of the Manuscript Division)
- Linking MSS records to EMML, if the digital edition is available

Out of Scope – Data:

- Cannibal of Khmer project with The Textual History of the Ethiopic Old Testament (THEOT)
    - 90 MSS with the story carefully selected from different times and regions and typed to run through the software to compare versions. Won't be done until October or November, but then all of that data will be available. May provide interesting information to help with this work but out of scope for this phase.
- Describing characters, objects, places, and other subject matter that occur in stories
- Annotating PUL digitized images or crowd-sourcing

[3] CDH developers expect to write code to do the migration, but the code itself is not a deliverable sinces it's a means to an end and not something we are likely to reuse or generalize.

Project Needs – Data

- Research assistants with the language skills (either reading-level or at the level of recognizing the letters)
- Data structure for Google Sheets (see Technical Design Plan section on Preliminary Data Structure, below)
- Incipit tool
- Structured text file migrated into Google Sheets with customized data validation and formatting, including:
    - autocomplete on incipits with homophone search functionality, for matching particular stories to Canonical Stories
    - data validation for field types as appropriate, e.g. numeric values or sequential / increasing numbers for folio numbers within a manuscript.
- Regular check-ins with CDH staff including dev team and project management time.
- Training and support to query the data (e.g., OpenRefine training)

Concerns – Data:

Risks

- Possible overlaps with Hamburg BM; will use their data where possible, and hope to supply ours back to them to be incorporated, but want to avoid duplication of effort. In some cases we may use their data for checking and comparison. We have consulted them with this concern and they are willing to assist.
- Handling Fidel in Google Sheets and in search. One challenge is that the data will use Latin letters with diacritics (about 20 Unicode characters, like ə, ṭ, ṣ, ś, ä, ə, w, ḍ, ǧ, ḥ, ḫ, ḵ, č, ñ), as well as over 300 Ethiopic fidəl characters (also available in Unicode, like ወ፣ቀ፣ም፣ት).
- Different types of software that researchers use to handle and input Fidel
- Finding students with necessary language skills
- Changes with the scale of data may make Google Sheets unusable

Interdependencies

- Sharing / linking to data without other projects
- Manuscript access (digital or otherwise)
    - Firestone Library began digitizing its Gəʿəz manuscripts; prioritizing the Täʾammərä Maryam. All ten are now digitized and online in Digital PUL.

Data security considerations

- Structured text file is currently stored and shared via DropBox; a copy has been added to the PEMM Google Team Drive for backup.
- This project does not include any personal or sensitive data

Data management plan

- After data migration, Google Sheets will be the primary canonical data source; GitHub will be a secondary source for backup and experimentation.

Long-term preservation plan

- A released version of data exported from Google Sheets will be deposited with Zenodo or other repository for long term secure storage, and also to make it citable.
- Where appropriate, data will be exported and shared with other relevant projects.

Future Plans

Future Data Work

- Write precises of Canonical Stories. A huge and difficult task will be writing short summaries of the 700+ indigenous Canonical Stories. Only those with an excellent understanding of Amharic, French, or Ge`ez will be able to do this work. Maybe 100 can be done from stories available in English translation. Or, perhaps, if the keywords are good enough, no precis is needed?
- Track word length of Story Instances. This is a way of getting at the possibility of different recensions.
- Tag Canonical Stories with keywords. Another difficult task will be using the controlled vocabulary list to better tag Canonical Stories. Macombere did tag 642 of them with keywords, but many remain and his list can be improved. Only those with a good level of Ge`ez and English will be able to do this work.
- Identify new Canonical Stories. We need to give new identifier numbers, titles, themes, and incipits for Canonical Stories not in Macomber. We will use Hamburg BM identifiers where possible, but may need to do this a bit ourselves.
- Translate into Amharic. Translate titles, keywords, and website into Amharic.
- Design and write static website. This can be done in the last year.
- Compare Cannibal of Qemer transcripts. Once Steve, Jeremy, Jonah, and Ashlee complete typing up all 90 versions of the Cannibal of Qemer tale, we will do computational analysis.

Eventually, PEMM would like to answer the following question:

- How did individual Ethiopian Marian miracle tales change over time and region? PEMM is conducting a textual history of just one of the tales, called the Cannibal of Qəmər. We already know it has three quite different recensions, but we are trying to determine how, where, and when the tale differs. With new denogram comparative software, we can begin to establish recensions and compare them statistically. To do this, we are collaborating with The Textual History of the Ethiopic Old Testament (THEOT) Project, which has worked out the methods and workflow necessary to carry out textual histories of Gəʿəz texts.

Part III: Grant Year Plans - Interface

Grant Year Objectives – Interface

Main Outcomes/Deliverables:

- Preliminary interface (prototype):
    - Feed from Google sheets → Github
    - Simple data viz including map
    - Showcasing images from PUL MSS via IIIF
    - Lightweight search and browse
    - Article or post to accompany visualizations

Possibly in Scope – Interface:

- Support for multilingual site capacity
- Preliminary web interface design

Project Needs – Interface:

- Geographic data to generate a map
- Script to pull data from Google sheets into static website

Concerns – Interface:

Risks

- Front-facing deliverables are dependent on progress in data work
- Working with fidel and amharic (multilingualism)
- Community push-back on making data on certain stories accessible and visible

- Prototyping with static website technologies may have more constraints than we expect; CDH development team does not have substantial experience with static site technology
- Changes with the scale of manuscript data may impact static site performance
- If we shift from a static site to a database driven site in a future phase of the project, there are likely to be changes in the site structure and architecture

Interdependencies

- Hamburg BM project
- Working with PUL IIIF + digitized content, but not annotating
- The Textual History of the Ethiopic Old Testament (THEOT) Project
- Rights on existing code for searching fidel

Future Plans – Frontend:

- Distribution of static site with data and images on thumb drives
- Assess prototype and data work to determine how to expand, e.g. database driven site
- Apply to follow up Research Partnership grant for next phase of project development

Part IV: Technical Design Plan

Data

In this phase of PEMM, we will migrate the data from the semi-structured text file into a Google Sheets spreadsheet comprised of multiple structured and related sheets with data validation configured to automatically connect data between different sheets within a single Google Sheets spreadsheet. The data for this project is highly relational and certainly could be implemented as a relational database, but given the phase of this project and the amount of data work still to be done, we chose Google Sheets. Sheets supports edits by multiple concurrent users and tracks versions, and working within a spreadsheet will allow project team members to manage and query the data more easily without developer intervention. We will model the data as if for a relational database (see Preliminary Data Model), but implement it in Google Sheets with an eye towards data entry usability and efficiency rather than a fully normalized database structure.

As a first step, we will prototype the Google Sheets structure based on the new data architecture and determine the appropriate data validation, formatting, and any other configuration that is useful and necessary. This will also give us a chance to experiment with Fidel characters to make sure we can get everything working as expected. We expect to write one piece of custom code in Google Apps Script to support homophone searching in Fidel[4] for an incipit lookup, which will enable project team members to match stories in a manuscript with Canonical Stories from the Macomber catalog based on unique words or phrases.

A prototype incipit lookup has already been created by Steve Delamarter and demoed to the team which we could purchase, but we prefer to design and implement something simple based on project needs. This will give us in-house expertise to maintain and support the tool, and we can iteratively refine it if necessary. We also plan to document as an example for others using Google Sheets for dataset work. If implementing the incipit search proves to be more difficult than anticipated, we will consult with Garry Jost or purchase the prototype.

Once the Project Director has agreed to the data structure and tested and accepted Google Sheets functionality, CDH developers will write a script to parse the structured text file and convert into multiple CSV files for import into Google Sheets, which will create preliminary records for Manuscripts, Canonical Stories (i.e. those cataloged by Macomber) and Story Instance (a story as it occurs in a manuscript). Records for archival repositories that hold these manuscripts will be added manually to the spreadsheet by project researchers, since there are a small number and the structured text file does not supply the needed information.

After data is migrated into Google Sheets, that will become the canonical data source for the project, and the project researchers can begin working on the data. After the migration is complete, CDH developers write a script to generate a regular, automatic export of the Google Sheets as CSV and/or JSON which will be added to a GitHub repository. The data in the GitHub repository will serve as both a versioned backup and as a data source for querying, visualization, and a prototype interface; it may also eventually be used to publish a citable version of the data via Zenodo or a similar service. The export will be powered by the "publish to web" functionality available in Google Sheets, if it is sufficient; otherwise it will be implemented with an existing Python Google API client to access the data. Additionally, if the Google APIs allow it without too much difficulty[5], we will use revision information to credit the project team members who have made edits to the data as co-authors of the commit using the GitHub co-author syntax[6], as a way of making the contributions of project team members a visible part of the record of the data.

We may also implement continuous validation and reporting on the data in GitHub, making use of continuous integration tools that are usually applied to software code in order to automate regular data validation.

Interface – Prototype Website

If time permits, we will develop a prototype website as proof of concept which will allow us to experiment, try new technologies, get familiar with the data and working with Fidel characters. The ultimate goal is to know enough to decide how to proceed in the next phase of the project.

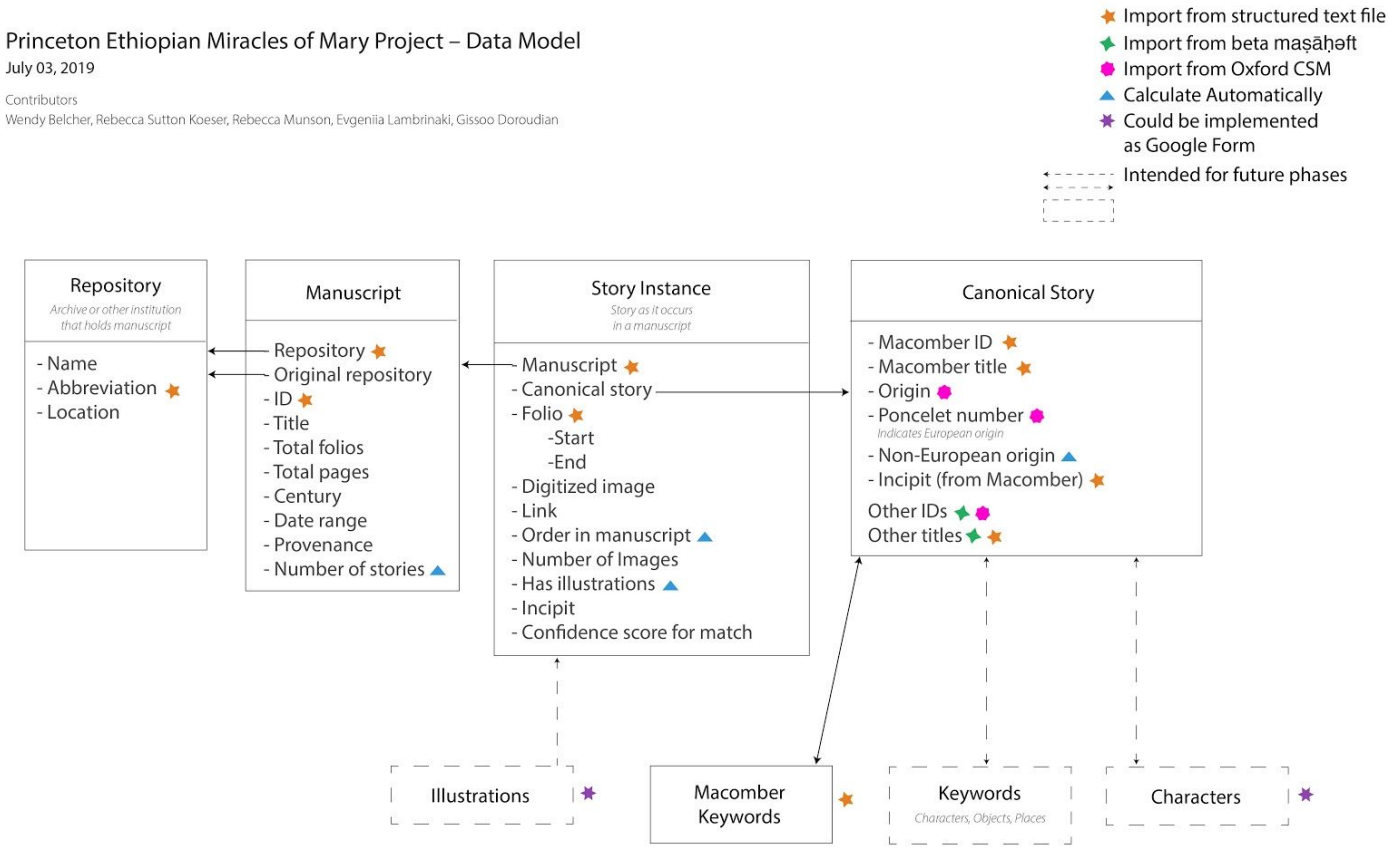
[5] Documentation on the Google Drive API indicates this should be possible (https://developers.google.com/drive/api/v3/reference/revisions), but it's unclear how difficult it is.
[6] See https://help.github.com/en/articles/creating-a-commit-with-multiple-authors

The GitHub data repository generated from the Google Sheets data will be used as a starting point for experimentation, creating a prototype static site[7] which could allow the project team to browse and search the data, and will give the development team a chance to become familiar with the data and working with Fidel characters. We have chosen to work with static site technology because it should allow for quick prototyping and experimentation based on the data from the Google Sheets without making a heavy investment in a particular technology stack for the next phase of the project.

We hope to experiment with the following static site technologies:

- Jekyll (https://jekyllrb.com/; implemented in ruby and commonly in use for Digital Humanities projects)
- Hugo (https://gohugo.io/ implemented in Go; newer and more powerful than Jekyll)
- Gatsby (https://gatsbyjs.org/ implemented in JavaScript)
- Wax (http://marii.info/projects/wax, software for generating exhibit sites with IIIF, spreadsheets, and Jekyll)
- Elasticlunr.js (http://elasticlunr.com/, browser-based searching)

The prototype website will be implemented with a responsive design that supports mobile devices by choosing an existing theme to allow us to focus on the more innovative aspects of the project. Creating a site that is usable, accessible, and welcoming to the diverse audiences for this project will require user research, but because this is a prototype website we may begin that research during the project year to guide later phases of the project. The static site will be hosted on GitHub pages as we prototype. If we determine we want a Princeton URL for the prototype site before the end of the current grant phase, we will request a hostname and possibly a virtual machine from OIT.



Alongside the static site development, dependent on data delivery, CDH developers and UX Designers will contribute to data visualizations and maps as appropriate to help answer the project research questions. These may or may not be part of the static site; they may be included in an essay to be published at the end of this phase of the project.

If time allows, CDH developers will experiment with internationalization, with the hope of making the prototype site available in both English and Amharic. This is not only something we're technically interested in, but also something we feel ethically challenged and compelled to do, based on Wendy Belcher's comment that no Ethiopic manuscript materials or data are currently available in Amharic. There are existing solutions for multilingual sites implemented with Jekyll, including notably The Programming Historian, in the Digital Humanities space.

[7] Any static site code committed to GitHub will be put in a separate repository from the data to allow the data to be easily deposited with Zenodo without including static site software or content.

We are also interested in leveraging minimal computing principles and techniques to provide a version of the static site as a standalone package, including project data and any image content with permissions that allow redistribution, to be shared and distributed via alternate means, such as USB drive or inexpensive hardware.[8]

Part VI: Grant Year Wrap-up

This section is completed after the grant year concludes. Describes the goals reached and outcomes of the project, and explains major changes and discrepancies with planned work. Continuing projects will include this in the charter for their subsequent project phase. Completed projects must provide to the CDH Project Coordinator within one month of the conclusion of the grant period.

Part VII: Agreement

Project pause policy

To ensure that all projects receive sufficient and equitable development time, time-sensitive queries and requests must be addressed within two weeks of initial (email) request. The PI is responsible for communication with development team. If PI is does not respond to a task that has been indicated as time-sensitive by the CDH team within 2 weeks of initial request, further project development will be paused until the project can be reasonably integrated back into the CDH development schedule.

Rights, Permissions, and Attribution

Site content and data will both be licensed under Creative Commons Attribution 4.0 International (CC-BY 4.0). If any of the datasets consist solely of factual data where authorship cannot be claimed, they will be licensed as CC0.

Any software developed by CDH that merits release will be licensed under Apache 2.0. The Technical Lead will fill out an invention disclosure form in order to gain approval from the Office of Technology Licensing in order to release the code. Before approval is granted, the code will be owned by the Trustees of Princeton University.

Web Presence and Project Publicity

The PI will create a project page on the CDH website, keeping it up-to-date and accurate during the grant year. The Project Manager will submit at least two blog posts per year, to be published on the CDH website. The schedule for publishing blog posts will be determined in consultation with CDH staff. In the case of a public site launch, or similar event, the PI and PM will work closely with CDH and Princeton University Library staff as needed on publicity, communication, and outreach. Currently, the PI has a web page for the project at https://wendybelcher.com/african-literature/pemmproject/

Credit

All team members will be credited on the project's website and CDH project page. The project's website will include a sponsorship statement (indicating the CDH as well as any other supporting groups, departments, agencies) and will include a citation statement indicating how the project assets should be cited. The site will also list and link to other projects that contributed data.

Appendix A: Relevant Resources and Projects

Data

Currently, the project data exists in seven separate, uncorrelated formats:

1. Macomber Handlist of Marian Miracles in the Ethiopian tradition with identifiers for each of 642 Canonical Stories, translations and analyses, and its keywords, and shelfmarks and folios for Story Instances in about 200 manuscripts).
2. Brown's list of incipits for Macomber's Canonical Stories: (typed up in fidäl and available in Google doc or sheet; checked by Hamburg BM for accuracy; used to catalog stories in manuscripts.)
3. Oxford CSM database for controlled vocabulary for themes (700+ terms, which need to be cleaned up and merged with the Macomber Handlist themes, which need to be updated,) (available in text file.)
4. Princeton RBSC finding aid for its ten Täʾammärä Maryam manuscripts (not yet cataloged with the Macomber Handlist identifiers,) (available in EAD XML). The project will also reference data and images from PUL digitized editions of relevant Ethiopic manuscripts held by PUL, managed by PUL and provided via IIIF Presentation and Image APIs .
5. Hamburg BM identifiers and cataloging data for about 75 Täʾammärä Maryam manuscripts (cataloged with the Macomber Handlist identifiers,) (available in TEI XML.)
6. Delamarter's list of 90 manuscripts across six centuries (1400s, 1500s, 1600s, 1700s, 1800s, 1900s) and five regions (north, south, central, east, west Ethiopia) (in Google Sheets, uncataloged) at EMIP / HMML
7. Archives of manuscripts from EMML, Bibliotechque Nationale, the British Library (none cataloged with Macomber handlist).

Archives and Databases

Lots of information has been collected about the Täʾammärä Maryam, but is spread across hundreds of obscure print catalogs, French and German articles, Italian books, and Gəʿəz monasteries. Each uses different numbering systems and tale titles, almost none have keywords, and many catalogs do not enumerate the tales in a manuscript, rather simply stating that something is a Täʾammärä Maryam and moving on. Thus, a crucial aspect of PEMM will be collating information using the following archives and databases.

Macomber Handlist

The most important PEMM resource is William Macomber's unpublished handlist of 642 Marian miracles, based on his study of 100+ manuscripts, including each story's title, translations, themes, and incipit (the unique first sentence of each story; used with medieval manuscripts as an identifier, as they have no titles). (This was quite an extraordinary accomplishment, before digital work in the humanities was common. It gives PEMM a huge leg up.)

- Macomber, William F. n.d. [1980s]. [Handlist of] The [Ethiopian] Miracles of Mary. Collegeville, MN: Hill Monastic Museum and Library, St. John's Abbey and University.

Lombardi Handlist

Chiara Lombardi disagrees with Macomber and thinks there are only 530 Canonical Marian Miracle Tales. Where available, and depending on time, we may include her identifiers in addition to Macomber's.

Archive Catalogs

An indispensable source for PEMM are extant catalogs of the Täʾammärä Maryam manuscripts. Macomber worked with about fifteen (see list of abbreviations). While most catalogs do not use Macomber's numbering, these catalogs often provide manuscript dates, provenance, and folios of each story. The most important catalogs are as follows:

1. Princeton University Rare Books and Special Collections. Belcher and Qesis Melaku catalogued the RBSC's ten Täʾammärä Maryam manuscripts, although they did not use Macomber's numbering for their stories. ll of ten of these manuscripts have been digitized and are available online.

2. Hill Museum and Manuscript Library (HMML), St. John's Abbey and University, Collegeville, MN. This is a digital library; that is, it archives microfilms and digital images of manuscripts that are elsewhere. A huge project of HMML in the 1960s and 1970s was the Ethiopian Microfilm Manuscript Library (EMML), which microfilmed 8,000 manuscripts in monasteries and churches in Ethiopia. William Macomber, author of the handlist, was one of the directors for this project, and his handlist used many EMML manuscripts. HMML also hosts other digital collections of Ethiopian manuscripts, such as the Ethiopian Manuscript Imaging Project (EMIP, by Stephen Delamarter). At least 22 Täʾammärä Maryam are currently available for free online, but HMML has over 535 Täʾammärä Maryam manuscripts awaiting transfer from microfilm to online digital form. In general, they only digitize microfilm if a client wants access to it and pays for it. Anyone can access the microfilm for free, but of course only on site, in Minnesota. Belcher is in correspondence with them about gaining digital access to more of their manuscripts. Developing a relationship with HMML may be useful to PEMM more broadly as they have digital copies of over 250,000 handwritten manuscripts in many languages from around the world.

   a. One can search parts of this collection at https://www.vhmml.org/readingRoom/

3. British Library. This archive has eighteen of the most splendid Tä'ammərä Maryam manuscripts in existence, most looted from the royal scriptorium. Manuscripts from the center of power, from the clerics of the royal house, will be most useful for establishing the canon of stories, as they would be the ones to make it. The regions will have their own interesting trends; and perhaps have their own standard collections. Both are interesting, but tracking what is canon is vital. This collection has been catalogued and recently digitized, but has not used Macomber's numbering.

Oxford Cantigas de Santa Maria (CSM) database

This database, created by Stephen Parkinson of the Oxford University Centre for the Study of the Cantigas de Santa Maria (manuscript) and PI for the Oxford CSM database launched in 2005, is the most authoritative on the world-wide collection of Marian miracle stories, but based largely on manuscript collections in Europe. The Oxford CSM database is "designed to give access to a vast range of information relevant to the processes of collection, composition and compilation" of the Marian miracle stories. It provides a fully searchable electronic version of Poncelet's list of Marian miracles (Index miraculorum B.V. Mariae quae saec. VI-XV latine conscripta sunt); brief descriptions of all European Marian miracles; and a controlled vocabulary list for Marian miracle story themes. The principal investigator is Stephen Parkinson, who is eager to share any data he has, in return for better information about the Ethiopian Marian miracles for his database. This database will help us to identify which stories originated outside of Ethiopia and to develop our own controlled vocabulary theme list.

Beta Maṣāḥəft (Hamburg BM) Database

This database project is hosted by the Hiob Ludolf Centre for Ethiopian Studies at the Universität Hamburg in Germany and with Prof. Alessandro Bausi as the principal investigator. It is a very long-term project (from 2016–2040) with large German government funding to create a "virtual research environment" for collecting and managing data about "the predominantly Christian manuscript tradition of the Ethiopian and Eritrean Highlands." They are also using Macomber's Handlist to catalog Marian miracle stories, although they are not currently tagging themes. They are also collating data on manuscripts (date, provenance, total folios), developing controlled vocabulary lists for people and places, and arriving at their own identifier for Canonical Stories (since Macomber missed some). They are open access and so we will be exchanging information as much as we can: the Hamburg BM giving PEMM its data in accessible forms and PEMM giving the Hamburg BM whatever data we create.

Miracula Mariae project

This comparative project, with principal investigators Ewa Balicka Witakowska and Anthony John Lappin, is also called "Miracles of the Virgin: Medieval Short Narratives Between Languages and Cultures." Begun in 2015, it will compare six to ten individual Marian miracle stories across many languages and regions as a way of studying transmission (in image and text) (in Arabic, Armenian, Croatian, Dutch, Ethiopic, French, Georgian, Greek, Hungarian,Latin, Middle English, Old Icelandic, Old Swedish, Polish Italian, Romanian, Slavonic, South Slavonic, Spanish, Syriac, and Ukranian). It will also compare sociological and psychological aspects of the stories in different cultural contexts. The eventual aim is a database, but there is no evidence of this having been initiated yet.

> "The overall tradition [of Marian miracle stories] offers a rich and vast body of literature, which, in its totality, has not been studied, and whose intertextuality offers a number of interesting problems and resources for further study. … The project will seek to analyse this complex set of interrelated traditions from three successive standpoints. The first will consider manuscript transmission and the physical distribution of miracle-tales; the second will compare collections and versions, in order to understand the cultural pressures that led to variation and re-elaboration of a set number of miracle-tales; and the third will look at the resulting texts from a narratological point of view, and aim to establish the limits and development of a story within a primarily manuscript culture. The first stage of the project will be a text-critical study of a selected number of miracles from the core collection, tracing their development across manuscripts, enabling sub-families and recensions to be established, and allowing the evolution of the collections to be precisely identified."

Step 2. Create keyword fields for PEMM Canonical Stories Dataset. When consultants who read Gəʿəz start cataloging stories, they will need access to the controlled vocabularies through dropdown menus for many keyword/theme fields. Although this particular type of cataloging task will not be done until FY21, we want to be aware of the types of fields we will need in the future. For now, the dataset will have fields for characters and settings; we can add others later. Below are the possible fields.

- Story themes
- Story main human character, including proper noun [e.g., Barbara, Simon]; profession [abbess, beggar, wife]; nation/town; status [noble, royal, commoner]; gender; age [infant, child, teenager, young adult, middle age adult, the old]; type [protagonist, antagonist, and/or generally bad, generally good, and/or, evil, sinning believer, good nonbeliever, saintly]; religon [Muslim, Jew, Christian, pagan]; type of conflict [against self, against society/group, against another, against nature]; problem/challenge/conflict [lame, blind, castration, deaf, poor, disbelief, disease, exile, false accusation, famine, childlessness, away from home, pregnant]; sin [man-eater, adultery, jealousy, arson, blasphemy, drunk, frivolity, heresy]; virtue [celibacy, chastity, belief in Mary, doing something for Mary, fasting]; threat [hell, ambush, discovery, death, drought, drowning, hanging]; activity [plowing, bathing, childbirth, dream, fall, travelling]; body part [ear, hands, penis]

- Story human character 2 [same as above]
- Story human character 3 [same as above]
- Story human character 4 [same as above]
- Story human character 5 [same as above]
- Story human character 6 [same as above]
- Story human character 7 [same as above]
- Story other characters (nonacting): wife, children, servants, friends
- Story human characters group(s): monks, children, Muslims, Cistercians, family, enemies, demons
- Story Divine Character 1 : Mary
- Story Divine Character 2: angels, demons, Christ, Holy spirit
- Story plot (maybe): travelling away from home, committing a sexual sin, healing
- Story emotions: hate, envy, terror
- Story animal(s): dog, dragon, birds, frog
- Story food(s): bread, grain, honey, beer
- Story four elements: water, earth, air, fire
- Story Mary mechanism: icon, vision, apparition, milk, hand, baptism, her belt, fragrance
- Story national setting/location: Ethiopia, Egypt, Israel, Syria, Cyprus, France/Europe/Farang
- Story province setting/location: Gojjam, Tigray
- Story town/village setting/location:
- Story landscape setting/location: mountain, sea, lake, farm, field, bridge, cave, garden, heaven
- Story building setting/location: monastery, church, home, castle, boat, furnace, gallows
- Story religious rite: baptism, prayer, burial, confession, Easter, eucharist
- Story texts: Gospel of John, Hail Mary
- Story religious objects: icon, Bible
- Story domestic objects: gourd, table, candle
- Story fighting objects: bow, arrows, sword
- Story other objects: alms, bell
- Story sources/intertextuality: seems to be in relation with foreign story
- Story origin: France, Germany, England or Europe

Step 3. Create PEMM Manuscripts Dataset. The Macomber handlist will be used as the basis for a Google Sheet titled PEMM Tä'ammərä Maryam Manuscripts Dataset. The sheet will have more data than Macomber. It will be important to include information on manuscript dating and region, where available. Below is its format (with invented data for one manuscript to give a sense for the appearance of the data):

- Manuscript title: Tä'ammərä Maryam
- PEMM Ms No.: PEMM 105

- Others' Ms No.: BN Ms. No. 23
- Manuscript original repository: Dabra Libanos, Ethiopia
- Manuscript provenance (lat., long.): 9.712177, 38.848075
- Manuscript current repository now: BN (Bibliotheque Nationale)
- Manuscript total no. of folios: 405
- Manuscript total no. of pages: 202
- Manuscript total no. of images: 202
- Manuscript total no. of stories: 103
- Manuscript century: 15.25
- Manuscript date range (if available): 1517-1543
- Manuscript illustrations no.: 28
- Manuscript illustrations size: 25 full page; 3 quarter page

Step 4. Create controlled vocabularies for PEMM Canonical Stories Dataset. We need to develop a controlled vocabulary of our own because (1) Macomber's is outdated (e.g., it uses "Moslem" instead of "Muslim"); (2) Hamburg BM's is designed for the Ethiopian environment, but not the Marian miracles specifically; (3) Oxford CSM's was not that well controlleds, so needs to be cleaned up; and (4) the Index's doesn't account for the Ethiopian environment specifically. Wendy and Evgeniia plan to combine all four controlled vocabulary sets and then comb through them for redundancies, to create cross references, and to identify hierarchies (e.g., we have "oxen" but also "animal" and the first is a type of the second). For instance, since catalogers may not think of the exact same word, we should have cross references (e.g., "angels" and "divine messengers [angels]"). With tightly controlled vocabulary lists, we can do better analysis of story themes.

Step 5. Mark beginning of incipts of each Story Instance in each manuscript. The research assistants will not know where the incipits are for each Story Instance. Those with an excellent level of Ge`ez will need to mark up manuscripts so that research assistants using the incipit tool and matching incipits don't have to read for the beginning of the incipit on the page.

Step 6. Catalog manuscripts. The biggest task will be increasing the number of Story Instances in the Google Sheet. With a bigger data set, we will be able to better answer the research questions. The research assistants will use the Incipit tool to catalog manuscripts first, giving each Story Instance a Canonical Story identifier number and then marking their degree of certainty that the incipits match. If they are not confident, someone who reads Ge`ez will go after them, checking.

Alternate Tasks

Currently out of scope is the following, but it might come into scope if we run into problems with students doing cataloging.

- Write precises of Canonical Stories. A huge and difficult task will be writing short summaries of the 700+ indigenous Canonical Stories. Only those with an excellent understanding of Amharic, French, or Ge`ez will be able to do this work. Maybe 100 can be done from stories available in English translation. Or, perhaps, if the keywords are good enough, no precis is needed?

- Track word length of Instantiation Stories. This is a way of getting at the possibility of different recensions.
- Tag Canonical Stories with keywords. Another difficult task will be using the controlled vocabulary list to better tag Canonical Stories. Macombere did tag 642 of them with keywords, but many remain and his list can be improved. Only those with a good level of Ge`ez and English will be able to do this work.
- Identify new Canonical Stories. We need to give new identifier numbers, titles, themes, and incipits for Canonical Stories not in Macomber. We will use Hamburg BM identifiers where possible, but may need to do this a bit ourselves.
- Translate into Amharic. Translate titles, keywords, and website into Amharic.
- Design and write static website. This can be done in the last year.
- Compare Cannibal of Qemer transcripts. Once Steve, Jeremy, Jonah, and Ashlee complete typing up all 90 versions of the Cannibal of Qemer tale, we will do computational analysis.

The world of angles occupies heavenly hosts whom are the seven archangels Saint Michael, Saint Gabriel, Saint Raphael, Saint Suriel, Saint Zedekiel, Saint Serathiel and Saint Ananiel. They are the seven spirits of God. (Revelation 4:5) The Holy Scriptures also mentions the Seraphim with their six wings who filled the house with smoke (Isaac 6:2) and the cherubim that provide the throne for the Lord. (Psalm 99:1) The angels represent the lowest category of the celestial hierarchy. They are also closest to mankind.

Angels were created on the Sunday (Jubilee 2:6-8). As in scripted in the Holy Bible, Angels are made from fire and wind (3 Maccabees 2:10-11). They do not reproduce, but remain as they were originally created. They are by powerful by nature and free from any kind of sickness. They do not die and unlimited in number.

After God created the angels, He divided into orders and chieftainship. They were divided in one hundred orders and into ten heavenly places. According to Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahedo church the seven heavens are:

1. Tsiriḫa Ariyam

It is the last level within the seven heavens but when counted upper to bottom it takes the first place. This heaven represents Holy Mother Saint Mary as she is the home and country of God. Presets praise her in the midnight praise "Seatate"

2. Menibere Menigisit

It is the heaven where God reveals Himself, the Holy place for His Glory of Throne, angels bow and gratify in before Him and where the soul of dead people is judged. (Isaiah 6:1, Ezekiel 1:22-27, Revelation 4:2)

3. Semayi Widud

The four living creatures live in this heaven each having six wings, were full of eyes around and within stand on the four corners of carrying God's throne. Around the throne are twenty-four thrones, and on the thrones are twenty-four elders sitting, clothed in white robes; and they had crowns of gold on their heads. (Ezekiel 1:4-75, Revelation 4:4)

4. Eyerusalem Semayait

It is the heaven where at first Satan was living and also the inheritance of righteous. (Galatia 4:26. Hebrew 12:22, John 14:2) He was living with honor before he deceived God and lied saying he is the creator.

5. Iyor

God placed the hundred tribes of angels within the thiree city. Iyor is the one of City of Angels and is divided within four. There are forty tribes and four chief angels in this heaven. The first tribe is called "Agazezete" and their chief was Satan but replaced by Saint Michael. He use to ascended the prayer of all the angels before his deception. The second tribe is known as "Cherubim" who carry the throne of Holy Trinity. Their chiefs are Face of human and Face of Lion. On the third level live Surafel and their chief are Face of cow and face of eagle. Within the fourth part lives "Haylat" carrying sword of fire who stand before Holy Trinity. Their Chief is Saint Michael. These angles support and motivate whose Christians who are exhausted in Christian life.

6. Ramah

This City of Angels is divided into thirty tribes and three chiefs. The first tribe is known as “Arebeb” who cover the throne of Holy Trinity with their wings. Their chief is Saint Gabriel. In the second level of Ramah, there tribes called “Menaberet” which are very close to God. They are armor of Holy Trinity standing in His presence carrying their lightening shields and fire spears. Their Chief is Saint Raphael. The third ones are known as “Seletanat” who have the authority of protecting all creatures and are those who announce judgment day. Their chief is Saint Surreal.

7. Erer

This City of Angels is divided into thirty tribes of angels and three chiefs. The first are called “Mekwanent.” They are the trinity’s fire archer and protector of human kind. Just as they saved Lot, they protect other humans. On judgment day, they collect skeleton and present it before God on resection of humans. Their chief is Selaphiel. The second ones are called “Likanat” whom are the fire horses of Holy Trinity. These are the twenty-four priests of heaven and their chief is Salathiel. Those who live on the third level of Erer are called “Angels” and they protect all creatures. Their chief is Ananel.

Angels are close aides of God and are always by His throne praising Him. (Revelation 4:8-11). They serve Him and human beings by Ministering between man and God where they ascend and descend within the world of heaven and earth. (John 1:52; Hebrew 1:14). They are very fast in their service. (Psalm 103:4; Hebrew 1:6)

Angels are ordered to dependably save guard every creature (Mathew 18:10; Daniel. 4:13). Each person has his or her own two guardian angles, one for the day and the other for the night. They are sent to bring support and help in times of suffering and hardship (Acts 12:7-11; Psalm 89:7)

Angels bring forth human’s prayers, alms and offerings to God. This meaning the service of their intercession. They intercession and aiding duty of angels in bringing to God the prayers and offerings of men is a favor given to them. Written in Holy Bible, they present before God the prayers, offerings and alms of men and help them get rewarded. It is a grace given to them by God that they are the messengers who proclaim happiness, offer help and serve as the harbingers of all good tidings. (Genesis 48:16; Daniel. 10:10-12; Luke 1:13; 28-30; Jude 9)

The intercession of Saint Angels is widely written in the Scriptures as can be understood from citations in the following:- (Enoch 10:7; Zacharias. 1:12; Exodus 23:20-23; Psalm 33:7) That Angels take delight in the act of those who repent is written in Luke 15:10. This indicates the love and concern they have for humans and their ministering role. With this, they bestow God's mercy and bounty to men (Daniel. 9:20-22; Luke 1, 13; Acts 10:3-5). They are also sent for exacting mercy or wrath (Roman 9:22). They are also the ones who bring humans soul after death before God for judgment, (Luke. 16:22; Sutuel Ezra. 6:6-20) They are sent to separate the sinners from the righteous when the world comes to an end (Matthew 24:31; Revelation 7, 1-4)

Holy Orthodox Incarnation Church therefore venerates Archangels and Angels. Churches are dedicated in their honor, having their services and miracles written. They are offered homage of veneration of grace. (Daniel 8:15-18; Genesis. 22:31; Numbers 22, 31; Jos. 5:13-15) The day of their appointment, of their miracles and acceptance vow of God is commemorated as a monthly and annual feast.

May the intercession of Angels be with us, Amen!

FOREWORD

It is said by the Ethiopian Church authorities that they received their liturgy of fourteen Anaphoras from the Church of Egypt. The Church of Egypt confirms this but has, unfortunately, lost most of the fourteen. At present time it has three of them only, namely those of St. Cyril, St. Gregory, and St. Basil. That of St. Basil is identical with the Ethiopian Church Anaphora, but the other two are entirely different from the Ethiopian.

This made me anxious to translate the Ethiopian Anaphoras and take them back to my Church of Egypt. With the help of my students I had already translated them into Arabic when H.E. Blatta Marsie Hazen, hearing of this translation, asked that an English version might be made. Accordingly, the English version was prepared; and, as soon as it was completed, a manuscript copy was graciously accepted by His Imperial Majesty Haile Selassie I, Emperor of Ethiopia, who generously ordered that an edition of the book should be published at his own expense; and, in effect, it was immediately published.

On my return to Egypt, I thought of publishing the Arabic Version, but the Ethiopian Churchmen asked me to publish the English and Arabic versions together in one volume. In response to this request I offer this present book, hoping that it will be of real usefulness to those who cannot read the Liturgy either in the original Ge'ez (Ethiopic) or in the Amharic translation..

INTRODUCTION BY ARCHBISHOP YESEHAQ

This introduction is an extract of my Book "THE STRUCTURE AND PRACTICE OF THE ETHIOPIAN CHURCH LITURGY." The Ethiopian Church through the ages has regarded the Eucharistic Liturgy as the supreme act of communal worship. Through it, devout believers hold intimate communion with their Living Lord, through the consecrated elements called "qurban." This is not, however, the manna which Israel ate in the wilderness, but the Holy Communion, the Lord's Table, the Eucharist, the Flesh and Blood of Christ, who said, "Amen. Amen. I say unto you. Moses gave you not that bread from heaven but my Father gives you the true bread from Heaven." (John 6:32) 'This is the bread which came down from heaven; not as your fathers did eat manna and are dead: he that eats of this bread shall live forever " (John 6 : 58)

The origin and structure of the Ethiopian Orthodox Church seems shrouded in mystery. Our church owes much to churches which we regard as our sister churches, and to its pre-Christian Hebrew heritage, as well. Its whole fabric is interwoven with the culture and tradition of Africa in general, as well as its own specific national identity. The extent of its indebtedness to these sources is still a subject of research and study. Mercer, in his early Twentieth Century book "The Ethiopic Liturgy", said that the Ethiopian Church is a Christian national Church of Africa about whose origin the world knows little, and about whose development, teaching and forms of worship even less is known.(1) Nevertheless, its origin was obviously compounded of two traditions: Hebrew and Eastern Christianity. The First being introduced as a result of the visit of Queen Makeda (also known as Queen of Sheba) to King Solomon of Jerusalem. The latter was established by Bishop Frumentius. He first celebrated the sacraments in our country. Nine Syrian Monks, about a century later, completed translations of Church literature from Hebrew, Greek and Syriac into the Ethiopian language.

Ancient Hebrew tradition, interpretations of that tradition which Christ gave to His disciples, and what they delivered to their successors are still at the heart of the Church's life. Out of respect for this heritage, its inheritors are reluctant to accept novelties, and are wary of any who suggest changes. That is why less change has taken place in the Ethiopian Liturgy than in any other Christian tradition, East or West.

ORIGIN AND HISTORY

(1). The Hebraic Influence

Like other Oriental Orthodox Christian Churches, the Ethiopian Church inherited Hebraic forms of worship as well as Semitic language roots. But the Hebrew influence is more obvious in Ethiopian rites than in any others. This, of course, started with Queen Makeda's visit to Palestine, about 1,000 B.C. During that visit, her union with King Solomon produced a son, born while she journeyed back to Ethiopia. Upon returning there, she banned worship of the sun god, as well as all other types besides the worship of the One True God of King Solomon. Her visit is recorded in the Bible (1 Kings 10:1-13). More details are available from the book of Kebra Nagast (The Glory of Kings).(2) Though the Kebra Nagast is published, materials it contains are also a vital part of Ethiopians' oral heritage. It relates that in later years, when Makeda's son, Menelik I, visited his father King Solomon, he brought back the Ark of the Covenant accompanied by Azarias, son of Zadok the High Priest, and the first-born of all the House of Israel. Although this seems incredible to those who are not familiar with the fact that Chapter Eleven of the Bible's First Book of Kings indicates that, in the last years of his life, King Solomon "did not keep what the Lord had commanded." The Bete Israel (Falasha Jews) of Ethiopia, as well as natives of other East African nations, trace their genetic origins from sons of Israel, probably some of the people who accompanied Menelik to Aksum, taking with them the Ark. The Ark now rests at St. Mary of Tsion Church in the city of Aksum, birthplace of the country's civilization and center for Christian worship. This is perhaps the most remarkable feature of the Hebrew tradition in Ethiopia. To this day every Ethiopian Church has an Ark (Tabot) on the altar which is the focal point of worship.

Ullendorff suggests that "Antiphonal singing as part of the worship was an established form of the Hebrew Liturgy since the earliest times and was taken over by the Christian Churches . . . It is unlikely, that the Hebraic forms were anywhere more faithfully preserved than in the Ethiopian service with its emphasis on chant and antiphony."(3) The offices of the Debteras are comparable to those of the Levites, particularly in their role as cantors and choristers. Most of their duty is to chant Psalms and hymns. As described in 2 Samuel 6: 5, David and all the house of Israel played before the Lord on harps and lyres, drums and sistrums, dancing with the high sound of the trumpet. Such dynamic worship is alive in Ethiopia today. All Ethiopian Christian rituals resonate with Old Testament traditions. Many popular pieties are also laced with Hebrew customs. For instances: the men do not enter a church the day after they have had intercourse with their wives; nor do the women come to church service after childbirth, till the days of purification are over, and that is when her child is baptized. A person who is, for certain reasons, unclean cannot enter the Church until he is purified. The washing of hands before and after meals and not eating the meat of animals that are prohibited in Leviticus Chapter Eleven are observed by modern Ethiopians as they were by ancient Hebrews. However, such tenacious observance of Old Testament laws is not a matter of blind allegiance to tradition. These practices are, rather, based on the Ethiopian understanding of Evangelical principles. As written in the Gospels, these are direct quotes from Jesus Christ : Matthew 5 : 17 - 18, "Think not that I am come to destroy, but to fulfil. . . one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law. . ." John 14 : 15 - 15 : 12, " If ye love me, keep my commandments . . . He that hath my commandments and keeps them . . . If ye keep . . . ye shall abide . . .even as I have kept . . . and abide in his love. . . love one another, as I have loved you."

Introduction of the Eucharist

One Ethiopian tradition, bolstered by Scriptural evidence, asserts that Christianity was introduced by a Eunuch who was the Finance Minister of Queen Candace at the beginning of the first century (34 A. D.) This Eunuch was baptized by St. Philip the Apostle. (Acts 8:26-39). Upon his return to Ethiopia, he preached the Gospel around the palace in Aksum; but the sacraments were not performed until the arrival of Frumentius, the first Bishop of Ethiopia.

The Book of the Contending of St. Tekle Haimanot[1] tells us that Frumentius (Sidrakos) and Adesius came from Jerusalem to Ethiopia toward the beginning of the fourth century A. D. They were received by the High Priest Anbarom as youths. They grew up in his home, learning the life and customs of the country. One day Frumentius expressed how he himself was impressed by the devotion of the people towards their God. He then said to Anbarom. "My Lord, I admire the life and culture of the people, but you Ethiopians practice neither baptism nor receive communion." Anbarom replied. "Our Fathers the Levites brought us circumcision and the Finance Minister of Queen Candace (eunuch) brought us the faith of Christ, yet we do not have an Apostle who can administer the rites of Baptism and the Eucharist, So would you please go to Alexandria." This he did. Once there, Patriarch Athanasius consecrated him Bishop, and sent him back to Ethiopia. (A. D. 329-356) He was called Abba Selama (Father of Peace). He then administered the sacraments to the people, starting with the High Priest. This leader of the Ethiopian Judaic tradition was the first to be baptized and ordained priest according to the Christian rites. Since then there is evidence that the practice of the Christian sacraments spread throughout most of the country.

There are no clear details on the liturgy which Frumentius had brought with him from Egypt. The Ethiopian Synaxarium states that he translated the Old and New Testaments and other texts into Geez. The same source also indicates that he was unable to complete the work of translation. Syrian monks (the Nine Saints) arrived at Aksum in the 5th century. They are generally credited for completing the work of translation from source languages. They spread the Gospel, set up the monastic order, and started schools. There is no precise information concerning who did which parts of the overall task of devising a culture that was so thoroughly penetrated by a liturgical awareness of God's presence in their midst. As with Ethiopia's iconographic legacy, pioneer contributors were more concerned about the authentic signs of the Holy Spirit's work, rather than about their own signatures.

The nine Monks came from regions ranging between Constantinople and Syria. It is said that they arrived in Ethiopia soon after the Christological controversy at the Council of Chalcedon. (A. D. 451). By the close of their window of ministry, a famous priest, St. Yared, born A. D. 505, in Aksum, started composing indiginous ecclesiasical chant. Yared began by collaborating with the Nine Monks, especially Abba Pentilewon, who remained in Aksum. Yared acquired much information from Abba Pentilewon and Abba Aregawi. In addition, Yared visited Constantinople (second Rome) twice.[2] Yared's compositions established the bench mark for all Ethiopian Church chants. His works portray Old and New Testament themes yielding prophetic contours of the history of salvation. The music, frequently melismatic, prayerfully carries every theme including creation, Jesus Christ's incarnation, and Baptism, Crucifixion, Death, Resurrection, Ascension and His Second Coming. Naturally this music provides the ideal expression of the Ethiopian people's national consciousness and the land they call home.

It is believed that some of the Old Testament canticles had been prayerfully sung by devoted Ethiopian churchmen, even before the coming of Jesus Christ. Obviously, Ethiopian music existed in the Old Testament era. Every surviving culture has musical roots that old, while not preserving specifics. Music was an internationally celebrated treasure of the Cushite Empire. Yet, all of the Church music is attributed to St. Yared of Aksum, since he articulated the principles for Ethiopia's unique synthesis of Christian chant. Thanks to his pioneering efforts, a vehicle was prepared that delivered a voluminous package of ancient musical heritage that has presently arrived intact, still glorifying God.

During the reign of Emperor Gabre Maskal (A. D. 550), Yared compiled the famous Megaba Degguwa (this means the hymn of sorrow which includes three main modes:

a) Geez - the first stage of song
b) Uzil - the second stage to be sung together with the first
c) Araral - a sorrowful song and plaintive.

(2) St. Yared's History, written in Amharic and Geez Published at Tensae Zegoubae. Addis Ababa, no date (p.46)

Consider the discrepancy between what Ethiopians know about their own history and what foreign commentators say concerning origins of the chant and the notational system by which it was preserved. Michael Powne, a contemporary English writer, suggests that "Yared only composed the original chants and that these were handed down orally until the middle of the sixteenth century, when two Ethiopian Debteras introduced the notation"[1] This contradicts what Ethiopians have always believed. They contend that the chant, the notation and the texts are all the work of St. Yared, produced with divine inspiration. In either case, nothing less than a miraculous legacy could have preserved so well a voluminous body of religious poetry and music. How much of it is due to St. Yared's labours in the sixth century, or to the intervention of two Debteras a thousand year later, or to the dedication of intervening generations of worshipers may be rehashed until the Lord returns in glory to set all the records straight. Yet the indisputable fact is that, to this day, works of divine inspiration are heard throughout the land of Ethiopia and its recent diaspora. The product of the disputed process bears demonstrable similarities to what twentieth century Judaic scholars documented as a pristine Hebrew chant tradition among Yemenite Jews. They validated their findings by comparison with melodic motifs and tone patterns previously established as characteristic of ancient Byzantine Christian and Gregorian chants.[2] Another part of this enigma is the song poems attributed to St. Yared. Those are usually overlooked by musicologists. The theology in works attributed to St. Yared quite clearly predates influences of both the Renaissance and Scholasticism. It reflects an approach to life and the authentic Christian canon of Scripture that modern scholars would classify as a philosophy. This "philosophy" _ it is really rather a theology_ began to wane in Western Europe about the sixth century. It, certainly, had been supplanted there, by the thirteenth century, when it started to lose its luster even at Constantinople. St. Yared's compositions are characteristic of that Patristic school of Christian world view and life style based on divine revelations through the ages, as the proper focal point for all human aspirations. Some recognizable historic pillars of that school have already been mentioned in connection to St. Yared. Shortly, another Patristic author will be recalled, when we examine sources of the Ethiopian treasure of Anaphoras.

Until the nineteenth century the Liturgy was mainly in manuscript form, hand-printed on leather parchment. Distribution was no wider than the needs of individual clergymen who wrote or commissioned copies to be made for their use in parishes. Sometimes it was difficult to obtain a book for church service. This was due to the technical difficulties of printing Amharic. However, by A.D. 1950, the fourteen Anaphoras together with the preparatory service were published (in both Geez and Amharic) by the order of H.I.M. Haile Selassie I. That edition was revised by Blatta Marsie Hazen. The former Patriarchs, His Holiness Abuna Basilios and His Holiness Abuna Theophilus, played significant roles in this important work. In addition to the work of Rev. Marcos Daoud, most of the Anaphoras had been translated from Ethiopic into English, German and Latin by Mercer, Harden.

Rather than trying to determine how all of this might be studied by reducing it to fit stock Humanist methodologies, some contemporaries are attempting to change their personal life styles to celebrate, as much as possible, this ancient Christian tradition.

(3) Origins of the Anaphoras

The Ethiopian Church has fourteen Anaphoras for the Divine Service, namely:

1. The Anaphora of the Apostles
2. The Anaphora of the Lord
3. The Anaphora of John, Son of Thunder
4. The Anaphora of St. Mary
5. The Anaphora of St. Athanasius
6. The Anaphora of St. Basil
7. The Anaphora of St. Gregory I (Nyssa)
8. The Anaphora of the Three Hundred
9. The Anaphora of St. Epiphanius
10. The Anaphora of St. John Chrysostom
11. The Anaphora of St. Cyril
12. The Anaphora of St. Jacob of Serough
13. The Anaphora of St. Dioscorus
14. The Anaphora of St. Gregory II (The Wonder-worker)

1. Michael Powne, Ethiopian Music, Oxford University Press London. 1968 (p. 85)

2. HEBREW MUSIC, by Eric Werner, German and English, Arno Volk Verlag Hans Gerig Kg, Koln, 1961 (pp. 8 - 16)

According to Ethiopian traditions the origins of the Anaphoras are listed as follows: The core of the Anaphora of the Apostles was written by the Apostles themselves, after the ascension of Christ. Later, Church Fathers made additions to compliment it with the Anaphora of the Lord. Both reflect teachings of Lord Himself, like the body of what had previously been oral tradition alluded to in Acts 1:3. The Anaphora of the Three Hundred was written by the 318 Bishops, members of the first ecumenical council held in 325 A.D. at Nicaea.

The Anaphora of John the Son of Thunder was written by John the Evangelist, the Anaphora of St. Mary was composed by Abba Heryacos, Bishop of the province of Behnesa in Upper Egypt. It was said that he composed this Anaphora through inspiration of the Holy Spirit, and the Virgin Mary directed him to hand it over to Yared of Axsum who later put it together with the other thirteen Anaphoras.

The rest of the Anaphoras are not so well documented. They are simply known as: The Anaphora of St. Basil, of St. Gregory I, of St. Epiphanius, of St. John Chrysostom, of St. Cyril of Alexandria, of St. Jacob Bishop of Serough, of St. Dioscorus, and of St. Gregory II. Since each of these Fathers is known as an author of metrical homilies, expositions, and hymns, it is reasonable to assume that each wrote the respective Anaphora attributed to him. According to another study, St. Basil the Great's liturgy is a composite or redaction of elements that recognizable as adaptations of the Anaphoras of the Apostles, the Three Hundred, and St. Athanasius.

(4) The Significance of the Qedasi

In case our use of change words, has left the reader wondering: qedasi, Anaphora, Eucharistic Liturgy, Communion all refer to the same basic worship service. This introduction is about that center of Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahido Church life, and all who try to seriously live it. People of other faiths call comparable worship services "Mass," "Divine Liturgy," "The Lord's Supper." But qedasi has layers of significance that are, in certain respects, unique. A literal translation of the word "qedasi" is " hallowing" or "sanctifying," as in "ye shall be holy : for I AM holy." (Lev. 11 : 44) ". . . I am the Lord Who sanctifies you." (Lev. 22 : 32) ". . . hallowed be Thy name, . . ." (Mt. 6: 9 & Lk. 11 : 2) ". . . a holy nation. His own special people . . ." (1Peter 2 : 9) Some examples in the qedasi text may be found at: II : 14, 32, 38, 44; III : 1, 17, 48. If one does not consider these layers of the qedasi, one is apt to miss what an Orthodox Tewahido Christian is talking about when he or she talks about God, the Holy Trinity, the Father, Jesus Christ, the Son, the Holy Spirit, grace, holiness, righteousness, justification, salvation, and dozens of other topics. The qedasi explains in words, music, and action the interpenetration of these elements, and dramatically presents them to participants. The qedasi is not entertainment, but one just hears it, only if he is blind; one just sees it, only if he is deaf; one just sits there in a chair or pew, only if he is spiritually paralysed; one just reads about it if he is spiritually tepid. Proper participation requires proper preparation. It is, after all, a divine encounter, like those given to Abraham, Jacob, or Moses. It takes forethought, it takes honest personal prayer, and that includes a change of heart_ developing a mind set that says, "What do I have to offer? What am I willing to give: to make this encounter grow?"__ rather than, "What may I expect to get from it?"

The qedasi celebrates the whole of God's good creation, also, serving as an inquiry into what went wrong in Eden. It is a study in repentance, and how to fix what is still broken in our lives. It is a school of blessings and theology. As the ultimate covenantal encounter, it reviews the history of salvation and all revelation. Jesus Christ told us that we must do this if we would have His life in us. We take Him at His word, understanding this as the sources of grace that flowed from His precious side as He was sacrificed on the cross, and as He victoriously proclaimed His peace and the remission of sins to His disciples, hiding behind closed doors, after His resurrection. Celebrating qedasi anticipates the passing of this world, as God's Kingdom is already breaking through, into our cosmos. The text, the music, the rhythm, the movement beckon us to the wedding feast of the Lamb of God in His coming Kingdom, unto the ages of ages.

(5) Structure and Practice

The structure and practice of the present qedasi is virtually the same as in the fourth, and succeeding centuries. With the exception of translations from Geez, the ancient Liturgical language to Amharic, the modern Ethiopian language; and those into Arabic and English, for the use of non-Amharic speaking faithful, there has been no major change or reform in the Ethiopic Liturgy.

There are two distinct orders of liturgical operatives in the services of the Tewahido Church. There are (a) ordained ministers: the Bishops, Priests and Deacons who officiate at the qedasi and (b) the Debteras whose duties entail "performing" liturgical hymns before and after the qedasi. At "home" the work of the Debteras is done at every divine service in almost every church, except monasteries where the order of the monks is a silent discipline, or outside the country where few are prepared to volunteer for this service. Happily, in the diaspora, many pious lay men and women are qualifying by intensive study as liturgical participants.

The qedasi may be divided into two principle parts, explained below by introduction heading (#)'s as indicated :
(a) Preparatory Service or Pre-Anaphora (serate qedasi) = (6) see this subheading in the next paragraph
(b) The Anaphora (qedasi) = (7) + (8) see these subheadings on the next two pages of this introduction

(6) The Preparatory Service

The text of the Preparatory Service is divided into "Chapters." This division is a real aid for anyone who is unfamiliar with what seems so natural to those who have grown up with it. "CHAPTER I (one)" deals with prayer over the Church's vessels. These are the paten, the chalice, the crossspoon, and the masob or platter on which the bread is brought to the temple. Chapter I prayers are for the consecration of new vessels. They are said only on the day when new vessels are used for the first time. The prayers in this part should remind each us of our own personal consecration at Baptism. "CHAPTER II" includes prayers (paragraphs #37 - #51) to be said over the same vessels consecrated in Chapter I. These prayers are part of every qedasi. Reading these prayers offers one insight into how to prayerfully prepare to receive the body and blood of Jesus Christ. CHAPTER II also features admonitions for everyone to participate fully, not allowing one's attention to wander. This second section includes reading of selected whole Psalms, verses, and prayers asking God's blessing on every aspect of the service, plus a list of pertinent rules from the Church's official rule book, the "Canon." This service should convince us to expect our empowerment as God's people, to do God's will from what it is that we are doing together here and now. Not only is God present in our midst, but the whole Kingdom of God is at hand, breaking through into our dimensions of time and space. In other words, these efforts are not just about mutual edification: we celebrate God's miraculous intervention in history, saving us here and now.

As the Priest enters the Church he shall, before all else, say the prayer of penitence and Psalms: 24, 60, 101, 102, 112, 129, and 130 (in Septuagint versions - in Masoretics, like KJV, RSV, NIV: add 1 to each Psalm #). This is followed by the prayers of St. Gregory and St. Basil. Next, he shall say St. John Chrysostom's prayer.

Except the prayer of penitence, the above prayers are said silently by the Priest. To get the gist of what is happening at this point_ probably before you arrive_ read the appointed Psalms and the full text of these prayers: Chapter II, paragraphs 12 through 36. Whereas the Coptic Church, and others, deem one priest and one deacon sufficient, in the Ethiopian Church, there should be at least two priests and three deacons to celebrate the Eucharist. In 1959 permission was given for one priest and one deacon to perform the Divine Liturgy in areas where not enough clergymen are available. This of course, was not readily received by people who are reluctant to accept, and suspicious of changes.

If the Archbishop or Bishop is present, the priests and deacons shall take their vestments to him to be blessed, then they shall vest. But if neither is present the Priest celebrant shall himself say the blessing before they vest. At the time of the service there must be one candle on each side of the altar. Instead of a third candle a sanctuary lamp is used. These two candles signify the honor and majesty of the bread and wine.

CHAPTER III of the qedasi's Preparatory Service opens with the Priest celebrant washing his hands. Rather than drying them, he selects and passes his wet hands over one loaf, then says the prayer of thanksgiving. The Priest shall make the sign of the cross with his hands over both the host and the wine three times saying, "Blessed be the Lord, Almighty Father, our God; . . . (paragraph III : 20) During the service, there is no passing of an offering plate or money basket, but paragraphs III : 41 - 44 should remind us of the fact that our responsible donations of cash and volunteer labour to the church, along with the alms we give secretly to those in need, are very much a part of what we, as the People of God, represented by the priests, here offer to Him in the form of bread and wine.

The Priest celebrant asks God that the Holy Spirit may descend upon the elements to change them into the real body and blood of our Lord Jesus Christ. He makes the sign of the cross three times over each element (over the bread and over the Chalice). Then the absolution of the Son is read by a Bishop, if he is present, if not it is done by the assistant Priest followed by the Litany. Throughout the qedasi, there are several series of exchanges between Deacons Priests (Deacon's bidding prayers), and the congregation, such as :
Deacon : Arise for prayer
People : Lord have mercy upon us.

These announcements by the Deacon are mental wake up calls: reminders of St. John the Baptizer, forerunner of the Lamb of God, who prophesied : "Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight" (Mt. 3 : 3; Mk. 1 : 3); "the crooked shall be made straight" (Lk. 3 : 5); "Make straight the way of the Lord" (Jn. 1 : 23). They are powerful statements, fulfilling Isaiah's prophecy: (40 : 3). Both the words "Arise (straighten up / pay attention / stand up) for prayer," and salutations by the Priest are repeated often in the service. After the Litany, the prayer of the incense follows. Before being used, the incense and the censer are blessed by the Patriarch, Archbishop, or Bishop if present, otherwise the Priest blesses them remembering the current year and reckoning of day and night. He shall go around the ark three times with a lighted candle carried in front of him, while another Deacon joins the procession, carrying the Epistles of St. Paul. The prayer of incense is followed by five scripture readings designated for the occasion. Two are from the Epistles, one from the Acts of the Apostles, one from Psalms, and one from the Holy Gospels. The Holy Gospel is read by a bishop, if present : if not, it is done by the Priest celebrant. Scriptural readings are selected according to a liturgical calendar (getsawe = plan of instruction).

Following the Gospel, a Deacon opens "CHAPTER IV" by dismissing the catechumens. Some think this an anachronism, since we no longer suppose that some nonmember might turn us over to the pagan authorities, charging us with "atheism" for what we are about to do. It is retained to remind us of the witness of those who bore Christ's Cross before us, and that we are about to enter with them and the angels, in spirit and truth, into the heart of the qedasi. We pray for our faithful brothers and sisters throughout the world, including the Patriarch, who remembers the leaders of the other Churches of God. We remember the Archbishop, bishops, priests, deacons, this congregation, all congregations, including those who may come after us. Next, the Creed is recited by all. The Anaphora to be celebrated in a particular qedasi determines whether the Nicaean or Apostles' Creed is recited. This "Apostles' Creed" is according to the tradition of the Church at Jerusalem: not to be confused with another of the same name attributed to the Latin baptismal rite. As the Creed concludes, a deacon brings water to wash the principal celebrant's hands. After the hand washing, the kiss of peace is exchanged. This is accomplished by everyone, starting with an exchange between the priests, the deacons, and finally everyone present acknowledging each other with a simple bow in every direction where fellow participants are visible.

The washing of the hands of the Priest celebrant may be likened to Pontius Pilate, who washed his hands to indicate his innocence in the condemnation of our Lord Jesus Christ. The Priest declares that he is innocent of the fate of any who would dare take communion without proper preparation. (1Cor. 11:26-33)

(7) The Anaphora

Different Anaphoras are used on different occasions. The Priest celebrant picks one proper to the commemoration of the day. For instance, the Anaphora of the Apostles is celebrated on the memorial day of any Apostle, and the Anaphora of St. Dioscorus is celebrated on the Nativity of Christ, Epiphany, Fasika, Ascension Day, Pentecost Day, and on the Feast of the Holy Trinity. The structure of every Anaphora may be generalized as follows:

a) Eucharistic Thanksgiving (with responses by the congregation)
b) Intercession
c) Thrice Holy Angelic Praise
d) Institution & epiklesis
e) Prayer of Fraction
f) The Lord's Prayer
g) Inclination
h) Prayer of the Angels
i) Prayer of Penitence
j) Invitation to Communion
k) Prayer "Pilot of the Soul"
l) Thanksgiving and final Benediction

Each Anaphora begins with a prayer of thanksgiving. Civil rulers are mentioned here: by name, if they are Christians.

This thanksgiving is followed by a prayer of intercession for the living and for the dead, as well as for the Apostolic Church. Prayers of intercession are said before and after the direct quotes from Christ. Next, the Inclination, which begins with a direction given by the Deacon, "You that are sitting stand up. Bow down your head, look to the east, let us give heed, and answer ye." To this last command the people respond :"Holy, holy, holy, perfect Lord of hosts, heaven and earth are full of the holiness of Thy glory." (Isaiah 6:3) This is followed by the prayer of the Fraction "Grant us to be united through Thy Holy Spirit . . . that we may live in Thee forever," which is, in turn, followed by the Lord's Prayer and by the Prayer of the Angels, said by all of them who intend to receive communion, three times in succession.
After this the invocation comes once again :"Worship the Lord with fear" to which the people answer, "Before Thee Lord we worship and Thee do we glorify." This concludes with the Prayer of Penitence (including intercession for the living and the dead).

(8) Invitation to Communion

This section begins with a series of declarations by the Priest celebrant. He proclaims that what had been bread has been consecrated to become the body of Christ and, likewise, the wine is now the blood of Christ.

Before receiving communion, all communicants shall say:

"And when I have received Thy Holy Mystery, let it not be unto me for judgement nor for condemnation, but have compassion upon me and have mercy upon me: and through it grant me remission of my sin and life for my soul."

The traditional order of reception of Holy Communion is first of all the Patriarch receives, then the Archbishops, Bishops, then the Priests and Deacons. After this the men shall receive, then the women; but they who have just been baptized (usually infants) receive before the other faithful.

While offering the Holy body, the Priest says, for instance, at the time of the Anaphora of the Lord: 'The Body and Blood of our Lord Jesus Christ for the sanctification of body, soul and spirit."

After receiving communion all communicants shall say:

"I pray and beseech Thee, O my Lord, that this Thy body and Thy blood which I have . . . so that I may please Thee all the days of my life and glorify Thee without ceasing."

After the faithful have received communion, a prayer of thanksgiving is begun by the Deacon who says, "Let us give thanks unto the Lord . . " To this the Priest responds' "My mouth shall speak the praise of the Lord . . . " Then comes the prayer "Pilot of the soul" by the Priest, followed by the benediction and dismissal which begins with the Deacon's words "Bow down your heads before the Lord our God . . .," to which the people respond: Amen, -The Lord bless us and be propitious unto us." Then the Priest, making the sign of the cross, gives the benediction as follows; "O Lord, save Thy people and bless Thine inheritance. Feed them and lift them up forever. . ." The Deacon then says, "Depart in peace," while the Priest manually blesses everyone of the people, touching his or her forehead.

9. In January 1979, the Synod of the Church attempted to commission a manufacturing company to produce and distibute communion wine to all the Churches in the country, The idea was to replace the dried raisin wine.
10. For more information see Yassa Abd Al-Masih, The Faith and Practices of the Coptic Church, Alexandria 1953 (p.77)

The Church teaches that every Christian including baptized children, should take the Holy Communion at least three times a year, if not every week. Through the centuries abuses in either direction of this norm have appeared and disappeared in series of cycles. Cycle segments typically span no more than a few generations. Using insufficient information or misinformation, individuals develop practices that ignore the consistent teaching of the Church. The Church stands behind what it has always taught are essential maxims from Jesus Christ and His Apostles. "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man and drink His blood you have no life in you." (John 6 : 53) But before taking communion a believer must be prepared to examine himself. "Let a man examine himself and let him eat that bread and drink of that cup. For he that eats and drinks unworthily, eats and drinks damnation to himself, not discerning the Lord's body." (1Cor. 11 : 28, 29).

Spiritual Food----- The flesh and blood of Christ is food, which helps the believer to grow in grace. Jesus said, "I am the bread of life; he that comes to Me shall never hunger, for My flesh is meat indeed and My blood is drink indeed." (John 6 : 55) Rather than suffering a lack of nutrition, we ought to figure out what prevents us from growing in our relationship with Him Who feeds us. Through His grace we are able to balance faith and works, without Him we can do nothing.

Through this sacrament the believer receives remission of sin : "For this is My body and blood which is shed for many for the remission of sin." (Matt. 26 : 26-28) We are not just talking about a happy ever after or happy only in the hereafter. One gradually prepares for eternal life by receiving this mystery regularly in this life. Since He always respects our free will, this is the way that God proposes that we change our ways to His. The Ethiopian Orthodox Church firmly believes that our Lord Jesus Christ is present in this sacrament, not by way of remotely granting His grace, but by actually being in our midst in a consumable form. After the consecration there is no longer bread and wine, for all the substance of the bread is transformed into the body of Christ and all the substance of the wine into the blood of Christ.

(9) The Canon

The celebrant should be well acquainted with the book of covenant (which contains Christ's teaching to the Apostles during the forty days following His death and resurrection), and with the books containing Apostolic Canons, the Didaskalia, = the teachings of the Apostles and the Abdisat (counciliar canons). At the time of prayer and at the time of Liturgical Service there must be silence and awe, except for praise and sanctification from the beginning to the end. If one does speak he will suffer punishment. Priests or Deacons who have not attended the night prayer (seatat or matins) are not allowed to take part in this service. The Church does not permit more than one Liturgy to be performed in one day on the same altar. However, two or more services can be done in the same Church and at the same hour providing that there is more than one altar in that church.

(10) Structure of the Church Building

Churches in Ethiopia have either round or rectangular shape. Ideally, each Church should have four entrances, one facing each of the four major directions of the earth (North, South, East and West). As people who have been God-fearing for thousands of years, religion is the heart of the national culture, thus, church buildings are highly revered.

An Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahido church building should be divided into three areas. Some of these three areas bear names in Geez, which sound like corresponding Hebrew words. The first is the place where the debteras stand and perform services before and after the qedasi. It is called qene mahlet : this corresponds to the naser of the Tabernacle of Solomon's temple. The next is the qeddist which is generally occupied by priests and Deacons; lay persons access it only to receive of communion. This corresponds to the qodes of the Tabernacle of Solomon. The innermost part is called maqdas (qeddiste qedusan = Holy of Holies). This is where the Tabot rests. Only ordained Priests have access to it. This also corresponds to the qodush haqqodasim or the debir of the Temple of Solomon. During service women stand to the right, and men to the left. No one may enter the church without first removing his shoes. This custom is based on the command given to Moses by God (Ex. 3 : 5; Acts 7 : 33).

Each Church should have small house, called "Bethlehem," built within the inner Churchyard facing the east. This house is used for the preparation of the Holy Communion (the bread and wine used in the Eucharist). This house represents Bethlehem, the town where the Messiah was born.

In the name of the Father, Son, and of the Holy Spirit, one God. Amen.

Prayer at the Consecration of the Paten.

1. O Lord our God, Almighty, Father of our Lord, our God and our Saviour Jesus Christ, who didst institute the Church and the Priesthood in holiness, and didst prepare the holy Vessels :

2. O good Father, we beseech of Thy goodness, O lover of man, to show Thy face unto us and bless us,

3. and bless this Paten for pure service so that the holy body of Thine only-begotten Son Jesus Christ may be made ready upon it,

4. and so that this Paten may be a holy Paten, a Paten of salvation the holy body of Thine only-begotten Son Jesus Christ being laid upon it for the remission of sin : through Thine only-begotten Son. Amen.

* * *

The Ordering of the Service.

5. The priest shall take the holy oil (mairoun) and anoint the Paten within and without, signing it thus with the cross and saying :

6. O Lord our God, bless this anointing, let it be for the salvation of the whole world, and bless this Paten. Amen.
In the name of the Father, Son, and of the Holy Spirit.

Then he shall sign the Chalice, the Cross-spoon and the clothes with the sign of the cross, thrice repeated.

PREPARATORY SERVICE CHAPTER I

Prayer at theConsecration of the Chalice.

7. O Lord our God, Father of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, Who chose Aaron, granting him to stand in the midst of his congregation in the tabernacle, and making him to complete Thy service in the sanctuary, which is the most holy place :
Lover of mankind, Thou who did choose Stephen, even making him a servant among the holy Apostles, and a preacher to the Gentiles :

8. We pray and beseech Thee, O lover of man, bless this Chalice and fill it with pure blood,

9. so that it may be a spring of life, even of the holy blood which ran from the side of Thy Son our Lord Jesus Christ for us, on the holy cross, because he was crucified to prepare us for the remission of sin with His blood. Glory be to our Lord, God, and Saviour Jesus Christ, unto the ages of ages.

10. Bless, sanctify and purify this chosen Chalice so that it may be a holy chalice. Amen.

Prayer at the Consecration of the Cross-spoon.

11. O Lord our God Almighty, Father of our Lord and our Saviour Jesus Christ :

12. We pray and beseech of Thy goodness,

13. Lay Thy hand now on this holy cross-spoon which is Thine; bless it, sanctify it, and give it power as Thou did give to the tongs which were in the hand of one of the Seraphim, the holy angels, for the purification of the lips of Isaiah the Prophet. Grant us, in Thy holiness, to stand in righteousness and perfect holiness.

14. Therefore we pray and beseech of Thy goodness, O Lover of mankind.
15. Bless this holy cross-spoon, purify it, and fill it with the precious blood, so that it may be a holy chosen vessel for drinking the blood of Thine only-begotten Son, Who is worthy of glory and praise. Amen.
16. Fill it with power, and make it a chosen vessel, purify this spoon. Amen. Glory be to the Father and to the Son and to the Holy Spirit, unto unending ages. Amen.

CHAPTER II

Preparatory service for the Liturgy.

1. In the name of the Father, and Son and of the Holy Spirit, the only God Who Is. Amen.

Thus begins Chapter II of IV called, the Preparatory Service or the eucharistic liturgy,listing the duties of priests, deacons, and all the people, including things appropriate for each occasion, as was arranged by our Egyptian fathers. First, at the time of the Eucharist a priest or a deacon shall read these words, and let all who would partake of the sacrament listen attentively, as he shall say :

2. My brother, think of your sins, and ask forgiveness so that you may obtain mercy before leaving the church, where the (ministers offer) the pure sacrifice on their own behalf, as well as yours.

3. Do not separate your (attention) from the priest who prays and offers (the sacrifice) on your behalf, so that you may not be turned out with the unbaptized whom they (will later) dismiss; rather, stay in the church, and listen to the word of the priest, and hear him who asks forgiveness on behalf of you and all sinners, that their God may grant pardon unto them.

4. O man, if you want to receive forgiveness of your sins, why would you leave the church while another is bowing and asking for mercy on your behalf?

5. And why are you idle? At such a time, why would you let your mind wander from place to place? You who are sealed with the seal of the heavenly bridegroom, even Christ.
6. But the church will dismiss you and shut her doors against you, so that you shall never enter, because no stranger will be found in her.
7. When her Bridegroom comes, she shall open to Him her doors, and His bride feeds the Bridegroom. But the stranger shall not eat, because it is not given to him.
8. Who has seen a bridegroom who at his wedding, sacrifices his body and is fed on forever?
9. The Son of God has done something new in the world. No one, except for Him, has done anything like Him since the creation of the world. At His wedding He has ordained on the table, before His guests, His holy body and His precious blood as a banquet, so that they may eat thereof, and so that he who believes in Him may live forever.
10. The meat and drink is our Lord Jesus Christ at His wedding. Blessed be our God, Who has given us His holy body and precious blood for the forgiveness of sins, that we may live thereby for ever. Glory be to Him, unto the ages of ages. Amen.

11. When the priest enters the church, before all else, he shall say : "The Prayer of Penitence" (See appendix, pages 174)

Then, the following Psalms (see appendix, page 174 - 177)

Psalm 24 (25) Unto Thee, O Lord . . .

Psalm 60 (61) Hear my cry, O Lord . . .

Psalm 101 (102) Hear my prayer, O Lord ...

Psalm 102 (103) Bless the Lord, O my soul . . .

Psalm 129 (130) Out of the depths have I cried onto Thee. . .

Psalm 130 (131) Lord, my heart is not haughty . . .

And afterwards he shall say this:

12. O Lord our God, Thou alone art holy, Who has bestowed Thy holy things on all of us by Thine invisible power.

13. Yea, Lord, we pray and beseech Thee to send the Holy Spirit upon this church and upon this ark, and upon all the holy vessels whereon Thy precious mystery will be celebrated.

14. And now, bless, sanctity, purity them from all uncleanness and stain through the forgiveness of the second birth that they may be forever free from the least association of defilement and uncleanness.

15. And make this church and this ark, chosen vessels, clean, and pure, refined seven times from all spot and stain and uncleanness of transgressors like the cleansing of silver from earth, refined and purified and tested.

16. And grant that on them, when they are clean and holy, be performed the Sacrament of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit, both now and ever and unto endless ages. Amen.

PREPARATORY SERVICE II

St. Gregory's Prayer, before entering the veil

17. O Lord our God, Who knows all the thoughts of man, and tries the heart and reins : because Thou has called me to serve Thee in this Thy holy place, though I am unworthy,

18. Reject me not, nor turn Thy face from me, but take away my sins, and cleanse me from the uncleanness of my soul and my body.

19. And now I pray Thee and beseech Thee to blot out my wickedness, and the iniquity of Thy people, and lead me, lest I enter into temptation.

20. Yea, Lord, cast me not away, nor let me be put to shame in my hope, but rather send down upon me the grace of the Holy Spirit, and make me worthy to stand in Thy sanctuary, and to offer unto Thee a pure sacrifice with simple heart for the forgiveness of my sins and trespasses.

21. And remember not the iniquity of Thy people. And grant rest unto our ancestors, our brothers and sisters who have fallen asleep.

22. Keep and strengthen Thy people by Thy power, for Thine is the glory with Thine only-begotten Son, unto the ages of ages. Amen.

Then the priest shall enter into the sanctuary, and prostrate himself once beyond the veil, and say the Prayer of Basil over the cabinets as he opens them.

23. O Lord our God and our Creator, Who made all through Thy word, Who has permitted us to enter into this mystery, Who did form man through Thy wisdom, and make him prince over all creatures to rule them in righteousness and truth :

24. Grant us the wisdom which dwells in Thy treasuries, create in us a clean heart, O Lord; forgive us our sins, hallow our souls and our bodies, prepare us to approach Thy sanctuary that we may offer unto Thee a sacrifice and a sweet spiritual incense for the forgiveness of Thy people's sins.

25. O our Lord, God, and Saviour Jesus Christ, Who has raised us from the earth and lifted us up from the dust, to set us with Thine angels and with the princes of Thy people :

26. Make us worthy to serve the word of Thy holy Gospel through Thy love and the multitude of tender mercies, and strengthen us to fulfill Thy will at this hour. We offer to Thee a sacrifice of a sweet savour, and the spiritual fruit which please Thy goodness.

27. Grant us Thy forgiveness and mercy; and accept this spotless sacrifice; and send Thy Holy Spirit on us and upon our offering to glorify it.

28. O Thou only-begotten Son, our Lord, God and Saviour Jesus Christ, glory be to Thee, unto the ages of ages. Amen.

Then he shall enter and prostrate himself three times in front of the ark and say the Prayer of John Chrysostom*:*

Lord our God who art higher than the angels and archangels, the dominions and authorities, cherubim and seraphim, Who was before all creatures :

30. Who art higher than every glory, Who raised the humble from the earth and exalted them to heaven, Who did lead us unto a new way for our salvation through the multitude of Thy mercies :

31. O merciful One, Lover of mankind, Who by Thy will has granted us, Thy poor people, to know Thy holy mystery : Thy word is wondrous, Thy glory which Thou has prepared for us is to be praised.

32. O Lord our God, the Good One, the lover of man, accept our prayer, make us worthy to enter Thy hallowed sanctuary and in true faith to read the mysteries of Thy words which befit Thy service.

33. Shine upon us with the light of Thy glory which destroys in us the thoughts of wickedness and the acts of sin, and send upon us the grace of the Holy Spirit, the consuming fire unto which the creatures of fire cannot approach, which destroys the wicked mind and burns up sins.

34. Grant understanding to the eyes of our hearts, and keep our lips from evil speech; give us peace and teach us righteousness, because Thou art our raiment, and the healer of our diseases and the maker of our nature :

35. And make us worthy of this Thy holy mystery, remove from us every evil thought and the lusts which war against our soul that we may offer to Thee a sacrifice and a sweet heavenly savour without blemish or defilement, through the multitude of Thy mercies and compassion and glory, and complete this heavenly mystery, which exceeds all mysteries.

36. To Thee we offer glory, majesty, honour with Thy kind heavenly Father, and with Thy life-giving Holy Spirit, unto endless ages. Amen.

Prayer over all the Vessels of the Church

37. O Lord our God, good, merciful and holy, Who rests among the holy ones, Who of Thy goodness did order Moses, Thy beloved, to take the blood and sprinkle it over the vessels of the tabernacle :

38. We now pray and beseech Thee, O gracious One and lover of man, to sanctify these vessels by the Holy Spirit and the sprinkled blood of Jesus Christ.

39. That these vessels may be pure for Thy service. This rite is a holy rite, and truly these mysteries are life-bearing.

40. This is to be the holy body and the precious blood of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, because Thy holy name is holy and full of glory, O holy Trinity, both now and ever and to the ages of ages. Amen.

* * *

Prayer over the Coverings.

41. O God, our Lord and our Saviour Jesus Christ, to Whom belong the treasuries full of compassion and mercy, giver of good things to all that trust in Thee, Who did spread out the heavens by Thy wisdom, and give diverse laws to the firmament, the clouds, and the heavens, the line whereof has not changed :

42. Now also, our God, lover of man, send down Thine hand and the power of Thy divinity upon these cloths which will cover Thy holy body, Thou Who sent power on the cloths which were wrapped around Thy holy body in the tomb. Let these also be made like those that are in heaven.

For Thine is the glory and the power and the might, with Thy good Father and the Holy Spirit, both now and ever and unto the ages of ages. Amen.

* * *

Prayer over the Paten.

43. O Lord our good and life-giving God, Who did stretch forth Thy holy hands on the tree of the cross, lay Thy holy hand upon this Paten which is full of goodness, and on which food of a thousand years is prepared by those who love Thy holy Name.

44. Now also, Lord our God, bless and sanctify and purify this Paten which is full of coals of fire, Thy holy body, which we offer on the holy altar in this holy apostolic church, for Thine is the glory with Thy good heavenly Father, and the Holy Spirit, the life-giver, both now and ever and unto endless ages. Amen.

* * *

Prayer over the Chalice.

45. O Lord our God, Jesus Christ our God, Who truly was made man, Whose godhead was not separated from Thy manhood, Who did shed Thy blood willingly for the sake of Thy handiwork, lay Thy holy hand over this chalice.

46. Now also, bless it, consecrate it and cleanse it that in it may be prepared Thy precious blood so that this (pointing) may be for life and forgiveness of sin to all those who drink of it in faith.

Glory be to Thy good heavenly Father and the life-giving Holy Spirit, both now and ever and unto endless ages. Amen.

Prayer over the Cross-spoon.

47. Lord our God, who made Thy servant Isaiah the Prophet worthy to see the Seraph with the tongs in his hand, with which he took live coal from the altar, and placed it on his mouth:

48. Now also, Lord our God, the almighty Father, lay Thy hand on this Cross-spoon for the communion of the holy body and the precious blood of Thine only-begotten Son, our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

49. Now bless it, sanctify it, and purify it, give to this Cross-spoon power and glory as Thou gave the tongs of the Seraph ; for Thine is the glory and dominion with Thine only-begotten Son, our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, both now and ever and unto ages of ages. Amen.

Prayer over the Masob.

50. O Lord our God, who said unto Moses Thy servant and prophet on Mount Sinai, "Make a custom pot and set it into My tabernacle."

51. Now also, Lord our God almighty, stretch forth Thy holy right hand over this Masob, fill it with power, might, also with the grace of the Holy Spirit and with Thy glory, so that it may carry the holy body of Thine only-begotten Son into this holy apostolic church; for Thine is the glory with Thine only-begotten Son and the Holy Spirit, both now and ever and unto ages of ages. Amen.

52. Then he shall begin to dress the ark and cover the altar and the chalice with clean covering. He shall not leave anything uncovered. He shall choose the incense and put it in the incense box.

At the time of dressing the altar and putting everything in place, the priest shall say:

PREPARATORY SERVICE II

53. O God, Thou art He who knows the hearts of each and all, Thou art the holy One Who rests among the holy ones Who alone is without sin and mighty, even the forgiver of sin.

54. Because Thou knows, O Lord, that I am unworthy, and unclean for this Thy holy ministry, and that I have not the countenance wherewith to make an offering to Thee and open my mouth before Thy holy glory, but, according to the multitude of Thy mercies, forgive my sins, for I am a sinner.

55. Grant me to find grace and mercy in this hour, and send me Thy power from on high that I may be worthy to accomplish Thy holy ministry according to Thy will and Thy good pleasure, and that this incense may be a sweet smelling savour (pointing to the incense box).

56. O Lord, be with us, and bless us, for Thou art the forgiver of our sins and the light of our souls, even our life, our strength, hope, and refuge, and to Thee we send up, as unto the highest, thanksgiving, honour and worship be to the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, both now and ever and unto ages of ages.
Amen.

After preparing the holy vessels he shall say, this "Prayer of the Father."

57. O Lord our God, Who has taught us this great mystery which is for our salvation, Thou art He Who has called us, Thy lowly servants, although we are unworthy, to be ministers at Thy holy altar,

58. Do Thou, our Master, make us fit by the power of the Holy Spirit to accomplish this ministry and the "Preparatory Service", so that, without falling into judgment, in the presence of Thy great glory, we may offer unto Thee an oblation of glory, praise, and great joy in Thy sanctuary.

59. O Lord, giver of salvation, and source of grace, Who works all in all; to every one, grant us, Lord, that our gift may be acceptable in Thy sight.

60. Yea, Lord our God, we pray and beseech Thee, that Thou not forsake Thy people because of their sins, and especially not by reason of the foolishness of me, Thy servant, a sinner : for these Thy holy things are holy according to the gift of the Holy Spirit, through Jesus Christ our Lord, to Whom with Thee and the Holy Spirit, the life giver, Who is coequal with Thee, are due honour, glory and power, both now and ever and unto ages of ages. Amen.

61. Then the priest shall say :

Hallelujah, as for me, I will come unto Thy house in the multitude of Thy mercy, and in Thy fear I worship toward Thy holy temple. I will praise Thee, O Lord, with my whole heart for Thou has heard all the words of my mouth. Before Thine angels will I sing praise unto Thee, and I will worship towards Thy holy temple. Let Thy priests be clothed with righteousness, and let Thy saints shout for joy. Purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean, wash me and I shall be whiter than snow. Wash me thoroughly from mine iniquity, and cleanse me from any sin. Cleanse Thou me from secret faults, keep back Thy servant from presumptuous sins. Thou gave them the bread of heaven, man did eat angels' food.

I will wash my hands in innocence: so will I compass Thine altar, O Lord. I went about and offered sacrifice within His tabernacle, and rejoiced in it. Thou prepares a table before me in the presence of mine enemies.

Thou anoints my head with oil, my cup runs over. I will take the cup of life, and call upon the Name of the Lord. Thy mercy shall follow me all the days of my life, and I will dwell in the house of the Lord for ever.

PREPARATORY SERVICE II

O Lord save, O Lord prosper us.

Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Spirit, now and ever, and unto ages of ages. Amen.

The Canon

62. If the archbishop, the bishop, the priest or the deacon is not well acquainted with the book of "Mashafa Kedan," the book of "Synodos," the " Didaskalia," all the rules of the church and all its righteous laws which lead to the way of life, let him not enter for service in the church. If he presumptuously and irreverently enters he should be deposed from his rank and driven out of the church. But if he is well acquainted with the teachings of the Holy Spirit, knowing the"Abtlisat," let him enter.

63. Let the priest, who celebrates, stand in fear. First of all let him prostrate himself: once before the ark, once before the priests, and once before the deacons. Let him take the vestments in his hand, turn to the east, prostrate himself three times, and say :

Our Father who art in heaven . . . (see #III : 23, p. 21)

Second :

Before he vests himself completely, let him turn to the people and look to see if there is a deacon for service ; because it is not right for the priest to take off his vestments after having vested, should there be no deacon to help in the service.

When he wishes to put on the qamis, he should be sure that it is neither too long nor short, for it is not right to take it off after having vested. Then he shall put on the "Akmam", and gird it with the cincture.

He shall concentrate his mind on the service; he shall not allow it to wander about on the business of the world, nor suffer it in any wise to go out of the door of the temple. If the servant is vigilant in the service of his master, how much more worthy of service should be the Lord of all creation ?

64. If the archbishop or bishop is present, the priest shall take his vestments to him to be blessed, then he shall vest. But if neither is present, the priest shall himself bless them and vest.

65. The vestments for the service of the qiase shall be white and not coloured.

66. At the time of service there is to be not one candle only, but two: one at each side of the altar, whether they are small or big. Instead of the third candle let them light the "Qandil," because the rule is to use two candles. These two candles signify the honour and majesty of the bread and wine.

67. On Sunday let them bring in four loaves, but on other days three only. The loaves shall not be broken and shall be without any blemish.

68. When he pours the wine into the chalice, he shall observe carefully and take note if it be good or not. He who prepares the chalice shall not add old wine, shall not add water more than one third, but if there is much wine he shall add one tenth only. He shall not depart from the measure of this proportion.

PREPARATORY SERVICE II

69. First of all the priest shall wash his hands, and not drying them, he shall pass his wet hands over and upon the bread without benediction, then begin with "The Prayer of thanksgiving."

70. Let him be watchful and attentive to the bread, so that by the time for the people to receive communion that it may still be warm.

71. All the faithful, who gathered to partake of the holy sacrament, have to stand quietly in the church to hear the word of God. No one is allowed to speak or laugh, because the church is not a place of conversation, but a place of prayer.

72. He who laughs at the time of qidase, shall be punished for one week, if he is a priest ; but if he is a layman he shall be driven out at once, and shall not receive the Holy Communion.

Glory be to the Lord who gave us His holy body and His precious blood, unto endless ages. Amen.

CHAPTER III

1. Priest : How awesome is this day and how marvelous this hour wherein the Holy Spirit will descend from heaven and overshadow and hallow this sacrifice.

2. In quietness and in fear, arise and pray that the peace of God be with me and with all of you.

3a. People : shall chant a song of one stanza :
Hallelujah ! If there be anyone of the faithful who has entered the church at the time of qidase and has not heard the holy Scriptures, and has not waited until they finish the prayer of the qidase, and has not received the holy communion, let him be driven out of the church for he has violated the law of God and disdained to stand before the heavenly King, the King of body and spirit. This the Apostles have taught us in their canons.

3b. (4.) From Tensea till the day of Pentecost, instead of the previous paragraph, the people shall say the following song of one stanza : Halleluia! Joseph and Nicodemus wrapped with linen cloths Jesus, Who rose from the dead in wondrous fashion.

PREPARATORY SERVICE III

The priest, processing around with the Host, shall say :

5. Remember, O Lord, those who offered unto Thee this offering, and those for whom it was offered. Give them all the heavenly reward,

6. and above all, accept before Thee Thy servant who offered it to Thee this day; as Thou accepted the sacrifice of Abel the righteous, the sacrifice of our father Abraham, and the two mites of the widow.

7. So accept the gifts of Thy servants, whether much or little, in secret or openly, and fill their houses with all Thy good things ; and as they remembered Thy holy name on earth, remember them in Thy heavenly kingdom ; and in this world do not forsake them for ever.

8. People : Thou art the pot of pure gold, wherein is hidden the manna, the bread which came down from heaven, giving life unto all the world.

9. Then the priest shall take the host with his wet hand. and, passing his hand over and upon it, shall say:
I sought Thy face ; Thy face, O Lord, will I seek, hide not Thy face from me; put not Thy servant away in anger : Thou hast been my help : leave me not, neither forsake me, God of my salvation.

10. Priest : Blessed Lord "Euvlogios Kyrios" Jesus Christ, Holy One, Iesus Xristos Hagios, truly fulfilling all prophecy, manteion, panimantown, alatinown." Amen.

11. C*rossing his two hands, he shall say :* Christ, our very God, sign with Thy right hand, bless as with Thine own hand, sanctify with Thy power and strengthen with thy Spirit, so that this bread will be for the remission of sins of Thy people. Amen.

12. Then the assistant priest shall receive it into a covering and say :

Jesus Christ, the High Priest, just as Joseph and Nicodemus wrapped Thee in linen cloths and spices, and Thou was well-pleased in them, in like manner be well-pleased in us.

13. Then he shall hand it across the altar into the hands of the priest celebrant who, while receiving it, shall say:

May the hallowing, thanksgiving and the exaltation be accepted by God the Father, for the remission of sin. Amen. Power, blessing and great light, and holiness be to this church.

14. The priest shall compass the ark preceded by a light and followed by a deacon, saying :

Lord our God who accepted the offering of Abel in the wilderness, of Noah within the Ark, of Abraham on the top of the mountain, of Elijah on the top of Carmel, of David on the threshing floor of Ornan the Jebusite, and the widow's mite in the sanctuary : accept likewise the oblation and offering of Thy sinful servant, which he has brought unto Thy holy Name, and let it be for the expiation of his sins, reward him with a good recompense in this world and in the age to come, both now and ever and unto ages of ages. Amen.

15.Then he shall set the Host on the Paten, and the deacon shall compass the altar three times holding the chalice and say : Psalm 22 (23) :

1 The Lord shepherds me, and nothing is denied me. 2 He settles me in verdant pasturage, and raises me on refreshing water. 3 He converts my soul, and guides me toward a course of righteousness for His Name's sake. 4 For even as I pass through the shadow of death, I will fear no evils, for Thou art with me. Thy rod and Thy staff comfort me. 5 Thou has prepared a table before me in the face of those who trouble me. 6 Thou has anointed my head with oil. Even Thy chalice which inebriates me, how glorious it is! 7 Thy mercy will follow me all the days of my life. 8 And I shall dwell in the house of the Lord unto the length of days.

l6. Priest : Christ our God, Who is truly our Lord, Who went to the wedding when they invited Thee in Cana of Galilee, and blessed for them the water and changed it into wine, do Thou in like manner unto this (pointing) wine which is set before Thee.

17. Now also let it be blessed, hallowed, and pure, so that it may become the life of soul, body, and spirit at all times.

18. Father, Son and Holy Spirit, be with us; and fill the wine with joy and happiness, for goodness, for life, for salvation and for the remission of sin, for understanding, for healing, for the counsel of the Holy Spirit, both now and ever and unto unending ages. Amen.

19. Purity, sweetness and blessing be to them who honestly drink of Thy precious blood. Amen.

20. Then he shall make the sign of the cross with his hands over the host and say :

Blessed be the Lord, almighty Father, our God.

People : Amen.

Priest : And blessed be the only Son, our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

People : Amen.

Priest : And blessed be the Holy Spirit, the Paraclete, the comforter and cleanser of us all.

People : Amen.

21. Priest: + over the wine. Also + over both of them he shall say:

Glory and honour are due to the holy Trinity, the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit, always coequal, both now and ever and unto the ages of ages. Amen.

22. Also he shall say : My fathers and my brothers, pray for me and for this sacrifice.

23. Asst. Priest : May God hear you in all that you have asked and accept your sacrifice and offering like the sacrifice of Melchisedec and Aaron and Zacharias, the priests of the church of the firstborn.

All shall say :
Our Father Who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name.
Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven.
Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors.
Lead us, lest we enter into temptation, but deliver us from the evil one.
For Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory, of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, now and ever and unto the ages of ages. Amen.

(Some also say the prayer of our Lady here)

24. The priest shall turn to the assistant priest, joining hands with him, as he says:
Remember me, my father priest, in your holy prayers.

25. And he shall answer him saying :
May the Lord keep your priesthood and accept your sacrifice and offering with a gracious countenance.

PREPARATORY SERVICE III

Be pleased, Lord, to save me. (said thrice.)

26. Then the priest shall stand upright, and, with his face to the east, stretching forth his hands, shall chant with a loud voice:
Only the Father is holy,
Only is the Son is holy,
Only the Spirit is holy.

27. People : Truly the Father is holy, truly the Son is holy, truly the Holy Spirit is holy.

28. Priest : Praise the Lord, all ye nations.
People : And praise him, all ye people.
Priest : For his merciful kindness is great toward us.
People : And the truth of the Lord endures for ever

29. Priest : Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Spirit, / both now and ever and unto ages of ages. / Amen. Halleluiah. ("/" indicates possible breaks, at which the faithful will respond repeating what the celebrant has just chanted)

Faithful : Repeat what the celebrant chants

30. Deacon : Arise for prayer.
People : Lord have mercy upon us.
Priest : Peace be unto all of you.
People : And with your spirit.

31. "Thanksgiving Prayer" of St. Basil.
Priest: We give thanks unto our benefactor, the merciful God, the Father of our Lord, God, and Saviour Jesus, for He has covered us and helped us, He has kept us, brought us near and received us unto Himself, undertaken our defense, strengthened us, and brought us unto this hour.

32. Let us therefore pray Him that the Almighty Lord our God keep us all this holy day and all the days of our life in all peace.

33. Deacon : Pray ye.

34. Priest : Master, Lord God Almighty, the Father of our Lord, God, and Saviour Jesus Christ, we render Thee thanks upon everything, for everything and in everything, for Thou has covered us and helped us, has kept us, brought us near, and received us unto Thyself, undertaken our defense, strengthened us and brought us unto this hour.

35. Deacon : Entreat and beseech that the Lord pity us and mercifully receive our prayer and supplication from His saints on our behalf, according to what is expedient at all times, so that He may make us ready to partake of the communion of the blessed sacrament and forgive us our sins.

36. People : Kyrie eleison.

37. Priest : For this cause we pray and entreat of Thy goodness, O lover of man, grant us to complete this holy day and all the days of our life in all peace along with Thy fear. All envy, all trial, all the working of Satan, the counsel of evil, and all the uprisings of adversaries, secret and open,

38. remove far from me (+ over himself), and from all Thy people (+ over the people), and from this Thy holy place

PREPARATORY SERVICE III

(+ over those things which are on the altar). All good things, that are expedient and excellent, command Thou for us, for Thou art He Who has given us power to tread upon serpents and scorpions and upon all the power of the enemy.

39. Lead us lest we wander into temptation, but deliver us and rescue us from all evil in the grace and loving kindness, shown by the love towards mankind of Thine only-begotten Son, our Lord, God, and Saviour Jesus Christ, through Whom to Thee with Him and with the Holy Spirit, the life-giver, Who is coequal with Thee are due glory, honour, and dominion, both now and ever, and unto ages of ages. Amen.

Asst. Priest : Peace be unto all of you.
People : And with your spirit

41. The Assistant priest shall say "The Prayer of Oblation" of the Apostles:
And again let us beseech the almighty Lord, the Father of the Lord our Saviour Jesus Christ, on behalf of those who bring an oblation within the one holy universal church, a sacrifice, first-fruits, tithes, a thank offering, a memorial, whether much or little, secretly or openly, and of those who wish to give, and have not wherewith to give, that He accept their ready mind, that He grant to them the heavenly kingdom : power over all works of blessing belongs to the Lord our God.

42. Asst. Deacon : Pray for them who bring an oblation.

43. People : Accept the oblation of our brethren, accept the oblation of our sisters, and ours also accept, our oblation and our offering.

44. Asst. Priest : Lord our God Who art almighty, we pray and beseech Thee for them that bring an oblation within the one holy universal church, a sacrifice, first-fruits, tithes, a thank-offering, a memorial, whether much or little, in secret or openly, and for those who wish to give and have not wherewith to give, Thine acceptance of their ready mind, grant Thou unto every one : let the recompense of blessing be a portion to all of them, through Thine only-begotten Son, through Whom to Thee with Him and with the Holy Spirit be glory and dominion, both now and ever and unto ages of ages. Amen.

45. Deacon : (In a low chant.) Stand up for prayer.
People : Lord have mercy upon us.
Priest : Peace be unto all of you.
People : And with your spirit.

46. The priest shall say "The Prayer of Oblation."

O my Master, Jesus Christ, coeternal pure Word of the Father, and Word of the Holy Spirit, the life-giver, Thou art the bread of life which came down from heaven, and did foretell that Thou would be the Lamb without spot for the life of the world.

47. We now pray and beseech of Thine excellent goodness, O lover of man, make Thy face to shine upon this (pointing) bread, and upon this (pointing) cup, which we have set upon this spiritual ark of Thine

48. Bless this bread (+ over the bread), and hallow this cup

PREPARATORY SERVICE III

+ over the cup), and cleanse them both (+ over both).

49. And change this (pointing) bread to become Thy pure body, and what is mingled in this (pointing) cup to become Thy precious blood, let them be offered for us all for healing and for the salvation of our soul and our body and our spirit.

50. Thou art the King of us all, Christ our God, and to Thee we send up high praise and glory and worship, with Thy good heavenly Father and the Holy Spirit, the life-giver, Who is coequal with Thee, both now and ever and unto ages of ages. Amen.

51. And then, while covering the bread and the chalice with a covering, let him say "The Prayer of Wrappings."

We place it upon this blessed paten in the likeness of the tomb in which Thou passed three days and three nights.

52. Let my hands be like the hands of Joseph and Nicodemus who wrapped Thy body and found there peace, rest and honour from the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, both now and ever and unto the ages of ages. Amen.

53. The deacon shall turn to the west and say:

This is the order of our, fathers the Apostles: Let none keep in his heart rancor or revenge or envy or hatred towards his neighbour, or towards anybody else.

54. Deacon : Worship the Lord with fear.

55. People : Before Thee, Lord, we worship, and Thee do we glorify.

The deacon shall prostrate himself before the priest, and all shall prostrate themselves together.

56. The assistant priest shall say this prayer "The Absolution of the Son"

Master, Lord Jesus Christ, the only-begotten Son, the Word of God the Father, Who has broken off from us all the bonds of our sins through Thy life-giving and saving sufferings, Who breathed upon the face of Thy holy disciples and pure ministers saying to them : "Receive the Holy Spirit_ whatsoever of men's sins you remit they are remitted unto them, and whatsoever sins you retain they are retained."

57. Thou therefore, O Lord, has now granted the priesthood to Thy pure ministers who always do the priests' office in Thy holy church that they may remit sin on earth, may bind and loosen all the bonds of iniquity.

58. Once again we pray and entreat of Thy goodness, O lover of man, on behalf of these Thy servants and handmaids, my fathers and my brothers and my sisters, and also on my own behalf, on me thy feeble servant, and on behalf of them that bow their heads before Thy holy altar. Prepare for us the way of Thy mercy, break and sever all the bonds of our sins, whether we have trespassed against Thee, O Lord, wittingly or unwittingly, whether in deceit or in vileness of heart, whether in deed or in word or through limited understanding, for Thou knows the feebleness of man.

59. O good lover of man and Lord of all creation, grant us, O Lord, forgiveness of our sins, bless us and purify us, set us free and absolve all Thy people (here he shall mention those recently departed), and fill us with the fear of Thy name, and confirm us in doing Thy will.

60. O Good One, for Thou art our Lord, God, and Saviour Jesus Christ, to Thee we send glory and honour, with the good heavenly Father, and the life–giving Holy Spirit, Who is coequal with Thee, both now and ever and unto the ages of ages. Amen.

61. Turning towards the altar :

May thy servants who serve on this day, the priests, deacons and other clergy (+ over the clergy), and all Thy people (+ over the people), and I myself (+ over himself) ,be absolved and set free, cleansed out of the mouth of the Holy Trinity: the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, and out of the mouth of the one holy apostolic church, and out of the mouths of the fifteen prophets, and out of the mouths of the twelve apostles, and out of the mouths of the seventy-two disciples and ministers, and out of the mouth of the speaker of divinity, the evangelist Mark, the apostle and martyr:

Also, in the appointed time make them all ready for new birth and for the remission of their sin and prepare them to be an ark for the Holy Spirit.

208. Remember, Lord, Thy servants, the poor who are under oppression, have pity upon them and confirm them in the right faith, and make them a dwelling-place of the Holy Spirit through spiritual joy and the love of man,

217. When reading the word of God at the time of prayer and at the time of qedasi there must be silence and awe, except for praise and sanctification, from the beginning to the end, for hearing the word of the holy Gospel of the heavenly King. When the message of an earthly king is being read, no one may speak, or if presumptuously he does speak, he will suffer punishment and tribulation, how much greater punishment will he suffer who speaks while the message of the heavenly King is being read ?

PREPARATORY SERVICE III

We believe in the word of the holy gospel.

While each person is saluting the gospel, he ought to uncover his head. If unable to uncover one's head during all the rest of the time of prayer and qidase, he should do it at this time. Even anyone who has not this good custom, should do it at least at this time of greeting the gospel.

219. After the reading of the gospel, let not any one go out of the church, except in urgency, before the distribution of the Holy Communion, and the benediction of the priest, and the dismissal.
If there is another Sacrament (Mystery) of the Church to be celebrated in the church on this day, such as Baptism, Matrimony or Ordination, it is accomplished at this point, in order that the recipients may be fulfilled in the celebration of the Body of Christ.

CHAPTER IV

1. Deacon : Go forth, ye catechumens,

2. The priest shall say in a low voice the following prayer of St. Basil as he enters the temple :

O Lord our God, Who, for Thy love toward man which is inexpressible, did send Thine only-begotten Son to the world to bring back unto Thee the lost sheep, we beseech Thee, our Master, not to send us back when we offer unto Thee this awesome oblation which is spotless.

3. We do not depend upon our righteousness but upon Thy mercy, O Thou who has loved our race. We pray and beseech of Thy goodness, O lover of man, that this mystery, which Thou prepared for our salvation, may not be for the condemnation of us Thy servants and all

PREPARATORY SERVICE IV

Thy people, but let it be for our salvation, the blotting away of our sins and the forgiveness of our slackness.

4. Glory and honour be to Thy holy name, Father, Son and Holy Spirit, both now and ever and unto the ages of ages. Amen.

5. Deacon : Arise for prayer.
People : Lord have mercy upon us.
Priest : Peace be unto all of you.
People : And with your spirit.

6. Priest : Again we beseech the almighty God, the Father of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ, we ask and entreat of Thy goodness. O lover of man,

7. Remember Lord, the peace of the one holy apostolic Church which reaches from one end of the world to the other.

8. Deacon : Pray for the peace of the one holy apostolic Church, orthodox in the Lord.

9. Priest : Bless, Thou, all the people and the whole flock (+ over the people), Send, Thou, all the peace that is from heaven into the hearts of us all, and grant us the safety of our life therein.

10. Vouchsafe peace to our (head of state: king, queen, president), to (his / her / their) residence(s), to the armed forces, to those who rule under (him / her / them) and to (his / her / their) advisers.

11. And to the multitude of our neighbours at home and abroad; adorn them with all peace. O King of peace, grant us Thy peace for Thou has granted us all things. Possess us, O Lord, and requite us, for beside Thee we know none other; we mention Thy holy Name and call upon it, that our souls may live through the Holy Spirit, and that the death of sin may not have dominion over us Thy servants and all Thy people.

12. Through Thine only-begotten Son to Whom with Thee and with the Holy Spirit be glory and dominion, both now and ever and unto the ages of ages. Amen.

13. People : Kyrie eleison.

14. Asst. Deacon : Stand up for prayer.
People : Lord have mercy upon us.
Asst. Priest : Peace be unto all of you.
People : And with your spirit.

15. Asst. Priest : And again we beseech the almighty God the Father of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ,

16. for the blessed Patriarch Abba (_____), that He truly preserve him to us for many years and in peaceful days until the Lord our God who is rich in grace grant him to fulfil that which was committed unto him, the office of priesthood.

17. Asst. Deacon : Pray for the Patriarch, Abba (_____) lord chief of the bishops of the great City of (_____), and the blessed Primate of this country, Abba (_____), and all the orthodox bishops, priests, and deacons.

18. Asst. Priest : Lord our God almighty, we pray and beseech Thee for our blessed archbishop Abba (_____), that Thou may truly preserve him to us for many years and in peaceful days to fulfil the office of priesthood which Thou has committed unto him, together with all the orthodox bishops, priests, and deacons,

19. and all the entire congregation of the one holy universal church ; and do Thou accept the prayer which he makes on our behalf and on behalf of all Thy people.

PREPARATORY SERVICE IV

Open to him the treasure-house of Thy blessing, and especially grant to him abundantly the grace of the Holy Spirit; pour upon him from heaven Thy blessing that he may bless Thy people.

20. And all his enemies, visible and invisible, do Thou subdue and bruise under his feet speedily; but himself do Thou preserve unto us in righteousness, peace and glory, for Thy holy church,

21. through Thine only-begotten Son, through Whom, to Thee with Him, and with the Holy Spirit be glory and dominion, both now and ever and unto the ages of ages. Amen.

22. Deacon : Arise for prayer.
People : Lord have mercy upon us.
Priest : Peace be unto all of you.
People : And with your spirit.

23. Priest : And again we make our supplication to the almighty God, the Father of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ ; we ask and entreat of Thy goodness, O lover of man.

24. Remember, Lord, our congregation ; bless them. (+ over the people)

25. Deacon : Pray for this holy church and our congregation therein.

26. People : Bless our congregation and keep them in peace.

27. Priest : Grant that they may be Thine, that without slothfulness or hindrance they may do Thy holy and blessed will, making it an abode of prayer, an establishment of purity and a place of blessing. Grant us also, Lord, we Thy servants, and to them that shall come after us, length of days to the end of the world.

28. The assistant priest offers the censer to the celebrant who shall take it and cense over the altar three times.

29. Then, bowing his head, he shall cense at the four corners and say : Arise, Lord my God, and let Thine enemies be scattered, and let them that hate Thy holy and blessed Name flee before Thee.

30. But let Thy people who do Thy will at all times be blessed with blessings a thousand thousands and ten thousand times ten thousand, through Thine only-begotten Son, through Whom to Thee with Him, and with the Holy Spirit, be glory and dominion, both now and ever and unto the ages of ages. Amen.

31. Deacon : Let us all say, in the wisdom of God, the prayer of faith.

(a) 32. The people shall say : "Amak-niyou of the Apostles(1)"

33. We believe in one God, maker of all creation, Father of our Lord, God, and Saviour Jesus Christ, because His nature is unfathomable.

34. As we have before declared (2), He is without beginning and without end, rather He is ever living, and He has light which is never extinguished, and it can never be approached.

35. He is not two or three, and no addition can be made to Him; but He is unique, living for ever, it is not because He is hidden that He cannot be known, but we know Him perfectly through the law and the prophets, that He is almighty and has authority over all the creation.

(1) The creed which the Apostles gave in Jerusalem. This creed is for the Anaphora of the Apostles, for all others: use the Nicaean Creed on page 86 or 173.
(2) In Didaskalia.

PREPARATORY SERVICE IV

36. One God, Father of our Lord and our Saviour Jesus Christ, Who was begotten before the creation of the world, the only-begotten Son, coequal with Him, creator of all the hosts, the principalities and the dominions.

37. Who in the last days was pleased to become man, and took flesh from our Lady Mary, the holy Virgin, without the seed of man, and grew like men yet without sin or evil, neither was guile found in his mouth (1).

38. Then He suffered, died in the flesh, rose from the dead on the third day, ascended unto heaven, to the Father Who sent him, sat down at the right hand of Power, sent to us the Paraclete, the Holy Spirit, Who proceeds from the Father, and saved all the world, and Who is coeternal with the Father and the Son.

39. We say further that all the creatures of God are good and there is nothing to be rejected, both the spirit, and the life of the body, is pure and holy in all.

40. And we say that marriage is pure, and childbirth is undefiled, because God created Adam and Eve to multiply. We understand further that there is in our body a soul, which is immortal and does not perish with the body.

41. We repudiate all the works of heretics and all schisms and transgression of the law, because they are for us impure.

42. We also believe in the resurrection of the dead, the righteous and sinners; and in the day of judgement, when every one will be recompensed according to his deeds.

43. We also believe that Christ is not in the least degree inferior because of His incarnation, but He is God, the Word, who truly became man, and reconciled mankind to God, being the high priest of the Father.

(1)1 Peter 2: 22

44. Henceforth, let us not be circumcised like the Jews. We know that He who had to fulfil the law and the prophets has already come.

45. To Him, for Whose coming all people looked forward, Jesus Christ, Who is descended from Judah, from the root of Jesse, Whose government is upon His shoulder : to Him be glory, thanksgiving, greatness, blessing, praise, song, both now and ever and unto the ages of ages. Amen.

46. The assistant priest shall remove the covering (of the paten), while the celebrant washes his hands with water saying

Priest : He that is pure let him receive of the oblation, and he that is not pure let him not receive it, that he may not be consumed by the fire of the godhead which is prepared for the devil and his angels. Whoever has revenge in his heart and whoever maintains in him strange thoughts and fornication let him not draw near.

47. And after washing his hands, while facing West, as he sprinkles water from his wet hands, he shall say :

As I have cleansed my hands from outward pollution, so also I am pure from the blood of you all. If you presumptuously draw nigh to the body and blood of Christ I will not be responsible for your reception thereof. I am pure of your wickedness, but your sin will return upon your head if you do not draw nigh in purity.

48. Deacon : If there be any who disdains this word of the priest, laughs, speaks, or stands in the church in an

(1) Isaiah 9:6.

PREPARATORY SERVICE IV

impudent manner, let him know and understand that he is provoking to wrath our Lord Jesus Christ, and bringing upon himself a curse instead of a blessing, and will get from God the fire of hell instead of the remission of sin.

49. Priest : O my Lord and my God, author of the law, giver of peace and love, take away from me every evil thought, revenge, envy, and all the lusts of the flesh. Make me ready to be added to Thy holy servants who pleased Thee by the beauty of their lives in the days of love and peace.

50. Because it is Thou Who did come down from heaven and make peace between the inhabitants of heaven and the inhabitants of earth, and did gather together all Thy people to glorify Thee, for Thine is the glory, unto the ages of ages. Amen.

51. The washing of the celebrant's hands is like the washing of Pilate's hands, who did it to be innocent of the pure blood. Thus, the priest dramatically admonishes the faithful regarding all of the previous prayers of the qidase, including, the Psalms of David, the Epistles of Paul, the General Epistles, the Book of Acts of the Apostles, and the Gospel. At other times, the priest is available to assist individuals to prepare. After giving this admonition, he will be innocent of the sin of anyone who receives the holy mystery without due self-examination. See 1Corinthians 11: 23-33, on one's personal responsibility for preparation to partake of this awesome mystery. The Apostle Paul is talking about the self-examination that should precede one's confession of sins to the priest in the mystery of Repentance. That separate service is explained in Mt. 4:17; 18:18; Lk. 24:47; John 20:21-24 and James 5:16.

52. Deacon : Arise for prayer.
People : Lord have mercy upon us.
Priest : Peace be unto all of you
People : And with your spirit.

53. Priest : "Prayer of Salutation" of St. Basil :
God, great eternal, Who did form man incorrupt,

54. Thou did abolish death that came first through the envy of Satan, by the advent of Thy living Son our Lord, God, and Saviour Jesus Christ,

55. and Thou did fill all the earth with Thy peace which is from heaven, wherein the armies of heaven glorify Thee saying : Glory to God in heaven and on earth peace, His goodwill toward men.

The people shall repeat his words:
Glory to God in heaven and on earth peace, His goodwill toward men.

56. Priest : O Lord, in Thy goodwill fill the hearts of us all, and purify us from all corruption and from all excess, and from all revenge and envy, and from all wrongdoing and from the remembrance of ill which clothes with death.

57. And make us all ready to salute one another with a holy salutation.

58. Deacon : Pray for the perfect peace and love. Salute one another with a holy salutation.

PREPARATORY SERVICE IV

59. People : Christ our God, make us ready to salute one another with a holy salutation.

At this time the priests shall salute (bow towards) priests; the deacons shall salute deacons; the men shall salute each other; and the women shall salute each other.

60. Priest : And to partake, without condemnation, of Thy holy immortal heavenly gift, through Jesus Christ our Lord :

61. Through whom to Thee with Him and with the Holy Spirit be glory and dominion, both now and ever and unto the ages of ages. Amen.

62. The priests and deacons who have not attended the night prayer are not allowed to enter the temple (maeqdaes) to take part in the service. Those who disobey this commandment will become transgressors of the law.

THE ANAPHORA OF THE APOSTLES. (1)

1. The Anaphora of our fathers the Apostles, may the blessing of their prayer be with our rulers (2) and people, unto the ages of ages. Amen.

2. Priest : The Lord be with all of you.

People : And with your spirit.

3. Priest : Give ye thanks unto our God.

People : It is right, it is just.

Priest : Lift up your hearts.

People : We have lifted them up unto the Lord our God.

4. Priest : We give Thee thanks, O Lord, in Thy beloved Son our Lord Jesus, Whom in the last days Thou sent unto us, Thy Son, the Saviour and Redeemer, the messenger of Thy counsel.

5. This Word is He, Who is from Thee, and through Whom Thou made all things according to Thy will.

(1)According to a tradition of the Ethiopian church, this Anaphora was written by the Apostles, after the ascension of the Lord. Afterwards, the church fathers made some additions. It is celebrated on the memorial day of any apostle. It provides the core to which other anaphoras make reference, at various points. In this edition, see the appendix, starting at page 174 for easy reference to parts of this anaphora that are used in others.
(2)Check treatment of this petition with the first paragraphs in other Anaphoras.

6. Deacon : For the sake of the blessed and holy Patriarch Abba (_____) and the blessed Archbishop Abba (_____), while they yet give Thee thanks in their prayer and their supplications : Stephen the first martyr, Zacharias the priest and John the Baptist.

7. And for the sake of all the saints and martyrs who have gone to their rest in faith: Matthew and Mark, Luke, and John, the four Evangelists; Mary the mother of God, Simon Peter and Andrew, James and John, Philip and Bartholomew, Thomas and Matthew, Thaddaeus and Nathanael, James the son of Alphaeus and Matthias, the twelve Apostles; and James the Apostle, brother of the Lord, Bishop of Jerusalem: Paul, Timothy, Silas, and Barnabas; Titus, Philemon, and Clement, the seventy-two disciples, the five hundred brethren, the three hundred and eighteen Orthodox; may the prayers of them all come unto us and visit us together with them.

8. And remember Thou the peace of the universal apostolic church, which was made by Christ through His precious blood.

9. Remember, Thou, all the patriarchs, archbishops, bishops, priests, and deacons who keep straight the way of the true word.

10. The assistant priest shall say "The Prayer of Benediction(1)" of St. Basil
O holy Trinity, Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, bless Thy people, beloved Christians, with heavenly and earthly blessings.

(1)Benediction over the people. When the assistant priest says "bless ," the ministering priest shall bless in the appointed direction

11. And send upon us the grace of the Holy Spirit, and keep the doors of Thy holy church open unto us in mercy and in faith; and perfect unto us the faith of Thy holy Trinity unto our last breath.

12. O my Lord Jesus Christ, visit the sick of Thy people ; heal them ; and guide our fathers and our brethren who have journeyed, becoming strangers : bring them back to their dwelling places in peace and in health.

13. Bless the airs of heaven (+ toward heaven), and the rains and the fruits of the earth of this year, in accordance with Thy grace, and make joy and gladness prevail perpetually on the face of the earth (+ toward the earth).

14. And confirm for us Thy peace. Turn the hearts of mighty kings to deal kindly with us always.

15. Grant peace to the scholars of the church, who are continually gathered in Thy holy church; to all, to each by their several names, in the presence of powerful rulers, O our God, increase Thy peace.

16. Rest the souls of our ancestors, both our brothers and sisters who have fallen asleep and gained their rest in the right faith.

17. And bless those who give gifts of incense (+ over the people), bread and wine, ointment and oil, decorations and reading books, and vessels for the sanctuary, that Christ our God may give them their reward in the heavenly Jerusalem.

18. And all of them that are assembled with us to entreat for mercy, Christ our God have mercy upon them : and all them that give alms before Thine awful and terrifying throne, receive.

19. And comfort every straitened soul, they who are in chains, and they who are in exile or captivity.

20. And them that are held in bitter servitude, our God, deliver them in Thy mercy. And all of them that have entrusted it to us to remember them in our supplications to Thee O our Master Jesus Christ, remember them in Thy heavenly kingdom, and remember me, thy sinful servant.

21. O Lord, save thy people and bless Thine inheritance (+ over the people), feed them and lift them up for ever.

22. Asst. Deacon : Lord pity and have mercy upon the patriarchs, archbishops, bishops, priests, deacons and all the Christian people.

23. Priest : To these and to all grant rest to their souls, and have mercy upon them. Thy Son Whom Thou did send from heaven to the womb of a virgin, was conceived in her womb, and was made flesh and Thy Son became known by the Holy Spirit.

24. Deacon : Ye that are sitting, stand up.

25. Priest : There stand before thee a thousand thousands and ten thousand times ten thousand, both the holy angels and archangels and Thy honourable beasts, each with six wings.

26. Deacon : Look to the east.

27. Priest : With two of their wings they cover their face, with two of their wings they cover their feet, and with two of their wings they fly from end to end of the world.

28. Deacon : Let us give heed.

29. Priest: And they all constantly hallow and praise Thee, with all them that hallow and praise Thee.

30. Receive also our hallowing which we utter unto Thee : Holy, holy, holy, perfect Lord of hosts.

31. Deacon : Answer ye.

32. People : Holy, holy, holy, perfect Lord of hosts, heaven and earth are full of the holiness of Thy glory.

33. Priest : Truly heaven and earth are full of the holiness of Thy glory, through our Lord, God, and Saviour Jesus Christ, Thy holy Son. He came and was born of virgin that he might fulfil Thy will and make a people for Thee.

34. People : Remember us all in Thy kingdom ; remember us, Lord, Master, in Thy kingdom ; remember us, Lord, in Thy kingdom, as Thou remembered the thief on the right hand when Thou was on the tree of the holy cross.

35. Then the assistant priest shall put on grains of incense, and present the censer bowl with lid tilted back, to the celebrant, who shall cross his two hands in the smoke of the incense, then passing them over the bread and the cup three times each.

36. Priest : He stretched out His hands in the passion, suffering to save the sufferers that trust in Him.

37. Who was delivered to the passion that He might destroy death, break the bonds of Satan, tread down hell, lead forth the saints, establish a covenant and make known His resurrection.

38. Deacon : Priests, raise up your hands.

ANAPHORA OF THE APOSTLES

39. Priest : In the same night in which they betrayed Him, He took bread in His holy, blessed and spotless hands.

(At this time he shall raise the host.)

40. People : We believe that this is he, truly we believe.

41. Priest : He looked up to heaven toward Thee, His Father, gave thanks, blessed and broke (+ over the bread three times. Then he shall indent the Host lightly with his thumb in five places without separation.)

42. Priest : And He gave to His disciples and said unto them : Take, eat, this (pointing) bread is truly My body which will be broken on your behalf for the remission of sin.

43. People : Amen. Amen. Amen. We believe and confess, we glorify Thee, O our Lord and our God; that this is He we truly believe.

44. Priest : And likewise also the cup giving thanks, blessing it (+over the cup three times), and hallowing it, He gave it to His disciples, and said unto them, take, drink ; this (pointing) cup is My blood which will be shed on your behalf as a propitiation for many.
He shall then move the cup with his right hand in the sign of the cross.

45. People : Amen. Amen. Amen. We believe and confess, we glorify Thee, O our Lord and our God, that this is He, we truly believe.

46. Priest : And as often as ye do this do it in remembrance of Me.

47. People : We proclaim Thy death, Lord, and Thy holy resurrection;

we believe in Thy ascension and Thy second advent. We glorify Thee, and confess Thee, we offer our prayer unto Thee and supplicate Thee, O our Lord and our God.

48. Priest : Now, Lord, we remember Thy death and Thy resurrection. We confess Thee and we offer unto Thee this (pointing) bread and this (pointing) cup, giving thanks unto Thee ; and thereby Thou has made us worthy of the joy, standing before Thee and ministering to Thee. We pray and beseech Thee, Lord, that Thou would send the Holy Spirit and power upon this (pointing) bread and upon this (pointing) cup.

49. May He make them the body and blood of our Lord, God, and Saviour Jesus Christ, unto the ages of ages.

+ once over the bread, + once over the cup, and + once more over both.

50. People : Amen. Lord have pity upon us, Lord spare us, Lord have mercy upon us.

51. Deacon : With all the heart let us beseech the Lord our God that He grant unto us the good communion of the Holy Spirit.

52. People : As it was, is, and shall be unto generations of generations, and endless ages.

At this time he shall dip his finger into the Blood and sign the Body.

53. Priest : Grant it together unto all them that take of it, that it may be unto them for sanctification and for filling with the Holy Spirit and for strengthening of the true faith, that they may hallow and praise Thee and Thy beloved Son Jesus Christ with the Holy Spirit.

People : Amen.

ANAPHORA OF THE APOSTLES

54. Priest : Grant us to be united through Thy Holy Spirit, and heal us by this oblation that we may live in Thee for ever.

The people shall repeat his words.

55. Priest : Blessed be the Name of the Lord, and blessed be he that comes in the Name of the Lord, and let the Name of his glory be blessed. So be it. So he it. So be it blessed.

The people shall repeat his words.

56. Priest : Send the grace of the Holy Spirit upon us.

The people shall repent his words.

57. Deacon : Arise for prayer.

People : Lord have mercy upon us.

Priest : Peace be unto all of you.

People : And with your spirit.

58. Priest : (Prayer of Fraction) And again we beseech the almighty God, the Father of our Lord, God, and Saviour Jesus Christ

59. to grant us to partake of this holy mystery with blessing, to grant to us confirmation and not to condemn any of us, but to make worthy all that partake of the holy mystery, of the body and blood of Christ. The almighty Lord is our God.

60. Deacon : Pray ye.

People : Our Father, Who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name, Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors, and lead us lest we enter into temptation, but deliver us rescuing us from all evil: for Thine is the kingdom, the power and the glory for ever and ever.

61. Priest : Lord our almighty God, grant us to partake effectually of Thy holy mystery, and condemn none of us, but bless all in Christ, through Whom to Thee with Him and with the Holy Spirit be glory and dominion, both now and ever and unto the ages of ages. Amen.

62. People : According to thy mercy, our God, and not according to our sins, (to be repeated thrice).

63. Then, in succession, they shall all say :

The hosts of the angels of the Saviour of the World "Woe! Woe! Woe!" (1) stand before the Saviour of the world

64. and encircle the Saviour of the world "Woe! Woe! Woe!" even the body and blood of the Saviour of the world.

65. Let us draw nigh the face of tie Saviour of the world. "Woe! Woe! Woe!" In the faith which is of him let us submit ourselves to Christ.

There, are others who say : In the faith which is of him the Apostles followed his steps, (and these are the words of Yared(2).

66. The. assistant deacon shall say while entering :

Open ye the gates, princes.

67. Deacon : Ye who are standing, bow your heads.

68. Priest : Lord eternal, Who knows what is hidden and what is manifest, before Thee Thy people have bowed their heads, and unto Thee have subdued the stubborn hearts of their body ; look from Thy worthy dwelling-place, bless them, men and women ; incline Thine ear to them and hearken unto their prayer.

(1) This is the cry of those who weep for the dead. It is said here the body of Christ is broken for the distribution to the faithful.

(2) A Sixth Century Ethiopian cleric, who from 523 to 545 wrote lyrics, and music arranging all Church songs in three different types, Araray, Geez and Izl.

ANAPHORA OF THE APOSTLES

69. Confirm them with the strength of Thy right hand, help them and protect them from evil affliction; be a guardian both to their bodies and to their souls ; and increase to them, both men and women, Thy faith and the fear of Thy name, 70.through Thine only-begotten Son, through Whom to Thee with Him and with the Holy Spirit be glory and dominion, both now and unto the ages of ages. Amen.

* * *

71. Deacon : Worship the Lord with fear.

People : Before Thee, Lord, we worship, and Thee do we glorify.

72. Priest : "Prayer of Penitence."

O Lord God, the Father almighty, Thou it is Who heals the wounds of our soul, body, and spirit,

73. because Thou has said, by the mouth of Thine only-begotten Son, our Lord, God, and Saviour Jesus Christ, that which He said to our father Peter, you are a rock, and upon this rock I will build My holy church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it; and unto you do I give the keys of the Kingdom of heaven; what you shall have bound on earth shall be bound in heaven, and what you shall have loosed on earth shall be loosed in heaven

74. Let all Thy servants and Thy handmaids, according to their several names, be absolved and set free out of the mouth of the Holy Spirit, and out of the mouth of me also, Thy sinful and guilty servant. . . whether they have wrought wittingly or unwittingly.

75. Keep them, Lord, and defend them, thy servants, my fathers, brothers and sisters.

76. And also loose me, thy humble and sinful servant

77. Both absolve them and set them free: out of the mouth of the holy Trinity: the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, and out of the mouth of me Thy sinful and unrighteous servant.

78. O propitious, merciful and lover of man, Lord our God, that takes away the sin of the world, accept the penitence of Thy servants and Thy handmaids, and shine upon them with the light of everlasting life, and forgive them, Lord, all their sins; for Thou art good and the lover of man.

79. O Lord our God, merciful, slow to anger, plenteous in mercy and righteous, forgive me my sins

80. and deliver all thy servants and handmaids from all transgression and curse. If we have transgressed against Thee, Lord, whether in our word, deed, or thought, release, remit, pardon and have mercy, for Thou art good and the lover of man, Lord our God.

81. O Lord, absolve us and set us free, and absolve all Thy people, and absolve me Thy sinful servant.

82. Then he shall turn his face towards the people, bless them three times, make mention of them that are with him and say also :

Remember, Lord, the honourable father, our Patriarch Abba (.....) and the blessed Archbishop Abba (. . . . .) Our God, keep them for us for many years and length of days in righteousness and peace.

ANAPHORA OF THE APOSTLES

83. Remember, Lord, all our civil authorities, and loose them from all the chains of sin which they have committed wittingly or unwittingly, quickly subdue their adversaries and enemies under their feet .

84. Remember, Lord, the patriarchs, archbishops, bishops, priests and deacons, anagnosts and singers, virgins and monks, widows and orphans, men and women, aged and children ; and all Christian people that are standing in this holy church; strengthen them in the faith of Christ.

85. At this moment he shall mention those that have lately been laid to rest.

Remember, Lord, all our fathers, brothers and sisters that are asleep and resting in the orthodox faith, and lay their souls in the bosom of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob.

86. And as for us, deliver us from every transgression and curse and from all wickedness and from all rebellion and from all false swearing and from all anathemas and from all perjury and from mingling with heretics and gentiles in error and de-filement.

87. Grant us. Lord, wisdom, power, reason, understanding and knowledge, that we may depart and flee for evermore from all works of Satan, the tempter.

88. Grant us, Lord, to do Thy will and good pleasure at all times, and write our names in the book of life in the kingdom of heaven with all saints and martyrs, through Jesus Christ our Lord, through whom to Thee with Him and the Holy Spirit be glory and dominion, both now and ever and unto the ages of ages. Amen.

* * *

89. Deacon : Give heed.

90. Priest : Holy things for the holy.

People : One is the holy Father, one is the holy Son, one is the Holy Spirit.

91. Priest : The Lord be with all of you.
People : And with your spirit.

92. The priest shall then lift up the whole Host with his hands and say:
Lord, have compassion upon us.

Priest : He stretched forth His hands to suffer. He suffered to cure the sick who have trusted in Him.

33. People : Remember us, Lord, in Thy kingdom Remember us, Lord Master, in Thy kingdom. Remember us, Lord, in Thy kingdom, as Thou did remember the thief on the right hand when Thou was on the tree of the holy cross.

34. Priest : He who has been given to suffering by His own will, suffered in order that He might heal the sick, strengthen those who were about to fall, find those who were outcast, give life to the dead, destroy death, break the bonds of Satan,

35. fulfill His Father's will, tread down hell, open the gates of life,

36. enlighten the righteous, establish the law, remove the darkness, cause the children to grow, and make known His resurrection.

ANAPHORA OF THE LORD

In the same night in which they betrayed Him.

37. Deacon : Priests, raise up your hands.

38. Priest : He took bread in his holy, blessed and spotless hands,

At this time he shall raise the bread.

39. People : We believe that this is He, truly we believe.

40. Priest : gave thanks, blessed and broke (+ three times. Then he shall indent the Host with his thumb) and gave it to his disciples saying unto them ; Take, eat, this (pointing) bread is My body which will be broken for you for the forgiveness of sin.

41. People : Amen. Amen. Amen. We believe and confess, we praise Thee, O our Lord and our God ; that this is He, truly we believe.

42. Priest : When ye do this, do it in remembrance of Me. And likewise also the cup, putting wine into it, giving thanks, blessing, hallowing, Thou gave it them. (+ three times). Truly this (pointing) is Thy blood which has been shed for our sins

People : Amen.

43. Priest : He shall then move the cup with his right hand in the form of the cross.

People : Amen. Amen. Amen. We believe and confess.

44. Priest : Now, Lord, remembering Thy death and resurrection, we believe in Thee.

45. People : We proclaim Thy death, Lord, and Thy holy resurrection. We believe in Thine ascension and Thy second advent. We glorify Thee, and confess Thee; we offer our prayer unto Thee and supplicate Thee, O our Lord and our God:

46. Priest : And we offer Thee this bread and this cup giving thanks unto Thee alone, O God the Saviour of the world, because Thou ordered us to stand before Thee and to serve Thee. For this reason, we, Thy servants, glorify Thee, O Lord.

People : For this reason, we, Thy servants, glorify Thee, O Lord.

47. Priest : Lord, we pray and beseech Thee to send the Holy Spirit and power upon this (pointing) bread and upon his (pointing) cup

48. to make them the body (+ once) and the blood (+ once, then + once more over both) of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ for ever.

People : Amen. Lord pity us, Lord spare us, Lord have mercy upon us.

49. Priest : Again we offer unto Thee this thanksgiving, eternal Trinity, Lord the Father of Jesus Christ, Whom every creature and soul fear, and the fear enters into the soul. This thanksgiving is fitting unto Thee.

50. We have not offered unto Thy holiness meat or drink. Let them not be for our judgement nor an occasion of reproach by the enemy nor for our destruction, but to the health of our flesh and strength of our spirit.

51. Yea, Lord our God, grant us, for the sake of Thy great Name, to flee from all thoughts which displease Thee.

52. Lord grant us that the counsel of death may depart from us, we who are written, through Thy Name, within the veil of Thy sanctuary[1] in the highest heaven.

53. Let death hear Thy Name and be troubled. Let the depths be cut asunder and, the enemy be trodden down.

[1] Lev. 4:7

THE ANAPHORA OF THE LORD

Let the spirit of destruction tremble, and the serpent be removed, let unbelief depart, and the criminal be destroyed, let anger be still, let envy come to nothing, and let him who continually sins be rebuked.

Let those who love money be cast out, let infirmity be removed, let the liar be cast out, and let all poisonous creatures be scattered.

54. Lord, grant inner light to the eyes of our heart, so that they may see, thank and glorify Thee, remembering Thee and serving Thee, because Thou only art their portion.

55. O Son and Word of God, served by all creatures, make perfect and strengthen the grace which Thou has revealed to them, and keep those who have the grace of health.

Make straight that faith, which those who praise Thee with the strength of the tongue, learned by the exercise of the tongue.

Save those who always fulfill Thy will. Visit the widow. Receive the orphans. Accept those who have gone to their rest in faith.

56. Grant us, Lord, a portion with all Thy saints. Grant us power to please Thee as they have pleased Thee.

57. Deacon : With all the heart let us beseech the Lord our God that He grant unto us the good communion of the Holy Spirit.

58. People : As it was, is, and shall be unto generations of generations, unto endless ages.

At this time the priest celebrant shall dip his finger into the blood to sign the body +.

59. Priest : Feed Thy people in truth and holiness. Grant, Lord, unity unto us who receive of Thy mystery that we may be truly satisfied with the Holy Spirit, grant power and strength of faith in righteousness,

60. to thank Thee always and Thy beloved Son Jesus Christ with the Holy Spirit for ever.

61. Priest : Grant us to be united through Thy Holy Spirit, and heal us by this oblation that we may live in Thee for ever.

The people shall repeat his words.

62. Priest : Blessed be the Name of the Lord, and blessed be He that comes in the Name of the Lord, and let the Name of His glory be blessed. So be it. So be it. So be it blessed.

The people shall repeat his words.

63. Priest : Send the Paraclete, the Spirit of righteousness.

People : Send upon us the grace of the Holy Spirit.

64. Deacon : Arise for prayer.

People : Lord have mercy upon us.

Priest : Peace be unto all of you.

People : And with your spirit.

((Prayer of Fraction)).

Instead of "The Prayer of Fraction," #A:58, 59, page 46, the prayer "Remember the flesh" may be said from The Anaphora of the Three Hundred and Eighteen, #E: 121-131, *page 94.

65. Priest : And again we ask the almighty God, the Father of the Lord and our Saviour Jesus Christ.

66. I praise Thee, Lord my God, Who sits upon the cherubim and rests in the high ones. (1) Thou knows the humble because Thou art in the light.

ANAPHORA OF THE LORD

67. O Thou Who causes the world to rest, Thou did show the hidden mystery on the cross. Who is merciful and holy as Thee?

68. Thou did give Thy power to Thine apostles who served Thee with meekness of heart and offered to Thee a sweet savour. For the sake of our Lord, God, and Saviour Jesus Christ. The almighty God is our Lord.

69. Deacon : Pray ye.

People : Our Father Who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name, Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven, give us this day our daily bread; forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors, and lead us, lest we hap into temptation, but deliver us, rescuing us from all evil; for Thine is the kingdom, the power and the glory for ever and ever.

70. Priest : Lord our almighty God, we pray Thee and beseech Thee that Thou may not remove Thy power from us,

71. even that power which Thou did give to the apostles who served Thee with meekness of heart and who offered unto Thee a sweet savour. For the sake of our Lord and our Saviour Jesus Christ, both now and ever. Amen.

72. People : The hosts of the angels of the Saviour of the world stand before the Saviour of the world,

73. and encircle the Saviour of the world, even the body and blood of the Saviour of the world.

74. Let us draw near the face of the Saviour of the world. In the faith which is from Him do we give thanks to Christ

(1) i.e. the angels.

75. Asst. Deacon : Open ye the gates, princes.
76. Deacon : Ye who are standing, bow your heads.

77.Priest : Lord our God Who sits upon the cherubim and the seraphim and looks down upon Thy people and Thine inheritance, bless Thy servants and Thy handmaids and their children.

78. Make him who receives, with a pure conscience, from Thy honourable table worthy of remission of sin, and of unity with the Holy Spirit to the salvation of body and soul, and worthy to come into the inheritance of the heavenly kingdom through Thy favour and will:

Through Thine only begotten Son, through Whom to Thee, with Him, and with the Holy Spirit be glory and dominion, both now and for ever. Amen.

79. Deacon : Worship the Lord with fear.

People : Before Thee, Lord, we worship, and Thee do we glorify.

80. Priest : "Prayer of Penitence." (Anaphora of the Apostles, # 72-138 p. 47)

81. After receiving the Holy Communion:

Priest: O Thou who pilots the soul, the leader of the righteous, the refuge of the saints, grant us, Lord, eyes trained so that they may always see Thee, and ears to hear only Thy word. When our souls are satisfied with Thy grace, create in us a pure heart, so that we may always appreciate Thy greatness, Thou Who art kind and the lover of man.

ANAPHORA OF THE LORD

82. Our God, as Thou loves our soul, grant us pure and constant thought; we Thy servants, who received Thy body and Thy blood, are humble.

For blessed and glorious is Thy kingdom, O Lord, Father, Son and Holy Spirit, both now and ever and unto the ages of ages.

People : Amen.

83. Priest : The Laying on of the Hand.

Bless Thy servants and thy handmaids, cover, help and dismiss them with the power of Thine angels; help them and confirm them in the fear of Thy holy Name. Adorn them with Thy greatness so that they may think and believe and desire that which is Thine.

84. Grant unity without sin, anger or ceasing, through Thine only-begotten Son, through Whom to Thee, with Him, and with the Holy Spirit be glory and dominion, both now, and ever, and unto the ages of ages.

People : Amen.

ANAPHORA OF JOHN SON OF THUNDER

1. The Anaphora of St. John, Son of Thunder(1), may the blessing of his prayer be with our (head of state : King, Queen, President . . .) and people, unto the ages of ages. Amen.

2. Priest : The Lord be with all of you.

People : And with your spirit.

Priest : Give ye thanks unto our God.

People : It is right, it is just.

Priest : Lift up your hearts.

People : We have lifted them up unto the Lord our God.

3. Priest : O Lord, we lift our eyes to Thee, we elevate our hearts, and we raise our consceinces and minds to Thee. Thou art eternal, existing before the universe was created, living for ever and ever.

4. Priest : There is no limit to Thy power, No one can understand Thee completely, and none can comprehend the fulness of Thine essence.

1) This anaphora was written by St. John the Evangelist. It is celebrated:
(a) on the commemoration of his passing, Ter 4 (January 12 [13 in leap years])
(b) in the first week of the month of Tahisas (December 10 - 17)
(c) at the season of flowers Meskerem 26 – Hedar 5 (October 6 – November 14)
(d) during the 43 day fast of the prophets
(e) on the feasts of prophets
(f) at the consecration of a new church
(g) on the commemorations of Apostles

5. None can even comprehend Thee or see Thee. Thou knows Thyself, Thy kingdom is without end, Thy power is immutable, Thy greatness is infinite, but Thy glory is not hidden. To all Thou art unseen, yet all is seen of Thee (1).

6. Thou has no beginning, but Thou brings all things to their end. Infinite art Thou, but for all things Thou set bounds.

All things are from Thee, all things are through Thee, and all things are for Thee.

Thou art in all, in Thy greatness Thou art higher than the high ones.

7. Thou visited the humble through the advent of Thy Son. In Thy invisibility Thou art more distant than those who are farthest. Yet, through Thy mercy Thou brings near to Thyself those who are far off.

8. Thou art inside all, and Thou art beyond all. Thy greatness is hidden in Thee, Thy power is hidden in Thee. Thou, Thyself veils Thyself with Thyself, and hides Thyself in Thyself.

9. Thy Son, Whom Thou begets, told us about Thee. He Who was born of Thee preached unto us tidings of Thee. He is honourable like Thee, Who eternally begets Him.

10. Thou has told us about Him, and Thou art His witness through Thy word that He is truly Thy Son and that Thou art truly His Father.

11. They worship Thee with Thy Son, and He has glory with Him Who begets Him. There is no day between Thee and Him, and there is no hour between the Son and His Father.

(1) An example of a paradox. The Anaphoras explain Biblical concepts using this and similar devices that might seem to some to be contradictions.

12. The Father is not greater than His Son, and the Son is not less than His Father. The thought of the heart, thinking deeply, cannot outrun the courier or be more exalted than the watchful;(1)

13. cannot surmise the unfathomable* mystery, enter to see Thee; try, ask, or slightly know Thee for one hour, even for a moment. No one knows that which is between the Son and His Father.

14. But Thy living Holy Spirit knows the depth of Thy Godhead. He has declared to us Thy nature, and told us about Thy oneness. He taught Thy unity, and helped us to know Thy Trinity. He has spoken to us about Thine incorruptible equality and Thine unseparable* unity and about Thine immutable* nature.

15. The Father is the witness of the Son and the Holy Spirit. And the Son preaches about the Father and the Holy Spirit. And the Holy Spirit teaches about the Father and the Son, in order that the three may be worshipped in one Name.

16. Thou makes known Thy hidden and curious glory to those who praise Thee, and shows it to them through the mercy of Thy grace. The high ones in their degrees, the angels in their orders, the watchful with their lightning, cherubim with their might, seraphim with glory, and all with fear and trembling, worship the Lord who is near as if they were far off.

* Examples of apophatic theology, that is "what may not be imagined or stated" about Him. Attempts to relate to God by considering "What He is not." Since we are only able to comprehend His energies, not His essence, we use even contradictions to explain what is beyond comprehension.

(1)the angels.

ANAPHORA OF JOHN SON OF THUNDER

17. Deacon : Let us give heed.

18. Priest : Covering their faces with lightning, lest the consuming fire should consume them, they cover their feet with live coal lest the flame of power should burn them. They fly through the four corners of the world and throughout the uttermost parts before Him Who is through all the ends of the world. With great, lucent and marvellous words they call upon the One who is invisible to hallow Him. With their hosts, with their orders, with their congregation, with their ranks they glorify Thee, Father, and worship Thee; and they glorify Thine only-begotten Son, and Thy living Holy Spirit.

19. All of them, together, offer Thee thanks for Thy glory. Make us equal with them, so that we may say together with them Lord remember us through Thy mercy.

20. Deacon : Answer ye.

People : Holy, holy, holy, perfect Lord of hosts, heaven and earth are full of the holiness of Thy glory.

21. Priest : Like them, we thank Thee, and believe that Thou art holy, holy, holy, perfect Lord of hosts, and that heaven and earth are full of the holiness of Thy glory.

22. Thou art unique and eternal, holy Father.
Thou art unique and eternal, holy Son.
Thou art unique and eternal, Holy Spirit : three names and one God.

23. Thou has granted all Thy saints, according to Thy goodness, to be saints.

24. Thou created all Thy creatures with Thy Word. Thou, being directed of none, did create all things.

25. Thou carries all without being weary. Thou feeds all without ceasing. Thou thinks of all without forgetting any.

26. Thou gives all without being diminished. Thou waters all without being dry. Thou remembers all without forgetfulness.

27. Thou watches all without sleeping. Thou hears all without neglecting any. Thou forgives all, taking nothing.

28. Thou art the generous one Who is not given anything by another, the creator whom none directs, the King Whom no one appoints, the Lord Whom none judges, the God to Whom none lends, Whom no one enriches, Thou art the giver out of Thy boundless store.

29. While Thou art filling every place they told us about Thee in a way we can receive.

30. Thou didst send thy Son to us. He came without being separated from Thee. He walked without being moved from Thee. He was with thee with all his body, and Thou sent Him to us without being separated from thee. He is where Thou art.

31. He was with His Father in heaven while He was with His parent on earth. He descended without subtracting from above and without adding beneath.

32. He was conceived in the womb yet the womb did not confine Him: He abode in the womb yet He was infinite; the Creator of all flesh lived in the womb.

33. He Who sits upon the cherubim abode in a daughter of flesh: the consuming fire put on flesh; the invisible Spirit has been clothed with flesh; He was born from that which was hidden unto that which was open ; He who forms infants in the womb became an infant; they wrapped with clothes, Him Who was clothed in light.

34. He dwelt in the house of the poor as one Who is poor: as a King, He sent messengers to bring Him presents from far.

35. He who leads the cow to know its owner slept in a stable. He grew as a child and they worshipped Him as the Lord of all. He walked as a man yet worked as God.

36. Willingly He became hungry as a son of man, and granted many hungry people to be satisfied with little bread according to His power. He thirsted as a man who dies, and changed the water into wine as being able to give life to all.

37. He slept as the children of flesh, and awoke and rebuked the winds as Creator. He became tired and rested as the humble, and walked upon the water as the highest.

38. They beat Him on the head as a servant and He set us free from the yoke of sin as Lord of all. He suffered all. He who cured the blind with his spittle and gave us the Holy Spirit received the spittle of the unclean.

39. He who forgives sin was accused as a sinner by them. The judge of judges was judged by them. He was crucified on the tree to destroy sin: He was counted with the sinners to enroll us with the righteous.

40. He died through His will, and was buried willingly; He died to destroy death, He died to give life to the dead; He was buried to raise those who were buried, to keep the living, to purify the impure, to justify the sinners, to gather together those who were scattered, and to turn the sinners to glory and honour.

Glory, honour and thanksgiving be to Thee for ever.

41. Deacon : Look to the east.

42. Priest : By the dead whom Thou did raise, and the living whom Thou has kept, and by the unclean whom Thou has purified, and by the unrighteous whom Thou has justified, by the scattered whom Thou has gathered, by the sinners whom Thou has brought back, Thou art to be believed. Amen.

43. We worship Thee and glorify Thee, O Thou Who art the object of wisdom, the word of counsel, the treasury of help, the abode of bliss, the source of gain, the fountain of prophecy, the marvellous stream, (glorified by the Apostles), the well of honour, the adornment of the kingdom, the pure crown of the clergy, Thou art the King who has a crown of glory, Whom they worship. Thou art the origin of glory, the light of honour,

44. unwoven garment, cloth which was not spun, the way to the Father, and the gateway to Him Who begot Him, the treasure which was discovered, the pearl which was found, the pound which added to itself, the talent which multiplied, the leaven which leavens the lump, the salt which gives savour to the savourless

45. Thou art the light which destroys darkness, the candle which enlightens the whole world, the unmovable foundation, the fortress which cannot be destroyed, the ship which cannot be wrecked, the dwelling place which cannot be compromised into, the easy yoke, the light burden: this is Jesus Christ who is the power and wisdom of His Father.

46. He thinks of all, feeds all, gives the blind light to see, opening the windows that were closed, enables the deaf to hear, and makes the deaf ear hear, takes away the garment of leprosy from the body and covers it with a garment of flesh.

47. He straightens the withered hand, and makes the lame foot to walk.

He restores the soul into its body, and puts the spirit into its dwelling place. He drowns the herd of swine by the legion of devils, and takes away the disease from the weak body.

48. O Sun of righteousness, from Thy wings, O Sun of righteousness, arises a fountain of good.

Glory, honour and thanksgiving be to Thee for ever.

49. Deacon : Ye that are sitting, stand lip.

50. Priest : We offer unto Thee a pure and perfect oblation in our penitence of soul in order that our body may be wholly sanctified.

We do not offer unto Thee gold, silver or precious stones of transgression and sin; or corruptible clothes, or of the flock which death destroys, or a slain lamb; but Him who through His death saved His flock, and gave life unto us.

51. (But those who denied Him will not be saved. They would have been saved if they had not denied Him.) But we offer of that which is Thine to Thy humanity.

We offer to Thee, to Thy divinty. We offer to Thee Thy body and Thy blood for Thy appearance before Thy pillars.[1]

52. We offer in Thy presence for the sake of Thy holy church which was saved from death through Thee, and for her sake Thou was beaten in the court of judgement, so that Thou might set her free through Thy blood, and that she might be fenced around with Thy cross and kept by Thy crucifixion against temptation until she shall enter the marriage feast in heaven.

53. For the sake of all Thy holy prophets who cried as horns and preached Thy rising unto all the nations which were in darkness.

54. For the sake of all Thine apostles who ploughed the ground of the heathen with the plough of Thy cross, and planted the treasure of Thy word to all the ends of the world.

55. And for the sake of all the victorious, faithful and pure martyrs whom the wolves ate as sheep.

56. And for the sake of all bishops who fulfilled their ministry in purity, whose service Thou accepted in order that Thou may give them the reward of their righteousness.

57. For the sake of all priests who kept in truth that which was entrusted to them in order that they may receive their heritage with pleasure.

58. And for the sake of all deacons who have made light the wings of their spirit so that they may be like those that are in the Holy Spirit.

59. For the sake of all the anagnosts who ministered well, taught and preached thy people.

[1] Ps. 74:3; Rev. 10:1, or firm believers.

ANAPHORA OF JOHN SON OF THUNDER

60. For the sake of all the victorious kings who gained their rest in faith.

61. For the sake of the young men and virgins who became enemies of this corruptible world and loved the marriage feast which is in heaven.[1]

62. And for the sake of all saints, who committed themselves to Thee and completed their fight, and entered bearing good names to ask for their reward according to Thy great word.[2]

63. For the sake of all our fathers and our brothers who departed from this world that Thou may have the remembrance of them before Thee.

64. And for the sake of all those who were born through the baptism of Thy great church, in order that Thou might be their delight in their conflict, and make them worthy of their crown.

65. And for the sake of all those who were killed with the spear and were taken captives; for the poor and the miserable; and for the sake of the widow and the orphan.

66. And for the sake of me, Thy humble servant, whom, though unworthy, Thou hast called through Thy grace. Thou hast promoted and exalted me while I was not fit. Thou hast brought me near before Thee through Thy mercy to stand before Thy altar, Lord, in order that Thou may forgive my soul and all Thy people.

67. And for the sake of this our congregation, that it may be blessed through the multitude of Thy grace, so that the weak may be strengthened, the unrighteous may be justified, the repentant may be purified

[1] Rev. 19:9
[2] Mt. 25:31 - 46

67. and the righteous may be kept, the troubled may be saved, the oppressed may rest, the disturbed may be quieted, the sad may rejoice, the hopeless may be delivered, the sick may live, the transgressors may turn, the castaway may be found, and whoever is far off may draw near, and that whoever is near may be preserved.

68. And for the sake of all those who desire to have their remembrance before Thee, because Thou knows all and approves all.

69. And for the sake of the fruit of the crop produced yearly, so that it may be blessed through Thy mercy.

70. People: According to Thy mercy, our God, and not according to our sins (T*hrice)*.

71. Priest : And that Thou may grant the crown through Thy mercy. And for the sake of all those who brought this memorial oblation that Thou may receive their vow and accept their offering.

72. For the sake of those who took Thy seal and went out of this world of suffering and arrived in the country of happiness, so that they may enter Thy feast and receive Thy crown there, and rest in their everlasting abode in the city whose builder and maker Thou art.

73. And for the sake of all who trespassed and sinned as human beings, that Thou may forgive their sins and remit their trespasses and iniquities as a compassionate, kind God, and their hope.

74. And for the sake of all those whose names we know and those whose names we do not know, because they are well known to Thee, yea Thou knows them, that their remembrance may be before Thee

ANAPHORA OF JOHN SON OF THUNDER

75. Deacon : For the sake of the blessed . . . (T*he Anaphora of the Apostles, # 6 - 9: p. 43)*

76. Asst. priest : "The Prayer of Benediction" (The Anaphora of the Apostles, #10-21: p. 43 - 44).

77. Asst. Deacon : Lord pity and have mercy upon the patriarchs, archbishops, bishops, priests, deacons, and all the Christian people.

78. Priest : Remember those, and rest the souls of them all, and cause them to grow by the flowing water in the garden of paradise in Thy holy houses in the bosoms of Abraham. Isaac and Jacob, by Thine angels who are the leaders of light, through our Lord Jesus Christ, Thy beloved Son.

79. At this time the priest shall offer the incense.

People : Lord, remember us in Thy kingdom . . .(thrice). (Anaphora of the Apostles, #34: p. 45)

80. Priest : In the same night in which they betrayed Him:

81. Deacon : Priests, raise up your hands.

82.Priest : since He was willing to be killed and was pleased to suffer at their hands and bear the agony of the nails that He might set His church free through His blood, strengthen His people by His cross, erect His altar, root out the idols, choose out the clergy, and scatter the sorcerers.

83. He took in His holy, blessed hands the bread, which is the dowry of his bride and the divorcement of the synagogue which He did divorce, At this time he shall raise the bread.

84. People : We believe that this is He, truly we believe.

85. Priest : gave thanks, blessed (+ three times) and broke,

Then he shall indent the Host lightly with his thumb in five places, without separation.

and gave it to his disciples saying unto them : This is My body which is meat indeed ; whoso eats of it will not die, and whosoever partakes of it will not perish. Take, eat of it, all of you. (pointing)

86. People : Amen. Amen. Amen. We believe and confess ; we glorify Thee, O our Lord and our God ; that this is He we truly believe.

87. Priest : And likewise also He gave thanks over the cup : (+ three times) and said This cup is My blood of the new testament, take and drink ye all of it.

He shall point at the cup, then move it with his right hand in the sign of the cross.

88. People : Amen. Amen. Amen. We believe and confess.

89. Priest : To those who worship Him, it is a wonderful sign, to those who crucified Him it is a place of judgement. That which was written with His blood, stamped with His crucifixion, and honoured with His death is for eternal life for the remission of sin.

Likewise make a remembrance of Me as often as ye are gathered together.

90. People : We proclaim Thy death, Lord, and Thy holy resurrection.

ANAPHORA OF JOHN SON OF THUNDER

91. Priest : We, who are gathered together to make remembrance of Thy sufferings and partake in Thy resurrection from the dead, beseech Thee, Lord our God, as this bread which was scattered along the mountains and the little hills, in the forests and in the vales, being gathered together, became one perfect bread,[1] likewise gather us together, through Thy divinity, out of all evil thought of sin into Thy perfect faith.

92. As with the mixture of this wine with water, the one cannot be separated from the other, so let Thy divinity be united with our humanity, and our humanity with Thy divinity, and let Thy greatness be united with our humility and our humility with Thy greatness. Lord accept this our offering from us for a memorial of righteousness before Thee.

93. Like Abel we offer to Thee a pure oblation and like all those who are blameless, with whom Thy majesty was pleased, the memorial of whose everlasting offerings is before Thee

94. Like the prudent Noah and all the meek upon whom Thy divinity rests. Thou exalted them, through Thy kindness, to grant them a good portion and inheritance, with eternal life, in the kingdom of heaven together with all those who obeyed Thee,

95. Like our meek fathers Abraham, Isaac and Jacob who did good, left (this world) in purity and reign in righteousness,

96. Like Thy servant Moses and all the prophets who preached to us without fear and proclaimed Thee without doubting that they would receive their reward in full.

[1] Compare Anaphora of St. Jacob of Serough, p. 155, para. 68, and Anaphora of St. Gregory II, p. 165, para. 27.

97. like Simon Peter and all Thy disciples, like Paul and all Thy holy apostles who bore Thy Gospel through that which they suffered and sustained the preaching of Thy doctrine in their death,

98. like Stephen and all Thy martyrs who shed their blood because of Thy shed blood, so that they might receive honour from Thy glory, whose names were written in the book of life[1], in the free Jerusalem, in heaven which is truly our mother. We have believed in Thy holy church.

99. Lord our God, Thy church prays to Thee and worships Thee, Thy bride[2] exalts Thee, and Thy people praise Thee.

100. Through the prayer of the perfect, through the worship of the saints, through the supplication of the watchful,[3] through the advocacy of the angels, through the praise of the archangels, through the hallowing of the seraphim, through the honouring of the cherubim, through the highness of all the high let the gate of light be opened, and let the doors of glory be unlocked, and let Thy living Holy Spirit come, descend, light upon, linger and dwell upon and bless the offering of this bread, and sanctify the cup,

101. and make this bread the communion of Thy body, O Life-giver (+ once upon the Body) and make this cup also the communion of Thy blood, giver of mercy (+ once upon the Cup, then + once more upon both the Body and the Cup).

ANAPHORA OF JOHN SON OF THUNDER

People : Amen. Lord, pity us; Lord spare us; Lord have mercy upon us.

102. Deacon : With all our heart let us beseech the Lord our God that He grant unto us the good Communion of the Holy Spirit.

103. People : To everyone who believes in the living Father, in the only-begotten Son Who arose from Him and in the Holy Spirit Who is unsearchable,

At this time he shall sign the Body with the Blood. and to him who partakes of Thy body and thy blood let them be for hope, salvation, forgiveness of sin, resurrection from the dead, light in the kingdom of heaven and everlasting life. Amen.

104. People : As it was, is and shall be unto generations of generations, and endless ages.

105. Priest : Uniting them[1] together, grant to all that take of these, that they may be unto them for holiness and for filling with the Holy Spirit, so that we may thank Thee always and Thy beloved Son Jesus Christ, unto ages of ages. Amen.

106. Priest : Grant us . . . (Anaphora of the Apostles, #54- 56: p. 46).

107. Deacon : Arise for prayer.
People : Lord have mercy upon us.
Priest : Peace be unto all of you.
People : And with your Spirit.

108. Priest : Prayer of Fraction : And again we supplicate the almighty Lord, Father of the Lord and our Saviour Jesus Christ because He has made us worthy to fulfill this holy mystery, and we beseech the almighty Lord our God to vouchsafe to us a day of blessing.

[1] that is the Body and the Blood.

109. Deacon : Pray ye.

People : Our Father who art in heaven . . .(see #III : 23, p. 21)

110. Priest : O Lord, almighty, Father of our Lord God and Saviour Jesus Christ, we offer our prayer to Thee and supplicate Thee through all and in all, because Thou has made us worthy again to fulfil this holy mystery, and grant that this may be a blessing to us.

111. Do not suffer anyone of us to be guilty, and suffer it not to be a pleasure of the flesh, but let it be to all of us a refreshment of the soul to receive Thy holy mystery through our Lord Jesus Christ, through Whom to Thee with Him and with the Holy Spirit be glory and dominion, both now and ever and unto endless ages. Amen.

112. Priest : Before the glory of Thy holiness Thy servants and handmaids have prostrated themselves in soul and body and spirit ; incline Thine ear unto their supplication, and purify them from all uncleanness of body and soul that they may receive Thy holy mystery and be united through it : Through Thine only-begotten Son, through Whom to Thee with Him and with the Holy Spirit be glory and dominion both now and ever and unto the ages of ages. Amen.

113. People : The hosts of the angels of the Saviour of the world stand before the Saviour of the world

114. and encircle the Saviour of the world, even the body and blood of the Saviour of the world

115. And let us come before the face of the Saviour of the world. In the faith, which is of Him, the martyrs shed their blood for His sake.

ANAPHORA OF JOHN SON OF THUNDER

116. Asst. Deacon : Open the gates, ye princes.

117. Deacon : Ye who are standing, bow your heads.

118. Priest : What blessing? With what speech might we glorify, what word, what praise, what thanksgiving, and what name are we to proclaim over this bread which will be broken, save Thy name, Jesus Christ, Whose name is Giver of life and Saviour?

119. This bread of life which descended from heaven is for the salvation of the world. We bless Thee who became for us the way to the place of life.

120. We offer thanksgiving to Thee Who through Thy word created all. Thou art the leader, Thou art the door of grace, Thou art the salt, Thou art the pearl of great price, Thou art the net of life; righteousness art Thou, power, wisdom, refuge, rest, help and salvation. It is Thou, being called after these names, Who became man through love of men, in order that they may be saved and renewed from the former open evil works into which they fell through sin. Glory be to Thee, unto the ages of ages.

121. Deacon : Worship the Lord with fear.

People : Before Thee, Lord, we worship, and Thee do we glorify.

122. Prayer of Penitence. (Anaphora of the Apostles, # 72 - 88: pp. 47 & 48).

123. Deacon : Give heed.

Priest : Holy things for the holy.

People : One is the holy Father, one is the holy Son, one is the Holy Spirit.

124. Priest : The Lord be with all of you.

People : And with your spirit.

Priest : Lord, have compassion upon us, O Christ. (Anaphora of the Apostles, # 92-93: p. 49)

People : shall repeat his words.

125. Deacon : Ye that are penitent bow your heads.

126. After receiving the Holy Communion the following prayer shall be said instead of "The Pilot of the Soul."
Priest : And again we beseech the almighty God, the Father of our Lord and our Saviour Jesus Christ, 127. thanking him through all and in all. because He has made us worthy to fulfill the receiving of the holy mystery. We beseech the almighty Lord our God to grant us a day of blessing.

Deacon : Pray ye.

128. Priest : O almighty Lord, we beseech Thee through all and in all because Thou has hid these things[1] from those who pretended to be wise and prudent and revealed them to us the meek.

129. Yea, Father, for so it seemed good in Thy sight. Grant that our receiving of Thy holy mystery be not unto condemnation nor unto judgement but unto the remission of sin and for everlasting life and for true knowledge. Grant us this we beseech Thee.

130. And as Thou hast made us worthy to receive Thy holy mystery in this world, so also make our portion to be with Thy saints in the forthcoming resurrection from the dead, through our Lord and our Saviour Jesus Christ, through whom to Thee with Him and with the Holy Spirit be glory and dominion, both now and ever and unto endless ages. Amen.

[1] Matt 11 : 25; Lk. 10 : 21.

ANAPHORA OF JOHN SON OF THUNDER

131. Priest : The laying on of the Hand.

Before the glory of thy holiness Thy servants and handmaids have prostrated themselves in soul, body and spirit. Incline Thine ear unto their supplication.

132. Bless them who mind the heavenly things with the blessing of Thine angels and powers. Bless the work of their hand, and be with them in every good work.

133. Grant that by their receiving of Thy holy mystery they may be prudent, watchful and freed from all evil, and may be nourished in their souls, bodies and spirits, through our Lord Jesus Christ, through Whom to Thee with Him, and the Holy Spirit be glory and dominion both now and ever and unto the ages of ages.
Amen.

THE ANAPHORA OF ST. MARY [1]

1. The Anaphora of our Lady, the Virgin Mary, mother of God, which Abba Heryacos[2] Bishop of the Province of Behnesa, composed through the Holy Spirit.

May her prayer, the blessing and mercy of her beloved Son be with our (head of state: King, Queen, President. . .) unto the ages of ages. Amen.

2. Priest : The Lord be with all of you.
People : And with your spirit.
Priest : Give thanks to our God.
People : It is right, it is just.
Priest : Lift up your hearts.
People : We have lifted them up unto the Lord our God.

3. Priest : My heart indites a good deliberation ; my heart ponders a worthy concept ; my heart exclaims a noble oracle. [3]

4. And I speak of the Anaphora of Mary, not at length but briefly. And I speak the praise of the Virgin, not in many words, which would be forgotten, but in few. And I speak of the exaltation of the Virgin.

[1] This Anophora is celebrated on the following occasions
a. most feast days of St. Mary.
b. 28th Tahesas (January 6), the day preceding the Nativity of Christ
c. 29th Megabit (April 7), the memorial day of the Annunciation.
d. 2nd Tekemit (October 12), the memorial day of St. Heryacos, Bishop of Behnesa.

[2] An Egyptian Church cleric, who became bishop of the Province of Behnesa, in Upper Egypt.

[3] Three complementary translations of Ps. 44 (45):1, each conforming better with the Ge'ez than previous editions that repeated the KJV quote three times.

5. And today I stand, this very day, in humility and love before this mighty mystery and before this table and offering.

6. Truly this is the offering which those whose spirits are defiled cannot taste. It is not like the sacrifice of the forefathers which depended upon the blood of sheep, oxen and cows, but it is fire. [1]

7. It is fire,(2) giving life to the upright in heart who fulfill His will. It is a consuming fire to the unrighteous who deny His name.

8. Truly it is a fire[2] that even the fire clad cherubim and seraphim cannot touch.

9. O Mary, for this we love and exalt you, because you bore for us the true Food of righteousness and the true Drink of life.

10. O our fathers, consecrated by the laying on of hands, successors of the apostles, whom we have taken as intercessors towards God, also, during our days, we take as representatives between us and God these two: The Patriarch of the great City of (_____), Abba (_____), and the blessed Archbishop, Abba (_____), the primate of our country.

11. Deacon : For the sake of the blessed, happy, prosperous, holy and pure Virgin Mary, our Lady, Parent of God, glorified by all.

12. And for the sake of the holy, honourable, spiritual, heavenly and mighty archangels; and for the sake of John the Baptist, the preacher and fore-runner. And for the sake of the holy and glorified ministers, Matthew, Mark, Luke and John, the four Evangelists:

[1] Ex. 32:20; Lev. 6:30.
[2] Exodus 3:2.

ANAPHORA OF ST. MARY

13. For Thy holy servants Peter and James; John and Andrew; Philip and Bartholomew; Thomas and Matthew; James the son of Alphaeus ; Thaddaeus, Simon and Matthias ; the twelve Apostles: and the Apostle James, brother of our Lord and Bishop of Jerusalem ; and the holy glorious Stephen, the archdeacon and the first martyr.

14. And for the sake of all saints and martyrs who have gone to their rest in the true faith: Paul, Timothy, Silas, and Barnabas, Titus, Philemon and Clement, the seventy-two disciples, the five hundred brethren, the three hundred and eighteen orthodox.

15. Lord, remember each and all; also the holy Patriarch Abba (_____), and the blessed and holy Archbishop Abba (_____) to preserve their life, save them, forgive their sin, and to have compassion upon us through their prayers, unto endless ages.

16. The assistant priest shall say (The Prayer of Benediction)). (Anaphora of the Apostles, #10 -21 pp. 43 - 44).

17. Asst.. Deacon : Lord, pity and have mercy upon the patriarchs, archbishops, bishops, priests, deacons and all the Christian people.

* * *

18. Priest : O Intercessor,[1] intercede with your Son for the sake of each and all, to give rest to the souls of all the patriarchs, archbishops, bishops, priests and deacons who keep straight the way of the true word: kings, rulers, princes, those in authority, young men, virgins, monks, rich, poor, great, small, old women, orphans, sojourners, miserable, and all Christian people from the congregation of the church who in days gone by have gone to their rest.

19. Make earnest intercession for those who have fallen asleep in this place that He (Thy Son) may give their souls a quiet rest,

20. in every place which is called the place of the victorious martyrs, in the place of the blessed righteous, in the place of the watchful angels[1]. You[2] are the inheritance in every place, and your name is acceptable before God.

21. Deacon : Ye that are sitting, stand up.

22. Priest : Let us stand up in the fear of God to exalt and glorify her who is full of glory saying, O you who are full of grace, O you who are the channel of joy, you have a countenance more beautiful than the many-eyed cherubim and the six-winged seraphim.

23. Deacon : Look to the east.

24. Priest : Truly God the Father looked down from heaven towards the east, the west, the north and the south, and towards all the ends (of the earth). He breathed in every savour,[3] and found none like unto you. He approved your savour and loved your beauty and so sent to you His beloved Son.

25. Deacon : Let us give heed.

26. Priest : Holy is God the Father Who loved you, holy is the only-begotten Son Who abode in your womb, and holy is the Paraclete, the Spirit of righteousness, Who strengthened you.

27. Deacon : Answer ye.

29. Priest : O Virgin, full of glory, with whom or with what likeness shall we liken you? You are the loom from which Emmanuel took his ineffable garment of flesh. He made the warp from the same flesh as that of Adam, and the woof is your flesh. The shuttle is the Word himself, Jesus Christ. The length of the warp is the shadow of God the Most High. the weaver is the Holy Spirit.

30. How marvellous and wonderful is this thing ! O bridge over which the ancient fathers crossed from death unto life! O ladder(1) from earth to heaven, through you the first creation was renewed.

31. You were the hope of Adam (2) when he was driven out from paradise, the meekness of Abel who was killed through unrighteousness, the kindness of Seth, the works of Enoch (3), the ark of Noah (4) through which he was saved from evil's destruction, the blessing and portion of Shem,

37. O Virgin, you are the ideal and the prophecy of the prophets, the favour of the apostles, the mother of martyrs; the sister of angels ; the boast of the young men and virgins and the monks who are watchful day and night at your gates.

38. O Virgin, you were not conceived through unclean lust, but in lawful marriage you were born from Hannah and Joachim.

39. O Virgin, you did not grow in mirth like the Hebrew daughters who stiffened their necks, but you lived in the sanctuary in holiness and purity.

40. O Virgin, you did not eat earthly bread but heavenly bread prepared in the heaven of heavens.

41. O Virgin, you did not drink earthly drink, but heavenly drink poured from the heaven of heavens.

43. O Virgin, the depraved young men could not entice you, but the angels of heaven visited you, and, as it was said, the priests and the high priests praised you.

44. O Virgin, you were not espoused to Joseph for coming together, but in order that he might keep you in purity, and thus it was fulfilled.

45. When God the Father saw your purity He sent you his radiant angel, named Gabriel, and he told you: "The Holy Spirit shall come upon you, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow you."(1)

46. The Word came to you without being separated from the bosom of His Father; you conceived Him without* His being limited, and He stayed in your womb without making subtraction from above or addition beneath.

47. There abode in your womb the inestimable and immeasurable* fire of the godhead. It is not just to compare Him with earthly fire. Fire has limits and volume, but of the Deity, it cannot* be said that it is like this or even seems to be like this.

48. The Godhead has no* circuit like the sun and moon, nor stature like man, but He is mighty and sitting in His highest heaven which neither the thought of man nor the knowledge of angels can reach.

ANAPHORA OF ST. MARY

50. The Deity has no* place wherein to stretch or contract himself but He fills every place.

51. The Deity has neither* firmament above nor foundation beneath, but He is Himself the firmament and the foundation.

52. The Deity does not* stoop nor bow down the head to take up that which is on earth, but all is in His hand as He showed Peter.

53. The Deity has neither* chest nor back by which he can be seen, and through which He can be limited, but He is covered with the flame of fire and He is Himself the flame of fire. The Deity is clean, pure, and bright.

54. We believe that the Father Who sends is Father in His nature. We believe that the Son Who is sent is Son in His nature. We believe that the life-giving Holy Spirit is Holy Spirit in His nature. Three Names but one God.

55. It is not* with the Deity as it was with Abraham who was older than Isaac, or with Isaac who was older than Jacob, but the Father is not older than the Son, neither is the Son older than the Holy Spirit, and the Holy Spirit is not younger than the Son, neither is the Son younger than His Father.

56. It is not* with the Deity as it was with Abraham who gave commands to Isaac, or with Isaac who gave orders to Jacob, but the Father, being Father, does not give orders to the Son ; and the Son, being Son, is not exalted; and the Holy Spirit.

Examples of theology called "apophatic" = "what may not be believed or said." It attempts to relate to God by considering "What He is not." Since we are only able to comprehend His energies, not His essence, we use dictions, and even contradictions to explain what is beyond us.

57. But the Divine Father, Son and Holy Spirit are one God, one kingdom, one authority and one government.

58. The Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit think. (1) The Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit speak. (2) The Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit approve. (3)

59. The Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit take counsel. (4) The Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit utter the word.

The Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit complete. (5)

60. The Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit create. (6) The Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit unite. (7) The Father, the Son and the Holy, Spirit create well. (8)

61. The Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit send. (9)

The Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit give authority. (10)

The Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit hear witness. (11)

(1) Thoughts like : "Let us create man in our . . ." (2) He spoke and it was done Ps. 32 (33):9. (3) And God saw everything that he had made, and, behold, it was very good. Gen. 1:31. (4) They took counsel (Gen. 1:26 "Let Us . . .") to create the world. (5) Completed the creation of the universe, making it habitable. (6) Created the cosmos. (7) Combined the elements of the cosmos, producing earth, water, fire and wind. (8) Created Adam and appointed elements to coalesce in their function: the earth to carry, the water to irrigate, the fire to metabolize food and the air to sustain all the nerves in man's body. (9) Directing the course of the planets. (10) Authorized the formation of the body in the womb. (11) The Father from heaven witnessed saying; This is my beloved Son, and the Holy Spirit rested upon Him in the shape of a dove.

ANAPHORA OF ST. MARY

62. The Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit draw. (1)

The Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit accustom. (2)

63. The Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit advise. (3)

The Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit purify.

The Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit cleanse.

The Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit hallow. (4)

64. The Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit strengthen.

The Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit encourage. The Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit teach.

65. The Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit crown. The Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit clothe. (5) The Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit grant grace.

66. The Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit sit. (6) The Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit judge. (7)

The Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit examine.

67. Thus we, without separating or dividing, believe and confess the oneness and unity so that it will not be divided or separated. Let us distinguish (8) so that it will not be confused.

68. We do not say "three" as we say Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, but one is three persons.

(1) Draw man with the cords of love. (2) Fit man to adapt as he goes. (3) Advise man through Tradition: Life in Christ, the history of salvation as it stands from the Apostolic age, that the Church codified in the Scriptures. (4) qedasi literally means "hallowing." (5) Clothe with divine power that is grace. (6) They preside in the midst of the congregation. (7) Search the hearts. (8) Distinguish between Trinity and oneness, divine energies and essence.

69. We do not say One like Adam the first creature, but three with one nature.
70. Now we hear the wicked Jews and the unrighteous Ishmaelites, who, being without understanding, say God is one person and one body ; they are of a blind heart.

71. Now we see the idolatrous heathen whose idols are many and whose devils are many.
72. But we follow the leaders to the good way as the Apostles taught us saying : it is as if

73. The Father is the sun, the Son is the sun, and the Holy Spirit is the sun : but it is one sun of righteousness over all.
74. The Father is fire, the Son is fire, and the Holy Spirit is fire ; but it is one fire of life in the highest heaven.

75. The Father is the dawn, the Son is the dawn, and the Holy Spirit is the dawn : but it is a single eastern dawn through which, by the ray of its light, the darkness was destroyed.
76. The Father is the vine, the Son is the vine and the Holy Spirit is the vine: but it is one vine of life from which all the world tasted.

77. The Father is milk, the Son is milk and the Holy Spirit is milk: but it is one milk[1] unmixed.
78. Thus we believe and thus we confess and say the creed.

79. The people shall say the creed of the 318. (Anaphora of the Three Hundred #1 - 10: p. 86).
80. Let us now return again to peak of the holy Virgin, speaking of her conception which is wonderful to all, and saying: O Virgin, when there abode in your womb the fire of the Godhead, Whose face is fire, Whose clothes are fire, Whose covering is fire, how did it not burn you?

ANAPHORA OF ST. MARY

81. In what part of your womb were the seven curtains of the flame of fire prepared and spread ? Were they in the right or the left side while you were such a small body?
82. In what part of your womb was the glittering cherubic throne, compassed by the flame of fire, prepared and planted while you were a young bride?
83. How wonderful it is! A mother and a maid ; the narrowness of the womb and the infinite; conception without intercourse, as a bee conceives, from the voice of a word; milk [(1)] with virginity.
84. When I think of this, my mind likes to swim in the depth of your Son's seas, and the billows from the hiding-place of your Beloved sweep across it.
85. Again when I think of this my mind likes to soar and ascend secretly and draw back the curtains of the hiding-places of the Living One ; it becomes afraid of the flame of fire and does not reach even one-fourth of the way to heaven.
86. When I think of this my mind likes to mount the shoulders of the winds to fly east, west, north and south to all the ends (of the world) to see the nature of the creatures, to measure the depths of the seas and to know the height of heaven, and travelling thus to every part it becomes faint and returns again to its former place.

(1) i.e. Milk to feed her baby even though she was a virgin.

87. Now let us not further enquire or even think of the greatness and profundity of Him Whose grandeur cannot worthily be praised, no, not by the tongues of the prophets nor of the apostles.

88. He is the mighty One Whom none can discern by subtle device_ but He became humble among us; He is the most high, to Whom none can attain_ but among us He took upon Him the form of a servant; He is the impalpable fire, but we saw Him and felt Him and ate and drank with Him.

Now let us praise Him saying.

89. People : Holy God, holy Mighty, holy Living, Immortal ....

90. O Virgin who gives the fruit that can be eaten, and the spring of that which can be drunk

91. O Bread got from you, that gives life and salvation to those who eat of it in faith.

92. O Bread got from you, that is as hard as the stone of Admas (1) which cannot be chewed, to those who do not eat of it in faith.

93. O Cup got from you, that helps those who drink of it in faith to indite wisdom, and that gives them life.

94. O Cup got from you, that intoxicates those who do not drink of it in faith and causes them to stumble and fall and adds sin to them instead of the remission of sin

ANAPHORA OF ST. MARY

95. And now let us glorify Him saying Glory be to Thee, glory to Thy kingdom, glory with pure incense we offer to Thee.

96. At this time he shall offer incense.

People : Remember us, Lord, in Thy kingdom. . . . (Anaphora of the Apostles, #34: p. 43).

* * *

97. Priest : Jesus Christ, Son of the living God, from Whom is found every good gift and every perfect gift, became man, fulfilled all the law of man yet without sin, and practiced the law of the Hebrews.

98. He was baptized by John, tempted in the wilderness, hungered and thirsted and did miracles.

99. In the same night in which He gave His soul to death He showed His disciples many signs concerning His sufferings, crucifixion, death, His resurrection on the third day with body and soul, with bone and blood, as it was before, when His disciples were with Him on His right and left, and when there was counted with them Judas whose creation was like the tares added to wheat, and who betrayed Him.

100. Deacon : Priests, raise up your hands.

101. Priest : At that time Jesus Christ took bread in his holy, blessed, pure and spotless hands

102. People : We believe that this is He, truly we believe.

103. Priest : He looked up to heaven towards Thee His Father, interceded with His parent, and committed his disciples to Him to keep them from all evil:

Blessed while He (it) was blessed (+ three times), broke while He (it) was holy

104. Then he shall indent the Host slightly with his thumb in five places without separation.

105. And gave it to His disciples and said unto them : take, eat this (pointing) bread is My body which will be given to you as a propitiation for the whole world.

106. People : Amen. Amen. Amen. We believe and confess, we glorify Thee, O our Lord and our God: that this is He we truly believe.

107. Priest : And likewise also the cup (+ three times) after supper : He pointed and said : Take, drink, this (pointing) cup is My blood which the spear will shed for your sake.

108. He shall then move, the cup with his right hand in the sign of the cross

109. People : Amen. Amen. Amen. We believe and confess.

110. Priest : And as often as you do this, do it in remembrance of My death, and proclaim the remembrance of My resurrection.

111. People : We proclaim Thy death, Lord, and Thy holy resurrection, we believe in Thine ascension and Thy second advent. We glorify Thee and confess Thee, we offer our prayer unto Thee and beg Thee, O our Lord and our God.

112. Priest : O Our Lord, as it happened then bless, break and give this (pointing) bread (+ once).

People : Amen.

113. Priest : Our Lord as it happened then bless, hallow and give this (pointing) cup (+ once over the cup, and + once more over both).

People : Amen.

114. Priest : And this my ministry, purify and accept it and may it please Thee.

People : Amen.

115. Priest : And this priest who is with me to help me in this ministry, and me, make like Joseph and Nicodemus who wrapped Thy body.

People : Amen.

116. Priest : And this deacon sent according to the law of ministry, suffer to reach our great rank of priesthood, and make him full of grace, righteousness and favour like Stephen who saw the Trinity and marvelled and was astonished through the descent of the Holy Spirit.

People : Amen.

117. Priest : And this people who have gathered together in Thy holy church with priests and deacons, great and small, make worthy to take Thy holy mystery ; have compassion and do not judge them.

People : Amen. Lord pity us, Lord Spare us, Lord have mercy upon us.

118. Priest : Lord, have mercy upon us, O Christ (three times).

The people shall repeat his words.

119. Deacon : With all the heart let us beseech the Lord our God that He grant unto us the good communion of the Holy Spirit.

120. People : As it was, is and shall be unto generations of generations, and endless ages.

121. He then shall dip his finger into the Blood and+ sign the Body.

Priest : Grant it to all of them that take of it, that it may be unto them for everlasting life.

122. Grant us to be united through Thy Holy Spirit, and heal us by this oblation that we may live in Thee for ever.

The people shall repeat his words.

123. Priest : Blessed be the name of the Lord, and blessed be He that comes in the name of the Lord, and let the name of His glory be blessed. So be it. So be it. So be it blessed.

The people shall repeat his words.

124. Priest : Send the grace of the Holy Spirit upon us.

The people shall repeat his words.

125. Deacon : Arise for prayer.

People : Lord have mercy upon us.

Priest : Peace be unto all of you.

People : And with your spirit.

126. The priest The Prayer of Fraction:

God, Maker of all, the Source of all, the Completer of all, the Almighty, the Holder of all, Thou art He Whom angels, archangels, thrones, authorities, lords, powers, the sun, the moon, the stars and the whole creation worship, because they are His subjects, dominions, and are ruled by Him. Though He was rich in everything yet He became poor in everything.

127. Love drew the mighty Son down from His throne and led Him to death.

128. O Ox, Who with Thy hand made no effort against those who draw Thee, but bowed down Thy neck to those who would slay Thee.

129. O Sheep dumb before Thy shearers ; O Patience Who did not open Thy mouth at the time of Thy sufferings before those who pierced Thee

ANAPHORA OF ST. MARY

130. O Bread found in the treasure, which Joseph obtained in merchandise, in which also he found the pearl of great price

131. O Cup found in the house into which no man entered,

132. O this sign of the cross (1) separated from this host without being divided or alienated, but its appearance, taste and softness are the same :

133. As His divinity was not separated or divided from His humanity so also this sign of the cross[1] is not separated or divided from this host

134. Likewise also let Thy greatness be united with our humility and our humility with Thy greatness, Thou almighty Lord our God.

135. Deacon : Pray ye.

People : Our Father who art in heaven . . .

(see Anaphora B, #69 : p. 62)

136. Priest : Let us hear then, till our last breath, this word through which we will be accused, judged and forgiven.

137. As the Son came from the heaven of heavens for judgement and mercy, this bread will be accused, judge and forgiver.

138. Let the soul fear, the nerves tremble and the door of the heart be broken by this terrible word.

139. Now this divine bread has been broken and this life-giving cup has been prepared. Let him who desires to take, come: but first examine yourselves and cleanse your bodies.

140. If there is anyone who is impure, let him not approach, and if there is any one who hath fallen into sin, let him not forget it because it must not be forgotten.

[1] i.e. the central part of the Host (Asbadikon) bearing the sign of the cross.

141. If there is any one who disdisdains this holy communion, let him not approach, but let him be prevented. As you see, this bread is not as perishable as the earthly bread (1), but it is the fire of the godhead (2).

142. What mouth is that which takes in this bread, what teeth are those which masticate this bread, and what stomach is that which can contain this bread?

143. And now let us say According to Thy mercy, our God, and not according to our sins.

144. People : According to Thy mercy . . . . (thrice).

145. Afterwards the people shall say :

The hosts of the angels of the Saviour of the world stand before the Saviour of the world and encircle the Saviour of the world, even the body and blood of the Saviour of the world.

And let us come before the face of the Saviour of the world to praise Christ in faith that is His.

146. Asst. Deacon : Open ye the gates, princes.

147. Deacon : Ye who are standing, bow your heads.

148. We lay our souls before Thee, Lord, maker of all, the invisible God. We humble ourselves to Thee, the humbler of all. We worship Thee, Who created all to worship Thee. We serve Thee, ruler of all.

149. O Thou Who discovers that which is hidden and covers as in secret all that is open.

(1) John 6 : 27.
(2) Rm. 1 : 20

ANAPHORA OF ST. MARY

O Thou Who is able to send forth that which is within and take within that which is without, hear now the cries of Thy people who call upon Thee in righteousness.

150. Deacon : Worship the Lord with fear.

People : Before Thee, Lord, we worship, and Thee do we glorify.

151. The priest shall say "The Prayer of Penitence." (Anaphora of the Apostles: 72 - 88: pp. 47 - 48).

152. Deacon : Give heed.

Priest : Holy things for the holy.

People : One is the holy Father, one is the holy Son, one is the Holy Spirit.

153. Priest : The Lord be with all of you.

People : And with your spirit.

Then the priest shall raise the whole Host with his hand and chant :

Lord have compassion upon us, O Christ. (three times in a loud chant and fifteen times in a low chant).

The people shall repeat his words.

Then the priest shall chant three times :

Lord, have compassion upon us, O Christ.

The people shall chant twice : Lord, have compassion upon us, O Christ.

154. Deacon : Ye that are penitent, bow your heads.

155. Then the priest shall turn to the people and say Lord our God .. ..(Anaphora of the Apostles, 95 - 126: pp. 49 - 52).

156. After receiving (the Holy Communion) the following prayer shall be said instead of "The Pilot of the Soul :"

Priest: O ye, Christian people, as ye have gathered together on this day, so also may He gather you on the holy Mount of Sion and in the free Jerusalem in heaven (1).

157. And as ye have heard this voice of Mary's praise, likewise may He allow you to hear the word of the infants' harps and the angels' song, which softens even the very bones because of the multitude of its melodies.

158. May He lead you where there were stretched out the tabernacles of the flaming fire wherein the High Priest is, and wherein are the icon of His face, the pure crown, and the bright dress which the hand of man did not make, but it was woven above.

159. May He lead you to where are the congregation of the holy prophets, the congregation of the preaching Apostles, the congregation of the victorious martyrs, the congregation of the blessed righteous, the congregation of the ordained priests, the congregation of the watchful angels, and the congregation of virgins and perfect monks, with all the perfect congregations of the one holy universal church, and with them where there is the Ark of the wilderness, that is our Lady Mary.

160. Let us not henceforth be decked with haughtiness or pride which clothe with death and lead down to Hades.

161. Let us henceforth have humility with purity, not only purity of the flesh because the prophets saw the Lord through purity of the spirit, seeing Him face to face.

ANAPHORA OF ST. MARY

162. Let us henceforth have love and meekness like the apostles, because they loved their Lord Who granted them authority like His own to bind and loose the bonds of wickedness.

163. Let us henceforth have silence and patience like Mary because our Lord praised her saying : And Mary has chosen that good part, which shall not be taken away from her.[1]

164. And now let us pray the Lord our God, giver of grace.

Deacon : Pray ye.

165. Priest : O Virgin, remind Him Who remembers, not forgetting any.

166. O Virgin, remind Him of His birth, delivered from you at Bethlehem, of His being wrapped in swaddling clothes and His being warmed by the breath of ass and cow on the cold days.

167. O Virgin, remind Him of his flight with you when you fled from one country to another in the days of the cursed Herod.

168. O Virgin, remind Him of the bitter tears shed from your eyes and dropped on the face of your beloved Son.

169. O Virgin, remind Him of hunger, thirst, poverty, sadness and all the trouble which you suffered together with Him.

170. Remind Him of mercy and not of destruction. Remind Him of compassion and not of anger.

171. Remind Him of the sinners and not of the righteous. Remind him of the impure and not the pure.

172. And now let us glorify the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, both now and ever, and unto the ages of ages.

People : Amen.

[1] Luke 10:42.

173. Priest : The Laying on of the Hand Prayer.

We offer thanksgiving to God for all the graces He has granted and because He granted his Mother to be glorified through this Anaphora, and because He made us worthy to begin it through His kindness, and through His will to complete it, He to Whom be glory and Who is wise, unto endless ages. Amen.

174. (I found in it the understanding that any priest who celebrates this anaphora does not sanctify Mary but he himself will be sanctified, and all those who hear it will be sanctified, because our Lady Mary is always[1] sanctified in heaven and earth.)

175. May the accepted blessing of her prayer, the perfect gift of her help, and the compassion of her beloved Son, filling the ends (of the world), be with our rulers (. . .) unto the close of the age. Amen.

THE ANAPHORA OF THE THREE HUNDRED (1)

All: The Prayer of Faith (2)

1. We believe in one God the Father almighty, maker of heaven, earth and all things visible and invisible.
2. And we believe in one Lord Jesus Christ, the only-begotten Son of the Father Who was with Him before the creation of the world:
3. Light from light, true God from true God, begotten not made, of one essence with the Father
4. By Whom all things were made, and without Him was not anything in heaven or earth made
5. Who for us men and for our salvation came down from heaven, was made man and was incarnate from the Holy Spirit and from the holy Virgin Mary.
6. Became man, was crucified for our sakes in the days of Pontius Pilate, suffered, died, was buried and rose from the dead on the third day as was written in the holy scriptures,

(1)The 318 bishops, who attended ecumenical Council held at Nicaea in 325 A.D., settled many contemporary doctrinal controversies, some wrote about those issues. This Anaphora reflects their efforts.

It is celebrated on the following occasions:

a. 21st Maskerem (October 1), the memorial day of the Virgin Mary.
b. 8th Hedar (November 17), the Feast of the Four Beasts.
c. 9th Hedar (November 18), the opening day of the Council of Nicaea.
d. 24th Hedar (December 3), the Feast of the Twenty-four heavenly Priests.
e. Nativity of Christ, 29th Tahesas (January 7).
f 13th Ter (January 21), the Feast of Caana of Galilee.
g. the memorial day of any of the righteous.

(2) The creed given by the Council of Nicaea (325 A. D.) and the Council of Constantinople (381 A.D.)

ANAPHORA OF THE THREE HUNDRED

7. Ascended in glory into heaven, sat at the right hand of His Father, and will come again in glory to judge the living and the dead ; there is no end of His reign.

8. And we believe in the Holy Spirit (1), the life-giving God, who proceeds from the Father; we worship and glorify Him with the Father and the Son ; Who spoke by the prophets,

9. and we believe in one holy, universal, apostolic church,

10. and we believe in one baptism for the remission of sins, and wait for the resurrection from the dead and the life to come, unto endless ages. Amen.

11. The Anaphora of the Three Hundred and Eighteen Orthodox, may their prayers and their blessings be with our (head of state : King, Queen, President, . . .) unto ages of ages. Amen.

12. Priest : The Lord be with all of you.
People : And with your spirit.
Priest : Give ye thanks unto our God,
People : It is right, it is just.
Priest : Lift up your hearts.

(1) This marks the end of the what the Fathers at Nicaea settled, and the beginning of what was decided by the Second Council, at Constantinople in 381. That concluded more than fifty years of debates on how best to describe these mysteries. Such had been part of the Church's life since Apostolic times, but, not yet stated so succinctly. Some of the same leaders who negotiated pronouncements on these doctrines, also applied the same criteria in deciding the contents of what today is known as "The Bible."

People : We have lifted them up unto the Lord our God.

13. Priest : The Lord is mighty in the clouds, higher than heaven, glorious in all His ways, the perfect victorious God of gods.

14. There is no time in which He was not, and there is no place where He cannot be found, there is no time when He was perfectly seen in His divinity. No one can see Him, and no one knows how He lives.

15. Heaven and earth together with all their worlds, sea and rivers and all things that are in them glorify Him. All were created through His grace, and all live through His kindness. He is one Father of the One, Father of the Lord, Father of Messiah, true light with Him Who begets Him.

16. Deacon : Answer ye.
People : Holy, holy, holy, perfect Lord of hosts, heaven and earth are full of the holiness of Thy glory.

17. Priest : We proclaim that the Father lives with His Son, and that the Son lives with His Father before creation, and before the heavens and earth were made

18. and before the mountains and the little hills arose, and before the height of the sky was seen, and before the power of the wind breathed,

19. and before the thunderbolt flashed, and before the quickness of lightning was seen, and before the thunder thundered, and before the clouds were spread,

ANAPHORA OF THE THREE HUNDRED

20. and before the creation of angels, and before any name was named under heaven and on earth.

21. No one, thinking deeply, can understand His nature, though He ascends to heaven and goes beyond the lords and meets with the four living creatures[1], full of eyes, whose whole bodies are light, and from whose mouths comes out the likeness of flaming fire; again, though he descends down to earth and goes beyond the sea, the wind and the fire; again, though He goes out thence to search upon the right hand and the left, setting His thought on high and spreading it abroad

22. Deacon : Ye that are sitting, stand up.

23. Priest : Even so he cannot discern among the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit to know what is His nature.

24. The Father begets His Son, but it is impossible to say that He begat Him at such a time, or that He begat Him on such and such a day.

25. His birth from the Father is unsearchable because it passes understanding, and His nature is unknown because it is hidden. He is the right hand of His Father, His arm and His beloved Son Who is of the same essence with Him.

26. Deacon : Look to the east.

27. Priest : The Father begets His Son ; but He begets Him, not that He might be His assistant in work, to serve Him as a man is served who is in need. When He created heaven and earth no one helped Him because He is mighty.

[1] Ezek. 1 : 5 - .15

28. He did not become weary, nor does He rest as man rests, but the sword of fire coming out of His mouth, what He has spoken is immediately accomplished; instantly whatever He has thought is fulfilled: He is the thought of thoughts;[1] He is the Wise, the Creator.

29. Who, like Him, lives in the highest heaven, builds the foundation[2], bears up from beneath, sits upon the firmament on high, establishes upon the floods, builds with very small particles, wraps with invisible things, limits with sand, strengthens with wind, hangs the water up, and calls it sky,

30. congealed liquid in the womb, turning it into flesh, binds it with muscles, strengthening it with sinews, numbers the very hairs, tries the heart and knows the reins?

31. The Father begets His Son without days or hours; and as He begets Him, His Father is not separated from Him. Before He created the angels for His worship His glory was infinite; the glory of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit was perfect.

32. Deacon : Let us give heed.

33. Priest : And when He created our father, Adam He did not go about to gather earth, water, wind, and fire, nor did He leave His throne or in any way move from it

34. Yes, while He was yet there, He took the four elements: two palpable, and two impalpable; three visible and one invisible

[1] i.e. he knows the thoughts of all, but his thought can be known by none.

[2] i.e. the foundation of the earth.

ANAPHORA OF THE THREE HUNDRED

35. and made him from these, made him fair with His holy hands, kissed him and loved him; and breathed in his nostrils the breath of life. Before He built the skies and the highest heavens He was not lowly, but was strong in His throne and great in His kingdom.

* * *

36. He thundered to those that were above, caused those beneath to tremble as He trod the clouds, burned without fire and cooled without water.

37. And when He created the sun and the moon, it was not to make light for Himself as for one in darkness, but it was as though He gave them a little from His own light, as it were, no more than a grain of wheat. Thus they gave light to man.

38. Having created and prepared all, visible and invisible, He did not boast saying, I have worked and I have finished and I have to rest from all the toil in which I have laboured, but He knew before it came to pass, He completed before ever He made possible righteous and unrighteous, good and evil.

39. Before He created man, He prepared Paradise to put therein him whom He loved, and the fire of hell to put therein him who hated.

40. Blessed is he whom He had chosen, and blessed is he in whom He was pleased. Let us therefore receive this word with great diligence that we may not enter into the great sea wherein fire and water are mingled and from which we cannot escape by swimming.

41. But let us receive what the apostles taught us about the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit saying, The Father declares of His Son, that He is Jesus Christ His only One:

And the Son tells that God the Father begets Him

And the Holy Spirit proclaims that He proceeds from the Father and took of the things of the Son. (1)

42. It is one honour and one authority and one power which cannot be divided. There is neither reckoning nor separation of His position. There is neither subtraction nor addition in His divinity.

43. As our Lord answered His disciples about Their nature saying, We have neither first nor last, We have neither right nor left, We have neither firmament nor foundation, We are the firmament, and We are the foundation.

44. None can see Us and none can know how We live. We know all and we understand all, We make remote that which is near and bring near that which is afar off. We ignore the noise of the tongue as one who does not hear (2). We know the whisper of the heart within.

45. My Father, I, and the Holy Spirit are the gate, the door, and the dwelling-place.

46. My Father, I, and the Holy Spirit are might, grace, and favour.

47. My Father, I, and the Holy Spirit are sun, light and heat.

48. My Father, I, and the Holy Spirit are fire, flame and the burning coal.

49. Such is Our existence, such is Our perfection, and Our days are not finite but they endure for ever. Again there is neither counting nor end (of them).

(1) John 16:15.
(2) Isaiah 1:15.

ANAPHORA OF THE THREE HUNDRED

50. Deacon : Let your thoughts be above. Let your hearts be in heaven. Know where you stand.

51. Priest : He is slow to anger, His compassion is great, and He is righteous. It is not as if there was a time when He is patient and another when He is impatient. He waits for the sinner until he comes back and returns to Him.

52. When He was angry He destroyed the wicked with the flood and saved eight souls who kept His word, and He established with their father an everlasting covenant of righteousness. He is God of gods, consuming fire, and life-giving fire.

53. What is His name, and what is His Son's name? (1) Where is His dwelling-place and where is His country?

54. His throne is compassed by fire and His abode is enveloped by water, and round the roof of His house hang drops of water which do not fall.

Flashes of light go out from His throne, within it is like blazing fire, in it there is great light like the winter rainbow, round it there is lightning.

55. At the sides of that throne there are four animals as if they carry on their heads the large throne which is as white as snow.

56. Round about that throne there are twenty four priests (2) in front of them they see the likeness of the lamb, the vesture dipped in blood (3), and the sealed book. (4)

57. Every time they go round that throne they prostrate themselves

(1) Prov. 30:4.
(2) Rev. 4:4.
(3) Rev. 19 : 13
(4) Rev. 5 : 1 & 2

thrice before the likeness of the Lamb, the vesture dipped in blood, and the sealed book. The smoke of glory fills the pavilion. From beneath that throne springs the sea of two courses, the sea of light and the sea of wind.

58. The God of gods does not live there, the Lord of lords is not limited therein, but He both lives without and is found within.

59. They do not go to find him, and He is not absent when they seek Him. He is not felt when they take hold of Him because He is far above thought.

60. He keeps the rich, lives with the poor, loves the humble, and neglects the haughty. He will justify when He likes, save when He is pleased, He disregards as if He does not hear, keeps silent as if He does not see, waits as if He does not know, delays as if He does not wish to grant.

61. He is the God of gods, the Lord of lords, the Lord of the strong, before Whom the angels and archangels prostrate themselves.

62. They do not prostrate themselves before Him because they see Him, but they prostrate themselves before His throne and praise His greatness. They fly towards the four ends of the world to do all His will. Seraphim and cherubim shout and say, yet without pride, Holy God, holy mighty, holy living, immortal, Who yet died for the love of man.

63. From the one treasury (1) formed from the breath of His mouth proceed and grow the souls who multiply in the world.

(1) i.e. Adam or one baptism.

ANAPHORA OF THE THREE HUNDRED

64. In one treasury there will be gathered wheat without tares. There will be put and kept the souls of the righteous until all are rewarded according to their deeds.

65. There are pleasure and happiness. There is Adam, the father of all. There are Abel, Seth, and Enoch the patriarchs together with all their seed.

66. There are Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, the friends of the Lord. There are Moses and Aaron the priests. There are David, Hezekiah and Josiah and all the kings of a right faith.

67. There are the prophets with their prophecies, there are the disciples of the One, in whose hands are the keys, sitting at the door to take in whom they will.

68. There are the patriarchs, archbishops, bishops, priests and deacons who gave full account of their stewardship which was entrusted unto them by their Lord.

69. There are martyrs whose crowns shine seven times brighter than the sun. There are the righteous in their patience.

70. There are men and women, the hosts of the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit whose number cannot be known. They live there in pleasure and happiness till they receive twofold more than before (1).

71. There live in honour the righteous, the meek and the elect. O Lord we offer our prayer unto Thee Who answers, Who is the hearer and the helper.

(1) i.e. more than they get in paradise, the waiting place of the righteous.

www.ethiopianorthodox.org

72. We beg Thee, Lord, on behalf of those who have fallen asleep and departed from this corruptible world, and on behalf of those of whom the authority of death took hold, and of those who are covered within the grave.

73. We pray Thee, Lord, and beseech Thee to call them to an honourable resurrection when Thou will raise the body, uniting it with the spirit, and when Thou gives that good gift which eye has not seen, nor ear heard. Neither has it entered into the heart of man, (1) which Thou prepared through Thy Son Jesus Christ, unto endless ages.

74. Deacon : For the sake of the blessed (Anaphora of the Apostles #6-9: p. 43).

75. Asst. Priest : Prayer of Benediction (Anaphora of the Apostles #10-21: pp. 43, 44).

76. Asst. Deacon : Lord, pity and have mercy upon the patriarchs, archbishops, bishops, priests, deacons and all the Christian people.

77. Priest : God the Father sent His only-begotten Son to abide in the body of a daughter who did not know a husband; and the creator of infants was kept in the womb without being limited. He was made man while He was God, and was born while He was the fire of the Godhead, and grew without adornments or honour. And grew like the children of the poor, chastened greatly and obeying His relatives.

78. He bowed His head to be baptized by a servant, though He was pure from sin. He did miracles, changing water into wine and satisfying many thousands in the wilderness.

79. At this time he shall cense.

People : Remember us, Lord, in Thy kingdom. (Thrice) (Anaphora of the Apostles #34: p. 45).

80. Priest : Oh ! The eyes of that generation were blinded so that they might not see Him, and their ears were made deaf so that they might not listen to Him, and their hearts were closed so that they might not know Him, they determined Him who forgives sin to be a mere man, and judged the judge of judges.

81. He chose twelve apostles from among them, walked with them and showed them the mysterious order of the Holy Communion.

82. Deacon : Priests, raise up your hands.

83. Priest : He took bread before them, At this time he shall raise the bread.

84. People : We believe that this is He; truly we believe.

85. Priest : blessed, (+ three times, then he shall indent the Host lightly with his thumb in five places without separation), and said, Take, eat, this (pointing) bread is My body which will be given on your behalf for the remission of sin.

86. People : Amen. Amen. Amen. We believe and confess, we glorify Thee, O our Lord and our God; that this is He we truly believe.

87. Priest : And likewise also the cup, He blessed (+ three times) and hallowed and said, Take, drink, this (pointing) cup is My blood which will be shed on your behalf for the remission of sin.

He shall then move the cup with his right hand in the sign of the cross.

People : Amen. Amen. Amen.

88. Priest : At that time Jesus said, My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death, the death which will make the sad rejoice.

89. In that night they took hold of Him, and when it was day the masters of the Jews and the chief priests sat with Pilate, the ruler, in the court for His judgement.

90. They shackled Him with His hands behind Him like a thief, and He followed them in love like a meek sheep. They sat at the court to judge Him. They made Him to stand before them, Him before whom the hosts of angels stand in fear and trembling.

91. An evil servant strengthened his hand to strike the innocent One they impudently bowed before Him to Whom the archangels bow in great trembling.

92. They crowned the Head of life with a crown of thorns, stripping Him, they clothed Him, Who is dressed in light as a garment, with a scarlet robe (1).

93. They took him to the place of crucifixion called Calvary, burdening Him with His cross, so that Jesus was wearied in the carrying of His cross and sweated because it was heavy.

94. They numbered him among the thieves, raised Him upon the cross, and crucified Him without mercy, according to their law.

(1)See the Anaphora of St. John Chrysostom 47-50.

ANAPHORA OF THE THREE HUNDRED

95. Oh! The hands which formed Adam were nailed on the cross. Oh! The feet which walked in paradise were nailed on the cross.

96. Oh ! The mouth which breathed the breath of life into the face of Adam drank vinegar and myrrh mixed with gall.

97. Jesus groaned in His suffering, cried to His Father, bowed His head and gave up the ghost.

98. They pierced Him in His side with a black spear, which they had prepared for Him, took Him down from the tree and buried Him in the grave. They did not put Him in their own grave, but outside in a stranger's grave of three cubits, and closed it with a stone.

99 While He was there He cried toward Adam His servant, and all his children.

* * *

100. Priest: The Lord be with all of you.

People : And with your spirit

Priest : Give ye thanks unto our God.

People : It is right, it is just.

Priest : Lift up your hearts.

People : We have lifted them up unto the Lord our God. Our Father, ho art in heaven. (Thrice) Thou art our Lord and our God.

101.Priest : When he said this to Adam, His servant, Adam rejoiced, went out with all his children and entered into the holy city, as it was said. (1)

102. And also, to reveal the glory of His resurrection, He revealed a little of His divinity (1) and caused those who were watching His grave fall down.

103. And He rose on the third day, and on the day, which He had made known, entered where His disciples were and showed them His pierced side and His nail-marked hands. He stayed with them teaching them concerning the kingdom of heaven.

104. On the fortieth day He ascended unto heaven to His Father who sent Him. Again He will come. He will not come in lowliness, but in the glory of the Father, Who begets Him, in fearful authority with His holy angels in the clouds of heaven.

105. People : We proclaim Thy death, Lord, and Thy holy resurrection ; we believe in Thine ascension and Thy second advent. We glorify Thee and confess Thee, we offer our prayer unto Thee and beg Thee, O our Lord and our God.

106. Priest : Let Thy mercy, Lord, be upon us according as we hope in Thee (2).

107. People : According to Thy mercy, our God, and not according to our sins. (thrice)

108. Priest : Let our gathering be like the gathering of Thy disciples. Thou art theirs and Thou art ours, Thou was then as Thou art now.

109. Thine is heaven and Thine is earth; Thine are the righteous and Thine are the unrighteous, because Thou regards not thousands of sins. Thou establishes even little things to be a plant of righteousness, and Thou uses any means to save.

(1) referring to the light which shone from the grave at the time of His resurrection.

(2) Ps. 32 (33) : 22.

110. Deacon : With all the heart let us beseech the Lord our God that He grant unto us the good communion of the Holy Spirit.

111. People : As it was, is, and shall be unto generations of generations, unto unending ages.

112. At this time he shall dip his finger into the Blood and sign the Body.

Priest : Grant it together unto all them that take of it, that it may be unto them for purity and for selectivity unto them who receive of it, so that by its appearance the thorn of sin may be burnt, iniquity may be rooted out, wickedness may be destroyed and the soul may get total respite from her iniquity.

113. Let the gate of light be opened, and let the doors of glory be unlocked (1), and let the living Holy Spirit be sent, descend and come from the place where He is hidden; and shine on this (pointing) bread that it may be the body of Christ our God,

(+ once over the bread)

114. And that the nature of this (pointing) cup may be changed to become the blood of Christ our God. (+ over the cup once, and once more over both)

115. People : Amen. Lord pity us, Lord spare us, Lord have mercy upon us.

116. Priest : Have pity and mercy upon the one, holy, and universal (2) Church together with all the whole congregation, and especially have pity and mercy upon those who chose me, the poor one, to minister this mystery, unto endless ages. Amen.

(1) See The Anaphora of St. Jacob of Serough, # 53: p. 154. (2) Once some might have transliterated the Greek word here that would look like “catholic” in its English version. The sense in this context indicates all those who are united in accepting the faith that was once delivered to all the saints as an ideal, not a commodity. Early writers, like Tertulian, used it as a hallmark indicative of unanimity in worshiping in “spirit and truth.” But that was before “denominations” occurred to anyone.

117. Priest : Grant us to be united through Thy Holy Spirit, and heal us by this oblation that we may live in Thee for ever.

The people shall repeat his words.

118. Priest : Blessed be the name of the Lord, and blessed be He that comes in the name of the Lord, and let the name of His glory be blessed. So be it. So be it. So be it blessed.

The people shall repeat his words.

119. Priest : Send the grace of the Holy Spirit upon us.

The people shall repeat his words.

120. Deacon : Arise for prayer.
People : Lord have mercy upon us.
Priest : Peace be unto all of you.
People : And with your spirit.

121. Priest : Prayer of Fraction:

Again we beseech the Almighty and Redeemer from sin: remember that the body which Thou took from the holy Virgin is our body, and not something which Thou brought down from heaven.

122. Remember that the body which Thou took from the holy Virgin is the body which stood before Pilate.

123. Remember that the body which Thou took from the holy Virgin is the body which bore the tight bonds.

124. Remember that the body which Thou took from the holy Virgin is the body which suffered and died.

125. Remember that the body which Thou took from the holy Virgin is the body which rose from the dead on the third day.

ANAPHORA OF THE THREE HUNDRED

126. Remember that the body, which Thou took from the holy Virgin is the body which ascended into heaven in glory and sat at the right hand of the Father. Again the Lord our God will come in this body in the power of His divinity.

127. Deacon : Pray ye.
People : Our Father who art in heaven . . .

(see Anaphora #2, #69 : p. 62)

128. Priest : There is the fragrance of a sweet savour. Let our thoughts ascend to the place of this Bread that you may know the fragrance of its savour.

129. Give heed to your souls and purify your bodies and let none of us be sick through the multitude of iniquities and sins.

130. Behold, today there is with us on this table Emmanuel, the Lamb of God; and behold, there is the Father, the Light, together with His Son and the Holy Spirit.

131. Behold, there are the angels of light visiting the church. Give heed to your souls and purify your bodies and let not anyone of us be sick. There is a man of iniquity and there is a man of sin. Let us awaken our conscience that we may be worthy to take of this mystery, unto ages of ages.

* * *

132. People : The hosts of the angels of the Saviour of the world, stand before the Saviour of the world, and encircle the Saviour of the world, even the body and blood of the Saviour of the world.

Let us draw near the face of the Saviour of the world. In the faith which is of Him let us submit ourselves to Christ.

(And there are others who say instead of the previous sentence:)

The righteous fought for his sake.

133. Asst. Deacon : Open ye the gates, princes.

134. Deacon : Ye who are standing, bow your heads.

135. Priest : We thank Thee, Lord, Who through Thy beloved Son Jesus Christ, has drawn us nearer before the greatness of Thine exaltation. Glory, honour and thanksgiving be to Thee, unto ages of ages. Amen.

136. Deacon : Worship the Lord with fear.

People : Before Thee, Lord, we worship, and Thee do we glorify.

137. Priest : Prayer of Penitence. (Anaphora of the Apostles, 72 - 88: pp. 47, 48)

138. Deacon : Give heed.

Priest : Holy things for the holy.

People : One is the holy Father, one is the holy Son, one is the Holy Spirit.

139. Priest : The Lord be with all of you.

People : And with your spirit.

140. Then the priest shall lift up the whole Host with his hand and say : Lord have compassion upon us, O Christ. (three times in a loud chant, and fifteen times in a low chant).

The people shall repeat his words.

The priest shall chant them three times.

The people shall chant them twice.

141. Deacon : Ye that are penitent, bow your heads.

142. Then the priest shall turn to the people and say : Lord our God, look upon Thy people that are penitent . . . (Anaphora of the Apostles, #95-138: pp. 49 - 53).

ANAPHORA OF THE THREE HUNDRED

143. After receiving the Holy Communion,

Priest : The Prayer "Pilot of the Soul."

In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was the Word of God. And the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us, and we beheld His glory, the glory as of the Only-begotten of the Father. That Word came unto His own, and His own received Him not. (1)

144. But we, the three hundred and eighteen orthodox, received Him, we are the law-givers of the holy church whose bridegroom is the Lord our God.

Deacon : Pray ye.

145. Priest : Thou art He Whom the cherubim of many eyes and the seraphim of six wings encircle.

146. O Thou Who formed Adam in Thine image and likeness, (2) O Thou Who heaps fire upon water, O Thou Who is not darkened by darkness and art not hidden by the night : it is Thou who brought us near before this mystery. Glory, honour and thanksgiving be to Thee unto endless ages.

People : Amen.

147. Priest : "The Laying on of the Hand"

O Lord, our Lord, God, and Saviour Jesus Christ, bless us and sanctify us, and make us worthy to go to our homes in tranquility and happiness without sin and without spot.

148. Let Thy body and Thy blood which we have received from Thine honourable table give us life.

149. Send Thy Holy Spirit, Lord, upon us to guide us in the way of righteousness and life. (3)

(1) John 1:1-15 (2) Gen. 1:26,27. (3) John 16:13

150. The Son of the living God prepared His body and blood in the world that we might eat of it and live with Him. [1]

151. Draw us near to Thee, through Thy mercy, towards Thy living and holy altar [2] that we may be called the servants of God and the abode of the Highest.

Let us all draw near Him that we, through faith, may stand before His face in supplication, prostration, prayer and purity.

152. May His holy body and His precious blood which we have received at the hands of the priests who offer prayer and supplication at every time and in every hour be to us for life, hope, salvation, remission of sin [3] and resurrection from the dead, unto the ages of ages. Amen.

THE ANAPHORA OF ST. ATHANASIUS (1)

1. The Anaphora of St. Athanasius, Patriarch of the City of Alexandria; may his prayer and blessing be with our (head of state: King, Queen, President, . . .) unto endless ages.

2. Priest : The Lord be with all of you.
People : And with your spirit.
Priest : Give ye thanks unto our God.
People : It is right, it is just.
Priest : Lift up your hearts.
People : We have lifted them up unto the Lord our God.

3. Deacon : You who have gathered this day in this church, listen to the Anaphora of the holy Sabbath of the Christians.

4. Priest : I will cause heaven and earth to bear witness against you so that you may stand in fear and trembling, none making any disturbance.

ANAPHORA OF ST. ATHANASIUS

5. Let no one remain here who is angry with his brother, like the vengeful Cain.

6. Let no one remain here who is quarreling with his brother like Dathan and Abiram who quarrelled with Moses. [1]

7. Let no one remain here who is deceitful towards another, like the serpent which deceived Eve.

8. O priests, you are the bright eyes of God; look to one another, investigate your people prudently in order that no adulterer, murderer, idolater, thief or liar should stand and join you in prayer, even those who are as the five dogs that are judged without.

9. Rebuke the sinner as him who is your brother, and scold him openly if he has committed a sin unto death.

10. Advise the wicked to leave that way and submit himself unto God so that He may forgive him.

1) This Anaphora is celebrated on the following occasions:

a. On 7th Ginbot (May 15), the memorial day of the death of St. Athanasius.
b. On every Sunday if there is not a specific feast indicating the use of another anaphora.

(2) Athanasius, the 20th Bishop of Alexandria, was born between 296 and 298. As a lad, he attracted the attention of Alexander, Bishop of Alexandria, who took him into his household and ordained him as a deacon. In his early life, before 318. When he was about twenty years old, he wrote two very important books, viz. "Contra Gentes" (Against the Heathens) and "De Incarnortione Verbi Dei." (The Incarnation of God's Word). It is an amazing production for one of such a young age.
In 325 he accompanied his bishop to the Council of Nicea and there he played a great part against Arius. As a deacon, he 'was not a member of the Council, but his influence was such that the Arians soon came to recognize him as their most formidable antagonist.

In 326 he succeeded Alexander as Bishop of Alexandria. His aim in life was the highest welfare of the church, he spent most of his life in fighting against the Arians and defending the Christian faith with writings and speeches, both in Egypt and to the universal church. For this reason he was called "The Apostolic." This stand for the truth cost him much tears and blood, because the Arians used their great influence in political changes that caused him to be exiled more than once.

It was he who consecrated Frumentius and sent him to Ethiopia in 328 as its first Archbishop during the reign of Abraha and Atsbaha, the first Christian kings of Ethiopia

He wrote many books: some twenty remain; festal letters: forty-five survived, and personal letters: nineteen are extant.. He died on 7th Ginbot (May 15) 364: others say that he died on 2nd May 375.

11. O deacons, lights and messengers of the church, drive away from it the wolf, so that it may not be among the sheep; the kite, that it may not be among the doves, and take away the tares so that they may not be (found) among the wheat.

12. You investigate that which is without and not that which is within; but that which is within God knows and examines with His light.

13. Deacon : Ye that are sitting, stand up.

14. Priest : Let the inner ears of the heart be opened and not those planted outside; let the inner eyes of the heart be uncovered and not those that are bright outside.

15. Let not our mind be like the wave of the sea which now ascends and then descends, but let it be like the pillar of fire (1) which was from earth to heaven.

16. Let our hearts be united in His fear like the golden curtain (2) which is tightly woven.

17. Let us raise our hands unto Him and stretch them to the right and to the left (3) as a sword of fire to frighten Satan as it was said.

18. And let our feet stand firm in the house of God like candlesticks which do not move day or night, and let us always live in such a way because God is watching us.

ANAPHORA OF ST. ATHANASIUS

20. Priest : Man that is in honour and understands not is like the beasts that perish (1).

21. Man, being a king, knew not, and so, at his own will, debased himself and became a servant; and those who are not lords ruled over him.

22. Man, being rich, knew not and so impoverished himself as it pleased him and let his stomach be hungry and his soul thirsty.

23. O Lord, how much Thou has done for man! Thou stretched heaven as a tent for his astonishment, and widened the earth for the tread of his feet.

24. Thou keeps water in the womb of clouds to feed him, Thou did light the sun that he might be illumined by day, Thou prepared the moon lest the darkness of night should cover him, Thou caused the light of the stars to shine upon him that he might know the work of Thy fingers, Thou gave him the days of the week, the years, the seasons and the days of the month so that he might serve Thee.

25. Oh, Thou did show the hard-hearted man death and life, but he desired death and disdained life, not the death of the body prepared for the righteous and the unrighteous, like sleep for a little while until the time, but eternal and everlasting death, the days of which are innumerable and endless.

26. Man, who had been clothed with a garment of light, let his body be found naked and was covered with garments of skins.(2)

(1) Ps. 48 (49):20 (2) Gen. 3:21

27. Man, being a ruler [1] under the Lord, stole and ate of the tree which was not prepared for him.[2]

28. O Adam, what wrong did we do you that you brought the sentence of death upon us ? O Adam, what wrong did we do you that you did not let us rejoice in paradise, the abode of the Lord?

29. O Eve, what wrong did we do you that now our body is darkened through the multitude of sins instead of being worthy to live in the likeness of the heavenly ones?

30. O Eve, what wrong did we do you that now all your daughters weep when they give birth in pain and suffering and issue blood as you made that tree in the garden to bleed?

31. O Adam and Eve, it is impossible for us to blame you as it is impossible for man to blame the tongue while speaking with it. Likewise you are one with us and we are of one kind with you.

32. O Adam and Eve, you became penitent through the reproof of the merciful Lord.

O Adam and Eve, you were truly saved and you entered into your previous inheritance through the blood of your Redeemer without hindrance.[3] All the heretics who do not believe in your Redeemer are not your children though they seem to be like you.

33. But we who believed in your only Son are the true image and likeness, got from your loins

ANAPHORA OF ST. ATHANASIUS

34. Behold sin has consumed us, your children, like fire, and lust has burnt us, not the lust of the soul but the lust of the flesh through which the soul is destroyed.

35. Henceforth let us say, Hail! garden of happiness into which it is impossible for us to enter save by the breastplate. [1]

36. Hail! O eastern garden of our father Adam in which it is impossible for us to rejoice unless we make weak our bodies here. [2]

37. Hail! Ground of Eden in which it is impossible for us to walk unless we prevent our feet from vain walking.

38. Let us also say, O seraph, guard of the garden with the sword of fire, allow us to enter and see the abode of the Lord though we may not stay in it.

39. O seraph, allow us to enter and see the abode of life though we may not hide there.

40. O seraph, allow us to enter into the garden and smell its perfume that its savour may be poured into our hearts.

41. O seraph, admit us into the previous inheritance of our father,[3] that we may be pleased with its trees, though we may not pluck with our hands from its fruit as before.

42. O seraph, allow us to enter and see the streams of light irrigating the garden, Gihon, Pison, Hiddekel and Euphrates. [4]

43. There is that which proceeds from the east and flows to the west to irrigate that which is there.

As it was said, [1] Wonderful is the movement of the sea, likewise wonderful is the movement of the rivers without noise. What shall we say: we are played like the harp which has no soul.

47. But we, who are anointed with the grace of God, true Christians, the people of Christ and Messiah, let us watch, hasten, be jealous and draw near to pass from honour to honour.

First of all let us subject our bodies, and let us always separate our minds from dissipation that the Lord our God may willingly accept our prayer.

48. Deacon : Let us give heed.

49. Priest : We have not here a proud, swelling, and crooked city which is not straight, but we have that which is above where the prophets and apostles have come before us.

50. We have not here a house built on sand against which the winds blow and the floods beat, but the free Jerusalem which is above and into which the patriarchs, bishops, priests and deacons have entered before us.

51. And they, being clothed in flesh like us, resembled the angels in their lives, purified their souls, made white their garments, did not defile the abode of their body, and their names were written in the book of life through the blood of the Lamb.[2]

52. We, who were born in flesh like them, have three births : one is the holy baptism which makes us like Christ, one is the body and blood of Christ which forgive iniquity and sin, and one is the tears of penitence which flow from within like Jordan and bring us in purity before God. So let us all, being purified (1), wash our bodies with water (2).

53. And let us be like the angels who praise God with the word of holiness, according to their ranks, their congregation, their tribes, their hosts, their names and their number. There are those who cover, those who encircle, those who make a joyful noise, those who sing, those who give thanks and those who glorify. Those of six wings say, "Holy, holy, holy, perfect Lord of hosts." Let us say also with them, Holy, holy, holy, God.

54. Deacon : Answer ye.

People : Holy holy holy, perfect Lord of hosts, heaven and earth are full of the holiness of Thy glory.

55. Priest : Come, let us exalt; come, let us praise; come, let us honour; come, let us celebrate the chief of the holy days which is the holy Sabbath of the Christians. Let us say, This is the day which the Lord has made; we will rejoice and be glad in it (3) ; and let us sing with Asaph, the prophet, saying Rejoice in God who helped us (4).

56. Truly let us rejoice in God Who has granted us freedom from slavery, light from darkness; make a joyful noise unto the God of Jacob (5).

57. Truly let us make a joyful noise unto the God of the holy prophets and unto the Lord of the pure apostles. Take a psalm and bring hither the timbrel. (6)

(1) With water of baptism. (2) With water of penitential tears. (3) Ps. 117 (118):24. (4)&(5) Ps. 80 (81):1. (6) Ps. 80 (81):2.

58. Truly let us take the Gospel in which there are humility and love, and let us leave the Law in which there are the judgement of death and the penalty of a life for a life As the psaltery is pleasant with the harp (1) so the commandment of the Gospel is good with its fulfillment.

59. The harp is the faith with which the martyrs are clothed. Blow up the trumpet in the new moon (2)

60. Truly let us say : Halleluia in the prophet David's Psalm, at the appointed time, on our solemn feast day. (2) Truly it is that time appointed, in which God began to do His work.

61. Oh, this day is the first (3) but not the last. Oh, this day is that ultimate (4) that lasts for ever.

62. Oh, this day was declared to Abraham (5) and caused him to desire, prophesy and rejoice.

63. Oh, this day was declared to Moses on the Mount of Sinai but was hidden from the Israelites.

64. Oh, this day was known by the prophets and was hidden from the people of the Jews, but to us it has been absolutely revealed; it alternates like the sun, it rules every week and reigns every week and is numbered every week.

65. Oh, this day is what the Father hallowed, the Son blessed and the Holy Spirit exalted. Let us rejoice and be glad in it and sanctify it that we may be sanctified through it.

(1) Ps. 80 (81):2. (2) Ps. 80 (81):3. (3) The first of the seven days of creation. (4) The tradition is that Christ's second advent will be on Sunday. (5) John 8:56. (3), (4), (5) In its relation to the Seventh, it is also reckoned as the apocalyptic "Eighth Day." See the inscriptions of Septuagint Psalms 6, 11, 23; Ezek. 43:27.

ANAPHORA OF ST. ATHANASIUS

66. O other days of the week, which are introduced through it to the seasons and to the days of the month, come ye, let us praise the holy Sabbath of the Christians which is the chief of the holy days.

67. Oh, this day is that in which the old ceased and the new was confirmed; Oh, this day is that in which the prisoners were released and the slaves were set free. (1)

68. Oh, this day is that on which the ruined was rebuilt and Satan was destroyed.

69. Again, when this day rules there will be a new work and a new thing; and at that time there will not be the light of the sun or the moon or the stars or candle or any light, winter or summer.

70. The earth will rest for seven days while there will not be in it any moving thing of all the living creatures. There will be sent a sounding word; through the same word the existing heaven will be destroyed and the earth will pass away.

71. At that time the graves will be opened and the dead that waxed old from the beginning of the world will rise in the twinkling of an eye. The Father will grant to His Son the kingdom and the judgement, then there will be revealed the power of a new lightning and a fearful sound of thunder which ear has not heard and eye has not seen from the beginning.

72. There will stand before Him the fearful angels with the wings of fire who have no names, and whom they do not call such and such a one, and who lived within the veil of the Father, and they are the messengers of His face. Their wings will strike one against another,' they will sound, thunder and draw out their swords and let them glitter to show their strength.

73. At that time the sea of fire will be opened to its very depth and the pit of frost which is under it will be opened also; the river of fire will flood that every one may see that which waits for him.

74. At that time the books will be opened, the works will be revealed, the tongue will keep silent, the talkative mouth will be dumb, and all the creatures will stand in fear and tremble and there will be a great silence; and upon the whole earth there will not be a space as wide as a foot's span, and they will be thronged like the seeds in a pomegranate.

75. At that time there will neither be short nor tall, neither black nor red, but one body and one appearance.

76. At that time there will not be a ransom of the soul, neither will man be judged for his wife, nor the father for his son, nor the mother for her daughter, but everyone will take the recompense of his work.

77. He will not be afraid of the rich because of his wealth but as it was accounted to him; he will not pity the poor because of his poverty unless he is pleased with him.

78. At that time the righteous will rejoice because they mourned in their life, the sinners will weep because they loved laughter and mirth and because the day of recompense and condemnation will fall upon them.

79. At that time the rich will become poor because they fulfilled their pleasure unrighteously, and the poor will become rich because they accepted their poverty with thankfulness.

80. At that time the hungry will be satisfied because they suffered in their lives.

81. At that time the speakers will keep silent because they spoke vain and worthless (words). But the patient will speak because they did not let their tongue run to backbiting and did not sadden their neighbour at all.

82. At that time the strong will become weak because they destroyed their bodies in fornication, and the weak will become strong because they weakened their strength in prostration and watchfulness day and night.

83. At that time the hands of the powerful will become withered because they stretched their hands to steal and caused the widow and the orphan to weep.

84. At that time the rejected will fly like eagles, their wings will burgeon and their strength will be renewed.

85. At that time the haughty and the proud will be uncovered and their nakedness will be revealed.

86. At that time the naked will be clothed because the showers of rain and the dew wet them and they suffered from cold and frost, and the heat of the sun burnt them.

87. At that time there will be neither spear nor shield, neither bow nor arrow, because everything on earth will pass away.

88. At that time the King will judge a right judgement, which has no respect of persons.

89. At that time the sinners will be separated from the righteous, and the unclean from the clean.

90. How great will be the shout of that time, how great will be the cry of that time, and how much will be the tears of that time when the Creator will weep for His creatures formed with His hand, when He will see them going in the way of destruction.

91. At that time the sinners will weep for themselves, the righteous will weep for their relatives and the angels of heaven will be sad for the creation of man.

92. The assistant priest shall now go round the altar carrying the censer.

93. Priest : At that time when all is fulfilled there will be pitched a tent of light for His elect and His righteous and there will be stretched a curtain of fire of seven divisions for them.

94. There will enter the High Priest (1) Jesus Christ into the mystery and He will have the priests stand at His right hand and the deacons at His left hand to show them the order of the mystery.

95. What will the mystery of that time look like, what will be its name and what will be said of it? Today, it is impossible for them to speak about it, and to conceive: it is not in the heart of mortal man.

96. O ordained priests, (1) honour is yours as you minister with the Lord of heaven and earth.

(1) At least, paragraphs 45-104 present a lesson that includes imagery like the Revelation (Apocalypse of St. John the Evangelist). It is the Apostolic understanding of the church which sees Jesus Christ as that High Priest, fulfilling all Old Testament types, and as the Creator making all things New. He expects His people to perpetuate on earth what He commanded in remembrance of Him (Lk. 22:19): to offer the same sacrifice that He eternally offers on our behalf in the Kingdom. He respects our free will. We may choose to participate, or we may, just observe, or absent ourselves. See Gen. 14:18; 31:54; Lev. 21:10; Ps. 109:4; Heb. 2:17; 3:1; 4:14-6:20; 8:1; 9:11; 1Pt 2:5.

ANAPHORA OF ST. ATHANASIUS

97. O chosen deacons who resemble a pure spring of gold, joy is yours when you behold the wonderful mystery.

98. O holy fathers who resemble the pure golden pillars standing on the sapphire stones, you will qualify to be called blessed.

99. O all believers, resembling the bright stars, greatness will be yours as you enter enter into that wedding, the marriage of Christ, greatness will be yours when you see your God girded and walking with you and giving you His gifts.

100. At that time pray and intercede on our behalf, that He may have compassion and mercy upon us: not according to our merit but according to your merit, not according to our evil deeds but according to the mercy of our God.

101. People : According to Thy mercy, our God, and not according to our sins. (Thrice)

102. Priest : We pray Thee, Lord, and beseech Thee on behalf of our fathers and brothers who have fallen asleep and departed from this corruptible world, grant them to rest well because there is no one pure before Thee from filthiness, since man is the mire of sin.

103. If Thou, Lord, should mark iniquities, O Lord, who shall stand before Thee. (1)

104. Today on this day the Sabbath of light, in which Thy body and blood are prepared, we remember those whose names we know through the word of this deacon, and remember Thou through Thy mercy those whose names we do not know. Write their names in the book of life in free Jerusalem. (2)

(1) Ps. 129 (130):3. (2) Phil. 4:3; Rev. 20:12-21:3; Rev. 22:19. The qedasi is our participation in a foretaste of the eternal kingdom of God. Christ's eternal intercession on our behalf breaks through into time, every time we celebrate it in remembrance of Him.

105. Deacon : For the sake of the blessed .... (Anaphora of the Apostles #6-9: p. 43).

106. Asst. Priest : Prayer of Benediction. (Anaphora of the Apostles # 10-21: p. 43, 44)

107. Asst. Deacon : Lord, pity and have mercy upon the patriarchs, archbishops, bishops, priests, deacons and all the Christian people.

108. Priest : Before this, Thine Anaphora, there are glory, thanksgiving, greatness and exaltation. Jesus Christ the Son of the living God, Thy greatness is inestimable, Thy kingdom is endless. Thy government is unlimited, and Thy rule is boundless.

109. It is not known whence Thy divinity proceeds, and where Thine existence lites; it is not understood whence Thy divinity floods, and where Thy nature is described.

110. The mind of man cannot reach Thy beginning, and the speed of angels cannot find Thine end. Thou art invisible to the eyes of all, and Thou art heard by the ears of all.

111. Thou art far and high from the eyes of all, and Thou art near all those who fear Thee, Thou rests with them and fulfills their will.

112. O Thou Who desires not the death of the sinner but his return. [1]

113. O Thou Who lets the infant proceed from the loins of man and sends it to the womb of woman and wraps it with a very thin covering, and congeals it through Thy wisdom while it is liquid, and breathes upon it the Spirit of life, and on the fortieth day Thou predisposes it either for riches or poverty, justification or destruction:

[1] Prayer of Mennaseh : James 5:20

ANAPHORA OF ST. ATHANASIUS

114. Thence, also, Thou delivers it, opens its throat to cry, and moves its hands and feet to discover the breast of its mother:

115. O Thou Who lets it grow, mature and reach old age: it either for riches or poverty, justification or destruction.

116. O Thou Who lets the wind sound without being seen, and makes the mist move without sound:

117. O Thou Who hat the treasury of glory which all glories cannot fill:

118. Who, like Thee, has covered His throne with fire, has drawn the picture of water in his garments who, like Thee, has weighed the mountains with balances and measured the sea water in the hollow of His hand? (1)

119. Who, like Thee, lays the beams of His chambers in the water (2) makes His surrounding walls of fire? Neither the upper firmament of water descends to the surrounding walls of fire through Thy wisdom, nor the lower surrounding walls ascend to the firmament of water of Thine existence.

120. This is a wonderful, admirable and marvellous thing. Of which shall I think and about which shall I marvel? Of Thine existence with Thy Father in silence and holiness? Or of Thine infancy in the bosom of Thy mother like other babies?

121. Of what shall I think and about which shall I marvel? Of the glory sent to Thee by the seraphim like the waves of the sea? Or of Thy standing in humility in Jordan?

122. O Lord, while Thou art above, Thou only art also beneath, and while Thou art beneath, Thou art above in Trinity.

123. We spoke, as much as we could, even unto heaven,

(1) Is. 40:12. (2) Ps. 104:3.

but we could not pass beyond that, because there is the sea of fire which would not let our mind go any further. Thou Thyself knows Thy nature, and Thou Thyself understands Thy divinity.

* * *

At this time he shall cense. (Anaphora of the Apostles #35: p. 45).

124. People : Remember us, Lord, in Thy kingdom.... (Anaphora of the Apostles #34, p. 45).

125.Priest : This (pointing) bread, even Thy body, we offer unto Thee. And this (pointing) cup, even Thy blood, we offer unto Thee. Because of our sin and iniquity and because of the folly of Thy people, Thou did not hide the mystery of Thy divinity's greatness from Thy disciples.

126. Deacon : Priests, raise up your hands.

127. Priest : Thou took bread before them. (At this time he shall raise the bread).

128. People : We believe that this is He, truly we believe.

129. Priest : Thou gave thanks, blessed, (+ three times) and broke.

130. Then he shall indent the Host lightly with his thumb in five places without separation.

And Thou did give it to them saying, "Take, eat, this (pointing) bread is My body" which does not differ from it.

131. People : Amen. Amen. Amen. We believe and confess, we glorify Thee, O our Lord and our God; that this is He we truly believe.

132. Priest : And likewise also the cup : mixing water with wine therein, Thou gave thanks, blessed, and hallowed (+ three times) and Thou gave it them saying, "Take, drink, this (pointing) cup is My blood," which does not differ from it.

ANAPHORA OF ST. ATHANASIUS

He shall move the cup with his right hand in the sign of the cross.

People : Amen. Amen. Amen.

133. Priest : As often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup proclaim My death and My and believe in My ascension into heaven, hoping for My second advent in glory.

People : We proclaim Thy death, Lord, and Thy holy resurrection.

134. Priest : As Thou did not hide from Thy disciples the mystery of Thy divinity's greatness, they also did not hide anything from us, and they ordained us patriarchs, bishops, priests and deacons to serve Thy church.

135. Cut off from the earth the remembrance (1) of all who reject our law, and do not write their names in the book of life.

136. Hang chains of fire round the necks of all those who do not agree with the congregation of the apostles in the holy church, that they may be drawn by them into great sorrow.

137. Draw out Thy sword and stop the way against all of them that hate Thy holy name, and let the earth which they tread be a slough and swallow them up that they may go down alive into hell (2).

138. And keep us through Thy mercy, we that are persecuted for Thy name, and have been plundered by the heretics, that we may strengthen the hearts of Thy believers.

139. People : Amen. Lord pity us, Lord spare us, Lord have mercy upon us.

(1) Ps. 33 (34):16. (2) Ps. 54 (55):15.

140. Priest : Because the cunning opposition who pity not Thy flock have multiplied.

141. Deacon : With all the heart let us beseech the Lord our God that He grant unto us the good communion of the Holy Spirit.

142. People: As it was, is and shall be unto generations of generations, unto the ages of ages.

143. At this time he shall dip his finger into the Blood and sign the Body.

Priest : Grant it together unto all of them, hallowing one through another. [1] (+ once over the bread, once over the cup, and once more over both.)

144. O Son, cry as a sufferer and say, Eli, Eli, lama sabachthani ; and while it is in their mouth say, Abba, My Father, have compassion and mercy on those who eat My body and drink My blood.

145. Priest : Grant us to be united through Thy Holy Spirit, and heal us by this oblation that we may live in Thee for ever.
The people shall repeat his words.

146. Priest : Blessed be the name of the Lord, and blessed be He that comes in the name of the Lord, and let the name of His glory be blessed. So be it. So be it. So be it blessed.
The people shall repeat his words.

[1] i.e. grant them Thy body joined with Thy blood, and Thy blood joined with Thy body; hallowing Thy body with Thy blood, and Thy blood with Thy body.

ANAPHORA OF ST. ATHANASIUS

147. Priest : Send the grace of the Holy Spirit upon us.
The people shall repeat his words.

148. Deacon : Arise for prayer.
People : Lord have mercy upon us.
Priest : Peace be unto all of you.
People : And with your spirit.

149. Priest : Prayer of Fraction.
Again we supplicate the God of mercy and minister to Him Who is Himself the minister; we sacrifice to Him Who is Himself the sacrifice, and offer to Him Who is Himself the offering.

150. Let that Lamb come from the highest that we may see Him with our eyes, immolate Him with our hands, and rejoice in Him.

151. May His body be joined with this bread and may His blood be poured into this cup.

152. Let none of us think when he eats of this bread that he eats mere flesh without blood and Spirit. Let none of us think when he drinks of this cup that he drinks mere blood without body and Spirit ; but one is the Body, Blood and Spirit,

153. as the divinity of the Lord our God became one with His humanity. [1]

154. Deacon : Pray ye.
People : Our Father who art in heaven. . . (see Anaphora #2 : 69 on p. 62)

[1] Compare with Anaphora of St. Epiphanius #100, p. 134; Anaphora of St. Dioscorus # 53, p.162, these thee are similar to the formula usually attributed to St. Cyril. Also compare with that of St. Athanasius at #109, #123, pp. 104,105.

155. Priest : We pray Thee, O Father. and beseech Thy kindness to send Thy beloved Son Whose nature cannot be traced, being the fire of the godhead.

156. Therefore let us see Him who resembles fire in the spiritual rite of His death, of His death which speaks. May Jesus Christ be joined with this sacrifice, unto ages of ages.

157. People : The hosts of the angels of the Saviour of the world, stand before the Saviour of the world, and encircle the Saviour of the world, even the body and blood of the Saviour of the world.

Let us draw near the face of the Saviour of the world. In the faith which is of Him let us submit ourselves to Christ.

158. Asst. Deacon : Open ye the gates, princes.

159. Deacon : Ye who are standing, bow your heads.

160. Priest : O this day, the holy Sabbath of Christians, you are glorious like the Father, ruling like the Son, and living like the Holy Spirit. O this day, the holy Sabbath of the Christians, offer prayer and supplication towards the Lord our God on behalf of us, unto the ages of ages.

161. Deacon : Worship the Lord with fear.

People : Before Thee, Lord, we worship, and Thee do we glorify.

162. Priest : Prayer of Penitence. (Anaphora of the Apostles #72-88: pp. 47, 48).

* * *

163. Deacon: Give heed.

ANAPHORA OF ST. ATHANASIUS

Priest : Holy things for the holy.

People : One is the holy Father, one is the holy Son, one is the Holy Spirit.

164. Priest : The Lord be with all of you.

People : And with your spirit.

165. The priest shall then lift up the whole Host with his hand and say:

Lord, have compassion upon us, O Christ. (three times in a loud chant, and fifteen time: in a low chant).

The people shall repeat his words.

Then the priest shall chant them three times, and the people twice.

166. Deacon : Ye that are penitent, bow your heads.

167. Then the priest shall turn to the people and say:

Priest : Lord our God, look upon those who are penitent.

168. After receiving the Holy Communion.

Priest : Pilot of the Soul.

As David said in the Psalms Lord, who shall abide in Thy tabernacle? who shall dwell on the hill of Thy sanctuary?

169. Then the Holy Spirit answered and said : He that walks uprightly, and works righteousness, and speaks the truth in his heart. He that does not gossip with his tongue nor does evil to his neighbour, nor takes up a reproach against his neighbour. In whose eyes a vile person is disregarded ; but he honours them that fear the Lord. He that promises his neighbour and does not lie. He that puts not out his money to usury, nor takes a bribe against the innocent. He that does these things shall never be moved (1)."

(1) Ps. 14 (15).

170. Again he said Who shall ascend into the mount of the Lord? Or who shall stand in the place of His sanctuary?[1]

171. Then the Holy Spirit answered and said "He that has a pure heart and clean hands ; who has not lifted up his soul unto vanity, nor sworn to his neighbour deceitfully. He shall receive the blessing from the Lord,"[2] and he shall enter the city whose builder and maker is the Lord our God.

Deacon : Pray ye.

172. Priest : Come, let us exalt; come, let us praise; come, let us honour; come, let us celebrate the chief of the holy days which is the holy Sabbath of the Christians.

173. As we rejoiced yesterday at its entrance so also let us bid it fare well rejoicing still as it departs, observing it for our body's rest.

174. And our rest is not to sleep like a suffering one in his disease, but to watch day and night that we may cherish this day.

175. Again let us say, Pray for us and intercede towards the Lord our God for us who have become like animals and even have done evil more than them.

[1] Psalm 5:5; 14 (15):1
[2] Ps. 23 (24):3-5.

ANAPHORA OF ST. ATHANASIUS

176. O holy one, come unto us every week that we may rejoice in Thee, unto the endless ages.

People : Amen.

177. "The Laying on of the Hand"

Priest : He called them, "my priests," and loved them more than all. That which was not done to the angels has been done to the priests.[1]

178. O Lord our God and our Father who art in heaven, grant that the holy body of Thy Son and the precious blood of Thy Messiah, which we have received at the hands of the priests, may be for life, salvation, remission of sin and everlasting life, unto the ages of ages. Amen.

[1] Acts 1:8

After that we find him at the head of a convent near Arnesi in Pontus. In 365 was ordained priest. In 370 Eusebius, Bishop of Caesarea, died, and Basil was chosen to succeed him. It was there that his powers were activated. He powerfully applied his talents against the Arians who were numerous in that part of the country and were favoured by the Arian Emperor Valens. He died on 5th of Ter (January 13) 379.

It is said, according to the Ethiopian Church's tradition, that he collected the Anaphoras of: The Apostles, The Three Hundred, and Athanasius.

19. Thou did not leave us for ever but visited us by Thy holy prophets. And in the end of days Thou appeared unto us who were sitting in darkness and in the shadow of death.

And Thou caused to shine upon us the light of Thine only-begotten Son, our Lord and God Jesus Christ, Who was made man from the Holy Spirit and from the Holy Virgin Mary.

People : Amen. We believe.

85. Priest shall say secretly : Remember also, Lord, all those who have fallen asleep and rested in the right faith, the clergy in the office of priesthood, and all the congregation of the laity.

86. And again grant rest to the souls of them all in the bosom of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and place them in the green place where there is water of refreshment, in the garden of delight, the place whence soreness of heart and sorrow and sighing have fled away, in the light of Thy saints.

87. Deacon : For the sake of the blessed . . . (Anaphora of the Apostles #6 - 9: p. 43).

Jacob, in the garden of delight. May He also grant mercy unto us and forgive us our sins.

95. Deacon : Pray ye for the sorrowful.

96. People : O Lord have compassion upon them, O Lord have mercy upon them, O Lord rest them. Amen.

97. Priest : O Lord, rest the souls of these who are in this place. And us also, who are pilgrims in this place, do Thou keep in Thy faith, here and in every place; and grant us always Thy peace and save us unto the end of our days, and lead us unto Thy everlasting kingdom.

98. People : With all the heart let us beseech the Lord our God that He grant unto us the good communion of the Holy Spirit.

99. People : As it was, is and shall be unto generations of generations, unto endless ages.

100. Priest : That as in this place, so also at all times Thy great and holy name may be glorified, extolled and blessed, which is in all things glorious and blessed together with Thy beloved Son Jesus Christ and the Holy Spirit, unto the ages of ages.

101. Priest : Grant us to be united through Thy Holy Spirit, and heal us by this oblation that we may live in Thee for ever.

The people shall repeat his words.

104. Priest : Prayer of Fraction.
Again we give thanks unto God almighty the Father of our Lord, God, and Saviour Jesus Christ, because He has made us worthy even now to stand in this holy and pure place and lift up our hands and minister unto His holy Name.

105. Let us also entreat the almighty Lord our God that He make us worthy even of the communion and participation of His divine and undying mysteries, the holy body and the precious blood of His Christ,

106. Deacon : Pray ye.

People : Our Father who art in heaven . . .

(see Anaphora #2, #69 : p. 62)

107. Priest : Master, Lord, Lord our God, for ever great, Thou art He Whose honourable glory is wonderful, Who keeps His covenant and mercy with those who love Him from their whole hearts,

108. Who granted us salvation from our sins through His only-begotten Son, Jesus Christ, our Lord, the life of all, the helper of those who flee to Him, and the hope of those who cry unto Him, 109. before Whom stand a thousand of thousands and ten thousand of ten thousands of holy angels and archangels, seraphim and cherubim and all the countless congregation of heavenly powers.

THE ANAPHORA OF ST. BASIL

110. O God, who has sanctified this offering, which has been prepared before Thee, through the descent of the Holy Spirit upon it, cleanse us, O Master, from all our sins, hidden and open.

111. And let every thought which displeases Thy goodness, O God, lover of man, be far from us. Cleanse our souls, bodies, spirits and hearts, that we may, with pure heart and enlightened soul and rejoicing lips, dare to call upon Thee without fear, O holy Father, saying : Our Father who art in heaven . . .

112. People : The hosts of the angels of the Saviour of the world stand before the Saviour of the world and encircle the Saviour of the world, even the body and blood of the Saviour of the world. Let us draw nigh the face of the Saviour of the world. In that faith which is of Him let us submit ourselves to Christ.

113. Asst. Deacon : Open ye the gates, princes.

114. Deacon : Ye who are standing, bow your heads.

115. Behold, with us today, at this table is Emmanuel, the Lamb of God that takes away the sin of the world, giver of His word through the thrones (1),

117. The four praising and singing beasts who carry His throne cry and bless Him, and the

120. that we may, with pure heart and rejoicing lips, graciously dare to say, O holy God the Father, Our Father who art in heaven . . .

(see Anaphora #2:69 : p. 62)

The people shall repeat his words.

Then the priest shall repeat them three times and the people twice.

129. Deacon : Ye that are penitent, bow your heads.

Then was our mouth filled with laughter and our tongue with singing (1), we who have received this indestructible mystery.

Dwell, Lord, in these Thy servants who serve Thee and call upon Thy holy Name, and who have bowed their heads before Thee, even walk with them, and help them in every good work, and purify their hearts from every evil earthly deed,

137. and grant them to live and think of the eternal life and understand that which pleases Thee, through Thine only-begotten Son, our Lord, God, and Saviour Jesus Christ unto Whom we all cry and say, Have mercy upon us, Lord our Saviour, unto endless ages. Amen.

THE ANAPHORA OF ST. GREGORY (1)

1. Deacon : Pray for our fathers the archbishops and bishops, our fathers the priests, our brothers the deacons. Pray, O ye children of this church, for the faithful men and women. Again pray for the virgins and the husbandless, for the aged and infants, for children and adults. Stand up well, stand up, that the peace of God may be with you.

2. Anaphora of Gregory, Bishop of Nyssa (2) and brother of Basil : may his prayer and blessing be with our (Head of state : King, Queen, President . . .) unto the ages of ages. Amen.

3. Priest : The Lord be with all of you.
People: And with your spirit.
Priest : Give ye thanks unto our God.
People : It is right, it is just.
Priest : Lift up your hearts.
People : We have lifted them up unto the Lord our God.

(1) This Anaphora is celebrated on the following occasions:

a. On five days in Lent, from the Wednesday before Palm Sunday until Palm Sunday.
b. On 21st Ter (January 29), the memorial day of the death of St. Gregory.

(2) He was a younger brother of St. Basil the Great, Bishop of Caesarea, and was born at NeoCaesarea about 331 A.D. At an early age he entered the church, and held for some time the office of anagnost or reader. In 371, he was ordained by his brother Basil to the Bishopric of Nyssa, a small town in Cappadocia. At the great ecumenical council held at Constantinople, in 381, he was a conspicuous champion of the orthodox faith. The exact date of his death is unknown; some authorities refer it to 396, others to 400. His festival is observed on 21st Ter (January 29).

4. Priest : We give thanks unto our Benefactor, the merciful God, Father of our Lord, God, and Saviour Jesus Christ.

5. We give thanks unto Thee, holy God, compassionate God and merciful God, slow to anger, plenteous in mercy, righteous. Thou art our God, without beginning, and our Saviour without end.

6. His right hand is fire and the authority of His word is indestructible, the length of His years is uncountable, and there are no bounds to the range of His government.

7. He has no respect of persons, neither does He turn aside His face from giving an answer; He does not reverence the rich because of his riches, He does not send the poor away because of his poverty.

8. Because Thou sees the hidden from the beginning, looks upon everything until the last breath.

9. Deacon : Let us look at the beauty of our God's glory.

10. Priest : This is He who made heaven, and this is He who built the earth. His divinity is unfathomable, has neither height nor depth, neither length nor width, neither right nor left, no centre, but it fills all the ends of the world.

11. He is hidden from the minds of all the angels, none can know his nature and none can count that which he formed with his hand.

12. Deacon : Ye that are sitting, stand up.

13. Priest : He came from above the heavens, His firmament, was incarnated, taking our nature, and was made man, taking the body of His first creature, he descended without being emptied of the joy of His divinity, and has quickened us through His death.

14. Deacon : Look to the east.

15. Priest : We lift up the eyes of our heart to thee, and bow our stubborn hearts to Thee. Submission be to Thee, glory to Thy kingdom ; and we offer unto Thee pure incense together with Thine archangels.

At this time he shall raise incense.

16. People : Remember us, Lord, in Thy kingdom .... (Anaphora of the Apostles #34: p.45)

17. Priest : We stretch out our hands to Thee and overshadow this (pointing) sacrifice.

18. He suffered by His will, was pleased to be crucified, died through the counsel of His Father, rose on the third day, ascended in glory into heaven, His beauty covered heaven, and His glory filled the earth.

19. Deacon : Answer ye.

20. People : Holy, holy, holy, perfect Lord of hosts, heaven and earth are full of the holiness of Thy glory.

21. Priest : (in a low voice) O my Lord, Master, Who has fellowship with the first and the last, (1) Thou art the living bread which came down from heaven. Send the Holy Spirit and power on this bread and on this cup which sanctify our souls, bodies and spirits, that we may be purified, through Him, from all our sins, and that we may draw near to take Thy holy mystery, for Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, and worship, unto endless ages.

22. Priest : (in a loud chant) O eternal God, Thou art the beginning and the ending, the beginning without a morrow, and the ending without a previous day, full of years without a today.

23. He binds up the waters in clouds [1], and lets rain go down from their womb; He takes it up into heaven and lets rain descend for the nutrition of all creatures, He does according to His design and fulfills according to His will. There are among Us[2] three persons who hold all the world with one counsel, with one authority and with one unity.

25. Together with Thy Father Thou made heaven. There is none compassionate like Thee and there is none whose word is with such authority who is patient like Thee.

26. People : According to Thy mercy, our God, and not according to our sins. (to be chanted thrice)

27. Priest : He is more terrible than the terrible, [3] higher than the high,[3] and stronger than the peaks of the mountains.

28. Glorious is He Who sits in the highest heaven, profound is He Who sits beneath the depths, His chariot is snow and the bounds of its circle are fenced with fire

29. Its centre is full of smoke. None enters and none goes out except those creatures of terrible appearance and with six wings, whose bodies are full of eyes.

30. Deacon : Priests, raise up your hands.

---

[1] Job 26.8.
[2] Gen. 1:26; 3:23.

[3] i.e. the angels.

31. Priest : He took bread on his nailed hands which formed our father Adam. He is pure without sin, and absolutely pure without deceit. (At this time he shall raise the bread)

32. People : We believe that this is He, truly we believe.

33. Priest : He gave thanks, blessed (+ three times) and broke.

Then he shall indent the Host lightly with his thumb in five places without separation.

And gave it to His disciples and said to them, Take, eat, this (pointing) bread is My body, which is indeed the food of righteousness, and which is given for the salvation of all the world. He who will eat it shall live for ever.

34. People : Amen. Amen. Amen. We believe and confess, we glorify Thee, O our Lord and our God ; that this is He, we truly believe.

35. Priest: He also looked upon this (pointing) cup, the water of life with wine, gave thanks, blessed (+ three times), sanctified, gave it to His apostles and said unto them, Take, drink; this cup is My blood which is the drink of life indeed. He who drinks of it will have eternal life. Take, drink of it, all of you, that it may be to you for life and salvation

He shall then move the cup with his right hand in the sign of the cross.

36. People : Amen. Amen. Amen.

Priest : (Take, drink,) ye who have gathered in this house of prayer where all the faithful men and women pray.

THE ANAPHORA OF ST. GREGORY

37. People : We proclaim Thy death, Lord, and Thy holy resurrection ; we believe Thy ascension and Thy second advent. We glorify Thee, and confess Thee, we offer our prayer unto Thee and supplicate Thee, O our Lord and our God.

38. Priest : In the beginning was the Word, and that Word was the Word of God, and that Word was made flesh and dwelt among us, and His flesh hid Him from us.

39. He put on mortal flesh and made it immortal, and through this flesh, God who can never be scourged, was scourged.

40. Ye who are willing to partake of the suffering of your neighbours and to take upon yourselves the sufferings of your beloved ones, come to see this scourge. It is astonishing to him who looks at it with his eyes, and amazing to him who listens to it with his ears. Come ye to see the smiting on the cheeks by a servant and the beating on the head with sticks in the court of the chief priests.

41. Come ye to see the crown of thorns with which they crowned the giver of life to all.

42. Come to kneel to Him only all ye the hosts of angels who fly above the air and who are sent towards the sun, the moon and the stars and who ascend towards the seas and lakes. (1)

43. The sea trembled and the waters of the stream fled when they saw God beaten on his cheeks; the sun was darkened, the moon became blood and the stars became void of their great light.

44. Death was afraid, the Devil fell, and Hades went together with its own to receive the terrible God.

(1) i.e. the waters above the firmament.

45. Come ye to see the wonderful thing which was done in the house of prayer when the high priest entered within the veil of which all said that it was the dwelling place of the Deity and the concealing of all thoughts. The Lord of lords and spirits entered therein riding upon the lowly colt of an ass.

46. He revealed His divinity to all the infants who said, Blessed is he who cometh in the name of the Lord, and blessed art thou, Lord, God of gods, and King of Israel.

47. He showed His disciples the manner of going around with the Hosanna; and the Blessed said unto them, Say, crying with a loud voice, Hosanna in the highest.

Hosanna in the highest, hosanna in the highest, hosanna in the highest.

The people shall repeat his words while going round.

48. Priest : From His hosanna He showed miracles and wonders which have never been done before and will never happen again.

Hosanna in the highest, hosanna in. the highest, hosanna in the highest.

The people shall repeat his words.

49. Priest : From His hosanna He showed grace and power, came down from His great throne without being moved from the foundation of His house.

Hosanna in the highest, hosanna in the highest, hosanna in the highest.

The people shall repeat his words.

50. Priest : From His hosanna He granted the sinners a spring of tears so that He may justify the wicked and purify the filthy and bring back those who sinned through ignorance.

Hosanna in the highest, hosanna in the highest, hosanna in the highest.

THE ANAPHORA OF ST. GREGORY

51. From His hosanna He granted the blind light which cannot be extinguished again and which the world cannot find.

52. He knows before one thinks, examines before one thinks, and nothing is hidden from Him.

53. Deacon : For the sake of the happy and blessed and honourable Patriarch Abba (_____) and the blessed Archbishop Abba (_____), Abba Titus, Abba Philemon, Abba Andronicus, Abba Basilicos. For the sake of thy servants our fathers the orthodox archbishops, our fathers the bishops, our fathers the priests, our brothers the deacons.

54. Have compassion upon these Thy people, rest the souls of them all, and have mercy upon them. Yea, Lord our God, forgive them their sins, do not look upon their sinful deeds, those who will draw near to receive Thy holy body. And those who will not draw near, order them to draw near with the commandment of Thy word ; and all of them will be clean.

55. To these and to all, grant rest to their souls and have mercy upon them in the bosom of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob; and those who have absented themselves from this church, our mother, pity them all and have mercy upon them, unto the ages of ages.

56. The assistant priest shall say the following instead of the Prayer of Benediction

O holy Trinity, Who holds the whole world, who has done great and wonderful deeds through the power of Thy word,

57. bless the east and the west, the north and the south, the north east and the south east, (the north west and the south west), bless the heaven, the earth, the sea, the rivers, the source of water, and all the springs of water.

58. Bless the winds of the sky and the rains. Bless the sun, moon and stars. Bless the mountains and hills, the trees, herbs and the fruit of the earth.

59. Bless those that are under heaven and those that are under earth.

O Christ our God, fill their hearts with the fear of Thy name and make their lives to prosper for ever.

(+ over the people three times).

60. Asst. Deacon : Lord, pity and have mercy upon the patriarchs, archbishops, bishops, priests, deacons and all the Christian people.

61. Priest : To these and to all Thy servants and Thy handmaids grant rest ; to the souls of their fathers also and our fathers the holy bishops ; our father Paul, and our father Peter, our father Abba James the Bishop, and our father the honourable bishop Abba Matthew.

John, Simon and James the son of Alphaeus and James the Apostle, brother of our Lord and Bishop of Jerusalem.

62. For the sake of thy servants Mark, Luke, Titus, Philemon, Clement, Basil, Athanasius, Epiphanius, and Abba Heryacos the bishop, and our honourable father the Patriarch Abba Yohannes, and our father archbishop Abba Shenouda, beautify their lives and make the savour of their incense unfailing and pity us through their prayers, unto the ages of ages.

THE ANAPHORA OF ST. GREGORY

63. First rest the souls of our fathers the archbishops and our fathers the bishops who gained their rest in this church, the priests, deacons, anagnosts and singers together with the door keepers, because Thou, Lord, knows that which is hidden raise them in Thy holy resurrection.

64. And cause us, who have gathered to take Thy holy body and drink Thy precious blood, to stand at Thy right hand with those who have fulfilled Thy will.

65. Cause our children and our young men to grow and lengthen their days till old age, do not suffer our rich ones to be poor, enrich our poor, heal our sick, do not suffer our whole ones to be sick, have mercy upon the dead, and pity the living.

66. People : Lord pity us, Lord spare us, Lord have mercy upon us.

67. Priest : Bless me (+ over the Host once) and hallow my soul (+ over the cup once), and purify my body (+ once more over both) so that I may receive Thy life-giving body and drink Thy blood, the mysterious divine blood.

68. Deacon : With all the heart let us beseech the Lord our God that He grant unto us the good communion of the Holy Spirit.

69. People : As it was, is and shall be unto generations of generations, unto the ages of ages.

70. At third time he shall dip his finger into the blood and sign the body.

Priest : Grant it together unto them that take of it that it may be unto them for life and salvation for ever.

People : Amen.

71. Priest : Grant us to be united through thy Holy Spirit and heal us by this oblation that we may live in Thee forever.

The people shall repeat his words.

72. Priest : Blessed be the Name of the Lord, and blessed be He that comes in the name of the Lord, and let the name of His glory be blessed. So be it. So be it. So be it blessed.

The people shall repeat his words.

73. Priest : Send the grace of the Holy Spirit upon us.

The people shall repeat his words.

74. Deacon : Arise for prayer.

People : Lord have mercy upon us.

Priest : Peace be unto all of you.

People : And with your spirit.

75. Priest : Prayer of Fraction.

O Lord, Who spoke with our father Abraham, while he has sitting under the tree, saying, O Abraham, O Abraham, O Abraham, I am your God and your fathers' God, I am not a strange God.

76. Keep My commandment and My word which I have spoken to you and I will grant the earth to your children and multiply your seed like the stars of heaven and the sand of the sea.

77. Stand up, O Abraham, and take a platter of bread and a vial of wine, make a pair of scissors, take with thee two of your household and mount the mountain and call the priest who is called Melchisedec, call him three times saying, O man of God, O man of God, O man of God. At that time there will come a fearful man; when you see him do not be afraid. [1]

[1] #77- 83 relate Abraham's encounter with God and His priest recognizable in the Ethiopic version of the Book of Jubilees, chapter 11, verses 34 - 39.

THE ANAPHORA OF ST. GREGORY

78. Abraham stood up as God told him and took with him a platter of bread, a vial of wine and two of his household. He made a pair of scissors, mounted the mountain and cried out saying, O man of God, O man of God, O man of God, come out. Then a very fearful man came out, and when Abraham saw him he fell on his face and became like a dead man.

79. And Melchisedec stretched forth his hands and raised him saying, "Stand up, O Abraham, and do not be afraid, because God Who sent you unto me, told me that you would come unto me."

80. And Abraham stood up, and both spoke together about the greatness of the Lord our God.

81. Deacon : Pray ye.

People : Our Father Who art in heaven . . . (see Anaphora #2, #69 : p. 62)

82. Priest : Abraham stood up and took a pair of scissors and cut the nails of his hands and feet and the hair of his head.

Melchisedec stood up and took the platter of bread and the vial of wine and raised his eyes towards heaven, gave thanks, blessed and broke and granted blessing to Abraham and his household. [1]

83. O Lord our God, Who accepted the offering of this righteous one, accept this our sacrifice and purify us completely: soul, body, spirit and mind, so that, with pure heart and fear of soul, we may speak continually without fear and say, O holy God:

Our Father who art in heaven . . .

(see Anaphora #2:69 : p. 62)

84. We beseech Thee, O holy kind Father, lover of good, lead us lest we wander into temptation. Let sin not have dominion over us, rather deliver us from every evil deed and from thought of it, even its opposition, its deceit and trouble.

[1] compare with Gen. 14 : 18 & Heb. 7 : 1

85. Destroy our tempter, send him away from us, and rebuke the trouble which he planted into us, uproot from us the motives which thrust us into sin, and deliver us with Thy holy power through Jesus Christ our Lord.

86. People : The angelic hosts of the Saviour of the world, stand before the Saviour of the world, and encircle the Saviour of the world even the body and blood of the Saviour of the world. Let us draw near the face of the Saviour of the world. In the faith which is of Him let us submit ourselves to Christ.

87. Asst. Deacon : Open ye the gates, princes.

88. Deacon : Ye who are standing, bow your heads.

89. Priest : The gift (1) of the grace of Thine only-begotten Son, our Lord, God, and Saviour Jesus Christ has been completed. We have believed in His life-giving sufferings, proclaimed His death, and believed in his resurrection in a perfect mystery.

90. Deacon : Worship the Lord with fear.

People : Before Thee, Lord, we worship and Thee do we glorify.

91. Priest : "Prayer of Penitence" (Anaphora of the Apostles: # 72-88, pp. 47, 48)

92. Deacon : Give heed.

The people shall repeat his words.

Then the priest shall chant them three times and the people twice.

96. Deacon : Ye that are penitent, bow your heads.

97. Then he shall turn to the people and say:

Lord our God .... (Anaphora of the Apostles 95 -126: pp. 49 - 52).

98. After receiving the holy Communion:

Priest : "Pilot of the Soul"

Again we supplicate God the almighty, Father of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ

99. O Thou Who loved the humility of man more than the greatness of angels, O Thou Who loved the poverty of Adam more than the treasuries of the tribe of Abraham.

100. O Thou Who loved the beauty of David more than the beauty of Eliab (2) the son of the Jebusite : O Thou Who loves man, while Thou art God, Thou art the Lord our God :

101. Deacon : Pray ye.

102. Priest : O purifier, purify our souls and bodies, (1) O merciful God, Father of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

103. Thou mixed water with wine, wind with fire, water with

Unite also our sufferings with the sufferings of Thy cross. (1)

104. Unto Thee we offer our prayers, Thee we supplicate and Thee we entreat, unto the ages of ages.

People : Amen.

105. Priest : "The Laying on of the Hand"

Lord our God, bless Thy servants and Thy handmaids who have taken the trouble to come to Thy sanctuary where the greatness of Thy glory dwells. Bless men and women, old and babies.

106. Unite us with the power of Thy holy angels, cover us with the curtain of Thy light, hide us (2) with the tree of Thy cross and keep us apart from every evil deed.

107. Make us to dwell in the congregation of the saints (3) who offer up prayer at every time and every hour. And to us who have eaten Thy body and drunk Thy blood, let them be for the remission of sin and for eternal life, through Thine only-begotten Son through Whom to Thee, with Him and with the Holy Spirit, be glory and dominion, both now and ever and unto the ages of ages. Amen.

3. Priest : God is great in His greatness, holy in His holiness, blessed in His beatitude and glorified in His glory.

He is the first_ yet of Him it is not asked, "When was His beginning ?" With Him it is ever "now." Yet of Him it is not asked, "How long will He endure?" ; And He is the last. Yet of Him it is not asked, "When will His end be?"

(1) This Anaphora is celebrated on the following occasions:
a On 17th Ginbot (May 25), the memorial day of the death of St. Epiphanius.
b. On the fast day or days of Epiphany.
c. On Great Thursday (that is, the Thursday before Fasika).
d. During the rainy season.

(2) He was born in 315 at Bezanduca, a small village in Palestine, of Jewish parents. After having been converted to become a Christian, he came to Egypt and spent a long time in its monasteries. On his return to Palestine, he was ordained priest by the Bishop of Eleutherapolis and became the president of a monastery which he founded near his native place. In 357 he was consecrated Bishop of Cyprus - an office which he held till his death on 17th Ginbot (May 25) 402 A.D.

ANAPHORA OF ST. EPIPHANIUS

4. There is no beginning of His being, there is no end of His existence, His days are numberless and His years are countless.

His youth does not wax old, the strength of His power does not diminish, His countenance is incorruptible and the light of His face cannot be dimmed.

5. The sea of His wisdom is unlimited, His merciful commands are countless, the range of His kingdom is immeasurable and His spacious government is boundless.

6. So invisible is He, that man cannot find Him by concepts, so lofty is He that man cannot understand Him with His heart, so high is He that the eagles cannot reach Him, and so deep is He that the fish cannot swim unto Him.

7. He is higher than the heads of the mountains and deeper than the depth of the sea. He is so strong that the Kings cannot rise against Him, and He is so victorious that the rulers cannot stand against Him.

8. He is so wise that He can destroy the counsel of the wise, His omniscience is such that He can make the thought of the counselors to be of no effect, (1) He is so mighty that He can loose the bridle of the strong, and He is so courageous that He can pulverize the teeth of sinners and put down the arms of the haughty.

9. He is so honourable that He can put to shame the face of the hypocrites, and He is so mighty that He can cast away the light of the filthy.

(1) Ps 32 (33) : 10.

10. He is the only one without equal, and He has absolute authority, without the help of kinsmen. The heavens will be destroyed, and the land will vanish, and all will wax old like a garment, but He is the same for ever. (1)

11. Wonderful is the movement of the sea, but more wonderful is God in His highest heaven. None resembles Him and none competes with Him from among all the creatures and all the children of gods. He Himself alone is God, He Himself alone is Lord, He Himself alone is creator and He Himself alone is maker.

12. He does not seek a helper for the plan He conceived, and He does not want an adviser for the work He desired. He knows all things before they happen as if they had happened before and that which has not happened as if it had happened.

13. He inspects the mind without asking and examines the hearts without seeking, and sees in darkness without light.

14. He knows the righteous before they do righteousness, He judges the sinners before they commit sin, He understands the prudent before they go out from their fathers' loins and understands the sinners from their mothers' wombs.

15. Nothing is hidden, nothing is concealed nothing is invisible to Him, all is open unto Him, all is spread before His eyes, all is written in His book, and all is present to His mind.

16. He does the great, countless, honourable and marvellous deeds which are inscrutable. His works are more wonderful than we can comprehend.

(1) Ps. 101 (l02) : 26, 27.

ANAPHORA OF ST. EPIPHANIUS

His power is more marvelous than anything we have heard and His glory is more astonishing than any had told us.

17. He made light out of darkness, He knows how to divide clouds, He divides water at His pleasure and He hides the elect with clouds.

18. He built the earth and prepared its boundaries, and established its ends in the way He saw, and strengthened its corners.

19. He fenced the sea with doors when it went out of its mother's womb (1), He made the clouds to be its clothes, and wrapped it with mist, He limited it and put into it doors and locks and said to it, "Reach here and do not go beyond your limit, but your storm will move within you.

20. The light of dawn was arranged over it, and the morning star knew His commandment. He took mud from the earth and created the living being and made him speak on the earth.

21. He reached the ends of the sea and walked in the paths of the deep.

22. Out of terror, the gates of death will be opened to Him, and the gatekeepers of hell will be afraid as soon as they see Him. He knows the spaciousness under heaven and that which happens above heaven.

23. Through His commandment frost comes out of its treasure and the wind blows under heaven. He leads the rain along the way of the wilderness to fall on the country where there is no man and wherein mortal man does not live.

(1) When it was created.

24. He established the course of water and opens the winter every year and brings the summer back in its due time. He calls the clouds with His word and water answers Him trembling.

25. He sends the thunderbolt and it goes and answers Him saying "What shall I do?" He counts the clouds through His wisdom and suspends the heaven over the earth.

26. He alone puts on the power of the highest heaven and is adorned with glory and honour.

27. Him hallow the fiery cherubim and the seraphim dressed in light with ceaseless words and a mouth which does not keep silent and a tongue which does not tire; and all say together with one voice answering Holy, holy, holy, perfect Lord of hosts, heaven and earth are full of the holiness of Thy glory.

28. Deacon : Answer ye.

29. People : Holy, holy, holy, perfect Lord of hosts, heaven and earth are full of the holiness of Thy glory.

31. All is from Him, all is for His sake, and all is His. Heaven is His, and the heaven of heavens is His. The breadth of the highest heaven is the throne of His glory, and the wide earth is His footstool.

32. The sun is His, the moon is His, and the stars are the work of His hands. Clouds are His messengers, winds are His chariots and fire is the wall of His house.

ANAPHORA OF ST. EPIPHANIUS

33. Water is the roof of His house, the gables of it are snow, light is His tabernacle, the lightning of glory is the veil of His hiding-place, and His going is in the air.

35. He causes the clouds to ascend from the ends of the earth, He makes lightning for the rain (1), He pours rain like drops from a strainer, He scatters the hoarfrost like ashes, he casts forth His ice like morsels (2), and He causes the grass to grow for the cattle (3).

36. He does according to His thought, completes what He began, orders according to His will. He makes sad and gives pleasure, impoverishes and enriches, dishonours and honours, kills and quickens, makes sick and heals, judges and justifies.

37. He spares him whom He wills to spare, He distresses him whom He wills to distress, He will have mercy on whom He will have mercy, (4) will have compassion on whom He will have compassion.

42. He alone is God, the God of gods and Lord of lords.

43. After this, when He saw that the blood of the holy prophets, from the blood of the righteous Abel unto the blood of Zacharias Son of Barachias, was not sufficient for the salvation of the world, (2) He sent unto us His Son, a Saviour and Redeemer, to save us, redeem us, and take before Him the remembrance of the living and the dead.

76. Priest : Prayer of Fraction.

Where is the country of Wisdom (1), where is its abode, where is its province, and where can the trace of its way be found?

77. Who crossed the sea and bought it for red gold; Who ascended above the cloud and brought it down? Mortal man does not know its way, it is not for mortal man.

(1) Anaphora of St. Dioscorus #48, p.161.

78. It is forgotten by all men, and it is hidden from all the birds of heaven (1). Those who possess it gain friendship with God, and those who hate it love death. It is more beautiful than the sun and all the concourse of stars. It is compared with the Light (2) because it was in the beginning.

79. Though it is in the old, it renews all: and in every generation, it enters into the souls of the righteous.

80. It is better than rubies; and all honour is not to be compared to it. It has counsel and power, strength and knowledge, by it kings reign, and the powerful decree justice.

81. By it the great are honoured, and by it the rulers take hold of the earth. It loves them that love it. It keeps them that keep it, and those that seek it find favour.

82. It walks in the way of righteousness and moves about in the path of righteousness to grant them that know it riches and to fill their treasuries with rejoicing (3).

83. He who knows all knows it, and He who understands all beautifies its way. He gave it to his servant Jacob and to his holy Israel. Afterwards, it appeared on the earth and walked like man.

84. Behold she has built a house for herself, and established seven pillars, she has killed her beasts, poured her wine in the bowl, and furnished her table.(4)

85. She has sent forth her servants ceaselessly proclaiming and saying : Whoever is simple let him turn in towards me:

(1) i.e. the angels. (2) i.e. God the Father. (3) Prov. 8 : 11-20. (4) Prov. 9 : 1-2 as for him that wants understanding, she says to him, Come, eat of my bread, and drink of my wine, forsake the foolish and live (1).

ANAPHORA OF ST. EPIPHANIUS

86. But wisdom is our Saviour Who redeemed us with the sacrifice of His body, and bought us with the sprinkling of His blood, and chose us for His kingdom for ever.(2)

87. Deacon : Pray ye.

People : Our Father who art in heaven . . . (see Anaphora #2 : #69 : p. 62)

88. Priest : O God of lights, God of authorities, God of the archangels, Thou did loosen the soul bound with death and did lighten him who was nailed in darkness with the nails of the cross of Thine Only-begotten.

89. O Lord, Thou art He Who loosened our sufferings and all our burdens, and loosen the bonds of our sin, and took our trouble and quicken us, and became to us the way towards the place of life, Thou did turn us from destruction unto salvation

90. O Lord, our almighty God, Father of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, Whose curtain is light, Whose face is fire, and the throne of Whose glory is ineffable, and the abode of joy which cannot be spoken of, which He has prepared for the holy ones. His garments are the treasures of light.

91. Thou keeps the holy angels, all of whom tremble and glorify Thee when Thou looks at them the mountains melt, and when Thy name is spoken of, springs come forth from the depth.

92. Thou art He who covered heaven gathering (all) in Thy hand the earth and the depths together tremble before Thee.

(1) Prov. 9 : 3-6. (2) 1Cor. 1 : 18 - 31

93. All the hosts of the enemy were discomfited before Thee, the Devil fell, the beast was trodden down and the snake was destroyed.

94. All the gentiles who believed in Thee were enlightened and strengthened by Thee. O Lord, through Thee life was seen, hope was strengthened, the gospel, through which destruction was destroyed, has been preached, and salvation was confirmed.

95. O Lord our almighty God, make us worthy to partake of this (pointing) bread, the body of Thy life-giving Son, and of this (pointing) cup, the speaking blood of Thy Messiah, through Whom to Thee with Him and with the Holy Spirit be glory and dominion, both now and ever, and unto the ages of ages. Amen.

96. People : The hosts of the angels of the Saviour of the world, stand before the Saviour of the world and encircle the Saviour of the world, even the body and the blood of the Saviour of the world.

97. Asst. Deacon : Open ye the gates, princes.

98. Deacon : Ye who are standing, bow your heads.

99. Priest : Let the Lamb come that we may see Him with our eyes, immolate Him with our hands and rejoice in Him. May His body be joined with this bread, and may His blood be poured into this cup.

ANAPHORA OF ST. EPIPHANIUS

100. Let none of us think when he eats of this (pointing) bread that he eats mere flesh without blood and Spirit, and let none of us think when he drinks of this (pointing) cup that he drinks mere blood without body and Spirit, but one is the Body, Blood and Spirit as His divinity became one with His humanity, unto the ages of ages.

101. Deacon : Worship the Lord with fear.

Then the priest shall repeat them three times and the people twice.

106. Deacon : Ye that are penitent, bow your heads.

Then he shall turn to the people and say:

107. Priest : Lord our God, look upon Thy people that are penitent .... (Anaphora of the Apostles 95 - 138: pp. 49 - 53).

(1) Anaphora of St. Athanasius .150-153, and Anaphora of St. Dioscorus 52, 53.

After receiving the Holy Communion.

108. Priest : "Pilot of the Soul"
Again we supplicate the Almighty God, Father of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, because He did neither disdain nor refuse our supplication, nor did He remove His mercy from us, because the Lord our God is merciful.
Deacon : Pray ye.

109. Priest :
Yea Lord, Thou art the God of all.
Yea Lord, Thou art the King of all.
Yea Lord, Thou art Almighty.
Yea Lord, Thou art the Governor of all.
Yea Lord, Thou art the Saviour of all.
Yea Lord, Thou art the Judge of all.
Yea Lord, Thou art the Life-giver of all.
Yea Lord, Thou art the Keeper of all.
Yea Lord, Thou art the Nourisher of all.

110. As Thou did join the body of Thy Son with our body, and Thou did mix the blood of Thy Messiah with our blood, so put Thy fear in our hearts and the beauty of Thy worship in our minds.

111. We, who are carnal, mind the things of the flesh and do the works of the flesh and walk in the way of the flesh. But Thou taught us the work of the Spirit and makes us to understand the law of the Spirit and leads us in the way of the Spirit.

112. Because if Thou pity us, we sinners, then Thou will be called compassionate. Thou pities the righteous because of their works and recompenses them according to their righteousness.

ANAPHORA OF ST. EPIPHANIUS

113. Remember not against us former iniquities let Thy tender mercies, O God, speedily prevent us. (1)

114. Towards Thee we cry, towards Thee we weep, Thee we entreat, unto the endless ages.
People : Amen (2)

115. Priest : The Laying on of the Hand.
He is higher than all that is high. No mind and no heart can interpret the riches of Thy gift, O Master, because Thou has hid these things from the wise and prudent and has revealed them unto babes.

116. These things which prophets and kings have desired to see but have not seen, Thou has granted us sinners: that we may serve and be sanctified by them, when Thou established for us the order of Thine only-begotten Son. The hidden mystery cannot be compared to the blood of the old law nor the righteousness of the flesh, but it is the heavenly Lamb and the sacrifice speaking without flesh.

117. Sanctify the lips of us who offer this sacrifice, and purify our hearts from being mixed with vanity, and send upon us the grace of the Holy Spirit that we may greet one another with a holy kiss and receive of Thy holy undying gift through Jesus Christ.

118. Through Whom to Thee with Him and with the Holy Spirit, the life-giver, Who is equal with Thee, be glory and dominion, both now and ever and unto the ages of ages. Amen.

The ANAPHORA of St. JOHN CHRYSOSTOM[1]

1. The Anaphora of John Chrysostom [2], may his prayer and blessing be with our (head of state: King, Queen, President . . .) unto endless ages.

2. Priest : The Lord be with all of you.
People : And with your spirit.
Priest : Give ye thanks unto our God.
People : It is right, it is just.
Priest : Lift up your hearts.
People : We have lifted them up unto the Lord our God.

3.Deacon : Let your thought be above, and your heart in heaven, recognize where you stand ; hear the word of righteousness and listen to the good news.

4. Priest : Behold we proclaim the existence of the Father Who was before the world was created and will live for ever.

None was before Him, none will be after Him, none is like Him, and none knows what is His being.

(1) This Anaphora is celebrated on the following occasions
a. 27th of every month, the Feast of the Saviour of the world.
b. On 10th Magabit (March 19), the memorial day of discovering the cross of the Lord by St. Helen, mother of Constantine.
a. On Great Saturday, preceding Easter.
d. On every Wednesday and Friday.
e. On 12th Ginbot (May 20), the memorial day of the death of St. John Chrysostom.

(2) He was born. in 347 at Antioch. As a young man, he was sent to Athens to study Greek philosophy. Then he chose the monastic life and lived for some time in one of the monasteries and was afterwards ordained as a priest at Antioch. In 387 he was consecrated as Bishop of Constantinople. He was a good author and, wrote many books. As a preacher he was very powerful and had the courage to rebuke the sinners, poor or rich, humble or noble. He rebuked even the Queen who, for this reason, exiled him. He died on 12 Ginbot (May 20) 407 A. D.

5. He who was before all, before the heavens were stretched out, before the face of the earth appeared, before the mountains arose, before the airs expanded He was in his place.

6. Before the depths were established and the floods began to flow as rivers, He was in His place.

7. Before the winds blew, before the thunderbolts flashed, before the lightenings were drawn out, before the thunders thundered, and before the clouds started to spread, He was in His place.

8. Before the lights appeared, before the darkness was to cover, before the light of the day gave light, and before night was fixed, He was in His place.

9. Before the sun fixed the length of the day and before the moon fixed the length of the night, He was in His place.

10. Before the stars glittered, before the spirits moved, and before the angels were created, He was in His place.

11. Before the speaking soul, before the mortal flesh, and before all the creatures, those that live in hiding and those that live in the open; those that are above and those that are beneath, He was in His place.

12. Before time and hours, before nights and days, before months and years before days of the week and the seasons, He was in His place.

13. His glory is from Himself, His praise is from Himself, and the riches of His grace are full and perfect.

14. Then let us speak of the greatness of His mercies which have appeared unto us and which cannot be counted or measured.

15. When we transgressed His commandment through the advice of the cursed serpent we were driven from the garden of delight unto destruction, from life unto death, from freedom unto slavery, and we submitted ourselves to the yoke of sin. (1)

16. But He did not forsake or neglect us, who were His workmanship, and did not take vengeance upon us because of our sins so that we should utterly perish as we committed sin against Him, but He loved us, visited us, spared us, had mercy upon us and saved us from the hand of him who enslaved us.

17. He sent unto us his saving and redeeming Son, the messenger of His counsel, His right hand, His arm, His power, and the wisdom of His Father. Through Him He did all that He desired in this world.

18. Whom He did predestinate, them He called; whom He called, them He loved ; whom He loved, them He honoured ; whom He honoured, them He justified; whom He justified, them He glorified to be an adornment for His Son. (2)

19. And through Him He gathered us to the great faith, we who were scattered, and made us to Himself a gathered people, and drew us nearer unto Himself to glorify Him.

20. He wrote our names in the book of life so that the remembrance of everyone, the dead and the living, might be before Him.

ANAPHORA OF
ST. JOHN CHRYSOSTOM

22. The Assistant priest shall say the "Prayer of Benediction" (Anaphora of the Apostles 10-21, pp. 43, 44).

23. Asst. Deacon : Lord pity and have mercy upon the patriarchs, archbishops, bishops, priests, deacons and all the Christian people.

24. Priest : Again we proclaim the existence of the only-begotten, what He is, what was his descent, and what was His birth.

25. He came without going out of His Father, He descended without removing from His position, He came without being separated from the Trinity, He came down without breaking His unity, an d He dwelt in a daughter of flesh without leaving His throne.

26. Deacon : Ye that are sitting, stand up.

27. Priest : He was conceived in the womb without letting there be any place that was not full of Him, He was bound in the womb without making subtraction above, and was born without making addition beneath.

28. Deacon : Look to the east.

29. Priest : He became man, absolutely without sin, and appeared like a servant, working like God, as the preachers of His gospel witnessed.

30. Deacon : Let us give heed.

31. Priest : He was glorified by His Father, He was given thanks by the angels, He was praised by men and sanctified by Himself.

32. The holiness of His glory filled heaven and earth. Henceforth, at all times, we give our hearts no rest but speak of the holiness of His glory and cry saying : Holy, holy, holy, perfect Lord of hosts, heaven and earth are full of the holiness of Thy glory.

33. Deacon : Answer ye.

34. People : Holy, holy, holy, perfect Lord of hosts, heaven and earth are full of the holiness of Thy glory.

35. Priest : Truly holy, holy, holy art Thou, Jesus Christ, Who is sanctified by the mouths of all,

36. and Who, through Thy goodness, has granted to all Thy holy ones to be holy. His holy things cannot be destroyed or perish, those things which eye has not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, which God has prepared for His holy disciples and pure apostles who loved Him; and He has shown them the order of the holy communion.

37. Deacon : Priests, raise up your hands.

38. Priest : He took bread in His holy, blessed and spotless hands.

At this time he shall raise the bread.

39. People : We believe that this is He, truly we believe.

40. Priest : He looked up to heaven towards Thee, His Father, God and Lord of all, Who is above all, gave thanks, blessed (+ three times) and broke, and gave it to His disciples and said to them, "This (pointing) is My body," which is indeed the food of righteousness ; whoever eats of it has eternal life. Take, eat of it.

41. People : Amen. Amen. Amen. We believe and confess, we glorify Thee, O our Lord and our God, that this is He we truly believe.

THE ANAPHORA OF
ST. JOHN CHRYSOSTOM

Priest : And likewise also the cup mixing water with wine, He gave thanks, blessed (+ three times), sanctified, gave it to His disciples and said to them This (pointing) is My blood which is indeed the drink of life, whoever drinks of it has eternal life; take, drink ye all of it.

He shall move the cup with his right hand in the sign of the cross.

42. People : Amen. Amen. Amen.

43. Priest : It is a sign to you and to those who will come after you, so do likewise in remembrance of Me until I come.

Whenever ye gather in My name, proclaim My death, My resurrection and Mine ascension into the heavens.

44. People : We proclaim Thy death, Lord, and Thy holy resurrection ; we believe Thine ascension and Thy second advent. We glorify Thee and confess Thee, we offer our prayer and supplicate Thee, O our Lord and our God.

45. Priest : And we, who have gathered together, proclaim the sufferings of him who does not suffer and proclaim the death of Him who does not die. In the same night when He sat with His disciples He gave His soul over to death with the will of His Father and in His own good pleasure.

46. They took hold of Him who takes hold of all, bound the ruler of all and shackled the Son of the living God ; they drew Him in wrath and He followed them in love, they took Him and He followed them like a meek sheep which is dumb before its shearers.

47. They caused to stand in the court Him, before Whom stand archangels in fear and trembling. He who forgives sins, was accused as a sinner by them, the Judge of judges was judged by them.

48. Him, Who crowns seraphim with a coronet, they crowned with a crown of thorns. Him, Who clothes cherubim with garments of might, they clothed with a scarlet robe to mock Him.

49. A wicked servant strengthened his hand to strike the face of Him from Whose face the cherubim are hidden being covered with wings of fire.

50. They knelt before him, mocking Him Whom the hosts of angels worship in great fear.[1]

51. Oh what humility is this! Oh what patience is this! Oh what a silence is this!

52. Oh what a kindness is this! Oh what a love of man is this!

53. Love drew down the Son of God from His throne and brought Him unto death. Him, Who had no wickedness, they crucified as wicked. Him, Who is the maker of life, they numbered with the wicked.

54. Oh the hands which formed Adam were nailed with the nails of the cross.

Oh the feet which walked in the garden were nailed with the nails of the cross.

55. Oh the mouth which breathed the spirit of life into the nostrils of Adam drank vinegar mixed with gall.

[1] See E:90-92, p. 92

ANAPHORA OF
ST. JOHN CHRYSOSTOM

56. What mouth, what lips, what tongue can express the sufferings of the Son?

57. The heart is broken, the mind is perplexed, the soul trembles and the flesh is weary when the sufferings of the Beloved are mentioned.

58. The Immortal died: died to destroy death, died to quicken the dead.

59. Deacon : Ye who love Him, weep and mourn over him.

60. Priest : Woe! Woe! Woe![1] Emmanuel our God.

The people shall repeat his words.

61. Priest : Woe! Woe! Woe! Jesus our Saviour.

The people shall repeat his words.

62. Priest : Woe! Woe! Woe! Christ our King.

The people shall repeat his words.

63. Priest : Woe! Woe! Woe! the righteous men took Him down from the tree, brought a mixture of myrrh and aloes and pure fine linen cloths to wrap His body.

64. People : Holy God [2] holy Mighty, holy Living, Immortal, Who was born from the holy Virgin Mary, have mercy upon us, Lord. Holy God, holy Mighty, holy Living, Immortal, Who was baptized in Jordan and crucified on the tree of the cross, have mercy upon us, Lord.

65. At this time he shall offer incense with the cross-spoon.

People : Remember us, Lord. (Anaphora. of the Apostles #34: p.45)

[1] See footnote 1 on page 47

[2] See Preparatory Ser-vice #174: p. 33.

66. Priest : On the third day he restored His soul into His body.

67. People : Holy God, holy Mighty, holy Living, Immortal, Who rose from the dead on the third day, ascended into heaven in glory, sat at the right hand of His Father and again will come in glory to judge the living and the dead, have mercy upon us, Lord.

Glory be to the Father, glory be to the Son, glory be to the Holy Spirit, both now and ever, and unto the ages of ages. Amen and amen, so be it, so be it.

68. Priest : He rose from the dead, absolutely without corruption and set us free from the yoke of sin. In this body, with the power of His divinity, He ascended into heaven to His accustomed position.

69. Deacon : Bow your heads before God.

70. Priest : (in a low voice) We pray Thee and beseech Thee, as Thou sent Thy Holy Spirit upon Thy holy disciples and pure apostles, so also send upon us this Thy Holy Spirit Who sanctifies our souls, bodies and spirits that we may be purified through Him from all our sins and may draw near to receive Thy divine mystery, for Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory, for ever.

71. Priest : (in a loud voice) Lord, remember the covenant (1)of Thy word which Thou established with our fathers and with Thy holy apostles to send upon us this Thy Holy Spirit Whom the world cannot receive. Thou taught us that we may call upon Thee saying, Our Father Who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name, Thy kingdom come.

ANAPHORA OF
ST. JOHN CHRYSOSTOM CHRYSOSTOM

72. May this Holy Spirit, who is neither searchable nor inferior, come from above the highest heaven to bless this (pointing) bread and to hallow the cup, to make this bread the communion of Thy life-giving body (+ once over the bread) and also to make this cup the communion of Thy merciful blood. (+ once over the cup and once more over both the bread and the cup.)

73. People : Amen. Lord pity us, Lord spare us. Lord have mercy upon us.

74. Deacon : With all the heart let us beseech the Lord our God that He grant us the good communion of the Holy Spirit.

75. People : As it was, is and shall be unto generations of generations, and endless ages.

76.At this time he shall (dip his finger into the Blood and sign the Body.

Priest : May he be joined with this bread and this cup that they may be for sanctification, purification from filthiness, resurrection from the dead, inheritance of the kingdom of heaven and everlasting life.

People : Amen.

77.Priest : Grant us to be united through thy Holy Spirit, and heal us by this oblation that we may live in Thee for ever.

The people shall repeat his words.

78.Priest : Blessed be the name of the Lord, and blessed be He that comes in the name of the Lord, and let the name of His glory be blessed. So be it. So be it. So be it blessed.

The people shall repeat his words.

79. Priest : Send the grace of the Holy Spirit upon us.
The people shall repeat his words.

80. Deacon : Arise for prayer.
People : Lord have mercy upon us.
Priest : Peace be unto all of you.
People : And with your spirit.

81. Priest : Prayer of Fraction.
Again we supplicate the almighty God, Father of our Lord and Saviour. Jesus Christ.

82. Oh this mystery cannot be solved or interpreted! What is His name, and what is His Father's name, where is His country, and who knows His dwelling-place?

83. The thought of the heart, thinking deeply, cannot find the answer to the question nor speak of his first and last being.

84. He proclaimed to us Himself and His Father in the way we could bear, (He proclaimed to us) that our Saviour truly came to the world clothed in the body which He took from us.

85. This is what we sacrifice for our salvation as He was sacrificed on Calvary for the life of all the world. This bread is not useless as you see it earthly, dry, baked, able to be felt and touched, but it is the fire of the godhead, which burns the thorn of sin. It is so consuming that it consumes the wicked, it is so burning that it burns the sinners.

86. O my brothers, believers, know and examine yourselves, see if any one of us has a blemish in his body and sin in his soul, that he may depart and may not draw near.

ANAPHORA OF
ST. JOHN CHRYSOSTOM

87. If any one of us has revenge in his heart, let him depart and notstand. But blessed is he who has purified his soul and body; let him come and receive and pray because of his sin, because the Lord our God is merciful.

88. Deacon : Pray ye.
People : Our Father Who art in heaven . . . (see Anaphora #2, #69 : p. 62)

(Also) According to Thy mercy, our God, and not according to our sins. (thrice)

89. Priest : The mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting (1). This is the mercy of God Who sent His only-begotten Son Who takes away the sin of the world. This is the mercy of God Who gave the priests tongues of fire to loosen the bonds of sin.

90. Now, Lord our God, our heavenly Father, loose us from the bonds of death.

91. People : The hosts of the angels of the Saviour of the world stand before the Saviour of the world and encircle the Saviour of the world, even the body and the blood of the Saviour of the world.
Let us draw near the face of the Saviour of the world. In the faith which is of Him let us submit ourselves to Christ.

92. Asst. Deacon : Open ye the gates, princes.

93. Deacon : Ye who are standing, bow your heads.

(1) Ps. 102 (103):17.

94. Priest : Truly forgive that He may forgive unto you. Truly remit that He may remit unto you. Truly pray that you may not enter into temptation. Temptation is to take His body in subtlety and to receive His blood without fear while the blame of sin is upon you.

95. Now, with pure heart and holy soul and body refined, let us draw near for our salvation. Come, let us worship and serve Him.

96. Deacon : Worship the Lord with fear.

People : Before Thee, Lord, we worship, and Thee do we glorify.

97. Priest : Prayer of Penitence. (Anaph. of the Apostles 72-88: p. 47-48).

98. Deacon : Give heed.

Priest : Holy things for the holy.

People : One is the holy Father, one is the holy Son, one is the Holy Spirit.

99. Priest : The Lord be with all of you.

People : And with your spirit.

100. The priest shall then lift up the whole Host with his hands and say: Lord, have compassion upon us, O Christ. (three times in a loud chant and fifteen times in a low chant)

The people shall repeat his words.

Then the priest shall repeat them three times and the people twice.

101. Deacon : Ye that are penitent, bow your heads.

ANAPHORA OF
ST. JOHN CHRYSOSTOM

102. Priest : shall turn to the people and say : Lord our God .... (Anaphora of the Apostles 95 - 96: p. 49; and then 97-138: pp. 49 - 53)

103. After receiving the Holy Communion.

Priest : Pilot of the Soul.

Before the glory of Thy holiness Thy servants and handmaids have prostrated themselves in soul, body and spirit. Incline Thine ear unto their supplication.

104. Bless them who mind the heavenly things with the blessing of Thine angels and powers. Bless the work of their hands, and be with them in every good work.

105. Grant that by their having received of Thy holy mystery they may be prudent, watchful and freed from all evil, and may feed their souls, bodies and spirits, through our Lord Jesus Christ

106. Through Whom to Thee with Him and with the Holy Spirit be glory, dominion, both now and ever, and unto the ages of ages.

People : Amen.

107. Priest : The Laying on of the Hand.

Good things have been done to you, good things have been done to you, good things have been done to you. O sheep of Christ's pasture, you have eaten and have been satisfied, you have drunk and have quenched your thirst. Return to your houses in peace; may the Lord be with all of you.

THE ANAPHORA OF ST. CYRIL(1)

1. The Anaphora of St. Cyril (2) may his prayer and blessing be with our (head of state: King, Queen, President . . .), unto endless ages. Amen.

2. Priest : The Lord be with all of you.
People : And with your spirit.
Priest : Give ye thanks unto our God.
People : It is right, it is just.
Priest : Lift up your hearts.
People : We have lifted them up unto the Lord our God.

(1) This Anaphora is celebrated on the following occasions

a. Ascension day.
b. memorial days of deaths.
c. feast days of Abraham, Job and Elijah.
d. On 3rd Hamle (July 10). the memorial day of the death of St. Cyril.

(2) Cyril, the 24th patriarch of Alexandria, was the nephew of Theophilos, the previous Patriarch. He was born in 376. His uncle sent him to the Theological College of Alexandria, then to the monastery of St. Macarius. In 402 he was consecrated as Patriarch of Alexandria after the death of his uncle. It was he who presided at the third ecumenical council, held at Ephesus in 431 where he effectively contended against the heresy of Nestorius. Following the deprivation and exile of his formidable opponent, Nestorius, he returned to Alexandria in triumph, hailed as the great champion of the faith, and thence continued the theological strife for years. As a dogmatic theologian, his works speak to those seeking precise and firm definitions of orthodox belief along with tenacity of conviction. In addition to his Twelve Anathemas, he wrote five other books against Nestorius, a tract on 'Worshipping in Spirit and in Truth,' several commentaries, festal orations, and a reply to the Emperor Julian's attack on the church. He died on 3rd Hamle (July 10) 435 A.D. Others say that he died in 444.

3. Priest : The Lord, God of gods, Lord of lords, the invisible God, Whose existence is unsearchable, is higher than all, yea, His nature is unfathomable.

4. He is the consuming fire, the life-giving fire, the God of gods and the Lord of lords, Whose throne is above the heavens and Whose footstool is the earth, He is high and far away, and dwells in light.

5. High and invisible is He Who dwells in heaven. He is clothed in garments of fire and adorned with flames of fire, His throne is on the heads of fire (1), His going to and fro is through impalpable air, His high firmament is in heaven, clouds are His chariot, His way is in the stormy sea and on the heads of fire (1) who minister Him.

6. Deacon : Ye that are sitting, stand up.

7. Priest : With their two wings of fire they cover their face that the consuming fire may not consume them, with their two luminous wings they cover their feet that his terrible light may not burn them, and with their two spiritual wings they fly unto the ends of the world.

8. Seraphim together with their leaders, cherubim according to their sanctification, the angels in their ranks, the watchful according to their armies, the heads of the watchful according to their tribes, the angels of fire according to their light, and the spiritual according to their position, give thanks and hallow with terrible voice, cry aloud, and on high, and while sanctifying they say : Holy, holy, holy, perfect Lord of hosts, heaven and earth are full of the holiness of Thy glory.

9. Deacon : Answer ye.

10. People : Holy, holy, holy, perfect Lord of hosts, heaven and earth are full of the holiness of Thy glory.

11. Priest : And we say together with them, Thou art holy, and wonderful is the holiness of Thy glory, Father of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

Truly He alone is Thy Son, and Thou alone truly art His Father.

12. His birth from Thee is Unsearchable. As Thine existence has no beginning, so Thy Son has neither beginning nor end, and as Thy days have no beginning His days also have no beginning.

13. None sits at Thy right hand except Thy Son born from Thee, and none sits on Thy throne but Thine image Who is like Thee and is Thy likeness.

14. He is Thy Son and the messenger of Thy counsel, Thy beloved Who is of Thee, Thine image, Thine appearance, Thy mind, Thy power, Thy wisdom, Thy counsel, Thy right-hand, and Thine arm; He is true God from Thine essence, the truly only-begotten Son.

15. He was born from Thine essence, the Word perfect in all, Who is Thine image born from Thee and equal to Thee; He is like Thee high and wonderful.

16. Angels and archangels worship Him; through Thy love for man Thou sent Him to us because Thou has loved us.

THE ANAPHORA OF ST. CYRIL

17. Humbling Himself He redeemed us. He who was born from Thee and is like Thee was born from us in our likeness which is in Thine image.

18. He, who is perfect like Thee and is Thine image, walked among us in our image.

19. He told us about Thy being, and was made flesh like us. He who overawes the seraphim from the highest heaven suffered at His own will.

20. We saw Him and despised Him Who is great before Thee. He is the glorious Lord among us, yet He is hidden from the watchful. Truly He appeared, and was born openly of our nature.

21. He resembles Thee in image and appearance, was made man, came in the likeness of our flesh, lived among us in our image, and He is glorious like Thee.

22. He flew and descended unto us, and suffered insult as we do. He flew and ascended unto Thee and He is honourable as Thou art.

23. He, to Whom the watchful give thanks in heaven, was crowned with a crown of thorns and was crucified on the tree of the cross with thieves. He, before Whom the high ones bow their heads in awe, bowed his head before the crucifiers to suffer.

24. A weak tree carried Him who carries heaven and earth. A narrow grave contained Him, before whom heaven and earth tremble, when He was buried in it.

25. Him who gathered the ends of earth in His palm and held the seas of the world in the hollow of His hand__ they wrapped with linen cloths and buried in a grave of three cubits. He stretched forth His honourable head and the grave was fIlled with Him.

26. He rose from the dead on the third day and entered where His disciples were, while the door was closed, and then departed from His disciples.

27. While He was there, His glory covered the heavens. He ascended into heaven, sat at the right hand of His Father, heaven became His throne and the earth His footstool.

28. He will come again to judge the living and the dead, He will thunder above and His voice will shake the foundations of the earth, and the dead will come out unto Him from their graves, to Whom be glory and honour, together with His Father and the Holy Spirit, unto the ages of ages.

29. Deacon : Look to the east.

30. Priest : Yea, Lord, it is Thou Who raises all by Thy word, who raised the dead through Thy death. There are among the unbelievers those who believed in Thy cross, there are among the sinners those who returned through Thy death, there are among the unclean those who were sanctified through Thy suffering, there are among the dead those whom Thou raised through Thy resurrection, and among those who were gathered together to judge Thee there were those who believed in Thee.

31. Thou did open the iron gate and will raise those whose bodies waxed old in the grave, and will awaken those who fell asleep in their life time, and will raise those lying in the earth, and will set free the slaves of sin, and will justify through Thy mercy those who were defiled

32. People : According to Thy mercy, our God, and not according to our sins. (to be chanted thrice)

(1) Hab. 3:3.

THE ANAPHORA OF ST. CYRIL

33. Priest : Through Thy mercy Thou reconciles the heretics, strengthens with Thy word those who return to Thee, causes the heretics to return that they may walk in Thy way, gatherers the scattered to enter into Thy paradise.

34. Those among Thy people who committed sin Thou causes to return unto Thy faith.

35. O Lord, Thou strengthens the weak in spirit that all who live on earth may know that Thou art God and know Thy Son Jesus Christ Whom Thou sent, Thy beloved Son Whom Thou loves and who was born from Thee. Glory be to Thee with Him and with the invisible Holy Spirit, unto the ages of ages.

36. Deacon : Let us give heed.

37. Priest : We offer before Thee this pure and holy offering for the sake of Abel Seth, Enoch, and Melchisedec, for the sake of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, for the sake of Moses, Aaron and all the prophets.

38. For the sake of Simon Peter, John the Baptist and all the apostles.

39. For the sake of David, Hezekiah, Josiah, King Constantine and all the kings who have gone to their rest in the true faith.

40. For the sake of all the bishops, priests, deacons, assistant deacons, anagnosts, young men and virgins.

THE ANAPHORA OF ST. CYRIL

prayer of the watchful and with the perfection of the saints :

50. With the purity of Adam, with the sacrifice of Noah, with the hospitality of Abraham, with the kindness of Isaac and with the vision of Jacob :

51. With the imprisonment of Joseph, with the patience of Job, with the meekness of Moses and with the praise of Elijah :

52. With the love of the apostles, with the prayer of the saints, with the labour of the anchorites, with the righteousness of the sinless, and with the humility of the pure :

53. With the courage of the pure, with the bereavement of the bereaved, and with the righteousness of the perfect saints :

54. With the remoteness of the ends of the earth; with the depth of the sea's whirlpools, with the flash of lightning, and with the flight of the clouds :

55. With the thanksgiving of the angels, with the glory of the saints, with the purity of the watchful, with the agreement of the high ones, and with the light of the spiritual ones :

56. With the right hand of the priests, with the death of the martyrs, with the blood of the believers, and with the greatness of the luminous angels :

57. With the striking of Thy Son, with the suffering of Thine only One, and with Thine authority which holds all :

58. And with the prayer which ascends to the Father of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

(1) i.e. either the authority given to them, or the right hand with which they prepare the Holy Communion.

59. At this time he shall offer incense.
People : Remember us, Lord, in Thy kingdom.

60. Priest : In the same night in which they betrayed Him:

61 Deacon : Priests, raise up your hands.

62. Priest : He took bread in His holy, blessed and spotless hands, looked up unto heaven, towards Thee, His Father.

63. People : We believe that this is He, truly we believe.

64. Priest : Gave thanks, blessed, broke (+ three times, then he shall indent the Host lightly with his thumb in five places without separation). And said unto them, Take, eat, this (pointing) bread is My body which will be broken for you as a propitiation for all the world for the remission of sin.

65. People : Amen. Amen. Amen.
We believe and confess, we glorify Thee, O our Lord and our God; that this is He we truly believe.

66. Priest : Again after they had supped, He took a cup, gave thanks, blessed, hallowed (+ three times) and said unto His disciples, Take, drink, this (pointing) cup is My blood of the new testament which will be shed for you and given as a propitiation for all the world for the remission of sin.

He shall move the cup with his right hand in the sign of the cross.

67. People : Amen. Amen. Amen.

68. Priest : Yea, Lord our God,

THE ANAPHORA OF ST. CYRIL

hearken to the prayer of Thy servants and accept those who worship Thee before Thy face.

69. People : We proclaim Thy death, Lord, and Thy holy resurrection; we believe thy ascension and Thy second advent. We glorify Thee, and confess Thee, we offer our prayer unto Thee and supplicate Thee, O our Lord and our God.

70. Priest : Let the flaming sword of fire, called "Shining"[1] be drawn, and let the heaven of heavens be opened, through Thy righteousness, and with Thy will, let Thy living Holy Spirit descend, come and rest upon this bread and cup, bless and sanctify them to be the communion of the body and blood of Thine only-begotten Son, our Lord, God, and Saviour Jesus Christ (+ once over the bread and once over the cup and once more over both of them) for the forgiveness of the iniquity to those who draw near to it and remission of sin to those who partake of it.

71. People : Amen. Lord pity us, Lord spare us, Lord have mercy upon us.

72. Deacon : With all the heart let us beseech the Lord our God that he grant unto us the good communion of the Holy Spirit.

73. People : As it was, is, and shall be unto generations of generations, and endless ages.

74. At this time he shall dip his finger into the Blood and sign the Body.

Priest : And to all those who in true faith partake of it and receive it may it be for mercy, compassion, healing, help, life of soul and body, forgiveness of iniquity, remission of sin, resurrection from the dead, and new life, unto the ages of ages.

[1] ሚሎስ Gen. 3:24; Eph. 6:17; Heb. 4:12

People : Amen.

75. Priest : Grant us to be united through Thy Holy Spirit, and heal us by this oblation that we may live in Thee forever.

The people shall repeat his words.

76. Priest : Blessed be the name of the Lord, and blessed be He that comes in the name of the Lord, and let the name of His glory be blessed. So be it. So be it. So be it blessed.

The people shall repeat his words.

77. Priest : Send the grace of the Holy Spirit upon us.

The people shall repeat his words.

78. Deacon : Arise for prayer.

People : Lord have mercy upon us.

Priest : Peace be unto all of you.

People : And with your spirit.

79. Priest : Prayer of Fraction.

Again we beseech the almighty God, Father of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, O Lord, we have lifted up our eyes unto Thee desiring the descent of the Holy Spirit, we kneel to Thee with the knees of our heart, and we bow unto Thee the heads of our minds and spirits.

80. O Lord, sanctify us with Thy sanctification, and purify us through Thy mercy, and make us worthy to partake of Thy holy mystery.

81. Let not this coal of fire, which we have laid before Thee upon Thy holy altar, be our accuser, and let not this bread of worship which we break be for vengeance because we did not purify our soul and our body.

82. It is fearful to open the lips to eat burning fire and swallow glowing coal, if the belly is not purified from deceit.

THE ANAPHORA OF ST. CYRIL

83. It is fearful to see the slaughter of the pure bridegroom in his pavilion.

84. It is fearful to see the killing of the Son of the living God before His heavenly Father.

85. It is fearful to draw near the flame of the Deity and to touch the lightning of glory.

86. Deacon : Pray ye.

People : Our Father who art in heaven . . .

(see Anaphora #2, #69 : p. 62)

87. Priest : Let us, therefore, purify ourselves to take it and sanctify our souls to receive it and say :

Glory be to the Father who has been pleased that the pure fatted calf may be killed.

Glory be to the Son who is the pure fatted Calf.

Glory be to the Holy Spirit Who has made this bread the flesh of the pure fatted Calf.

Three names and one God,

Three likenesses [1] and one appearance,

Three persons and one essence.

88. Worthy is He to be glorified by the mouths of the watchful angels, worthy is He to be sanctified by the mouths of the prophets and apostles from now till the end of the world and till the second advent.

89. People : The hosts of the angels of the Saviour of the world stand before the Saviour of the world, and encircle the Saviour of the world, even the body and blood of the Saviour of the world.

Let us draw near the face of the Saviour of the world. In the faith that is of Him, let us let us submit ourselves to Christ.

[1] The literal translation is “faces.”

90. Asst. Deacon : Open ye the gates, princes.

91. Deacon : Ye who are standing, bow your heads.

92.) Priest : The Father was with His Son and the Holy Spirit before there were hours and days, before there were months and years.

93. The One was not before the Other, and the Second was not before the Third. How swift is the speed of lightning (1) and how swift is the movement of eagles'(2) wings.

94. They are united without separation, connected without being mixed, They live in Trinity, They are joined in oneness, equal in persons and similar in light and appearance.

95. The Father did not beget His Son to help Him in His work before the world was created, and the existence of the Holy Spirit is not to contribute wisdom and work.

96. Let us speak of His birth from God the Father only. In that instance He had no mother because the existence of the creatures had not yet appeared. Again, let us speak of and proclaim the birth of Him Who is alone the Son of God, and, Who alone was born without an earthly Father from the Virgin, the daughter of David.

97. His humanity was not inferior because He had no Father to be born of his seed, but was perfectly incarnate from a virgin only.

98. As Eve's female nature was not inferior through having had no mother when she was formed from the bone of Adam's side,

(1) i.e. the Trinity. (2) i.e. the angels.

THE ANAPHORA OF ST. CYRIL

and as the building of the body of the first Adam did not lose anything when a bone of his side was taken away, so also the seal of Mary's virginity was not destroyed when she gave birth to the Father of Adam in the flesh;

99. And as Adam did not feel pain when a bone was taken from his side, also the Galilean Mother of God did not feel travail.

100. Thus we believe and thus we affirm that this bread which we break is the body of Christ which He took from the daughter of the Hebrews.

101. We also believe that this cup is the blood of the Deity shed from the side of God's Lamb. We also believe that this sign of the cross is the image of Christ's crucifixion when He was stretched out at the time of His suffering.

102. We bow before the altar of Him who is clothed with a vesture dipped in blood and before that vesture dipped in blood, unto the ages of ages.

103. Deacon : Worship the Lord with fear.

People : Before Thee, Lord, we worship, and Thee do we glorify.

104. Priest : Prayer of Penitence (Anaphora of the Apostles, #72 - 88: pp. 47 - 48).

105. Deacon : Give heed.

Priest : Holy things for the holy.

People : One is the holy Father, one is the holy Son, one is the Holy Spirit.

106. Priest : The Lord be with all of you

(1) Rev. 19 : 13.

People : And with your spirit.

107. The priest shall then lift up the whole Host with his hands and say: Lord, have compassion upon us, O Christ. (three times in a loud chant and fifteen times in a low chant)

The people shall repeat his words.

Then the priest shall repeat them three times and the people twice.

108. Deacon : Ye that are penitent, bow your heads.

109. Priest : shall turn to the people and say : Lord our God .... (Anaphora of the Apostles 95 - 96: p. 49; and then 97-138: pp. 49 - 53)

110. After receiving the Holy Communion.

Priest : Pilot of the Soul.

Then was our mouth milled with laughter and our tongue with singing, we who have received this indistructible mystery.

111. O Lord, that which eye has not seen, nor ear heard, neither has it entered into the heart of man, Thou has prepared, O God, for them that love Thy holy Name; and has revealed unto us tiny infants in Thy holy church : even so, Father, for so it seemed good in Thy sight, because Thou art compassionate, O Lord our God[1].

113. Priest : To Thee we send, unto the highest heaven, glory and honour, Father, Son and the Holy Spirit, both now and ever and unto endless ages.

People : Amen.

THE ANAPHORA OF ST. CYRIL

114. Priest : The Laying on of the Hand.

O Lord, make us, we whom Thou has called and sanctified, worthy of Thy call, keep us through Thy love, and strengthen us in hallowing Thee.

115.Keep us far from every evil and save us with Thy right hand in Thine eternal kingdom, through Christ Thy Son, through Whom to Thee with Him and with the Holy Spirit be glory and dominion, both now and ever and unto the ages of ages. Amen.

THE ANAPHORA OF ST. JACOB OF SEROUGH

(1)

1 The Anaphora of Jacob (2), Bishop of Serough ; may his prayer and blessing be with our (head of state: King , Queen, President . . .) unto the ages of ages. Amen.

2. Priest : The Lord be with all of you.
People : And with your spirit.
Priest : Give ye thanks unto our God.

People : It is right, it is just.

Priest : Lift up your hearts.

People : We have lifted them up unto the Lord our God.

(1) This Anaphora is celebrated on the following occasions:

a. feast days of the angels.
b. the five or six days of the short month, Pagomin (September 5 - 10/11): days of special anticipation of the Lord's second advent.
c. fifth Sunday in Lent.
d. 27th. Sene (July 4) the memorial day of his death.

(2) He is one of the best Syriac authors, one of his biographers called him "The flute of the Spirit and the Harp of the Believing Church." He was born in 451 at Kurtam, a village on the Euphrates to the west of Harran, and was probably educated at Edessa. At an early age he attracted the attention of his countrymen by his piety arid his literary gifts. Once ordained to the priesthood, he became periodeutes or episcopal visitor of Haura, in Serough, not far from his birth place. In 519, at the age of 68, he was made bishop of Batnan, another town in the district of Serough, but lived only till November 521. He wrote 760 metrical homilies, besides expositions, letters, and various hymns.

3. Priest : Stand up in the fear of God, open the windows of your ears that you may attend, and awaken your hearts. Our being here in this place is not in vain. God sees and examines every one of us.

4. Let us draw near and offer our prayer to God remembering the ancient fathers who gained their rest in the right faith; and we begin from the present honourable father, the Patriarch Abba (_____) and his fellow, Archbishop Abba (_____).

5. Deacon : For the sake of the blessed . . . (Anaphora Of The Apostles, # 6 - 9: p. 43)

6. The assistant priest shall say "The Prayer of Benediction." (Anaphora of the Apostles, # 10 - 21: pp.43, 44)

7. Asst. Deacon : Lord, pity and have mercy upon the patriarchs, archbishops, bishops, priests, deacons, and all the Christian people.

8. Priest : Rest the souls of these and all those whose names have or have not been called, and those on behalf of whom this good memorial has been made before Thee, and have mercy upon them

9. Thou Who sent Thy Son from heaven into the womb of the Virgin to fulfill Thy will:

10. Deacon : Ye that are sitting, stand up.

11. Priest : To Him, to Thy Son, Thou did grant authority to judge heaven and earth, even so, He had the authority before the world was created.

12. Deacon : Look to the east.

13. Priest : How profound is the greatness of Thine only One, and of His honour, humility, patience with might.

14. Deacon : Let us give heed.

15. Priest : To Him, to Thy Beloved bow the angels, archangels, ten thousand times ten thousand, and every name[1] under heaven and on earth.

16. The hosts of Michael in their tribes, and the hosts of Gabriel in their congregation, the cherubim in their might, and the seraphim in their sanctification, and all the hosts of angels in their ranks glorify God Who is glorified with the glory of the saints.

17. Deacon : Answer ye.

18. People : Holy, holy, holy, perfect Lord of hosts, heaven and earth are full of the holiness of Thy glory.

19. Priest : Let us also say together with them, Holy, holy, holy, Lord, Thou art truly our Lord, God, and Saviour Jesus Christ, holy in Thy holiness, great in Thy greatness, praised in Thy thanksgiving and glorified with the glory of Thy holy angels.

20. O Lord, He Who begot Thee resembles Thee in image and appearance, Thou was sent by Thy Father, and Thou art a spring, from the spring, sprung from heaven.

21.Thou art the long cord that will not be severed from the Father. Thou art the creator of heaven and earth. Thou came down from heaven by Thy will. The womb of the Virgin contained Thee. A little daughter, who was the daughter of the poor, carried Thee. The Galilean embraced Thee. Thou did sanctify her soul, purify her body, and strengthen her so she was not afraid of Thee.

[1] Eph. 1 : 21; Phil 2 : 9

THE ANAPHORA OF
ST. JACOB OF SEROUGH

22. Thou was born at Bethlehem and Thou appeared like a man. Thou was baptized by John, walked on the sea, rebuked the winds and quickened souls.

23. Thou joined Thy disciples in the celebration of Hosanna, satisfied many people with five loaves and two fishes through the power of Thy divinity.

24. O Lord Who cannot be affronted, Thou was affronted by Judas, Thou was reviled by Ananias, disdained by Caiaphas, examined by Pilate and was numbered with the sinners.

25. At that time, on Friday, the evil Jews crucified Thee on the tree of the cross in the likeness of this sign of the cross which we make raising our hands over this table.

26. O Lord, Thou was struck with the hands of a servant, beaten with sticks, pierced with a spear, and they caused Thee to drink bitter gall with vinegar. While Thou was God, able to prevent them, Thou did not prevent them, Thou became patient even to death; all this Thou accepted for the love of man.

27. Thou rose from the dead and raised the dead, Thou did lead captivity captive to be presented to Thy Father. Being clothed in flesh Thou ascended to heaven, Thy accustomed position, through the power of divinity.

28. O Lord, pity Thy people and remember Thy covenant for the sake of Thy beloved Abraham, Thy servant Isaac and Thy holy Israel whom Thou called in Thy name.[1]

29. O Lord, for the sake of the holy prophets, for the sake of the apostles, preachers, for the sake of

[1] Heb. = “He will rule (as) God” name given Jacob the ordained priests, for the sake of the victorious martyrs, for the sake of the blessed righteous, and for the sake of the patient virgins and monks.

30. O Lord, for the sake of these four Evangelists, the likeness of those throne bearers abiding in heaven :[1]

31. Matthew in the likeness of a man, who preached Thy birth in flesh from the seed of David starting from the patriarch of the ancient fathers :

32. Mark in the likeness of a roaring lion, who propagated Thy preaching to the Egyptians in the Orthodox faith.

33. Luke in the likeness of an ox, who preached Thy humility, Thy lying among asses and oxen, Thy being wrapped in swaddling cloths and Thy dwelling in a stable with the Virgin, Thy mother.

34. John in the likeness of an eagle flying high and crying aloud, who interprets the nature of the Deity, and who is the sea of wisdom and the depth of prophecy.

35. It is Thou who chose Him from among His fellows and decorated Him with holiness and girded Him with Thy girdle of virginity to be blameless like the angels.

36. O Lord, what mouth, what lips, what tongue can praise Thine exaltation?

At this time he shall raise incense.

37. People : Remember us, Lord, in Thy kingdom .... (Anaphora of the Apostles, #34: p.45)

[1] Ezek. 10

THE ANAPHORA OF
ST. JACOB OF SEROUGH

38. Priest : Glory be to Thee, thanksgiving to Thy kingdom, power to Thy Father, honour and glory with dominion to the Holy Spirit Who is equal with and not inferior to Thee, and to Him who begot Thee, unto endless ages.

39. Deacon : Priests, raise up your hands.

40. Priest : Thou did take bread in Thy holy hands to give to Thy pure disciples.

At this time he shall raise the Bread.

41. People : We believe that this is he, truly we believe.

42. Priest : O Thou Who did bless at that time, now bless this (pointing) bread with blessing. (+ three times)

43. O Thou Who did break at that time with thanksgiving, now break this (pointing) bread.

Then he shall indent the Host lightly with his thumb in five places without separation.

44. People : Amen. Amen. Amen. We believe and confess, we glorify Thee, O our Lord and our God; that this is He we truly believe.

45. Priest : Thou also mixed the cup of wine with water to give to Thy pure disciples.

46. O Thou Who sanctified at that time, now sanctify this (Pointing) cup. (+ three times)

47. O Thou Who did grant at that time, now grant this cup. (He shall then move the cup with his right hand in the sign of the cross.)

48. People : Amen. Amen. Amen.

49. Priest : O Thou Who did unite at that time, now unite this bread with this (pointing) cup to be Thy body and Thy blood. (At this time he shall dip his finger into the blood and sign the Body).

50. People : We proclaim Thy death, Lord, and Thy holy resurrection : we believe Thine ascension and Thy second advent. We glorify Thee and confess Thee, we offer our prayer unto Thee and supplicate Thee, O our Lord and our God.

51. Deacon : Let your heart be in heaven.

52. People : According to Thy mercy, our God, and not according to our sins. (to be chanted thrice)

53. Priest : Let the gate of light be opened and the doors of glory be unlocked (1) and the curtain before the face of the Father be withdrawn, and let the Lamb of God descend and sit on this (pointing) holy table prepared before me, Thy servant. Let "Melos," the fearful sword of fire be sent and appear over this (pointing) bread and cup : (+ once over the bread, once over the cup, and once more over both) to fulfill this offering.

54. People : Amen. Lord pity us, Lord spare us, Lord have mercy upon us.

55. Deacon : With all the heart let us beseech the Lord our God that He grant unto us the good communion of the Holy Spirit.

56. People : As it was, is, and shall be unto generations of generations, and endless ages.

57. Priest : Grant it together unto all them that take of it, that it may be unto them for life and for remission of sin.

(1) See Anaphora of The Three Hundred, #113.

THE ANAPHORA OF
ST. JACOB OF SEROUGH

58. Priest : Grant us to be united through Thy Holy Spirit, and heal us by this oblation that we may live in Thee for ever.
The people shall repeat his words.

59. Priest : Blessed be the name of the Lord, and blessed be He that comes in the name of the Lord, and let the name of His glory be blessed. So be it. So be it. So be it blessed.
The people shall repeat his words.

60. Priest : Send the grace of the Holy Spirit upon us.
The people shall repeat his words.

61. Deacon : Arise for prayer.
People : Lord have mercy upon us.
Priest : Peace be unto all of you.
People : And with your spirit.

62. Priest : Prayer of Fraction.
Again we supplicate thee, O Lover of man, and we serve Thee in all things and for all things, and let not Thy body and blood accuse anyone of us because of the impurity of our soul and body.

63. As Thy body was stretched on the cross up and down, right and left, like the corners of the earth, for the life of all the world, so also we hold and see this sign of the cross on this bread ; and let it not be for accusation and destruction to anyone who partakes of it.

64. O Lord, how clearly Thou knows the foolishness of man, none has been found who has not transgressed Thy commandment from the first Adam till the present days, because Thou, Lord our God, art far from anger, plenteous in mercy, and righteous.

65. Deacon : Pray ye.
People : Our Father who art in heaven. . .
(see Anaphora #2, #69 : p. 62)

66. Priest : Truly, I offer prayer according to the first order given by God that Moses and Aaron, the priests, might pray on behalf of Thy people and inheritance.

67. Like them I pray unto Thee on behalf of Thy people and inheritance who have come into Thy church, priests and deacons, and on behalf of Thy people and inheritance who are outside. If there is here anyone of the priests or the people whose mind is far from Thee, let Thy will overwhelm him.

68. As Thou has gathered this bread which had been scattered on the mountains and the little hills, in the forests and the valleys, and being gathered together, it became one bread for oblation. (1)

69. People : The hosts of the angels of the Saviour of the world, stand before the Saviour of the world, and the angels encircle the Saviour of the world, Whose curtain is fire for the sake of His holy body and His precious blood.

Let us draw near before His face to enter into the house of the holiness of the Saviour of the world and to live believing in Him and trusting in Him.

70. Asst. Deacon : Open ye the gates, princes.

71. Deacon : Ye who are standing, bow your heads.

72. Priest : Truly we bow and serve Thee Who sits in the highest heaven which neither the mind of man nor the knowledge of angels can reach.

1) See Anaphora of John Son of Thunder, #91, and Anaphora of St. Gregory II, #27: p. 165.

THE ANAPHORA OF
ST. JACOB OF SEROUGH

73. We supplicate the kindness of Thy goodness on behalf of Thy people and Thine inheritance who have today come unto Thy sanctuary, the priests and deacons who have bowed their heads before Thine majesty, to receive Thy body and Thy blood by the hand of me, Thy servant, whom Thou has called through Thy grace, though unfit, unworthy and pitiable.

74. This is the covenant of Thy word which Thou uttered to the priests saying, “You are the salt of the earth;” Thou said to the priests, “”You are the light of the world; Thou said to the priests, “You are the eyes of the house of God.”

Thou said to the priests, “You are the candles of the church;” Thou said to the priests, “You are the likeness of the angels.” Come, O High Priest Jesus Christ, to bless Thy people and Thine inheritance, unto the ages of ages.

75. Deacon : Worship the Lord with fear.

76. People : Before Thee, Lord, we worship, and Thee do we glorify.

77. Priest : “Prayer of Penitence” (Anaphora of the Apostles, # 72 - 88: pp. 47 - 48)

78. Deacon : Give heed.
Priest : Holy things for the holy.
People : One is the holy Father, one is the holy Son, one is the Holy Spirit.

79. Priest : The Lord be with all of you.
People : And with your spirit.

80. The priest shall then lift up the whole Host with his had and say : Lord, have compassion ujpon us, O Christ. (three times in a loud chant and fifteen times in a low chant)

THE ANAPHORA OF
ST. JACOB OF SEROUGH

The people shall repeat his words.
Then he shall repeat them three times and the people twice.

81. Deacon : Ye that are penitent, bow your heads.

82. Then he shall turn to the people and say

Priest : Lord our God . . . (Anaphora of the Apostles, # 95-138: pp. 47 - 53)

83. After receiving the Holy Communion.

Priest : "Pilot of the soul" :

O Creator of lights, Who did cast away the darkness and degrade the idols and destroyed death through Thy death

84. We supplicate the kindness of Thy goodness on behalf of Thy people and Thine inheritance who have come unto Thy sanctuary to receive Thy body and Thy blood from thy honourable table which is the hope of sinners.

85. Keep them, by day, from trespassing and from error of sight and of the bodily members, and keep them by night that the vain thoughts thereof, which destroy the soul may not come unto them.

86. When they sleep let the wings of the angels cover them in order that oversleeping, which is the likeness of death, may not overwhelm them. O Lord, awaken them through Thy love to glorify Thine honourable and strong name, almighty Lord our God.

Deacon : Pray ye.

87. Priest : O Lord, this corruptible and transient world of hoping is not for us, Thy Christian people; but we hope and wait for that which is to come.

88. Because Thou said, "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away (1)."

89. Thou also said, The horn will be blown three times to awaken the dead;

90. At the first blowing of the horn there will be gathered the dust of bodies scattered through all the ends of the world, above and beneath, in the sea and on the land, that which is in the stomachs of the beasts and that which waxed old and perished after death, and the pieces of the body, fallen on earth, will be gathered in their previous position. (2)

91. At the second blowing of the horn the bones will be joined with the flesh and blood and they will be perfect dead bodies without movement until the appointed time.

92. At the third blowing of the horn the dead will rise in the twinkling of an eye, (3) the righteous and the sinners, carrying their works which followed them from the earth and which they did in all the days of their life, good or bad. Thou wilt make the righteous to stand at Thy right hand, and the sinners at Thy left hand.

93. Thou wilt answer Thine elect with the words of blessing saying, "Come to me, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom of heaven prepared for you from the foundation of the world :

For I was an hungry, and ye gave me food:
I was thirsty, and you gave me drink:
I was a stranger, and you took me in:
I was naked, and you clothed me:
I was sick, and you visited me:
I was in prison, and you came unto me and spoke on my behalf.

(1) Matt. 24:35 (2) Ezek.. 37:7 + (3) 1Cor. 15:52

94. Afterwards Thou will turn to Thy left hand and rebuke the sinners with the word of accusation saying, “Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire prepared for the Devil and his angels

For I was an hungry, and you gave me no food
I was thirsty, and you gave me no drink
I was a stranger, and you did not take me in
I was naked, and you did not clothe me
I was sick, and you did not visit me
I was in prison, and you spoke not on my behalf.

95. At that time every mouth and tongue which spoke misbelief and deceit will be stopped. At that time there will be sorrow but vain sorrow.

96. At that time there will be a cry, but a vain cry : at that time there will be wailing, but vain wailing; at that time there will be lamentation, but vain lamentation ; at that time tears will be shed like the water of winter, which has no end and does not stop. There will be sent to them swift lightning and a fearful sound of thunder and a powerful flash which cuts, separates and divides_ this is the portion of sinners.

97. At that time, the earth will restore that which was entrusted to it and the mother will not hear the cry of her daughter. At that time there will be revealed the work of the soul, which she did during all the days of her life.

THE ANAPHORA OF
ST. JACOB OF SEROUGH

98. We have trusted on Thy body which we have eaten and Thy blood which we have drunk that Thou at that time may have compassion and mercy upon us, because Thou said, “Whoever eats My flesh, and drinks My blood, has eternal life.”

99. We have also trusted on Thy Mother our Lady Mary, the shield of our race in giving birth to Thee, because Thou told her, that whoever remembers you and calls upon your name will have eternal life.

100. We have also trusted on the archangels, the persecution of the prophets, the preaching of the apostles, the right hand of the priests, the blood of the martyrs, the patience of the young men, virgins and monks, and on the faith of the faithful men and women.

101. At that time have compassion, pity and mercy upon us. Glory be to the Father who sent, thanksgiving be to the Son who was sent, and honour and glory be to the life-giving Holy Spirit, both now and ever and unto the ages of ages.

People : Amen.

102. Priest : The Laying on of the Hand.

God has authority in power and name, and there is no name like His under the four foundations,(1) and over the seven heavens. It is He Who created all, visible, and invisible, known and unknown, palpable and impalpable, hidden and open, above and beneath.

(1) Earth, water, fire and wind.

103. He created all, even Adam the handiwork of God, without being wearied.

104. And now, O Lord, our God and Saviour Jesus Christ, we pray Thee and beseech Thee on behalf of those who have bowed their heads before Thee to dismiss them :

105. Make their infants to grow, let their adults come to their full stature, support their aged ones, strengthen their feeble ones, keep their women, and let their children be entrusted to Thee.

106. Satisfy their hungry ones, give drink to their thirsty ones, clothe their naked ones, give rest to their troubled ones, comfort their sad ones, and gladden their sorrowful ones.

107. Give life to their sick, heal their diseased, give light to the eyes of their blind, make the ears of their deaf hear, loosen their prisoners and give freedom to their captives.

108. Purify their bodies, sanctify their souls, and when they go back to their homes, O Lord, guide that they may reach them, feed them and lift them up for ever. [1]

MIDNIGHT PRAYER OF THE COVENANT.

Instruction: The priest shall turn his face towards the people and chant the following in a loud voice, and the people shall say according to the order.

Priest : O Lord, maker of all, invisible God, we stretch out our soul to Thee and we offer morning prayer unto Thee. O Lord, the powerful wisdom of all, God merciful maker of the soul, we glorify Thee, begotten from the Father beyond the creation of the world; Thou, Who art the only Word and rests in Thy saints, art praised by the archangels with ceaseless glories.
Thou was not made by hands but art creator of the hidden things, Thou art the invisible, pure, and holy, and the announcer Who told us the wisdom of Thy hidden glory. Thou made us to hope for the unquenchable light; and we, Thy servants, offer unto Thee glory, thanksgiving and holiness ; and the people glorify Thee.

People : O Lord, we glorify Thee.

* * *

Priest : O God of light, Thou art the source of life, the head of knowledge, the giver of grace from the perfect grace, the maker of the soul, giver of good, giver of the Holy Spirit, the treasure of wisdom, the helper, the teacher of saints, the foundation of the world, who accepts the prayer of the holy ones.
We glorify thee, O only-begotten Son, the first-born Word of the Father, Thou has granted Thy universal grace to us who call upon Thee.

PRAYER OF THE COVENANT

O pure and blameless Father, with Thee are the treasures which moth and rust do not corrupt, and of which Thou gives to them who trust upon Thee in all their thoughts.

Thou made the angels desire to visit the light which was before the world, and Thou art our unchangeable guardian. Through Thy Father's pleasure Thou has enlightened us, we who had valued darkness, we whom Thou has brought from darkness into light, granted us life after death, and freedom from slavery. By Thy cross Thou has brought us nearer to Thy Father in heaven. By the Gospel Thou has led us, and by the prophets Thou has comforted us, we whom Thou has brought near, O God. O God, give us light. We praise Thee, O our God, that with ceaseless thanksgiving we may say that we are Thy servants; and the people praise Thee.

People : O Lord, we praise Thee.

Priest : O Jesus, the Son of God, Who is above all, we offer three fold thanksgiving unto Thee with Thy Father, in Thine eternal kingdom, and all the creatures glorify Thee in trembling and fear of soul.

People : Every soul fears Thee.

And all the souls of the righteous trust in Thee, Thou Who quieted the stormy floods of the evil spirits for our sake, and Who became for us life from destruction, and a refuge where there is the hope of eternal salvation. Thou saves those who are troubled on the sea, through Thy grace Thou heals those who are in the wilderness, Thou accompanies those whose imprisonment is very hard ; so free us from the bond of death.

PRAYER OF THE COVENANT

Thou comforts the miserable and the weeping, Thou saves the weak with Thy cross, it is Thou Who takes away and removes all the wrath from us who have trusted in Thee. O Lord, Whom the prophets and the apostles thanked secretly, we thank Thee. We glorify Thee, so that, believing in Thee and fulfilling Thy will, we may rest in the abode of life. Grant us to walk according to Thine order. O Lord, through Thy mercy visit all, small and great, rulers and people, shepherd and flock, for Thine is the kingdom, O blessed Lord our God. Glory be to the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, as before the creation of the cosmos, so both now and ever, and from generation to endless generations, and ages without end.

People : Amen. Go to "Then" in 2nd column of page 172

VERSION 2

MORNING PRAYER OF THE COVENANT

Instruction : The priest shall turn his face towards the faithful, chanting the following in a loud voice, and the faithful shall respond as indicated below:

Priest : The grace of God be with you.
People : And with your spirit.
Priest : Let us glorify our God.
People : It is right, it is just.
Priest : Concentrate the thoughts of your heart.

People : We lift them unto the Lord, our Father Who art in heaven, our Father who art in heaven, our Father who art in heaven, lead us lest we hap into temptation.

Priest : O God the Father, giver of light, the power of all, visitor of all souls, light which was before, creator of the world, the leader of life and giver of immortal happiness, Thou has taken us out of the snares of darkness, and granted us the inestimable light. Thou has loosed us, we who believe in Thee, and covered us with faith.

Thou art not far from Thy servants, but rather, Thou art always with them. Thou does not neglect the soul which begs Thee with fear and trembling. Thou knows all before the thought, and examines all before the thought. Through Thy will Thou supplies our needs before we ask; Thou hears us who call upon Thee without doubting. Thou art the inestimable light, and the King of the heavenly hosts, hearer of the glorious song of the archangels upon whom Thou rests.

O Lord, we pray Thee to hear us. Grant us the unceasing word in trust. We glorify Thee, we thank Thee, and we bless Thee; O Lord, we, Thy servants, glorify Thee because we depend upon Thee.

People : O Lord, we glorify Thee.

Priest : O Lord, Jesus Christ, holy, Thou has heard us. Thou became a word to the dumb, a staff to the broken ones, light to the blind, a way to the lame, and the purifier of the lepers. O Lord, Thou did heal the sick and cure the deaf. Thou rebuked death and destroyed the darkness. Thou created the light of the sun which does not set, the unquenchable light, the Sun which always shines over the holy ones, Thou established all through Thy fixed will for the decoration of the world.

Thou appeared clearly to all to save man,
Thou art the restorer of the soul, and Thou was beforehand in determining all things rightly. O Thou, Creator of angels, Father of all, the adornment of the world and the maker of earth, Wisdom and Knowledge were sent to the world by the everlasting Father. This existence is unchangeable and immeasurable and invisible spirit. Thou art the glorious announcer and Thy name is wonderful. For this reason we, Thy servants, praise Thee, O Lord.

PRAYER OF THE COVENANT

People : O Lord, we praise Thee.

Priest : We offer this three-fold holy glory unto Thee, Who has given us Thine unchangeable faith, enabling us to break the bonds of death. Thou created the upright minds of those who believe in Thee, that they may be called gods among men. Thou has granted us to tread down all the powers of the enemy through the Spirit, so that we may loosen that which could not be loosened. Thou has made effectual for us love towards Thy Father and made reconciliation between us and Him.

O Lord, hear those who beg Thee. O Lord, let not us, who petition Thee fall into sin, but vindicate us against our enemies, our accusers.

Grant us continuous prayer that we may be kept from being swallowed up by the enemy.

O eternal King, hear: comfort the widows, accept the orphans, purify the unclean through Thy mercy, grant wisdom to the foolish, restore the lost, save the prisoners, and be a refuge to all of us, for Thine is the blessed kingdom, O Lord our God.

People : Amen. Go to "Then" in 2nd column of page 172

VERSION 3

EVENING PRAYER OF THE COVENANT

Instruction : The priest shall turn his face towards the people and chant the following in a loud voice, and the people shall respond as indicated :

Priest : The grace of God be with you
People : And with your spirit.
Priest : Give thanks unto our God.
People : It is right, it is just.

Priest : O immortal Father, Saviour of our soul, the foundation of wisdom, keeper of our hearts, Thou has granted light to our inward eyes and covered us with Thy knowledge against the darkness of our mind. By the cross of Thine Only-begotten, Thou did save the first man, who was given to destruction, and did renew him by the immortal things. Iniquities vanished at Thy command, and Thou made redemption through the death of Thy Son, even as He searched for the lost one. For this reason we, Thy servants, glorify Thee, O Lord.

People : We glorify Thee, O Lord.

Priest : We praise Thee, O Lord, with glorious song, Thou, Whom the archangels glorify, always, unceasingly and without rest. Whom also, the lords praise singing with the praise of glory and thanksgiving. O Lord, Thou has sent Thy counsel, Word, Wisdom, and Thy visitation, Who was with Thee before the cosmos began, without being created, that is the Word Who was not created, Thy beloved Son, Who appeared in flesh for mankind's salvation.

PRAYER OF THE COVENANT

Priest : From our heart we offer to Thee three fold praise, O Lord, giver of life. Thou visited the soul of the humble and despised not the troubled soul. Thou accepted the persecuted and helped them, Thou saved those in difficulty. Thou thought of the hungry and avenged the victims of sin. Thou art the friend of the faithful, speaker to the righteous, dwelling-place for the pure ; Thou hears those who call upon Thee in righteousness, protects the widow, saves the orphan, grants right leadership to the Church which Thou has made a dwelling-place of the glorious faith, the council of the Spirit, the giver of grace and power. While we praise Thee without rest, we confess in our hearts Thy kingdom which was declared unto us by Thee and Thy beloved Son, our Lord Jesus, through Whom be glory and dominion to Thee, unto the ages of ages.

People : Amen.

Then: The Lord's Prayer, Hail Mary, (see p. 173) Lord have mercy. . . 12x, For Mary's sake, have mercy on us 12x, finishing with the Prayer of Absolution by the priest.

Conclusion to every version, chanted together by all: O holy Trinity, living God, have mercy upon us.

(72.) Priest : "Prayer of Penitence."
O Lord God, the Father almighty, Thou it is Who heals the wounds of our soul, body, and spirit,

(73.) because Thou has said, by the mouth of Thine only-begotten Son, our Lord, God, and Saviour Jesus Christ, that which He said to our father Peter, you are a rock, and upon this rock I will build My holy church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it; and unto you do I give the keys of the Kingdom of heaven; what you shall have bound on earth shall be bound in heaven, and what you shall have loosed on earth shall be loosed in heaven

(74.) Let all Thy servants and Thy handmaids, according to their several names, be absolved and set free out of the mouth of the Holy Spirit, and out of the mouth of me also, Thy sinful and guilty servant. . . whether they have wrought wittingly or unwittingly.
(75.) Keep them, Lord, and defend them, thy servants, my fathers, brothers and sisters.

(76.) And also loose me, thy humble and sinful servant

(77.) Both absolve them and set them free: out of the mouth of the holy Trinity: the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, and out of the mouth of me Thy sinful and unrighteous servant.

(78.) O propitious, merciful, man loving Lord our God, Who takes away the sin of the world, accept the penitence of Thy servants and Thy handmaids, and shine upon them with the light of everlasting life, and forgive them, Lord, all their sins; for Thou art good and the lover of man.

(79) O Lord our God, merciful, slow to anger, plenteous in mercy and righteous, forgive me my sins

(80) and deliver all thy servants and handmaids from all transgression and curse. If we have transgressed against Thee, Lord, whether in our word, deed, or thought, release, remit, pardon and have mercy, for Thou art good and the lover of man, Lord our God.

(81) O Lord, absolve us and set us free, and absolve all Thy people, and absolve me Thy sinful servant.

PSALM 24 (use with II : 11, page 13)
(A Psalm by David)

(1) Unto Thee, O Lord, have I lifted up my soul.
(2) O my God, in Thee I trust; let me not be put to shame, nor let mine enemies laugh at me.

(3) For none who wait for Thee should be ultimately shamed; let those who aimlessly do wrong be ashamed.
(4) Thy ways, O Lord, make known to me, and teach me Thy paths.

(5) Guide me in Thy truth and teach me;
for Thou, O God, art my Saviour, and on Thee do I wait all day.
(6) Remember Thy compassions and Thy mercies, O Lord, for they are from all eternity.

(7) Remember not the sins and ignorance of my youth; rather, for Thy goodness' sake, remember me in Thy mercy, O Lord.

8 Good and upright is the Lord;
He ordained law for those who sin on the way.
9 He will guide the meek in judgment,
He will teach the meek His ways.
10 All the ways of the Lord are mercy and truth to those who seek His covenant and His laws.
11 For Thy Name's sake, O Lord, pardon my sin, for it is great.
12 Who is the man who fears the Lord?
He will guide him in the way he should choose.
13 His soul shall abide in fulfillment, and his children will inherit the earth.
14 The Lord is the strength of those who fear Him;
and His covenant is to make them know it.
15 Mine eyes are continually on the Lord, for He will draw my feet out of the net.
16 Turn Thy face to me and have mercy on me, for I am only begotten and poor.
17 The sorrows of my heart are multiplied;
O bring me out of my troubles.
18 Behold mine abasement and my weariness, and forgive me all my sins.
19 See how mine enemies have increased,
and the cruel hatred with which they hate me.
20 O keep my soul and deliver me;
let me not be ashamed, for I have hoped in Thee.
21 The guileless and upright have joined me, because I wait for Thee, O Lord.
22 Redeem Israel, O God, out of all his afflictions.

PSALM 60 (use with II : 11)
(For the End. With Hymns By David)
1 Hear my supplication, O God; attend to mine entreaty.
2 From the ends of the earth I cried to Thee when my heart is despondent, Thou wilt lift me high on a rock;
as Thou hast guided me.
3 For Thou art become my hope, a tower of strength against the face of the enemy.
4 I will dwell in Thy habitation unto the age.
I will find shelter in the shadow of Thy wings. (Pause)
5 For Thou, O God, hast heard my prayers;
Thou hast given an inheritance to those who fear Thy Name.
6 Thou wilt add days to the days of the King, and prolong his days unto generations and generations.
7 He will continue unto the ages in the presence of God.
Who will seek out His mercy and truth?
8 That is why I will chant to Thy Name unto the ages of ages, that I may perform my vows from day to day.

PSALM 101 (use with II : 11)
(A Prayer for a poor man when he is despondent and pours out his petitions before the Lord)
1 O Lord, hear my prayer, and let my cry come to Thee.
2 Turn not Thy face from me in the day when I am in trouble;
incline Thine ear to me.
Answer me speedily in the day when I call.
3 For my days vanish like smoke, and my bones burn like brushwood.
4 My heart is sick and dry as grass, so that I forget to eat my bread.
5 Because of my loud groaning my bones stick to my flesh
6 I have become like a pelican of the desert;
I am like a screech-owl in a ruined building.
7 I keep vigil, and am become like a solitary bird on the housetop.
8 All day long mine enemies taunt me, and those who praise me swear against me.

9 For I have eaten ashes like bread and mingled my drink with weeping, 10 because of the appearance of Thy wrath and Thy fury;
for Thou hast lifted me up and cast me down.
11 My days decline like a shadow, and I am withered like grass.
12 But Thou, O Lord, dost endure for ever and Thy remembrance throughout all generations.
13 Thou wilt rise and have mercy on Zion;
for it is time to have mercy on her,
because the time has come.
14 For Thy servants delight in her stones and have pity on her dust.
15 The nations will fear Thy Name, O Lord, and all the kings of the earth Thy glory.
16 For the Lord will build up Zion and will appear in His glory.
17 He will regard the prayer of the humble, and will not ignore their need.
18 Let this be written for another generation, so a people to be created may praise the Lord.
19 He stooped from His holy height; the Lord looked from heaven at the earth 20 to hear the groaning of the prisoners and release the children of those put to death, 21 to declare the Name of the Lord in Zion and His praise in Jerusalem, 22 to gather together the peoples and their kings to serve the Lord.
23 The very strength in the way itself determines how few are the days of my mission.
24 Do not take me away in the midst of my days.
Thy years are throughout all generations.
25 In the beginning, O Lord, Thou didst found the earth, and the heavens are the work of Thy hands.
26 They will perish, but Thou remains;
they will all wear out like a garment, and Thou wilt change them like clothing and they will be changed.
27 But Thou art ever the same,
and Thy years never end.
28 The children of Thy servants will dwell securely, and their descendants will be guided for ever.

PSALM 102 (use with II : 11)
(By David)

1 Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me bless His holy Name.
2 Bless the Lord, O my soul,
and overlook not all His due praises:
3 Who overlooks all your iniquities,
Who heals all your infirmities,
4 Who redeems your life from perdition,
Who crowns you with mercy and compassion,
5 Who satisfies your desire with fulfillment;
your youth as that of an eagle shall be renewed.
6 The Lord offers acts of mercy and judgment to all who are wronged.
7 He made known His ways to Moses,
To the sons of Israel His own will.
8 The Lord is compassionate and merciful, long-suffering and of rich mercy.
9 He will not till the end cherish anger, nor unto the ages will He threaten.
10 He has not dealt with us according to our sins, nor repaid us according to our iniquities.
11 For as from the height of heaven above the earth, has the Lord directed mercy to those who fear Him.
12 As far as the East is from the West,
so far has He separated our iniquities from us.
13 As a father has compassion on his children, thus the Lord has compassion on those who fear Him.
14 For He knows our substance,
He remembers that we are dust.
15 The days of man are as the grass;
as a flower of the field he shall blossom.
16 Once the spirit in him has passed, he will not exist;
even his place no longer will be recognized.
17 But the mercy of the Lord is from eternity, and remains unto eternity for those who fear Him.
18 Also His righteousness is upon sons of sons, for those who value His covenant,
both remember His commandments and do them.
19 The Lord has prepared His throne in heaven, and His kingdom embraces all.
20 Bless the Lord, all His angels, mighty in strength , who do His word and listen to the voice of His commands.

21 Bless the Lord, all His Hosts,
His ministers who do His will.
22 Bless the Lord, all His works, in every place of His dominion.
Bless the Lord, O my soul.

PSALM 129 (use with II : 11)

(An Ode of Ascent)

1 Out of the depths I cried to Thee, O Lord.
2 O Lord, hear my voice;
let Thine ears be attentive to the voice of my prayer.
3 If Thou, O Lord, should study our sins,
O Lord, who would be left standing:
4 But with Thee is forgiveness.
5 For Thy Name's sake I wait for Thee, O Lord;
my soul waits for Thy word.
6 My soul hopes for the Lord from the morning watch till the night;
from the morning watch
let Israel hope for the Lord.
7 for with the Lord there is mercy, and with Him there is full redemption.
8 And He will redeem Israel from all his iniquities.

PSALM 130 use with II : 11
(An Ode of Ascent)

1 O Lord, my heart is not haughty, nor my gaze focused loftily;
I have not dealt with great things,
Nor with marvels beyond me.
2 If I am not humbled,
but exalt myself,
like a weaned child against its mother,
Thou will censure my soul.
3 Let Israel trust in the Lord, henceforth and unto the age.

75. Keep them, Lord, and defend them, thy servants, my fathers, brothers and sisters.

76. And also loose me, thy humble and sinful servant

77. And absolve them and set them free out of the mouth of the holy Trinity: the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, and out of the mouth of me thy sinful and unrighteous servant.

78. O propitious, merciful and lover of man, Lord our God, that takes away the sin of the world, accept the penitence of Thy servants and Thy handmaids, and shine upon them with the light of everlasting life, and forgive them, Lord, all their sins ; for Thou art good and the lover of man.

79. O Lord our God, merciful, slow to anger, plenteous in mercy and righteous, forgive me my sins

80. and deliver all thy servants and handmaids from all transgression and curse. If we have transgressed against Thee, Lord, whether in our word, or in our deed, or in our thought, release, remit, pardon and have mercy, for Thou art good and the lover of man, Lord our God.

81. O Lord, absolve us and set us free, and absolve all Thy people, and absolve me Thy sinful servant.

82. Then he shall turn his face towards the people, bless them three times, make mention of them that are with him and say also:

Remember, Lord, the honourable father, our Patriarch Abba _____ and the blessed Archbishop Abba _____.

Our God, keep them for us for many years and length of days in righteousness and peace.

83. Remember, Lord, our ruler (emporer, king, queen, president, governor) and loose (him, her, them) from all the chains of sin which (__) has committed wittingly or unwittingly, subdue (__) adversaries and (__) enemies under (__) feet speedily.

84. Remember, Lord, the patriarchs, archbishops, bishops, priests and deacons, anagnosts and singers, virgins and monks, widows and orphans, men and women, aged and children; and all Christian people that are standing in this holy church; strengthen them in the faith of Christ.

85. Priest shall mention those that have lately passed away.
Remember, Lord, all our fathers, brothers and sisters that are asleep and resting in the orthodox faith, and lay their souls in the bosom of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob.

86. And as for us, deliver us from every transgression and curse, and from all wickedness and from all rebellion and from all false swearing and from all anathemas and from all perjury and from mingling with heretics and gentiles in error and defilement.
87. Grant us, Lord, wisdom, power, reason, understanding and knowledge, that we may depart and flee for evermore from all works of Satan the tempter.
88. Grant us, Lord, to do Thy will and Thy good pleasure at all times, and write our names in the book of life in the kingdom of heaven with all saints and martyrs, through Jesus Christ our Lord, through Whom to Thee with Him and with the Holy Spirit be glory and dominion, both now and ever and unto ages of ages. Amen.

89. Deacon : Give heed.

90. Priest : Holy things are for the holy.
People : One is the holy Father, one is the holy Son, one is the Holy Spirit.

91. Priest : The Lord be with all of you.
People : And with your spirit.

92. The priest shall then lift up the whole Host with his hands and say:
Lord, have compassion upon us.
O Christ ; Lord, have compassion upon us, O Christ, Lord, have compassion upon us, O Christ. (three times in a loud chant, and fifteen times in a low chant). Lord, have compassion upon us, O Christ.
The people shall repeat his words.

93. Then the priest shall say three times:
Lord, have compassion upon us, O Christ.
The people shall say twice : Lord, have compassion upon us, O Christ.

94. Deacon : Ye that are penitent bow your heads.

95. Priest : turning toward the people:
Lord our God, look upon Thy people that are penitent, and according to Thy great mercy, have mercy upon them, and according to the multitude of Thy compassion blot out their iniquity, cover them and keep them from all evil.
96. And redeem their souls in peace, forgive their former works, join them with Thy holy church, through the grace and compassion of Thine only-begotten Son our Lord, God, and Saviour Jesus Christ, through Whom to Thee with Him and with the Holy Spirit be glory and dominion, both now and ever and unto the ages of ages. Amen.

97. Deacon : Arise for prayer.
People : Lord have mercy upon us.
Priest : Peace be unto all of you.

People : And with your spirit.

98. Priest : This (pointing) is the true holy body of our Lord, God, and Saviour Jesus Christ, that is given for life, salvation, remission of sin unto them that receive of it in faith.

People : Amen.

99. Priest : This (pointing) is the true precious blood of our Lord, God, and Saviour Jesus Christ, which is given for life, salvation, and remission of sins into those who drink of it in faith.

People : Amen.

100. Priest : For this (pointing) is the body and blood of Emmanuel our very God.

People : Amen.

101. Priest : I believe, I believe, I believe and I confess, unto my last breath, that this (pointing) is the body and blood of our Lord, God, and Saviour Jesus Christ, which He took from the Lady of us all, the holy Mary of twofold virginity, and made it one with His godhead without mixture or confusion, without division or alteration; and He verily confessed with a good testimony in the days of Pontius Pilate, and this body He gave up for our sakes and for the life of us all.

People : Amen.

102. Priest : I believe, I believe. I believe and I confess that His godhead was not separated from His manhood, not for an hour nor for the twinkling of an eye, but He gave it up for our sakes for life, salvation, and remission of sin unto them that partake of it in faith.

People : Amen.

103. Priest : I believe, I believe, I believe and I confess that this (pointing) is the body and blood of our Lord, God, and Saviour Jesus Christ, and that to Him are rightly due honour and glory and adoration with His kind heavenly Father and the Holy Spirit, the life-giver, both now and ever and unto the ages of ages. Amen.

104. Then the priest shall take in his hand the "asbadikon" which bears the sign of the cross, dip it into the chalice, into the blood, and with it make the sign of the cross on the Body : First on the large outer parts, second on the inner parts, and third on the small parts. Then, with the Body, he shall make the sign of the cross over the Blood and say:

Blessed be God, almighty Father, our God.

And blessed be the only-begotten Son, our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

And blessed be the Holy Spirit the Paraclete, the comforter and cleanser of us all.

Then the assistant deacon shall offer water to the priests and deacons to wash their hand, signifying that they should be holy in their souls.

105. Meanwhile, the priest celebrant shall say this prayer :

Lord my God, behold the sacrifice of Thy Son's body, which pleases Thee. Through it blot out all my sins because Thine only-begotten Son died for me.

106. And behold the pure blood of Thy Messiah, which was shed for me upon Calvary, cries aloud in my stead. Grant that the testimony of this blood may be unto the forgiveness of me Thy servant.

107. And accept my prayers for its sake, because thy beloved accepted the spear and the nails for my sake, and suffered to please Thee. But after I was saved, Satan returned to my heart and pierced me through with his darts. Grant me, Lord, Thy mercy, because he is a powerful accuser.

108. And by the provision of sin he slew me. Avenge me of the audacious one who is not satisfied with my being led astray from my life.

109. Thou, Lord, my King, God, Saviour bind up the wounds of soul and body of me Thy servant.

110. Before receiving the Holy Communion, all communicants shall say:

O my Lord Jesus Christ, it in no wise befits Thee to enter under the roof of my polluted house, for I have provoked Thee to wrath, for I have done evil in Thy sight, and through the transgression of Thy commandment have polluted my soul and body which Thou created after Thine image and likeness, and in me dwells no good thing.

111. But for the sake of Thy plan and Thine incarnation for my salvation, for the sake of Thy precious cross and Thy life-giving death, for the sake of Thy resurrection on the third day, I pray and beseech Thee, O my Lord, that Thou would purge me from all guilt and curse, and from all sin and defilement.

112. And when I have received Thy holy mystery, let it not be unto me for judgement nor for condemnation, but have compassion upon me and have mercy upon me; and through it grant me remission of my sin and life for my soul, O life of the world, through the petitions of our Lady, the holy Mary of twofold virginity, Thy mother, and of John the Baptist, and through the prayers of all the holy angels, and all the martyrs and righteous who have fought for the good unto the age without end. Amen.

113. While receiving the Holy Communion, the priest shall say quietly :

O my Lord, Jesus Christ, let not this Thy mystery be as an iniquity unto me; rather, let it be for the purifying of my soul and body.

114. Then he shall first receive the Host, afterward, he shall give it to the assistant priest who gives him the Blood. The prime celebrant shall give the other priests of the Body; his assistant shall give them of the Blood.

115. While offering the Body, the priest shall say the following at the Anaphora of the Lord:

The body of our Lord Jesus Christ for the sanctification of body, soul, and spirit.
through the petitions of our Lady, the holy Mary of twofold virginity, Thy mother, and of John the Baptist, and through the prayers of all the holy angels, and all the martyrs and righteous who have fought for the good unto the age without end. Amen.

116. First of all the patriarch shall receive; then the archbishop; then the bishops. After them the priests and deacons. After that, everyone according to his degree. (1) Then the men, then the women. But the babies (and any others recently baptized) shall receive before the other faithful.

117. As one receives the Host, he shall say the following, while the Host is still in his mouth :

Holy, holy, holy, Trinity ineffable, grant me to receive this Body and Blood for life and not for condemnation. Grant me to bring forth fruit that will be well-pleasing unto Thee, to the end that I may appear in Thy glory, and live for Thee, doing Thy will.

118. In faith I call upon Thee, Father, and call upon Thy Kingdom. Hallowed, Lord, be Thy Name upon us, for mighty art Thou, praised and glorious, and to Thee be glory, unto endless ages.

119. Then he shall consume what he has received. While chewing he shall put his hand on his mouth. He shall chew in fear and trembling without making any sound till he finishes. Then he shall say:

Fill my mouth with praise, my heart with joy and my soul with gladness, fill me who have received of this divine mystery, O Thou who became man for the salvation of man.

120. As the assistant offers each the blood he shall say:

This is the cup of life that came down from heaven ; this is the precious Blood of Christ.

Then he who receives shall say : Amen. And Amen.

121. The Prayer of Basil. When the blood is in his mouth he shall say in his heart :

O my Lord and my God Jesus Christ, behold I have received Thy holy Body and Thy precious Blood. May they be for the remission of my sins and the blotting out of my trespasses.

122. O only-begotten Son and lover of man, fill my mouth with Thy praise that I may praise Thy glory, for Thou art He Who once became man and declared Himself through His incarnation in order to save me for ever. Thou has redeemed me for ever for the sake of Thy holy Name.

123. Glory be to Thee, O my Lord and my God Jesus Christ, Who has granted me (Thy Body and Thy Blood) at the hand of Thy servant.... I glorify thee and pray thee that I may be in the midst of Thy flock, and that accepting me, Thou will number me with Thy sheep.

124. And now remember not my trespasses. I give thanks for Thy grace which has been granted unto me, and for Thy help which has been with me.

125. Deacon : As he receives the cup:

I will take the cup of life, and call upon the name of the Lord.

Then he shall say : Pray ye for us and for all Christians who ask us to mention them. Praise ye and sing in the peace and love of Jesus Christ.

126. (See page 177) And then the clergy shall chant Ps. 150. They shall chant one by one or two by two according to their number, without ceasing.

127. The priest shall say as he goes out :

Those whom Thou has called, Lord. and hallowed, make happy with Thy call, confirm with Thy power, keep with Thy love, join in Thine everlasting kingdom through Christ, through Whom to Thee with Him and with the Holy Spirit be glory and dominion, both now and ever and unto the ages of ages. Amen.

128. When the priest goes out he shall bless over the Paten once. Then he shall offer the Body to the people, and the deacon shall offer the Blood. As he offers to each, he says as at paragraph #115. And the people shall respond : "Amen" -once after the Body and twice after the Blood.

129. And after the people have received

Priest : O eternal God, light of life, Thou has given, Lord, unto us Thy servants strength and protection, during the present days and nights keeping all in peace. Bless them on this present day, and on those to come hereafter, through our Lord Jesus Christ, through Whom to Thee with Him and with the Holy Spirit be glory and dominion, both now and ever and unto the ages of ages. Amen.

PREFACE

THIS new text of the Ethiopic Version has been the labour of many years. It is practically exhaustive; for no pains have been spared to secure a first-hand and complete knowledge of the MSS. evidence. I have not, however, restricted myself to the mere task of publishing the Ethiopic Version as it is found in the best MSS.; for this Version, even when first made, exhibited many unintelligible passages, which were due either to the mistakes of the Ethiopic translator, or to the corruptions of the Greek text before him, or to the mistakes of the Greek translator, or ultimately to corruptions of the Hebrew text before the Greek translator. With these various sources of corruption I have sought to deal: in some cases, I think, with indubitable success: in others, my reconstructions are at the best merely provisional and tentative. In this work Halévy led the way and made a permanent contribution, but many of his reconstructions were valueless from the outset as they were based on Dillmann's inadequate text of 1853. As a result of these studies I have abandoned the view that Enoch was originally written in Hebrew, and come to the conclusion that, like Daniel, it was written partly in Aramaic and partly in Hebrew.

The Greek and Latin fragments have been printed in parallel columns with the Ethiopic Version and their relations with it have been fully discussed in the Introduction.

The Ethiopic text has been printed directly from a photograph of the chief MS. g with the necessary corrections from other MSS.; but the orthography of this MS. has been nearly always adhered to, although it very frequently confuses the aspirates and sibilants.

In a work of this nature, where sometimes in a page there are 800 acts of collation and verification, mistakes are inevitable, and, where such do occur, I can only ask for the kind indulgence of the student.

My best thanks are due to the late Mme. d'Abbadie for permission to collate four MSS. and photograph two others that were at Abbadia; to the librarian of the British Museum for permission to photograph its ten MSS. of Enoch; to the librarians of the Paris and Munich Libraries for the courtesy with which they lent the Ethiopic MSS. in their charge to the Bodleian Library for my use; to the librarian of the Berlin Library for the loan of its splendid MS. together with permission to photograph it; to the librarian of the Vatican for permission to photograph its MS. of Enoch; to Baron von Westenholtz of Hamburg and Mr. Garrett of Philadelphia for having lent for my private use their MSS. of Enoch through the kind offices of Dr. Enno Littmann; to my niece Madeleine La Vie Charles for much help in making the Index Graecitatis; to Mr. A. E. Cowley for revising the reconstructions of the Semitic original in the first thirty chapters; and, lastly, to the Trustees of the Revised Version Surplus Fund for a subvention towards the expenses incurred in my expedition to Abbadia at the foot of the Pyrenees.

Finally, I cannot conclude without expressing my deep gratitude to the officials, and especially to the readers and compositors, of the Press for their skilled services in the publication of this text.

INTRODUCTION

§ 1. The Book of Enoch—its fortunes. Originally written in prose and verse, and partly in Aramaic and partly in Hebrew.

It is seldom that authors attain to the immortality which they hope for, and it is still more seldom that anonymous authors achieve this distinction. And yet it is just such a distinction that the authors of the Book of Enoch have achieved. That such should be ultimately his lot was the deep-rooted conviction of one of this literary circle. He looked forward (civ. 11, 12) to the time when his writings would be translated into various languages, and become to the righteous 'a cause of joy and uprightness and much wisdom.' This hope was in a large degree realized in the centuries immediately preceding and following the Christian era, when the currency of these apocalyptic works was very widespread on account of their distinctively religious and predictive contents. But from the fourth century of our era onward they fell into discredit, and under the ban of such authorities as Hilary, Jerome, and Augustine they gradually passed out of circulation and became lost to the knowledge of Western Christendom till about a century ago. It was not, however, till recent years that the Book of Enoch and similar works have begun to come into their own, not indeed on the ground of their intrinsic religious worth, but from their immeasurable value as being practically the only historical memorials of the religious development of Judaism during the two centuries which preceded the birth of Christianity, and particularly of the development of that side of Judaism to which historically Christendom in large measure owes its existence.

In the course of editing the present work it suddenly dawned upon the editor that much of the text was originally written in verse. This discovery has frequently proved helpful in the criticism of difficult passages.

Another conclusion, to the adoption of which a prolonged study of the text has led the editor, is that the Book of Enoch like the Book of Daniel was originally written in two languages—in Hebrew and Aramaic.

That the Book of Enoch was written in Semitic is now accepted on all hands, but scholars are divided as to whether the Semitic language in question was Hebrew or Aramaic. Only one valuable contribution on this question has been made, and that by Halévy in the Journal Asiatique, Avril–Mai, 1867, pp. 352–395. This scholar is of opinion that the entire work was written in Hebrew. Since this publication, however, fresh evidence bearing on the question has been discovered in the Greek fragment (i–xxxii) found in Egypt. Since this fragment contains three Aramaic words transliterated in the Greek, some scholars, and among them Schürer, Lévi, and N. Schmidt, have concluded that not only are chapters i–xxxvi, but also the rest of the book, derived from an Aramaic original. In support of the latter statement no evidence has yet been offered by these or any other scholars, nor yet has there been any attempt to meet the positive arguments of Halévy for a Hebrew original of xxxvii–civ, whose Hebrew reconstructions of the text have been and must be adopted in many cases by every editor and translator of the book. A prolonged study of the text, which has brought to light a multitude of fresh passages the majority of which can be explained by retranslation into Hebrew, has convinced the present editor that, whilst the evidence on the whole is in favour of an Aramaic original of vi–xxxvi, it is just as conclusive on behalf of the Hebrew original of the greater part of the rest of the book. To determine the exact limits within which each language is used is a task of no little difficulty. This is due in part to the fact that for four-fifths of the text we have only a translation of a translation, and in part to the close affinities existing between Hebrew and Aramaic. For the resemblances between the two languages are so great, that frequently retranslation from the Ethiopic into either is sufficient to explain corruptions in the former. Notwithstanding, there is a clear balance of evidence in favour of a Hebrew original of xxxvii–lxxi, lxxxiii–civ. There is much room for further study of this question, and it is to be hoped that there will be fresh discoveries of MSS. evidence bearing upon it.

§ 2. Greek, Ethiopic, and Latin Versions.

The entire book was translated into Greek and from Greek into Ethiopic about the sixth century of our era, and possibly into Latin. These are fully dealt with in the following sections.

§ 3. The Greek Version. Editions of this Version.

The Greek Version has only in part been preserved. Chapters i–xxxii. 6 and xix. 3–xxi. 9 in a duplicate form were discovered in 1886–1887 at Akhmîm by the Mission Archéologique Française at Cairo, and published by M. Bouriant in 1892. These are designated as G^s and G^{s1}, and G^{s2} in the case of the duplicate passage. Large fragments have been preserved in Syncellus vi–x. 14, xv. 8–xvi. 1, and viii. 4–ix. 4 in a duplicate form. These are designated as G^s and G^{s1}, G^{s2} in the case of the duplicate passage.

The chief literature on these fragments is as follows:—

Bouriant, Fragments grecs du livre d'Énoch. Mémoires publiés par les membres de la Mission archéologique française au Caire, tom. ix, pp. 91–136, 1892. This is praiseworthy as a first edition, but the text is disfigured by many errors.

—— L'Évangile et l'Apocalypse de Pierre avec le texte grec du livre d'Énoch. Text publié en fac-simile par l'héliogravure d'après les photographies du manuscrit de Gizeh. Paris, 1893.

Dillmann, Sitzungsberichte d. kgl. Preuss. Akademie d. Wissenschaften zu Berlin, 1892, li–liii, pp. 1039–1054, 1079–1092. These studies are of course good, and several of this scholar's suggestions are excellent. In his comparison of the Ethiopic and Greek Versions he had the benefit of having collations of q t u before him. These gave him no inconsiderable advantage in dealing with the problems before him, though his article takes cognizance of only a limited number of readings where these MSS. furnish a superior text.

Lods, Le Livre d'Hénoch, Fragments grecs découverts à Akhmîm, publiés avec les variantes du texte Éthiopien, traduits et annotés. Paris, 1892. Lods' contribution is learned, scholarly, and judicious, but as he had the misfortune to base his work on the corrupt text published by Dillmann in 1851, a large portion of his conclusions was vitiated from the outset.

Charles, The Book of Enoch, pp. 318–370. Oxford, 1893. In this work I attempted an exhaustive comparison of the Greek and Ethiopic texts, and carried the criticism of the materials several stages beyond previous scholars in this department. An overestimate, however, of the Ethiopic Version led me to make some unjustifiable changes in the Greek text. This error has been set right in the present edition. Notwithstanding, the subsequent thirteen years of study have confirmed most of the suggestions made in 1893.

Swete, The Old Testament in Greek vol. III. Students are very grateful to this scholar for the inclusion of the Enoch text in this edition, but the text as printed leaves much to be desired. It is occasionally unintelligible, where a comparison of the Ethiopic Version would have suggested the true text.

Radermacher, Das Buch Henoch, herausgegeben . . . von J. Flemming und L. Radermacher, pp. 18–60, 113–114. Leipzig, 1901. This text, on the whole, is well edited and forms an advance on preceding editions. But, unless I am greatly mistaken, Dr. Radermacher is not a Semitic scholar. This deficiency in his equipment proved a sore handicap in the task he undertook. How is a purely classical scholar to edit a Greek text which is Greek in vocabulary, but largely Semitic in idiom? To show that our text is of this character it will be sufficient to adduce the following passages: xxii. 9 οὗ ἡ πηγὴ τοῦ ὕδατος ἐν αὐτῷ (בו . . . . אשר)='in which there is the spring of water.' xvii. 1 ἐν ᾧ οἱ ὄντες ἐκεῖ γίγνονται (. . . . אשר שם)='where the dwellers become.' Here, it is true, ἐκεῖ could be taken with οἱ ὄντες. xxxii. 3 οὗ ἐσθίουσιν ἁγίου τοῦ καρποῦ αὐτοῦ (. . . . פריו אשר)='whose holy fruit they eat.' The editor's failure to recognize this idiom in xvi. 1, has led him to emend the text in such a way as to obliterate wholly its original form. The unemended text runs: ἀπὸ ἡμέρας . . . . θανάτου ἀφ' ὧν τὰ πνεύματα ἐκπορευόμενα ἐκ τῆς ψυχῆς τῆς σαρκὸς αὐτῶν.[1] This Semitic construction is supported by E though in a slightly corrupted form. Hence it must be preserved, though as I pointed out in 1893, there is according to E the loss of τῶν γιγάντων before ἀφ' ὧν. This very phrase, moreover, τῶν γιγάντων is found in G^s, though this version inserts after it a gloss (?) containing the names of the three orders of giants as they are given in the Targum of Jonathan on Gen. vi. 1–4.

The text and notes are accurately edited, but there are some errors. In v. 6 Radermacher reads οἱ ἀμίαντοι as an emendation of the corrupt reading which he says is αμα | τοι and not αμαρτητοι, as Bouriant and Lods stated. Bouriant and Lods were certainly wrong, and Dillmann's edition and mine, which were necessarily based on the work of these scholars, shared in their error. The autotype reproduction of the text was not published till after the issue of these editions. But if Bouriant and Lods deciphered the MS. wrongly, so also has Radermacher. It reads αμαρ|τοι. The ρ is partially obliterated, but it is unmistakable in the photographic reproduction of the MS. Hence we should emend αμαρτοι into ἁμαρτ(ωλ)οί. Thus the Christian origin of the words which I bracketed in 1893 becomes still more manifest: Καὶ πάντες οἱ ἁμαρτ(ωλ)οὶ χαρήσονται, καὶ ἔσται αὐτοῖς λύσις ἁμαρτιῶν, and internal evidence confirms the omission of these clauses in E. Notwithstanding, this forms a serviceable edition of the Greek.

Another fragment is found in a Vatican Greek MS., No. 1809, written in tachygraphic characters. This was published by Mai, Patrum Nova Bibliotheca, tom. ii, and deciphered by Gildemeister in the ZDMG., 1855, pp. 621–624, and studied afresh by von Gebhardt in Merx' Archiv, ii. 243, 1872. Besides the above, references to or Greek quotations explicitly or implicitly from Enoch are found in the Ep. of Barnabas (see iv. 3; xvi. 4, 6); Justin Martyr, Apol. ii. 5; Athenagoras in his Πρεσβεία, x; Clement Alex., Eclogae prophet. iii. 456 (ed. Dindorf); iii. 474; Strom. iii. 9; Origen, Contra Celsum, v. 52, 54; In Ioannem, vi. 25 (Lommatzsch, i. 241); Clementine Homilies, viii. 12. Since these last afford but slight help in correcting the text, we shall do no more here than refer to Lawlor's article on this subject in the Journal of Philology, xxv. 164–225, 1897.

§ 4. The relations of the G^s and G^g to each other and to E (the Ethiopic Version).

(a) G^s more original than G^g. These two fragments are closely related and yet exhibit marks of independence. They are closely related, and probably go back to the same Greek translation of the Aramaic text, since they present in so many passages identically the same text. On the other hand G^s has in several passages a different and undoubtedly better order of text. Thus G^s rightly places vii. 3–5 of G^g (or rather its equivalent of vii. 3–5) after viii. 3 of G^g. For manifestly vii. 1, 2, viii. 1–3 precede vii. 3–5. Thus it alone preserves the original order. The angels went in to the daughters of men, who bare to them three classes of giants. And the angels taught their women sorceries and incantations (vii. 1, 2). Then follows a detailed account of the art, which each of the leading twenty angels taught mankind. And after this the giants turned against men and began to devour their flesh (G^s viii. 1–3; G^g viii. 1–3, vii. 3–5). It will be observed that in viii. 3 G^g is very defective compared with G^s in the list of the offices of the various angels. The additional elements in G^s here could not have been written by a Greek, for in every instance the office constitutes when translated into Aramaic a play on the name of the angel who discharges the office. Similarly in vi. 7 the order of the names of the angels is different and G^s is here preferable to G^g E.

Again, viii. 4 of G^s has preserved in all probability a more original text than G^g E. For it is natural that the substance of the prayer of men as they were slain by the giants should be given when it is first referred to in viii. 4. Here, indeed, G^s presents a duplicate text, and both texts give the prayer in question. G^g E, on the other hand, do not give the words of the prayer till ix. 3, when the angels are presenting it before God. G^s in Semitic fashion gives the prayer in extenso here also.[1] Again the additional clauses (πορεύου κτλ.) in G^s x. 2, 4 belong most probably to the original work but have been lost in G^g E, see p. 24, note 25. The same is true of the addition in G^s ix. 9 with its peculiar diction, as is clear from a comparison of x. 9, 15.

Finally G^s preserves several right readings over against G^g E. Thus δῆσον in x. 11 where G^g E corruptly read δήλωσον, κατακριθῇ in x. 14 where G^g E read κατακανσθῇ. Cp. also x. 7.

(b) Relations of G^s and G^g to E. Even the most superficial study makes it clear that E and G^g are more closely related than E and G^s or G^s and G^g. Indeed the evidence makes it clear that E was translated from a MS. which was also the parent or ancestor of G^g. This follows from the fact that the same corruptions appear in G^g E over against true readings in G^s where this exists. Thus they both give impossible readings in x. 7 †ἐπάταξαν (G^s εἶπον); x. 11 δήλωσον (G^s δῆσον); x. 14 †κατακανσθῇ (G^s κατακριθῇ); xiv. 8 †ἐθορύβαζον (a mistranslation of the Aramaic original), †ἐξεπέτασαν; xiv. 18 †oros (corrupt for ὅρασις?); xv. 9 †ἀνωτέρων (G^s ἀνθρώπων); xviii. 5 †βαστάζοντας ἐν νεφελῇ; xxii. 4 †ἐποίησαν for ἐποιήθησαν; xxv. 5 †εἰς ζωήν; xxviii. 2 †ἀπὸ τῶν σπερμάτων. In ix. 6 all the authorities are corrupt, but G^g E agree closely.

Furthermore, they add xv. 10 against G^s as well as the sense of the passage, and omit the same clause in x. 2, 4 against G^s. To the above facts we should add that E agrees with G^g in transposing vii. 3–5 from its original position after viii. 3 against G^s, as we have shown in the preceding section: also in exhibiting the same defective text of viii. 4.

---

[1] Hence I withdraw the suggestion that G^s vii. 2 is corrupt.

On the other hand E preserves certain original readings lost by G^g and vice versa. Thus E G^s rightly add αὐτοῖς after ἐγεννήθησαν in vi. 1 and read βασιλεὺς τῶν βασιλευόντων in ix. 4 where G^g reads β. τῶν αἰώνων, and πάντων τὴν ἐξουσίαν in ix. 5 where G^g reads πᾶσαν τ. ἐξουσίαν, and attest ἐν ταῖς θηλείαις in ix. 8 and εἰς ἀλλήλους ἐξ αὐτῶν εἰς αὐτούς in x. 9, which G^g in both cases omits. Moreover in ix. 11 the corruption in E=τὰ εἰς αὐτούς (for ἐᾷς αὐτούς so G^s) is easy of correction, whereas G^g offers the hopeless αιας. In the following passages G^g omits clauses and passages preserved by E. Thus it omits by hmt. clauses in ix. 1, 5; x. 16; xii. 3; xiv. 3; xv. 2; xviii. 3, 5, 11, and without any such intelligible ground ii. 3, all iii and iv except six words, words and clauses in vi. 1, 5; ix. 8; x. 10, 19, 20; xiv. 14; xv. 4, 8; xvi. 1; xix. 1; xxii. 5, 8; xxiv. 1, 2; xxvii. 1. On the other hand E omits words and clauses preserved by G^g in i. 1, 9; v. 1, 3; x. 1, 2; xiii. 7; xiv. 25; xv. 11; xx. 8; xxii. 2, 5; xxvi. 1.

Naturally G^g and E have severally developed corruptions which it is generally possible to emend in either case by the help of the other. Thus E reads in i. 9 ዘሰዩ፡ for ዘሰው፡; ii. 1 ጠየቁ፡ for ጠይቁ፡; ix. 4 እሰመ፡ for እንተ፡; xii. 1 and 2, xviii. 9 ዝሱ፡ for እሱ፡ See also notes on xiv. 2, 21, 24, 25; xviii. 7, 9, 13, 16; xix. 2; xx. 2, 6; xxi. 7, 9; xxii. 1, 2, 3, 5, 8; xxiii. 4; xxiv. 3, 5; xxvi. 3, 4; xxvii. 5; xxx. 1; xxxi. 2, 3; xxxii. 2. In the following passages E presupposes ὁμοῦ μετά for ὁμοῦνται in v. 6; τὰ μετὰ αὐτά for μέταλλα in viii. 1; ἀνάγω for ἀναγνῶ in xiii. 4; μυστηρίου for μυρίων in xviii. 16; ὡς εἰρηναῖαι for εἰς σειρῆνας in xix. 2; λάῳ for χάῳ in xx. 5; κοῖλοι for καλοί in xxii. 2, 3. Corruptions of G^g will be found in the following passages: i. 2, 3, 5, 8, 9; v. 1; vi. 8; ix. 4, 6; x. 19; xiii. 1; xiv. 6, 8, 13, 15, 18, 19; xv. 8, 9; xvi. 3; xvii. 3, 7; xviii. 4, 7, 11; xxi. 10; xxii. 5, 6, 9; xxiii. 2; xxiv. 3; xxvi. 2; xxxi. 3.[1]

(c) From the above facts it follows that G^g and E spring from a common ancestor which we may designate x, and that this x and G^s proceed ultimately from the same original, the first Greek translation of

[1] It is noteworthy that E in xv. 9 gives a conflate text based partly on G^g and partly on G^s: also that in xiv. 22 G^g and E do not agree, but rather supplement each other. See p. 40, note 21.

the Book of Enoch.[1] Hence the genealogy of the above documents might be represented as follows:—

§ 5. The Latin Version and Quotations.

The Latin Fragment, which constitutes a very imperfect reproduction of cvi. 1–18, was discovered in 1893 in the British Museum by Dr. James, the present Provost of King's College, Cambridge, and most kindly placed at my service for publication in my edition of Enoch in 1893. In the same year he issued it in the Cambridge Texts and Studies II, No. 3, Apocrypha Anecdota, pp. 146–150. According to Dr. James this fragment is found in an eighth century MS. (MS. 5, E xiii in Casley's Catalogue of the Royal MSS. now in the British Museum). In this MS. the Enoch fragment is preceded by a penitential edict of S. Boniface, and followed by an anonymous tract 'De Vindictis Peccatorum.'[2]

The text has suffered from additions, omissions, and corruptions, and is very seldom a literal rendering of the original for many words together. Notwithstanding, it makes some contribution to the formation of a better text of cvi.

This MS. further may point to a Latin translation, or at least to a partially completed Latin translation of Enoch; for (1) occurring in the midst of original Latin treatises it appears to have been found in Latin by the collector or scribe of these treatises. (2) It has suffered much

[1] This conclusion hardly seems adequate to explain all the phenomena mentioned on pp. xiii-xiv. These postulate not only the occurrence of duplicate renderings in the Greek translation, but most probably also the occurrence of variants in the Hebrew original. Cf. v. 9; x. 7 (note 6); ix. 4 (note 20); xiv. 8 (see p. xxix); xvii. 7 (note 14: see also pp. xxix–xxx); xlvi. 4, 6 (note 35); lii. 9 (see p. xxxi); xcix. 6 (see p. xxxiii).

[2] In my edition of 1893 the description of the position of this fragment was both wrong and inconsistent. These errors were due not to Dr. James—the source of my information—but to inconceivable carelessness on my own part. When Dr. James rightly disclaimed responsibility in a review of my book, I wrongly maintained, in a rejoinder, his responsibility for the errors in question. I must either have replied without consulting the passage referred to, or else I consulted it but failed to observe its utter absurdity. I did not recognize it till much later.

in the course of tradition, and may, therefore, go back to a date, when the Book of Enoch was not reprobated generally, and when a Latin translation would have been acceptable. (3) It does not show signs of being an excerpt from a collection of excerpts, such as we find in the Greek fragment of Enoch, lxxxix. 42–49; but standing as it does without any introductory note or explanation, it looks as if it had been drawn directly from at least a larger Latin fragment of Enoch.

It is possible that the absurd statement with which the fragment opens—'[Cum esset Lamech annorum tricentorum quinquaginta] natus est ei filius'—originally referred to Methuselah, who was 355 years old when Noah was born according to the LXX Chronology. E speaks here of Methuselah taking a wife for his son Lamech and of a son being born to him.

Latin Quotations. These have been collected most fully by Dr. Lawlor in his article in the Journal of Classical Philology, xxv. 164–225. They will be dealt with at some length in my new edition of the Book of Enoch.

§ 6. The Ethiopic Version and MSS.

The Ethiopic Version has been preserved in twenty-nine MSS. of which fifteen are to be found in England, eight in France, four in Germany, one in Italy, and one in America. Of these MSS. there are only three of which my knowledge is indirect and slight, but not yet too slight to enable me to estimate their value and their affinities with the other MSS. These MSS. are p and z, ꞓz. Of these z indeed was most kindly lent to the Bodleian Library for my use, but unhappily I was absent part of the time of its sojourn there, and whilst I was present the officials of the Bodleian did not notify me of its arrival. ꞓz is of no account as it is merely an exact transcript of b. Next as regards p, this MS. formerly belonged to Lord Crawford and was lent by him to the editor of the German edition of the Ethiopic text of Enoch which appeared in 1901, but since that date this MS. has passed into the hands of a lady, who refuses to lend it or any other MS. in her possession to the Bodleian Library for the use of English editors. Of the remaining MSS. I have directly examined twenty-two, i. e. gꞓgmqtu, abfhiklno, and suvwyꞓaꞓb. Of these I photographed thirteen, i. e. gꞓgmqtu, fhiklno. Five others, i. e. abyꞓaꞓb, I had no need to photograph, as the owners of a₂ b₂ most kindly put these MSS. at my service for the space of two years, while a b y were always at hand for consultation in the Bodleian, to which y had been lent for that purpose by the Munich Library. Of the Abbadian MSS. r s v w I made collations on a number of test passages, while at Abbadia. These readings are appended in foot-notes on these MSS. in the following list, and are sufficient to show the affinities of these MSS. amongst MSS. of the second class. Finally, as regards c d e x I have used Dillmann's collation of c d e and a photograph of x which I procured from the Vatican. Thus for the construction of the present text I have had at my service photographs of fourteen MSS. g₂ g m q t u, the constant use of the five MSS. a b y a₂ b₂, Dillmann's collations of c d e, Flemming's collation of p (which I have used sparingly)—in all twenty-three MSS. Four other MSS. r s v w I have collated sufficiently to determine their character. Of the remaining MS. z (for z₂ may be ignored as a transcript of b) it is enough that we have Flemming's assurance that it is closely related to a b c d e.

The division of Enoch into chapters was made apparently in the sixteenth century. The division into 108 chapters was made by Dillmann without MSS. authority, but as it has been followed by all subsequent scholars it is here adopted for the sake of convenience. The above division is indeed found in one MS., i.e. h, but this MS. was unknown to Dillmann when he made his text. Moreover, the chapters in h vary frequently in length from those in Dillmann's text.

The full list of the MSS. is as follows:—

a. Bodley, No. 4. Large quarto. 40 foll. 3 cols. 105 chapters. Latter half of 18th cent. Enoch only.[1]

b. Bodley, No. 5. Large quarto. 141 foll. 3 cols. 18th cent. (?). Enoch (98 chapters), Job, Isaiah, 12 Minor Prophets, Proverbs, Wisdom, Ecclesiastes, Canticles, Daniel.

[1] Laurence issued a transcript of this MS. in 1838. The transcription is somewhat faulty in the earlier chapters. The errors are, as a rule, easy to correct, but, even after the rejection of the obvious errors of the press, a considerable number remains, and the most of these have been reproduced in Dillmann's Apparatus Criticus, and from Dillmann's have passed over into Flemming's text of 1901. In chapters v–x these errors are distributed as follows: one in v. 3; viii. 3; x. 1: three in vii. 1, 2, 5: four in vi. 1, 4, 7 (bis).

d. Curzon MS. Quarto. 91 foll. 2 cols. Enoch (102 chapters), Job, Daniel, 4 Ezra, Sirach.

On foll. 168^{a}–177^{a} a duplicate of chapters xcvii. 6^{b}–cviii. 10 is inserted from another MS. akin to g. See next MS.

g. This MS. consists only of xcvii. 6^{b}–cviii. 10, and is found in foll. 168^{a}–177^{a} of g. It is inserted between the last word and the last but one of xci. 6. It is written by the same scribe, but the text though belonging to the best type differs from g.[1]

The division into chapters is marked in the margin on the first few folios. Enoch, Job, Samuel I and II, Kings, Chronicles, Books ascribed to Solomon, Prophets, Sirach, i–v Ezra, Tobit, Judith, Esther.

u. Abbadianus 55. 191 foll. 51 × 39 cm. 3 cols. of 48 to 50 lines. Possibly as early as the 15th cent. Enoch (without division into chapters) and other works. Text of Enoch much abbreviated after chapter lxxxiii.

v. Abbadianus 99. 70 foll. 23 × 17 cm. 2 cols. 19th cent. Copy made for M. d'Abbadie from a MS. in high estimation among the native scholars. This MS. has all the bad characteristics of the later type of text. Enoch only.[3]

[1] This is a poor MS., but it exhibits a few good readings. Thus it agrees with a, a d in vi. 5^{49} (i. e. note [49]): originally it supported g in right reading against all other MSS. on xvii. 2^{22}: it agrees with q t, β–a b d x on xxxix. 10^{1}, with α–m, d e k l n w ,a on xlv. 3^{28}, with α–q, d e f h k l y ,a on xlvi. 7^{7}, with a e h k n v w on lxiii. 1^{30}, with α–t, a e f h k n on lxix. 4^{18}, with α, a e f h i k l n ,a on lxxi. 1^{16}, with α, f i l o y ,a ,b on lxxxi. 3^{18}, with α–u, a c e f h i k n on lxxxix. 42^{6}, with α–m, a c f h i k n on xciii. 10^{16}, with α–m, a c d i k l o ,a ,b on xc. 29^{24}, with m, c f h i k l n x ,a on cii. 4^{28}. From the above it is clear that this MS. though it does not follow closely any of the special groups of β, yet it shows some affinity for e and its congeners.

[2] This is a poor MS., but has some notably good readings. Agrees with u, e v x on ix. 8^{21}, agrees with α, d e f h k l n y ,a on xxiv. 2^{40}, with t^2, d e f k l n y ,a on xxix. 2^{31}, with g m u on xxxix. 10^{1}, with g m q, a d f o y ,b on xl. 1^{29}, with α–m, d e k l n w y ,a on xlv. 3^{28}, with α–q, d e f h k l y ,a on xlvi. 7^{7}, with α–q, d e f h k n o ,b on xlviii. 6^{3}, with α, β–b c x on liii. 7^{19}, with α–u, k n on lxii. 9^{15}, with α, i n on lxii. 15^{22}, with a e h k n v w on lxiii. 1^{30}, with e h on lxvii. 3^{26}, with α–t, a e f h k n on lxix. 4^{18}, with α, a e f h i k n on lxxi. 1^{16}, agrees with h on lxxxiii. 8^{30}, with α–u, c d f i l o y ,a ,b on lxxxiii. 11^{10}, with g m t, a b c f h i k n x on lxxxiv. 1^{24}, with α–g, a e l o x y ,b on lxxxvi. 2^{12}, with α–m, a c f h i k n on xciii. 10^{16}, with g ,g t, b i l o p x y ,a ,b on c. 12^{31}, with m, c f i k l n x ,a on cii. 4^{28}. This MS. so far as it agrees with any special group within β does so with e h.

[3] This MS. which embodies the text approved by the Mamheran or native scholars exhibits most of the vices of the second class of MSS., but some excellent readings. See on lxxxix. 1^{20}, c. 4^{7} below. It agrees with b o x ,b on ix. 10^{3}, with ,a on xvii. 3^{27}, with α, β–a b d w x ,a on xxxix. 7^{24}, with q t, c e f h k l n o y ,a ,b on xxxix. 10^{1}, with g m q, a d f o y ,b on xl. 1^{29}, with c h on xl. 2^{30}, with α–q, d e f h k n o ,b on xlviii. 6^{3}, with α, β–b c x on liii. 7^{19}, with e h on lxii. 9^{14}, with q, β on lxii. 12^{12}, with a e h k n w on lxiii. 1^{30}, with g q, e f originally (?), but with t u, β–e f over erasure on lxiii. 7^{5}, with e h

§ 7. Relations of the Ethiopic MSS.

(a) Two forms of text, α, β, of which β is late and secondary. There are two forms of the Ethiopic text. The first is represented by g a g m q t u (and in some degree by n), which we shall henceforth designate by α, and the second, which owes its origin to the labours of native scholars of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, by all the remaining MSS., i. e. β. The result of these labours has been on the whole disastrous; for these scholars had neither the knowledge of the subject-matter nor yet critical materials to guide them as to the form of the text. Hence in nearly every instance where they have departed from the original unrevised text they have done so to the detriment of the book. But it is not to be inferred from the above that α always represents one type of text and β another on lxvii. 3^{26}, with α–t, a e f h k n on lxix. 4^{18}, with m, β–i[1] on lxx. 3^{4}, with α, a e f h i k n on lxxi. 1^{16}, with t, d h i x on lxxxiii. 8^{30}, with a b e h k n x on lxxxiii. 11^{10}, with g m t, a b c f h i k n x on lxxxiv. 1^{24}, with m on lxxxix. 1^{20} (here undoubtedly right), with α–u, a c e f h i k n on lxxxix. 42^{6}, with m, b e f h n p x on xc. 29^{21}, with α–m, a c f h i k n on xciii. 10^{16}, with a g q on c. 4^{7}, with m, c f i k l n x a on cii. 4^{28}.

[1] Agrees with α, a d r in vi. 5^{40}, with α–t, n on ix. 6^{8}, with a e f h[1] k l p r s v a b on x. 11^{14}, with m t u though originally with g q, $t^2\beta$ on xv. 12^{23}, in margin with g on xxiv. 2^{39}, with α, d e f h k l n y a on xxiv. 2^{40}, with t^2 d e f k l n y a on xxix. 2^{31}, with q t, c e f h k l n o y a b on xxxix. 10^{1}, with α–m, d e k l n y[2] a on xlv. 3^{28}, with α–q, d e f h k l y a on xlvi. 7^{7}, with a e h k n v on lxiii. 1^{30}, with α, β–b c d n o y b on lxxi. 1^{16}, with α, f i l o y a b on lxxxi. 3^{18}, with α–g, a e l o x y b on lxxxvi. 2^{12}, with α–u, a c e f h i k n on lxxxix. 42^{6}, with α–m, a c d i k l o a b on xc. 29^{21}, with α–m, a c f h i k n on xciii. 10^{16}, with m, c f h i k l n x a on cii. 4^{28}, with a g m, β–c on ciii. 7^{41}, with a b c e k on civ. 9^{18}.

type opposed to the former; for the attestation of neither group is wholly uniform, as each group is divided within itself. This statement holds true in a much greater degree of α. Indeed, the cases are comparatively few where α differs as a whole from β. Fifty readings out of fifty-one which any editor must adopt will have the support of one MS. singly as g, m, q, t, u, or of groups such as g m, g q, q t, g u, g m q, g m t, g m u, &c., and the fifty-first time of the undivided α. For instances of the latter see i. 9 (note 23), viii. 1 (note 34), x. 3 (note 36), 13 (note 28), 17 (note 7), 22 (note 48), xv. 5 (note 24). Moreover, when the attestation of α is divided, the individual or group of α attesting the right reading will often have the support of β or of groups within β. The above facts serve to prove that the recension was not the work of a few years, but was rather a process which culminated in such a text as we find in β, but particularly in the MS. v.

(b) β or groups in β sometimes preserve the original texts. Again it is noteworthy that in a limited number of cases β preserves the original text where α is secondary. Some of these are no doubt accidental, but seventeen[1] such readings in thirty-two chapters are hard to account for in this fashion. These instances are found in the following passages. Thus β is right over against α in vi. 6 (note 43), viii. 3 (note 18), ix. 1 (note 6), 3 (note 18), β–l in ix. 1 (note 7), x. 1 (note 24), b c e f h l^{2} n o against α and rest of β in vi. 6 (note 4), a b x in ix. 4 (note 24), b c o x ,a ,b in xviii. 4 (note 12), d y in xxii. 13 (note 53), h o ,b in xxiv. 3 (note 47), n ,a in ix. 6 (note 10), o x ,b in xviii. 15 (note 32), n single-handed in ix. 11 (note 15), x. 3 (note 37), 7 (note 21), xxii. 9 (note 29). Hence in some cases there is in β most probably a survival of the original text where it has been lost in the present representatives of α.

(c) The character and affinities of the chief MSS. g. Of the MSS. of α, g is decidedly the best all-round MS. This does not mean that it has more unique and right readings than any other MS. of the older type of text, but that when all the good points of the various MSS. are summed up, g comes out an easy first. In the first thirty-two chapters g alone attests the right reading in vi. 5 (note 37), xvii. 3 (note 27), xviii. 7 (note 33), xxi. 5 (note 8), xxviii. 3 (note 11). In lxxxix. 42 (note 4) it has only the support of n, the best of the second class MSS. This MS.

[1] Flemming enumerates only six, and three of these are wrong; for t in these three cases agrees with β: in ii. 1 t is wrongly represented as agreeing with α–t.

has been made the basis so far as any single MS. can of my text. It exhibits much strange orthography and bad grammar, and many corruptions. Notwithstanding it is by far the best representative we have of the ancient text. It was this MS. together with m that I used when emending Dillmann's text for my translation and commentary which appeared in 1893.

ᶜg. This MS., which has already been described, shows certain idiosyncrasies in ciii. 9–15, where it uses the first person over against the third in the other MSS. Outside this chapter it agrees in turn with g, m, q, t, u or with combinations of these or with one or more of these combined with β, but it is most nearly related to g.

m. This MS. is in some respects the weakest of the older group. It attaches itself so closely to g that we must assume its having come under its influence. This fact becomes of importance when we come to chapters xcvii. 6ᵇ–cviii. 10, where we have both g and ᶜg.

Moreover, the evidence is not as decisive as we could wish; for though alone or together with β it agrees in many passages with g (see xcvii. 6 (note 28); xcviii. 2 (note 19) (along with β), 3 (note 29); cii. 1 (note 1), 6 (note 2); ciii. 2 (note 2), 13 (note 15); cvi. 10 (note 6)), yet we find it displaying similar affinities with ᶜg (see xcviii. 6 (notes 13, 15); xcix. 2 (note 2); ciii. 2 (note 51), 6 (note 34), 7 (note 41); civ. 1 (note 5); cv. 2 (note 32); cvi. 7 (note 24), 10 (note 1), 19 (note 34)). On the other hand in the vast majority of its unique readings ᶜg is unaccompanied by m. Hence somehow m has been influenced by the readings both of g and ᶜg. In x. 2 (note 33) and xvii. 4 (note 36) it alone attests the primitive text, in vii. 3 (note 9) alone with f, and in xv. 11 (note 21) with b x y.

q. Though teeming with every form of error incident to the transmission of a text in the way of additions, corruptions, and omissions, this MS. contains a larger number of unique original readings than any other used in our text. Thus it alone preserves the original text in ix. 8 (note 21), x. 11 (note 16), xiv. 1 (note 39), xxi. 2 (note 24), xxii. 9 (note 25), xxiv. 2 (note 41), xxvi. 3 (note 33), xxvii. 4 (note 47), xxxii. 4 (note 31). It approximates more closely to g ᶜg m than to t u.

t. This is a most interesting MS.,[1] as it gives the older type of reading

[1] This MS. is notable also from the fact that for the Books of Samuel and Kings it alone exhibits a third type of text diverging from the two types of text in circulation in Abyssinia. These were the first and primitive type of text and the later or Vulgate. Where this MS. diverges in the text and the later either over erasures or above the line or in the margin, with the rejected words in the text bracketed. The corrector has not done his work thoroughly. Accordingly many of the older readings remain untouched. The work of erasing has been so frequently perfunctory that it is generally possible to decipher the original text. Moreover, in some cases the correction represents a return to the older text. Cf. i. 6 (note 5). As g ,g m are closely connected, so are t and u. t is the least original of the MSS. of the first class. Thus it is hardly ever right alone. For one instance in the first thirty-two chapters see x. 10 (note 3).

u. This MS. would form a good third to g and q but that it is so imperfect after chapter lxxxiii, for nearly one-seventh of the entire book is omitted in the course of lxxxiii-cviii. These omissions are made in the most capricious way. Sometimes words, sometimes phrases, sometimes whole sentences and paragraphs are excised to the entire destruction of the sense. Notwithstanding as u is a valuable MS. I have most faithfully recorded all its omissions and changes. In chapters i–xxxii it alone preserves the true text in iii (note 23), iv (note 33), xxi. 7 (note 40).

n. Of MSS. of the second class n is by far the best. Indeed, though in the main embodying the second type of text it attests more unique and original readings in chapters i–xxxii than m or t or u. Thus it stands alone in giving the original text in ix. 11 (note 15), x. 3 (note 37), 7 (note 21), xxii. 9 (note 29) (?). Alone of MSS. of the second class it gives along with various MSS. of the first class the true text as in i. 3 (note 18), xiv. 21 (note 10), xxv. 7 (note 19), lxxxix. 42 (note 4), &c. Thus n exhibits the characteristics of both types of text.

Remaining MSS. of β. Several of these MSS. go in pairs. Thus a x, d y, e h, o ,b must go back respectively to four common sources, as they respectively attest a vast number of unique readings. With a in a less degree k is connected. e h and o ,b, moreover, have also a considerable number of readings in common, and likewise d l o y.

A study of the notes will show the reader that it is possible to establish partial connexions between other groups of MSS. than those already mentioned, but the further prosecution of this subject does not lead to any valuable results.

from these two classes of text it repeatedly agrees with the Hebrew (Massoretic) text. Subsequently a corrector worked over this MS. and erased readings belonging to the first class, as well as those peculiar to this MS. which were derived from the Hebrew, and substituted readings of the second or Vulgate type. See Dillmann, Bibl. Aeth. T. II. i; Appar. Crit., p. 5.

§ 8. Editions of the Ethiopic Version.

Laurence, Libri Enoch Versio Aethiopica. Oxoniae, 1838. This text was issued simply as a transcript of a, one of the MSS. brought to Europe by Bruce, the great Abyssinian traveller, in 1773. The transcription is not very accurate in the early chapters, though the errors are as a rule easy to correct. In chapters v–x there are ten; most of these have passed over into Dillmann's Apparatus Criticus, and from Dillmann's to Flemming's. As the text advances it becomes more accurate, so that I found its citation by Dillmann to be sufficiently trustworthy for use in the present edition.

Dillmann, Liber Henoch, Aethiopice, ad quinque codicum fidem editus, cum variis lectionibus. Lipsiae, 1851. This edition was based on five MSS. a b c d e, of which a b are in the Bodleian, c in the Frankfort Library, and d e were the property of the well-known traveller, Robert Curzon. Of Dillmann's collations of b c d e I have tested only that of b in the opening chapters, and found only one bad error, in chapter vii. These five MSS. are all of secondary value. The best of them is a. No further work on the Ethiopic text appeared till 1892, when Dillmann (Sitzungsberichte d. kgl. Preuss. Akad. d. Wiss. zu Berlin, 1892, li–liii, pp. 1039–1054, 1079–1092) published some variants from three MSS. on the first thirty-two chapters of Enoch in connexion with his edition of the fragmentary Greek Version.

Charles, The Book of Enoch translated from Professor Dillmann's Ethiopic Text emended and revised in accordance with hitherto uncollated MSS. and with the Gizeh and other Greek and Latin Fragments. Oxford, 1893. This translation was based on a drastic revision of Dillmann's text. Ten new MSS., which belong to the British Museum, were used, three of them, g₁ g m, being of primary importance, and seven, f h i k l n o, being of only secondary. Of these MSS. I collated m, f h i k l n o on about three hundred passages; but g₁ g I collated throughout, on the whole accurately, but defectively, as I now find, in a relatively small number of passages.

Flemming, Das Buch Henoch: Aethiopischer Text herausgegeben von Joh. Flemming (=Texte und Untersuchungen, Neue Folge, VII. i). Leipzig, 1902. Dr. Flemming's text is based on fifteen MSS., a b c d e g g₁ m p q t u v w y. Of these six belong to the first class g₁ g m q t u and the rest to the second class. This editor has been at no little pains in the preparation of his text. Thus he has himself collated g m p q y. His knowledge of t u he owes to photographs taken by Professor Meyer in France, and of v w to collations of the same scholar. It was a fatal error on Dr. Flemming's part that he did not photograph g m q, or, at all events, revise his collations of them.

Flemming's text naturally constitutes an immeasurable advance on that of Dillmann, and a considerable advance on Dillmann's text as emended in my commentary in 1893. With the help of the three new first-class MSS. q t u, this editor was able to point out a few passages where I followed mere idiosyncrasies of g, and also some others where I preferred the less trustworthy of the two texts g, g in chapters xcvii. 6[b]–cviii. 10.

On the whole, Flemming's text is good, as might be expected from so excellent an Ethiopic scholar, and several of his suggestions have been accepted in the present edition. On close examination, however, Flemming's edition proves unsatisfactory from its frequent inaccuracy in the collation of the MSS. generally, and its inadequate collation of the first-class MSS. In my review of this edition in the American Journal of Theology, pp. 689–703, 1903, I have summed up its serious shortcomings under the following heads: (i) Inaccurate and defective collation of the MSS.; (ii) The adoption of inferior readings into the text where the MSS. evidence for the true text is incontrovertible. Flemming's treatment of the great Berlin MS. q on chapters x–xxxii will exemplify his method in dealing with the other MSS. In six passages in these chapters q alone amongst the Ethiopic MSS. preserves the true text of E, as is proved by G. Yet in two of them, xxi. 2 (note 24), xxiv. 2 (note 41), q is not collated at all, and in the remaining four, x. 11 (note 16), xiv. 1 (note 39), xxii. 9 (note 25), xxxii. 4 (note 31), the reading of q is relegated to the notes, and the wrong reading adopted. In x. 7 (note 21) q practically gives the original text (which is preserved by n alone), but the corrupt text is adopted by this editor. (iii) Corrupt passages are left in the text without any attempt to emend them or even to call attention to their viciousness. (iv) Divergencies between G and E are left unexplained. (v) Practically no use is made of the Semitic background for purposes of emendation. Notwithstanding the above shortcomings, Dr. Flemming's edition is deserving of the gratitude of Orientalists, as it constitutes a vast advance on that of Dillmann, and forms on the whole a serviceable work for students generally.

§ 9. Original Language of Chapters VI–XXXVI—Aramaic; of I–V, XXXVII–CIV—Hebrew.

That the Book of Enoch was originally written in a Semitic language is now universally admitted. But what that language is is still a question of dispute. In the past Hoffmann, Jellinek, Dillmann (?) assumed a Hebrew original, and Halévy (Journ. Asiatique, 1867, pp. 352–395) furnished excellent grounds for such a belief, but of late years, since the discovery of the Gizeh Greek fragment, there has been a tendency to assume that the original was written in Aramaic. Neither view can I believe be established, but each appears to be true in part, as I hope now to prove. The proof in certain sections amounts almost to demonstration: in the case of others only a probability can be indicated. The results of present study of this problem tend to show that chapters vi–xxxvi were originally written in Aramaic, and xxxvii–lxxi, lxxxiii–civ, and probably i–v in Hebrew. The original language of lxxii–lxxxii is still indeterminable, but the probability of an Aramaic original seems to be greater than that of a Hebrew.

Chapters i–v. Probably from a Hebrew original. These chapters do not come from the same author or period as vi–xxxvi.

v. 9 (G^{g}) 'They shall not be punished (ܢܬܚܫܘ = κολασθήσονται) all the days of their life.' Since E has ἁμάρτωσιν here, if the text in both cases is rightly transmitted, it is probable that יאשמו stood in the original, and that it was rendered by ἁμάρτωσιν in the text of the Greek translation and by κολασθήσονται in the margin, or vice versa. In the Test. Asher, vi. 1, the converse appears to have happened and the translator to have rendered this Hebrew verb by κολάζονται instead of by ἁμαρτάνουσι.

Again in i. 9 'He cometh with myriads of holy ones' the text reproduces the Massoretic of Deut. xxxiii. 2 (see note on i. 9) in reading אָתָא = ἔρχεται, whereas the three Targums, the Syriac, and Vulgate read אִתּוֹ = μετ' αὐτοῦ. Here the LXX diverges wholly. The reading אתא is recognized as original. The writer of this section of Enoch used the Hebrew text, and followed neither Version nor Targum in reproducing it. Presumably he wrote in Hebrew also. See also notes 1. 9 on p. 10.

Chapters vi–xxxvi. It will be observed in the notes on these chapters that sometimes the Greek is retranslated into Hebrew and sometimes into Aramaic. The reason is that when they were written (in 1901–1902) I was still undecided as to which language was the original. The balance of evidence now appears to me to be in favour of the latter, and this is as follows:—

(a) Aramaic words transliterated in the Greek. In xviii. 8 φουκά = פוכא, in xxviii. 1 and xxix. 1 μανδοβαρά and βαβδηρά = מדברא.[1]

(b) Aramaic constructions. In xix. 2 we have the peculiar Greek αἱ γυναῖκες αὐτῶν τῶν παραβάντων ἀγγέλων. This is a literal reproduction of the Aramaic idiom נשיהן די מלאכיא די חטו. The same construction recurs in E in ix. 8 which = συνεκοιμήθησαν μετ' αὐτῶν μετὰ τῶν θηλειῶν = שכיבו עמהין עם נשיא. Here G^g, it is true, has omitted μετὰ τῶν θηλειῶν. This omission may be due to the unintelligibility of the construction to a pure Greek scribe. It is possible, however, that G^s is right, which connects ἐν ταῖς θηλείαις with the next verb—συνεκοιμήθησαν μετ' αὐτῶν καὶ ἐν ταῖς θηλείαις ἐμιάνθησαν. But this is very unlikely; for the natural construction would be συνεκοιμήθησαν μετὰ τῶν θηλειῶν καὶ ἐν αὐταῖς ἐμιάνθησαν. We have probably a third instance of this idiom in vi. 8 οὗτοί εἰσιν ἀρχαὶ αὐτῶν οἱ δέκα, where οἱ δέκα should be emended into τῶν δεκάδων with E. Then ἀρχαὶ αὐτῶν τῶν δεκάδων = ראשיהון דעסריתא. This Aramaic idiom has made its way into the O. T. as in Canticles iii. 7.

(c) Some of the proper names with which paronomasias are connected postulate an Aramaic original. Thus in G^s viii. 3 we have ὁ δὲ τρίτος ἐδίδαξε τὰ σημεῖα τῆς γῆς. Now ὁ τρίτος in vi. 7 is Ἀρακιήλ = ארקיאל, where ארק is Aramaic for 'earth.' Again in G^s viii. 3 we have ὁ δὲ εἰκοστὸς ἐδίδαξε τὰ σημεῖα τῆς σελήνης (G^g Σεριὴλ σεληναγωγίας), where ὁ εἰκοστός according to G^s vi. 7 is Σαριήλ = סהריאל. Here סהר is Aramaic for 'moon.' Again in viii. 3 the ὁ ὄγδοος in ὁ δὲ ὄγδοος ἐδίδαξεν ἀεροσκοπίαν is G^g Ἐζεκιήλ (G^s Ζακιήλ) = שחקיאל. שַׁחַק (= ἀήρ), it is true, is Hebrew as well as Aramaic.

(d) Occasionally the source of corruptions in the Greek can be detected by retranslation into Aramaic. I can offer but a few instances of this nature; for though there are many passages which can be restored by retranslation into the original, the restoration can be made equally well in most passages by retranslation into either Hebrew or Aramaic. The evidence, therefore, in this section is not conclusive. It serves to prove, however, the thoroughly Semitic basis of our author.

x. 17 τὰ σάββατα αὐτῶν. Here we should have τὸ γῆρας αὐτῶν. Here, as note in loc. shows, the source of the corruption is explicable both in Hebrew and Aramaic.

[1] On the other hand in xxvii. 2 γῇ is a transliteration of גיא (= 'valley') which is a pure Hebrew word, the Aramaic being חֵילָא. Since גיא, however, is here used as a proper name, as denoting the 'Valley of Hinnom,' its use may be justifiable in an Aramaic document.

xii. 6 οὐκ† ἔσται αὐτοῖς† εἰς ἔλεον. See note on this passage on p. 238.

xiii. 2 ἀνοχὴ καὶ ἐρώτησίς σοι οὐκ ἔσται περὶ ὧν ἔδειξας ἀδικημάτων, 'no forbearance nor †request shall be to thee in regard to &c.' Here שְׁאֵלָא (= ἐρώτησις) was corrupt for שְׁלֵיחָא[1] = ἄφεσις, 'forgiveness.' Cf. xii. 5 καὶ οὐκ ἔσται . . εἰρήνη οὔτε ἄφεσις. Here the Hebrew can also account for the corruption.

xiii. 9 πενθοῦντες ἐν Ἀβελσιαήλ (so E), i. e. Ἀβειλήνη = אבלין באבילין— a paronomasia.

xiv. 6 οὐκ ἔσται ὑμῖν †ὄνησις αὐτῶν ἀλλὰ πεσοῦνται . . . ἐν μαχαίρᾳ. Here ὄνησις = מוֹתָר, which should here have been rendered κατάλειμμα. In Hebrew יתר also admits of both senses.

xiv. 8 κατεσπούδαζον καὶ † ἐθορύβαζον. Here the second verb is impossible, and we have probably two renderings of one and the same Hebrew word יבהלו accordingly as it is pointed as a niphal or a piel verb. In Aramaic the pael of this verb = θορυβάζω, ταράσσω, or συνταράσσω in Dan. iv. 2, 16; v. 6, 10; vii. 15, 28, and is rendered by Theodotion[2] by one or other of the latter two verbs. On the other hand the LXX renders the same Aramaic verb by κατασπεύδω[3] in iv. 16 and v. 6. Thus the translator of the LXX, who, as we know from the rest of his translation of the Aramaic section of Daniel, was very familiar with Aramaic, assigns to the pael of the Aramaic verb the same meaning as the piel and hiphil of the Hebrew. Hence we may assume that the pael in Aramaic could mean κατασπεύδω or θορυβάζω. Thus we could explain our text as a dittographical rendering of one and the same Aramaic verb.

If there were two verbs in the original, and this is possible, then we have simply a mistranslation of בהל in ἐθορύβαζον.

xvi. 1 ἀφ' ὧν . . . ἐκ τῆς ψυχῆς τῆς σαρκὸς αὐτῶν = די מנפש בסרהון. Similar Aramaic idioms are found also in xxii. 9; xxxii. 3. These anomalous Greek constructions can also be explained from a Hebrew background. In xxii. 6 διό in διὸ οὕτως ἡ φωνὴ αὐτοῦ should with E be emended into οὗ in accordance with this idiom. Thus we should have 'whose voice thus.'

xvii. 7. Here E = τὰ ὄρη τῶν γνόφων = טורי קבלא (see my note in loc.).

[1] Or possible שְׁלֵיוָא = 'rest.'

[2] Two MSS. of Theodotion's text A Q render by κατασπεύδω, but this may be owing to the influence of the LXX.

[3] The translator of 2 Chron. xxvi. 20; xxxv. 21 renders the Hebrew בהל by κατασπεύδω.

The phrase seems to be borrowed from Jer. xiii. 16. If this is so, then G^g which reads τοὺς ἀνέμους τῶν γνόφων = רוחי קבלא. In that case we might suppose that the Greek translator found one word in the text and the other in the margin of his Semitic MS. and rendered both, and that G^g preserved one and the Greek ancestor of E the other. The text in v. 9, where E = κολασθήσονται (or κριθήσονται) and G^g reads ἁμάρτωσιν (which are two possible renderings of the same Hebrew word), requires a similar assumption.

xxviii. 2 πλήρης δένδρων καὶ ἀπὸ τῶν †σπερμάτων. It would be absurd to speak of a plain as full of 'trees and seeds.' Here I take ἀπὸ τῶν σπερμάτων = מזרעין, corrupt for זרעונין = 'and of vegetables.' See my note in loc. for other possible explanations.

xxix. 2 †κρίσεως δένδρα. Here κρίσεως = דדינא, corrupt for דריחא (so Praetorius) = εὐώδη. In Hebrew the corruption can be explained equally well.

xxxi. 3 ὅταν τρίβωσιν. These words refer to certain fragrant trees mentioned in the preceding verse. These trees yielded (see p. 70, note 35) a fragrant odour when burnt. Hence it is possible that the Aramaic ידקקון (= τρίβωσιν) is corrupt for ידלקון = καύσωσιν. Thus: 'when they burn it, it is more fragrant &c.'

Chapters xxxvii–lxx, from a Hebrew original. The assumption of a Hebrew original is required by some of the following passages, while others would admit of either Hebrew or Aramaic.

xl. 9 'The third who is set over all the powers is Gabriel.' There is a paronomasia here on Gabriel's name—אשר על כל גבורות הוא גבריאל. This paronomasia is possible also in Aramaic. In the same verse the words 'the second, who is set over all the diseases . . . of the sons of men, is Raphael' = אשר על כל מהלות בני אדם הוא רפאל, contain a reference to the derivation of the name Raphael, which is possible only in Hebrew—רפא 'to heal.'

xlv. 3 'On that day thine Elect One will sit on the throne of glory
And he will choose their works.'

The words in italics are a translation of የኀሪ፡ ምግባሪሆሙ፡ Flemming, after the example of his predecessors, translates: 'wird Auswahl treffen unter ihren Werken.' But this is a mistranslation and would require ኣምግባሪሆሙ፡ Moreover it is absurd to boot. The source of the corruption becomes clear on retranslation. Thus የኀሪ፡ = ἐκλέξεται = the Hebrew יבחר, which might (? cf. Isa. xlviii. 10) itself = δοκιμάσει, or else it is a corruption of יבחן, which normally means 'will try.' Thus we should read 'And he will try their works.' In Aramaic בחר has both meanings. Hence this passage is indecisive.

xlvi. 4^{b} 'He will † raise up the kings and the mighty from their thrones.' Of this verse a dittograph occurs four lines later, xlvi. 5^{a}:

'And he will put down kings from their thrones and kingdoms,' for the parallelism shows that the latter is an intrusion. On the other hand ይገፈትኦሙ = καθαιρήσει = יסיר is right (cf. 2 Chron. xxx. 14), whereas ያነሥኦሙ = ἐγερεῖ = יעיר is wrong.[1] יעיר would then be a corruption for יסיר.

lii. 9 'All these things will be † denied and destroyed from the face of the earth.' Here Dillmann and Flemming try to give a better sense to the passage by rendering ይትኀሐዱ 'werden verschwinden' and Beer 'werden vernichtet werden.' But the word is unexampled in these senses in Ethiopic. The explanation is discoverable through retranslation. E = ἀπαρνηθήσονται καὶ ἀφανισθήσονται. These two verbs are dittographic renderings of the Hebrew יִכָּחֲדוּ.

lvi. 7 'Till the number of their corpses is † through their death †.' እምቶሙ = ἐκ θανάτου αὐτῶν = מִמּוֹתָם, corrupt for מֵרִבּוֹת 'more than myriads.'

lxv. 10 'Their judgment has been determined upon and will not be † reckoned before me.' Here 'will not be reckoned before me' = οὐ λογισθήσεται κατὰ πρόσωπόν μου = לֹא יֶחָשֵׁב מפני where the verb is corrupt for יֶחְשָׂךְ = 'will be withheld' used of judgments and calamities. Thus the text = 'their judgment has been determined up and will not be withheld by Me.' This restoration is possible also through Aramaic.

lxv. 10 'Because of the † months which they have searched out and through which they know &c.' Here Halévy (Journ. Asiat., 374–375, 1867) objects that ኦውራኅ signifies 'months' and never astrology, and that the knowledge of the future could not have been regarded as criminal by the authors of Enoch. Hence he conjectures that חדשים (= 'months') was a corruption of חרשים = 'sorceries.' This conjecture restores sanity to the text.

lxv. 11 'For these there will be no place of † refuge for ever.' Here ምግባእ = ἀποστροφή = תשובה, which should here have been rendered 'repentance.'

lxvii. 13 'These waters of judgment minister to the healing of the body of the † angels. Here, as Halévy (pp. 366–367) has remarked, 'angels' is an impossible reading. It = מַלְאָכִים, corrupt for מְלָכִים 'kings.'

[1] In the notes in loc. I have supposed יַפִּיל and יִטּוֹל.

lxix. 13 'This is the † number of Kesbeêl.' The word 'number' is here unintelligible. The context requires some such words as 'office,' 'function.' Halévy's explanation is very satisfactory. He holds that the translator here rendered פקודה by 'number' when he should have given 'charge,' 'function.'

From the above restorations on the basis of a Hebrew original, the majority of which are not possible on the hypothesis of an Aramaic original, the natural conclusion is that the chapters xxxvii–lxx were originally written in Hebrew.

Chapters lxxii–lxxxii. From Hebrew most probably.

lxxvii. 1 'The first † wind is called the east because it is the first: and the second the south because the Most High † descends there.' We have here two paronomasias, one misrendering and one corruption. First of all, as Halévy points out, the Greek translator erred by rendering רוּחַ by 'wind' instead of by 'quarter.' Cf. Ezek. xlii. 20. Next, 'Most High descends' = יֵרֵד רָם, corrupt for רָם יָדוּר = 'the Most High abides,' a play on דָּרוֹם 'south.' Finally, the 'east' = קֶדֶם: hence it is 'the first' קדמוני. In verses 2, 3 there are similar paronomasias.

lxxviii. 1. See note 13.

lxxviii. 2. See note 25.

lxxx. 5. See note 1.

Chapters lxxxiii–xc, from Hebrew (or Aramaic?). The evidence is here very scanty as yet.

lxxxiii. 11. Here a corruption in text can be emended by retranslation into Greek or Hebrew. See note in loc.

xc. 18 ἠλάλυψεν ἐπ' αὐτούς = ἐκάλυψεν ἐπ' αὐτούς, a clear Hebraism = כסה עליהם. See my note 16 on p. 185.

xc. 38 'The first . . . became a † word.' Here E = ῥῆμα, but the Greek was not ῥῆμα but ρημ—a transliteration of רְאֵם = 'buffalo.' If we were sure that ρημα stood originally in the Greek translation it would be an argument in favour of an Aramaic original; for ρημα would = רֵימָא.

Chapters xci–civ, from a Hebrew original.

xciii. 5. See note in loc.

xciii. 8. See note on the Hebrew construction.

xcvi. 6. See note.

xcix. 6. Here E=εἰς ἡμέραν αἵματος ἀδιαλείπτου, but in Tertullian (De Idol., IV) the phrase appears as 'in diem sanguinis perditionis'=εἰς ἡμέραν αἵματος ἀπωλείας=ליום דם לאיד where לאיד is corrupt for לְעַד= ἀδιαλείπτου. So Symmachus renders לעד in Job xvi. 8 where Massoretic has לָעַד.

ci. 4. Here the text rests on a mistake of the Greek translator or else on a corruption in the Hebrew text, whereby מַלְכֵי 'kings' was read for מַלָּחֵי 'sailors.'

SYMBOLS AND BRACKETS USED IN THIS EDITION.

G denotes the Greek Version.

G^s denotes the Greek fragments preserved by Syncellus: where there is a duplicate version G^{s1} G^{s2} are used.

G^g denotes the Greek fragment discovered at Akhmîm, and now preserved in the Gizeh Museum. See p. xi.

E denotes the Ethiopic Version.

a b c d e, a, b, &c., the Ethiopic MSS. described on pp. xvii sqq.

hmt. = homoioteleuton.

⌜ ⌝ The use of these brackets in G^s G^g i–xxxii means that the words so enclosed, though only in one of these authorities, are also in E. Such words in E G^s go back to Greek archetype. In lxxxix. 42–49 and in cvi these brackets simply denote that the words so enclosed in G and L are not in E, but may nevertheless go back to the archetype.

⌈ ⌉ The use of these brackets in G^s G^g means that the words so enclosed are found only in one of the authorities, and may or may not go back to the Greek archetype.

[1] MS. εξαρε. [2] E adds καὶ τοὺς ἀσεβεῖς. [3] Though E omits, the clause may be genuine. [4] To be taken with ἀνεῳγμένη or omitted. [5] E = ὀφθαλμοὶ αὐτοῦ which gives better sense, and agrees with Num. xxiv. 4 גלוי עינים. [6] ην must either be written ἣν or ἦν. But the context is against the former, and ἦν is quite intelligible. It is to be taken with †ἔχων† as forming a periphrastic conjugation = 'he was †having†.' [7] = אֹחֵז, ἔχειν is found as a rendering of אחז in Job xvii. 9; xviii. 20; xxi. 6; xxx. 16; Is. xii. 8, and it may be so here. Of course אחז could not have stood in the original. It is corrupt for חֹזֶה = ὁρῶν. Our text is thus brought into agreement with E ⲉⲓⲥⲉϩ: and Num. xxiv. 4 (מחזה שדי יחזה) which our author is here using. It is possible, of course, that the corruption arose in G, but it would be difficult to explain how. The passage in E = Ἐνώχ, ἄνθρωπος δίκαιος οὗ ἐκ Θεοῦ ὀφθαλμοὶ αὐτοῦ ἀνεωγμένοι καὶ ἑώρα τὴν ὅρασιν τοῦ ἁγίου. [8] Corrupt (?) for κατὰ τὸν οὐρανόν as in E. [9] Text corrupt. E = ἦν ἔδειξάν μοι οἱ ἄγγελοι. [10] MS. θεορων. [11] So Swete emends from εγω αλλω. [12] Can hardly be right: unexampled in Enoch; E = καί. [13] Corrupt possibly for ἐκεῖθεν as in E. [14] E = σὺν or ἐν τῇ παρεμβολῇ. This is supported also by the parallelism. [15] E = σαλευθήσονται: a sense which accords perfectly with x. 12–14, &c., whereas πιστεύσουσιν gives a sense wholly at variance with all that follows. It is possibly a deliberate change. Flemming suggests πτήξουσιν; see next note. [16] This clause, which E omits, I have removed to the margin as an interpolation at variance with the closing genuine words of this verse, and with all that follows on the fate of the Watchers who were imprisoned beneath the hills. The scribe who added it was possibly thinking of Slav. En. xviii, where the singing of the Watchers is mentioned.

[1] These words are omitted by E and against the parallelism. [2] Bracketed because omitted by E and against sense. [3] A dittography. [4] These two words look like two renderings of the same Hebrew word. [5] MS. μεγα. [6] Cf. Wisd. iii. 9 καὶ ἐπισκοπὴ ἐν τοῖς ἐκλεκτοῖς αὐτοῦ. [7] MS. γενηται. [8] Corrupt for εὐοδίαν. Cf. Sir. xliii. 26 where the same corruption occurs in MS. B. G thus = יצליחם. So E. [9] This verse though omitted by E is probably genuine, being supported by the parallelism. [10] E = καὶ ἰδού: Jude, Pseudo-Cypr. and Pseudo-Vig. ἰδού. [11] MS. τοις. [12] Interpolated against E and all other authorities. Read ἁγίαις instead of ἁγίοις to agree with μυριάσιν. [13] MS. απολεσει, but the parallelism, Pseudo-Cypr. and Pseudo-Vig. and E require ἀπολέσαι. Other edd. ἀπολέσει. [14] MS. λενξει. Parallelism and Jude, Ps.-Cypr. and Ps.-Vig. require ἐλέγξαι. [15] Undoubtedly genuine though omitted by E. G adds dittographic clause καὶ περὶ πάντων ὧν κατελάλησαν.

parallel columns. That the Latin are versions of Enoch i. 9 and not of Jude 14, 15 was shown by Zahn in 1890. The words, Et perdere omnes impios, Et arguere omnem carnem furnish irrefutable proof of this view.

This being presumed we have to determine the relative faithfulness of the Versions. First of all it is clear that Jude is the least original as it compresses the two clauses (b) and (c) into one, and introduces κύριος after ἦλθεν. Next the Pseudo-Vigilius is defective: phrases are wanting in (a) and the entire clause (β) is omitted. The Pseudo-Cyprian is the most perfect of the three as regards the parallelism, though corrupt in nuntiorum (= ἀγγέλων) suorum, Deo for eo, and wanting in impii after peccatores. Turning now to G we see that it agrees in form with the Pseudo-Cyprian and Pseudo-Vigilius, save that against all authorities it adds after λόγων a clause, which is obviously a dittography. The interpolation in the first line is noticed in the text. Thus the structure is well established: namely, three clauses (a), (b), (c), the last of which is subdivided into two (a) and (β).

On the other hand the infinitives perdere (= ἀπολέσαι) and arguere (= ἐλέγξαι) are right, and this evidence, together with E, shows that we should not read ἀπολέσει and (ἐ)λέγξει in G but ἀπολέσαι and ἐλέγξαι. The parallelism also supports this view.

Having now ascertained the structure and details of the text we approach E and find that it preserves all the clauses, though in the case of (b) and (β) defectively, and of (a) corruptly and defectively. Thus it omits πάντας in (b) and καὶ σκληρῶν ὧν ἐλάλησαν λόγων in (β).

We conclude, therefore, that the original form is to be rendered as follows in English:

I. 9. Behold! He comes with His holy myriads
(a) To execute judgment upon all,
(b) And to destroy all the ungodly,
(c) And to convict all flesh
(a) Of all their works of ungodliness which they have ungodly committed, (β) And of all the hard things which ungodly sinners have spoken against Him.
